Five buildings were burned at the Yalouki mission station in Africa, according to a letter just received from Miss Mary Emmert, one of our missionaries located at that station. A very disastrous fire, caused by flying sparks blown by a terrific wind from burning grass and lighting upon the grass roofs, resulted in the destruction of the school building, two permanent dwellings, a kitchen and a temporary mud dwelling. There was no loss of life and no person injured. The church and hospital buildings, besides some smaller buildings, escaped the fire. Some natives set fire to a piece of grass land neighboring the concession, to aid them in an animal hunt and the fierce gale caused the fire to get beyond control and to destroy the buildings. Along with the burning of the buildings, were burned also much of the furnishings, eatables and personal effects of the missionaries. Officials of the Foreign Board issue a statement on page two of this issue, along with the letter by Miss Emmert. We need not tell you that the need of help is urgent. Only observe the instructions and act promptly so that the articles you may be able to supply may be sent back with the Fosters when they sail. Materials must reach Philadelphia by May 10th.

Dr. E. E. Jacobs, president of Ashland College, gives an interesting report of the results of the recent College Trustees meeting and the college situation there set forth. Brother G. T. Ronk was continued as head of the Board of Trustees and Brethren Kem, Teeter and Clapper were re-elected to their respective official positions. Two important features of the president's report were the statement of the increased enrollment and the expectation of closing the year with the budget balanced, both of which are significant in this year of depression and should occasion rejoicing among the friends of the college. The growing strength of the faculty,—that is, strength increased by virtue of continued improvement in preparation,—is worthy of note. It is our conviction that few colleges can be found of the size of Ashland with a stronger equipped faculty than Ashland possesses. It is stated that the trustees authorized the lifting of the usual Educational Day offering this coming June, and the usual time is the second Sunday in June. The receipts from this occasion, along with the splendid gifts made by the Woman's Missionary Society, the Sisterhood and the National Sunday School Association, are necessary to the successful operation of the college.

What Shall We Preach?

By C. C. Grisso

Years ago there stood in a great city a magnificent church edifice on the cornerstone of which was inscribed these words, "But we preach Christ crucified." A little later someone planted at the foundation of the building a delicate little vine, which in course of time covered the cornerstone in part so that the passerby could only read the words, "But we preach." There is in the world today a lot of preaching, but preaching of what? No longer the great message that God has sent to a lost world, the message of a crucified, risen and coming-again Lord, is being proclaimed. The vines of human wisdom and destructive criticism have blotted out the great message. There was never a time since Jesus went back to the Father, when there was a greater need of the preaching of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ than now.

And if we are faithful in the delivery of it, honest in dealing with our own hearts in the light of it, and continuing instant in prayer for God's blessing to attend it, we can expect God to bless it as in other days. This is the greatest "draw" that was ever yet manifested among men. What draws men to Christ but Christ himself? And if rightly proclaimed all men shall feel that attractive force. The preaching of Christ and his Gospel is still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Permit me to suggest some things that should be proclaimed if we would reveal a full and complete Christ.

I. We Must Preach His Divine Personality. Who is Jesus? Millions believe him to be God. The Word declares that "He was God manifest in the flesh." Peter said, "Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God." Many today are seeking to destroy the doctrine of his virgin birth. But to do this is to destroy the doctrine of his Deity. You have removed the foundation upon which his church is builded. Destroy his Deity and you have no Gospel to preach. Destroy his Deity and we have no atonement for sin. Yes, he was, and is eternal. "Before Abraham was I am." "He is the same yesterday, today and forever." He is Almighty. "All things were made by him." He was, and is, superior to every human being. The searchlight of twenty centuries have been turned upon him, and a whole world proclaims him without fault. Our fellowship with him proves that he is Deity. Obeying him brings peace to the heart and plants immortal hope in the soul. He is ever the Son of God and God the Son. So let us believe and preach.

II. We Must Preach Him in the Glory of His Offices. He is the Christ, the Messiah, the Anointed of God. In the Old Testament there were three anointed offices, namely, Prophet, Priest, and King. It was in the mind of God that our Lord should be all of these. He was a great Prophet. The world's great Teacher. The multitudes hung upon his words. They said, "Never man spake like this man." For "He taught as one having authority." When he had spoken nothing needed to be added! Some one has said that the sermon on the mount contains the most in the least words of anything that has ever been spoken. Yes, as a Teacher he stands alone among men. And the beauty and marvel of his teaching is that he lived perfectly what he taught.

Again, we must preach the Glory of His Priesthood. In this he excels all other priests who have gone before him. Others must offer up the blood of animals for their own sins. But when he entered the Holy of Holies, he offered his own life's blood. When others offered their sacrifices there was no forgiveness; their sins were only rolled back, to the next day of atonement. But when Jesus shed his blood there was actual forgiveness. As our High Priest, "He ever liveth to make intercession for us." We have a friend at the court of heaven. There he is representing us before the face of the Father. Hear John, "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin we have an advocate with the Father." Thank God! The same love that saved us, will keep us. He suffered on earth for us and intercedes in

Paul Preaching at Athens

HE PREACHED THE CRUCIFIED AND RISEN CHRIST

We preach Christ crucified—1 Cor. 1:23.

The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God—1 Cor. 1:18.

He preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection—Acts 17:18.

heaven for us. Blessed fact! Let us preach it.

In the glory of his offices we must preach him as King. Not yet, have we seen all things put under him. No, but he will reign. He reigns in the hearts of millions now, and his kingdom is destined to cover the earth. His will will yet "be done upon earth as it is now done in heaven." For "the kingdoms of this world must become the kingdom of God's dear Son."

III. We Must Preach the Efficacy of His Atonement. "He is able to save to the uttermost." His blood reaches to the utmost depths of human guilt. He is the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

"There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Immanuel's veins
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

Dear dying Lamb, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power
Till all the ransomed church of God
Are saved to sin no more."

Here is humanity's hope. Here is man's only way back to God. For "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Certainly it is a waste of time to preach anything else as a way of salvation.

"What can wash away my sin?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus.
What can make me whole again?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

Yes, not to preach the substitutionary death of Christ is to leave out the very center and core of the Gospel and to rob us of the only theme which is effective in bringing men to God. A gospel stripped of the blood-red cross may be a gospel of culture or a gospel of morality, but it is not the Gospel of Christ. Oh, for a revival of such preaching! Then we shall know the power of preaching, and what it is to preach in power. Then we shall see the tide of sin and worldliness that is sweeping upon the world beaten back once more, and every Christian shall be lifted to a higher level and multitudes of perishing souls shall be converted to God.

IV. We Must Preach the Value and Power of His Resurrection. "Blessed be God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who according to his great mercy begat us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." "Who brought life and immortality to light." For ages men were uncertain as to the final outcome of life. But now with this hope firmly planted in our hearts we can meet death triumphantly. The light of the resurrection morning reaches out into the eternity and dispels the darkness. Beyond the tide of life we shall live again. Our faith grasps this mighty truth, and in full confidence of it we come to the grave believing that with all those who sleep in Jesus we shall rise again on that Morning of Mornings. No wonder Paul said that in his preaching, he preached his death, burial and Resurrection, first. Yes, let us go out to tell men of this risen Savior. That this mighty truth might grip their lives and kindle in their hearts a faith that makes for victory. "Because I live, ye shall live." This we should believe and so preach.

V. We Must Preach His Absolute Authority in All Things. To preach Christ necessitates the preaching of the "All Things" of his Gospel. Where do we find these "all things?" In the Gospels? Yes. In the Epistles? Yes. The teachings of our Lord are final wherever found. He is the head of his church and he has the right to command. The words of his own mother are timely, "Whatever he saith unto you, do it." Hear John, "Whosoever abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God. If any come unto you and bring not this doctrine receive him not into your house." The Father hath delegated all authority unto the Son. "This is my Son, Hear him." And Peter said, "This same Jesus whom ye have taken with wicked hands and slain, God hath raised up and made both Lord and Christ." What has caused all this muddle in which the church finds itself today? Just this, the setting aside of the authority that belongs to our Lord. Fearful, I believe will be the consequences upon those who would attempt to set aside the teachings of our Lord and in their place teach and exalt the "teachings and commandments of men." Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things I command you?" Let us preach his authority, let us live it. Let us practice what we preach.

VI. We Must Preach the Certainty and Purpose of Our Lord's Return. I believe our Lord is coming to earth again, for he said so. No seeker after the truth needs to be ignorant of this great fact, for in the two hundred and sixty chapters of the New Testament the Lord's coming in one aspect or another is mentioned over three hundred times. This being true, why is it that so many are so reluctant to speak of it? The Gospels, the epistles, the Acts, all are aglow with this most precious doctrine. It is indeed a most practical doctrine and it ought to take possession of our hearts that it might mean a real and lasting benediction in our own lives and in the lives of others. "He that hath this hope purifieth himself." I know of nothing that will keep the church so true to him as when our lives have been charged with this truth. As ministers, we have tried everything that has been suggested to awaken a cold, indifferent and sleepy church. Why not try the remedy the Word suggests? "Behold the bridegroom cometh." When the proper time came God sent forth his Son. When the proper time arrives he will send him again. Are you ready to meet him. Are we busy winning souls or have we been too busy with other things? He will come not in poverty and humiliation but in power and glory. Not to shed his blood, but to see how many have been washed in it. What a day of rejoicing that will be.

"It may be at morn when the day is awaking
When sunlight thru darkness and shadow is breaking
That Jesus will come in the fullness of Glory
To receive from the world his own."

Now I have tried to suggest something of what it means "To Preach Christ." What a day it would be for the church if every believer would be heralding Jesus Christ as Lord and King to this sinful world. There would be no lack of spirituality in our churches nor empty seats. People would be flocking home to God and the body of Christ would soon be complete. Nothing but the message of the crucified, risen and coming Lord will ever satisfy the hunger of sinful men. Let us not fail in presenting it.

Lanark, Illinois.

The Gift Within

By Rev. Floyd Sibert

Text: "... Stir up the gift of God which is in thee through the laying on of my hands."—2 Timothy 1:6.

The buds of the trees are bursting, the tiny blade of grass has forced its way through the crust, the lily is unfolding her waxen petals with a burst of fragrance, the crocus and hyacinth have felt the call of spring—the call of God; and as the living water stirred within them, they lifted their heads above the leaf mould and dirt, to show forth the handiwork of God. "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all of his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Again, "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature?" It is the work of God, IT IS THE CALL OF GOD, that puts new life into the flower, quickens the pulse of the animal, and stirs the spirit of man.

EVERY MAN WHO KNOWS GOD, KNOWS HIS CALL. "My sheep know my voice and they follow me." Peter said, "I go fishing"; but he heard God speak, felt the spirit stir within, turned back and preached with such force that three thousand souls were saved. Yet Peter had never displayed any great power as a preacher. THE CALL OF GOD STIRRED UP THE GIFT WITHIN HIM.

Paul with a blood-stained sword raised in command, cried, "On to Damascus"! BUT GOD SPOKE, and Paul fell as dead. When he arose, it was to find a new and mysterious urge stirring within. An urge to slay and murder? No! Never again. IT WAS A DIVINE URGE TO STIR UP THE GIFT WITHIN; TO FORSAKE ALL

AND FOLLOW HIM. Paul was not a preacher until he stirred up the gift of God within. THEN HE BECAME A LIVING FIRE THAT TRANSFORMED ALL CHRISTENDOM AND COULD NOT BE EXTINGUISHED, EVEN WITH HIS OWN BLOOD.

"Stir up the gift which is within YOU." The birds sing it from the tree tops, it is whispered from the branches of the budding trees, it is wafted on the breeze from the droning wing of the bee. All nature is astir. IT IS THE VOICE OF GOD TO YOU—"Stir up the gift."

It has been a winter of hibernation for many in a physical sense; but God is never slack concerning his promises.

Man has suffered, but he suffered because man blundered. God is not slack concerning his promises. Man failed to stir up the divine gift and God could not bless. All winter have we heard the whispering wail of want; but in it, is a note to which the world has failed to respond—"Stir up the gift of God which is within you by the laying on of hands." AND UNTIL MEN DO RESPOND TO THE CALL OF GOD, THE WAIL WILL CONTINUE. To be sure, some men cannot stir up the gift because it is not within them. Paul is speaking to one who has received this gift, the gift of spiritual grace imparted to him by God through the laying on of hands for his ministry. Paul says, REVIVE, REKINDLE that spark of faith and spiritual grace and BE NOT ASHAMED.

Stirring up the gift means the impartation of "fearlessness, power, love, and a sound mind." Oh, What a transformation would take place today if the gift were stirred up! Nations are alarmed; men are afraid of one another; the mind has failed, and man cannot trust it. HEAR GOD AS HE SHOUTS THROUGH PAUL, "Stir up the gift" and fear not, for I am with thee, if ye love me. OH WHAT POWER! WHAT FORCE! WHAT WISDOM! WHAT PROMISE! God is not slack concerning his promise. No, God has not failed. But man has failed, has forgotten God.

Paul knew the cloud of gloom that was hovering over Timothy and he knew that he needed power and strength divine. That is why he said, "Stir up the gift." He knew Timothy would need it. May we, with all nature about us, stir up the gift, take up new life and activity in these opening days of spring.

We need, as brethren, to kindle the gift within us that we may efficiently use the gifts that God has given us. "Having then gifts differing according to the grace given us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of our faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth on teaching; or he that exhorteth on exhortation; or he that giveth let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth with diligence; he that showeth mercy with cheerfulness (Rom. 12:6).

THE NEED FOR EXERCISING GOD-GIVEN GIFTS WAS NEVER GREATER THAN IT IS TODAY. Take your gift, then, and use it. "For every one has his proper gift of God." We need to thank him that he does not say that we must have GIFTS to serve him, but that he commands us to use what we have according to our faith. If you say that you have no gift, then you dispute his Word. "Every man has his proper gift." It is A PROPER GIFT. A gift suited to you.

Oh! The tragic picture we see when we look at the neglected harvest field! The field is white, but the laborers are few. Yet that does not make it tragic. It is the work that needs to be progressing by leaps and bounds that presents the picture of the maimed, the blind, the lame, the halt. WHY? Because some one has failed to stir up and use the gift within.

We misjudge our ability when we measure it before it is stirred up. We say that our gift is too small. But Jesus said of the widow, who cast in her two mites, "She hath given more than they all."

The woman at the well does not present the picture of one with many gifts, or she would not have been living the sordid kind of life that she was when the Lord found her. BUT SHE HAD A GIFT TO TELL CONVINCINGLY WHAT SHE HAD SEEN AND HEARD; and many believed in spite of her bad record.

Of the woman who anointed his head with ointment he said, "She hath done what she could." What she did, all can do. Stir up the gift! Do what you can. The Lord has no other requirements.

But some are too busy to do what they can.

The Lord had a job for me, but I had too much to do.
I said, "You get somebody else, or wait till I get through."
I don't know how the Lord made out; no doubt he got along,
But I felt kind of sneakin' like, I knew I did God wrong.

One day I needed the Lord, needed him right away.
But he never answered me at all, and I could hear him say,
Down in my accusing heart, "Child I have too much to do;
You get somebody else, or wait till I get through."

Now when the Lord has a job for me, I never try to shirk;
I drop whatever I have on hand and do the Lord's good work.
And my affairs can run along, or wait till I get through.
Nobody else can do the work that God marked out for you.

Masontown, Pennsylvania.

How One Church Met Its Budget

By The Rev. A. F. Ragatz, D.D., Secretary, Western Agency of the American Bible Society

A number of months ago a certain minister placed an order for Bibles with our agency stating that his church would pay for them the first of the month. No remittance was received although statements were sent regularly. Finally I wrote to the pastor and reminded him of his promise to pay promptly and within a month the bill was paid. Shortly after the pastor called on me and told me the following story:

His church was so involved financially that bills were owed all over town, salaries were in arrears, the new fiscal year was close at hand and no one knew what to do. He made personal calls on all the officers inviting them to a special meeting at which he laid before them the situation. The discussion indicated that no one had a plan. A layman arose and suggested that perhaps the church had gone to its extremity, and that this was the time for them to turn to God for aid. This suggestion struck a responsive chord and it was agreed to meet the following week for prayer. After a number of such meetings the impression grew that each person had been helped to such an extent that if the experience could be extended to include the whole membership the church would once more prosper.

Consequently it was arranged that the membership should be visited by these people, going two by two. It was agreed that no home should be visited without first having made an appointment, so that the family as far as possible would be there. When these workers arrived they told their experiences, read a chosen Scripture passage, and had prayer. In most instances one or more members of the family joined in prayer. After this the visitors said that while the movement had originated in an effort to find out how to raise money for their budget the spiritual emphasis had become so important that the money raising end of it had been all but forgotten.

Pledge cards were then given with the simple request that the family make its pledge for the following year and either bring it to church the next Sunday or mail it, making no effort to have it signed at the moment. By the time the new year arrived every family in the church had made a pledge. In no instance was a pledge reduced from what it had been the year before and nearly seventy-five per cent of the pledges were increased from ten per cent to one hundred per cent.

The result is that the church has the largest attendance now that it has ever had in its history, every bill is paid, and there is money in all the various departments. The minister told me that it was only through the reading of the Scriptures, renewing its faith in God and his promises, that the original group was inspired to undertake this task, and that the testimony of the visitors was such that in almost every home when they asked the question whether the Bible was being regularly read the answer was given in the negative. Therefore, in every home they earnestly sought the promise that the Bible would henceforth be read daily.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

LOOSE IDEAS OF MARRIAGE

One of the perils to our social life is the low idea of the marriage relation which obtains in certain circles. When a young person can say openly that if a marriage does not turn out well, it may be dissolved, the institution of marriage is put in peril before it is begun. The expedients proposed by a certain class of writers only make what God meant to be holy and permanent, utterly filthy and socially dangerous. We were told that the daughter of Christian parents, recently married, returned home, and as she remained on and on, her parents asked questions and were promptly and boldly told that no one man was worth clinging to very long. It was an instance in which luxury and social ambition had eaten out the fine heritage which should have been hers. The parents, good enough themselves, are nevertheless to be blamed, for they, too had lowered their finer Christian ideals. It is indeed terrible and threatening that marriage ordained of God has become a plaything for lust. Divorced in the morning and married to another in the afternoon will not only wreck the soul, but destroy our whole social structure.—The Presbyterian.

TOO COMFORTABLE IN CHURCH

We noticed that one pastor told his people that they made altogether too much of bodily comfort in church. Our ancestors, one or two generations back, were not so particular as to the exact temperature of the church when they went to worship. Today we complain very easily and make much fuss if the church is a degree too warm or too cool. Once we heard a vigorous woman of the sort who propose to have their dues, come what will, rush at a church official at the close of service with very vigorous demand to know why the church had to be so unbearably hot. Less than two minutes after her came another complainant, who wanted to know if fuel was so scarce that the worshippers had to be frozen stiff. We heard both with our own ears on the same day, in the same room, and neither one was in jest, both were intensely in earnest. How is any church official or sexton going to please such people? The fact was the church was reasonably comfortable, but these people were such slaves to bodily comfort that neither could be pleased, however it was. We ought to be in church with something in mind higher than the measure of the temperature. Some very good Christians have worshipped to great profit in places that were most uncomfortable in temperature and other ways. It is too bad if we become too sensitive to trifles.—The Presbyterian.

POPULATION OF GLOBE TWO BILLION

The world is inhabited by approximately 2,000,000,000 people, or 39.2 persons for every square mile of land, according to Commerce Department figures compiled for 1929.

Only official statistical publications of the 103 countries surveyed were used by the department in the first compilation of this kind ever made.

Data gathered indicated that females generally outnumber males throughout the world. Fifty-one out of every 100 persons in the United States, however, are males.

The United States, with a land area of 2,973,776 square miles and an estimated population of more than 124,000,000, has a density of 41.7 persons a square mile. Alaska has the smallest density of any country listed, with 0.1 per cent.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

SPEAKING OF ORDINANCES

There are hundreds of churches over the land without preachers and making no effort to have them. Meantime hundreds of preachers and their families are facing starvation.

In these churches are elders and deacons and other workers who love the ordinances with a devotion amounting to fanaticism. They would throw out of the pulpits of their respective churches any one of these preachers who manifested disloyalty to "the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper." And they would be right in manifesting such zeal.

But they would do well to consider another divine ordinance. Look at it in the light of these Scriptures: "It was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1:21). "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9:14.) Notice those words "did the Lord ordain." Is there any way to escape the fact that we have here an ordinance—and not an ordinance of the church, but a divine ordinance?

That being the case, what is to be said of the elder or deacon who sits idly and lets a congregation drift along without preaching while a host of preachers are in need of a living? Will his loyalty to the ordinance of baptism excuse him for his disloyalty to this other ordinance?—The Christian Standard.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Phil. 3:10: "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable to his death." On this famous passage by St. Paul, Moffatt renders it thus: "I would know him in the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings, with my nature transformed to die as he died, to see if I too can attain the resurrection from the dead."

Out of a prison comes this message of hope. But water-lilies grow out of the ooze at the bottom of the lake. In that eventful night at Troas, Paul saw in his vision a man beckoning him to Macedonia. In that road hither lies Philippi. Whiling away his prison hours, he did not forget the brave souls found there, and among other things of vast importance, we get his estimate of the hope of the Christian when the road is rough and things seem to be going dead wrong. In his state of mind (depressed, it would seem to us), I can not forbear giving this eloquent passage as Moffatt renders it: "But for Christ's sake I have learned to count my former gains a loss; indeed I count anything a loss, compared to the supreme value of knowing Jesus Christ my Lord. For his sake I have lost everything (I count it all the veriest refuse) in order to gain Christ and be found at death in him, possessing no legal righteousness of my own, but the righteousness of faith in Christ, the divine righteousness that rests on faith." Verses 7, 8, 9.

What can Paul mean by, "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection"? Measured by a lot of theology current of to day he had nothing to fear—he couldn't miss him. He can not mean that he was a stranger to his Lord. Some 29 years before he had heard his voice on the Damascus road. He had heard him say, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." He had written a number of his epistles. Yet his longing was "That I may know him." Well, Paul was not much of a believer in that kind of religion which left no room for growth. The Holy Spirit has things to say through other writers—and he does not contradict himself. There's always harmony in his teachings, unless man destroys that harmony by his miserable theories and speculations. Through the apostle Peter he says—after reciting a list of things we should add to our faith—"Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall" (2 Pet. 1:10). "If ye do"; but what if ye don't?

Evidently, Paul desired to know him better; and to continue to know his Lord. For almost in the next breath he says, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." But circumscribed by these material bodies, who can grasp the momentous significance of St. Paul's yearning as he lingers in that old jail, "and the power of his resurrection"? The grave had always been considered such a prison that hope was next to hopeless. All doors to that narrow home opened easily; but all doors opening outward failed utterly to be moved. A little way ahead Paul could discern the cruel gash in the earth called a grave. How he longed to know more about "The Power of his Resurrection." Shakespeare makes Romeo pry open the doors of the mausoleum in which Juliet lay, but when he spoke—when he shouted—she did not hear. But when Jesus was in command at the grave, Lazarus heard, although he had been dead for four days. When the women looked into Joseph's new tomb that Sunday morning, it was already empty. The thorns had done their worst; the nails had done their work; the Roman spear had torn a gash into the very heart of the Son of God; but none of these instruments of torture could touch HIS LIFE. That life was THE LIFE OF GOD. "In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not."

"O ye Christians, learn the lesson,
Are you struggling all the way?
Cease your trying, change to trusting,
Then you'll triumph every day.
Whatsoever he bids you, do it!
Fill the waterpots to brim;
But remember, 'tis his battle;
Leave the Miracle to HIM!"

New Paris, Indiana.

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Judges

"In those days there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes." This is the concluding sentence in the book of Judges. It might well have been the opening statement, for the writing is a series of illustrations—all historical—of what happened to a people who became apostate seven times, served seven servitudes in seven different nations, and were graciously delivered in a sevenfold way by judges who ruled for God in a day when license and disorder had to be displaced by freedom and independence.

In a nutshell the key to the history is wrapped up in the following lines:

1. "And neither did they drive them out."
2. "And they did evil in the sight of the Lord."
3. "And the Lord sold them into the hands of their enemies."
4. "Nevertheless the Lord raised up a judge to deliver them."

For over four centuries the sevenfold round of iniquity and redemption continued. The tribes failed miserably and the grace of God appeared after every declension. The most doubtful believer is forced to recognize the working judgments and tender mercies of God in this book. They are inescapable and remarkably real.

Between the faithful Joshua and the mighty Saul the following enemies, tribes, and judges are named:

1. Mesopotamians, Judah, Othniel.
2. Moabites, Benjamin, Ehud.
3. Philistines, Judah? Shamgar.
4. Canaanites, Ephraim, Deborah Naphtali, Barak.
5. Midianites, West Manasseh, Gideon.
6. West Manasseh, Abimelech.
7. Issachar, Tola.
8. East Manasseh, Jair.
9. Ammonites, Gad, Jephthah.
10. Zebulun?, Izban.
11. Zebulun, Elon.
12. Ephraim?, Abdon.
13. Philistines, Levi, Eli.
14. Philistines, Dan, Samson.
15. Philistines, Levi, Samuel.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Unknown. Perhaps Samuel.
2. Date of Writing. Period of the Judges.
3. To Whom Addressed. To Israel.
4. Authenticity. Real tribal history.

II. OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. Introduction: After Joshua. 1-3:6.
2. Declension: Under Judges. 3:7-16.
3. Conclusion: Before Ruth. 17-21.

III. THE THEME OF THE BOOK

The theme of Judges centers around a declining Israel and an ascending Jehovah. When sin seems the greatest and vice voices its triumph, then Jehovah laughs from his throne in the skies. Shall wretched pottery laugh in the face of the Potter?

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Disobedience. Confusion. Failure.
2. Key Verses. 2:11, 12, 15, 16; 17:6; 21:25.
3. Key Chapters. 2 and 21.
4. Key Facts. Sin. Punishment. Repentance. Deliverance.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The true value of Judges is reflected in its two main revelations, namely,

1. "Righteousness exalteth a nation:
But sin is a reproach to any people."
and
2. "Jehovah executeth righteous acts,
And judgments for all that are oppressed."

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Christ is the Angel (Messenger) of Jehovah who is mentioned sixteen times. He is visiting his disobedient people who need repentance greatly. Read 1 Jn. 1:9.

Judges will appear in the last days in Israel. She shall cry in distress and be accepted by the Great Judge.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

1. Deborah. Deborah was a prophetess and lone female judge: "a mother in Israel." Her courage, skill, and ambition give her first place among the characters of the book. Her husband—Lapidoth—got his name in print because he married well. I wish we had a picture of him: he probably was hen-pecked.

2. Gideon. Everybody loves a timid quiet man who becomes a hero. He was a cautious, honest fellow and had to have proof on proof before he acted. When he acted, however, under God, he moved the universe. The Gideons, a Christian organization of business men, find great satisfaction in contemplating his accomplishments and walking in his footsteps.

3. Samson. Samson is the champion athlete of Judges. He was popular, witty, and generous as long as nobody opposed him. His head was as solid as his muscles and women admired "the brute." I use the last sentence reverently. It is written of him: "He shall begin to save Israel," and "He wist not that the Lord was departed from him." Our greatest losses are unconscious moral losses.

Delilah, wife of Samson, trimmed his hair and his character. He had eyes to see, but saw nothing. When he lost them he saw the truth. Good health and great strength blunted his perceptions; weakness unveiled them. With the melancholy Gloucester, he could say:

"I have no way, and therefore want no eyes,
I stumbled when I saw."

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSN.

MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR.
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

The Teacher's Preparation

By Rev. C. D. Whitmer, South Bend, Indiana

"And he gave unto some to be apostles, some evangelists, some preachers, some teachers, etc."

In the first place, I believe that a successful teacher is called of God just as a preacher is called of God. Unless God has spoken to a teacher, it is vain for him to attempt to speak for God. The outer life must be preceded by the inner change. Public life for God must be preceded by private life with God. How many teachers lightly and carelessly take up the work of teaching for reasons inadequate to the importance of the task.

Some teachers love the social contact with the pupils; some the dignity of office; some are fond of children; some undertake the duties because they are ashamed to do nothing. O teacher, stop and ask yourself the question, "Why did I become a teacher?" If the answer does not satisfy you, do not give up your class on a sudden impulse, but think and pray over the matter until you realize the true motive which should impel you to undertake this task, and then with renewed consecration, bend to your task.

Now if the work of the teacher were that of the day school teacher it might not be necessary to say much more. But the work and preparation of the Sunday school teacher is that of the day school teacher WITH SOMETHING added. We are not aiming only at the minds of our pupils, but chiefly at their moral natures. And he who would influence morally those under his control, must first be what he wants his pupils to be. An immoral man or woman may be a good school teacher. But it is not possible to conceive of a good Sunday school teacher who at the same time is immoral. Therefore at this point, I wish to say that Christian character is of the highest importance. Just at this point some one might ask me, "Would you have anyone teach who was not a Christian?" To this I would say, "If you can get those to teach who are Christians, by all means do so. If you cannot, then get the best ones you can, and start at once to work for that teacher's own conversion. I would not want my child taught Christianity by a teacher who will not accept it himself. It is a very poor example.

The Teacher as a Man of Business

If the foundation of a building is insecure, where is the beauty of safety of the superstructure? The Sunday school teacher should be prompt in meeting engagements, or willing to serve any place needed.

The Teacher as a Church Member

The teacher should show by every way possible his understanding of the duties of a church member, such as regular attendance at church services, in good weather as well as bad; the weekly prayer meeting as well as the church services. And in church his manner and attention should be a model to those about him. For how do you know in what sermon or prayer meeting talk is coming a direct call to you to "COME UP HIGHER." Scholars have been known to owe their conversion to the reverent and attentive manner of the teachers in church service. We cannot hope as teachers to get our scholars to stay for church services on Sunday morning, if we as teachers do not stay ourselves. Oh how we lament the fact that so many adults as well as young people and children file out of the Sunday school service like they are marching to war, and leave the pastor to talk to a mere handful of faithful members, and then we wonder why the church does not grow. Let us as teachers prepare ourselves for greater usefulness in this respect of being more faithful to our church service.

The Teacher as a Visitor

The teacher as a visitor will be astonished at the way in which doors will swing open to his touch. "He who has his hand on the head of the child has it on the heart of the mother." Freddie's teacher has a welcome to the home which no one else enjoys, and Freddie's own dignity and sense of importance are wonderfully increased when his teacher calls upon him.

The Teacher as a Friend

"A man to have friends must show himself friendly." I believe one of the greatest preparations of a teacher is to cultivate this God given privilege, FRIENDSHIP. What a pleasant thing it is to hear some middle aged person speak in tones of regard, and hear them say, "He was my Sunday school teacher."

The Teacher as a Student of God's Word

Alas, how many fail to recognize this privilege that God has given us that we might prepare ourselves for his service. How many wait until Saturday evening or Sunday morning, and then run hastily over the Lesson Helps and go to their classes with a half digested mass of facts and moral thought to be brought out. "Brethren, these things ought not so to be."

The Teacher as a Man of Prayer

I know of one man of whom I never think without saying, "He is a man of prayer." Do your scholars think thus of you? Do you pray with them? Do you pray for them? Do you teach them how to pray? Your work will be of no avail without God's blessing, and God's blessing will not empty your heart of SELF, and God will fill it with his SPIRIT.

The Teacher as a Conscientious Giver

He has a good opportunity to influence his scholars. How they do watch and how they comment on all that the teacher does. The teacher's example in giving is felt by the whole class. No matter if you cannot give very much, for it is not the amount given, but the spirit in which it has been given that counts.

Feel deeply in your own heart, what a privilege it is to give. Urge the scholars to form a definite plan of giving.

The teacher should think of himself as a model. Now do not misunderstand me here, he should not get his class to think that he is the ultimate goal toward which they should work, but he must be their model as Jesus is their model. For the teacher must be Christ-like. Can you say like Paul of old, "Those things which you have seen in me, do?" O how careful we should walk through life. Do we only realize as we should, that the children's bright eyes are watching us all the time, because we are their model? Will some child learn to listen attentively to the sermon on Sunday morning because you do? Will the young man in your Bible Class lead in prayer in the prayer meeting because you are always willing to do so? Will the pupils in your class refrain from sharp criticism of pastor or superintendent because they have never known you to utter a word of criticism? Lastly, the Teacher's Model is Jesus Christ

Dwell on this thought. The way to become a good teacher is to be just as your model (Jesus Christ) would like to have you be. Jesus pleased not himself. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus our Lord, that in everything ye may be enriched by him."

If now we consider what he did after the age of thirty, we are led to the conclusion that all these earlier years were spent in study, meditation and prayer. It also seems reasonable that he willingly spent thirty years of his life preparing himself to teach for three years. How significant this is. Many of us would grow impatient, and would reverse the order. We would prepare for three years that we might teach for thirty years.

He taught with power because he was thoroughly prepared to teach. When we measure the power of a teacher, we ask ourselves, what equipment did he possess? In what school was he trained? What courses did he study? How little did Jesus seem to care about any of these? Knowledge was to him a means, not an end. He is everywhere recognized as a great Teacher, who used his scholarship not to make others learned, but to teach others how to live.

Let this be our aim in preparing to teach; to do that we may show others how to live Christlike lives. Then we are prepared teachers.

The teacher's personal character is a great step toward the preparation for teaching in Sunday school.

He should be a CHRISTIAN. He must love the study of God's Word. He must love the pupil. He must be patient. He aims at conversions of his pupils. He is a man of prayer. He takes as his model the great Model, Jesus Christ.

The teacher's best four things.

The best material—CHILD NATURE.

The Best tool—THE WORD OF GOD.

The best helper—THE HOLY SPIRIT.

The best result—CHRISTLIKE CHARACTER.

Many Christians have never learned to know with what an almighty power God is willing to work in them. They have never learnt to know how completely the Holy Spirit can take possession of a man utterly given up to God; how really Jesus Christ can literally dwell and live his life in the heart fully surrendered to him.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
 With
Thoburn C. Lyon

ISAAC AND HIS WELLS

(Lesson for May 1)

Lesson Text: Gen. 26:12-25; Golden Text: Prov. 15:1

Daily Reading and Comments

MONDAY

Isaac and His Wells. Gen. 26:12-25

Isaac was quite evidently a true son of his noble father, and remained true to his principles and faith. His reverence for his father is seen in his giving to the old wells the same names which Abraham had given them; his adherence to the principles of Abraham is evidenced by his willingness to give up his "rights" and suffer loss rather than contend for his rights. His faithfulness was not without its reward—and we do not mean so much his worldly possessions as the peace of mind and spirit which he prized so highly. In striving for things what peace the world has lost! Perhaps if, like Abraham and Isaac, we paid more attention to our altars, we should be less concerned about things.

TUESDAY

A Treaty of Peace. Gen. 26:26-33

Of course, Abimelech and his friends must have been impressed with the way in which God had prospered Isaac, but after all they were probably as much impressed with the moral principles of the man. Often we fear and hesitate to take a definite and positive stand, lest we should be ridiculed; however, if we but had the moral courage to live our beliefs we would find that even the unbelieving world would respect us more. Let us pray for courage to live a truly Christ-like life—and let us spend some time meditating as to just what that means.

WEDNESDAY

The Covenant of Beer-sheba. Gen. 21:22-34

The covenant with Isaac was, after all, only the renewing of a covenant which Abimelech had made with Abraham. The well at Beer-sheba was one which Abraham's servants had dugged and paid for, so that it was rightfully Isaac's property. The friendship of the world is not of much value, but even the world desires the friendship of men of staunch Christian character, and for this reason they sought to renew the covenant with Isaac. Let us not reject all the advances of the world, or we may never hope to win them; but let us never forget that their friendship cannot be depended on, and that our every endeavor must be to win them to the service of the Lord.

THURSDAY

The Better Way. Prov. 16:19-33

Verse 33 is often quoted, and has frequently been used as a Golden Text, yet how far we all are from putting it into actual every-day practice. Little things, even if they do not cause us to lose our temper, still cause us to worry and fret. We need to rule our spirits in the strength of him who reminded us that we are of much more value than many sparrows or the grass of the field. We shall have peace according as we have faith in him. Lord increase our faith!

FRIDAY

The Supremacy of Love. 1 Cor. 13:1-13

One of the best-loved passages of the whole Bible. Perhaps because we do read it so often we need to give it special attention: we are prone to be superficial with things we think we know so well! It will well repay us to read each verse separately, and consider each comparison. For example (v. 3), it would scarcely occur to us that we might give our whole fortune for the relief of unemployment, or even give our very life as a martyr, without having love in our heart for the cause at stake. This leads us to the questions, What is love? What is its source? How will it manifest itself? DOES it manifest itself in MY life as it should?

SATURDAY

The Rule of Peace. Col. 3:12-17

On the earth men and nations rage to and fro, behaving in ways that must often grieve the loving heart of God; yet we cannot think of him as being worried or fretful. Even when he must punish, it is in loving pity, and not in vengeful hate: his very nature is peace. It is this peace, the peace of God that should rule in the hearts of his people.

SUNDAY

The Beatitudes. Matt. 5:1-12

We all crave God's blessing, that we may be happy both here and hereafter. Look upon these beatitudes as formulas for obtaining his blessing. Consider each one well. And let us not be satisfied with keeping one or two of these verses: let us keep them all!

E. M. RIDDLE,          President          Warsaw, Indiana F. G. VANATOR,          Associate          Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK 	GLADYS M. SPICK,          General Secretary          and          Treasurer          2301 13th St., N. E.,          Canton, Ohio
G. D. WHITMER, 217 E. Duball Ave., South Bend, Ind.

Our Christian Endeavor

By Vivian Adler

Christian Endeavor is one of the most essential and important works of a church. From this society a church builds for its future. It is, one might say, the training school of the church. The Endeavorers of the First Brethren church of South Bend, Indiana, work on this basis.

There are three very important ways in which the Christian Endeavorers must be trained,—prayer, benevolent study, and how to make themselves useful in activities of the church.

It is not easy for everyone to pray aloud in a group. We find, that calling on different individuals each Sunday night to open sentence prayers, has taken away their timidity. Prayer can not be emphasized too much.

Benevolent study gives to the endeavorer a better understanding of prayer and service. The study of the Christian Endeavor topics, if presented correctly, will bring about a clearer knowledge of the subject. We use the standard Christian Endeavor topics. Our Sunday School Paper, "The Angelus," contains the lessons, written one week in advance by C. D. Whitmer. This enables the society members to study the lesson in advance, which creates a deeper interest. Also the "Christian Endeavor Quarterly" and "Christian Endeavor World" are used by us. The more capable leaders arrange their topic so that most everyone has a part in the meeting. This, of course, gives the more backward members a chance to become more confident in themselves. Quite frequently a member of this kind leads. The cooperation of the society in discussion and a word of praise at the close of the meetings tend to establish a certain amount of faith in this particular kind of leader.

Active church work includes a large range of service. First of all, the various committees must function. Our Lookout Committee is very important. Our Christian Endeavor is divided into three groups of about fifteen to twenty members each. A reliable person is responsible for each group.

Besides our budget, we help the church by donating money to various causes. So far this year we have given money toward revival meeting expenses, bought equipment for the janitor and other trivial items. We now have undertaken to redecorate the dining room of the church. Of course this makes it necessary for us to concentrate on means by which to keep our treasury supplied with finances. Some of the ways in which we have increased our treasury might be of interest. Last fall we had a recital, later on in the winter we had a chili supper. On St. Patrick's Day we gave an Irish Stew Supper and program. These were very successful. We are at this time working on another recital.

We have social gatherings frequently for the Christian Endeavorers and their friends. This brings in new members and creates a closer Christian fellowship among the Endeavorers. Our attendance averages between forty and fifty members each Sunday night.

Our pastor, Rev. Porte, has worked with us spiritually and socially and we feel that his help has been a wonderful inspiration to the Christian Endeavorers.

MISSIONARY PROGRAMS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE'S AND SENIOR SOCIETIES

Issued by the Missionary Department of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union, and Prepared by Miss Julia T. Kerr, State Superintendent

I. Every Society Should Undertake This Program

1. Plan twelve missionary meetings a year. The Presbyterian, Baptist and Congregational boards, also the International Society of Christian Endeavor, have suggestions for the missionary meetings which they will send upon request.

2. Strive to have each society member give at least a dollar a year (a postage-stamp a week) to missions. See that the missionary money is sent on promptly through the proper denominational channels.

3. Pray at each weekly meeting for the missionaries and specific fields in which you may have a special interest.

4. Study at least one mission study book a year.

5. Render some service to others at home and on foreign fields; as sending baskets of food or toys at Christmas time, remembering the sick and unfortunate, helping with mission work in your community, sending hospital or school supplies or gifts to the foreign field.

6. Emphasize tithing. Devote one meeting a year to it, using a demonstration if possible.

11. For Those Societies Which Have Accomplished Program I.

1. Conduct a reading contest, having the members of the missionary committee first read the books.

2. Give a missionary pageant or play. This will increase missionary interest among the members of your society,

3. Have an outside speaker at one of the missionary meetings if possible.

4. Send a delegate to summer and winter conferences and to denominational meetings; then put them to work.

5. Have one missionary social a year, carrying out the customs of some country. A social may also be used as an introduction to a mission study class.

6. Have a missionary bulletin board, gathering the material from daily newspapers and the current magazines. Keep it up to date.

7. Put your committee to work to plan interesting and varied meetings and to carry out this program in detail.

Keep in touch with the young people's department and mission boards of your own denomination. Ask them for their programs and helps. Your pastor can supply the address.

REVIVALS IN CENTRAL CHINA

Revival stirrings in Central China are described by Mr. Hamlett of Wusih. He tells of witness-bearers who go out and preach in village and hamlet. Recently one of these lay-workers came to his evangelistic services and witnessed with unusual power. He had been a hopeless prodigal, and through sin had lost his eyesight. After seeking in vain for help in different superstitious cults he finally wandered into a Christian chapel in Shanghai. The Lord Jesus came into his heart and healed him miraculously. Now he is a flaming light, telling of the marvelous grace of God wherever he goes.

"As I went into the pulpit on a Sunday morning a man got up and asked permission to witness for Christ. I asked him to preach. In a very humble manner he told how the Lord had saved him. Later at his invitation I journeyed to his village and helped him to preach to his people. He went out on the streets with a bell and got the people together and took his turn in telling the Gospel message. Little revivals are breaking out here and there in many sections of the mission. During our summer conference for Chinese Christians this year I heard numbers of men and women get up and tell how the Lord had healed their bodies and souls and how he was using these miracles of grace to spread the Gospel in their villages. Not long ago I met Mr. Tong Tsing Oen on a street car in Shandhai. Formerly he was professor in Shanghai Baptist College and later vice-president, but for some time had been doing ordinary business with some firm in Shanghai. I asked him how his business was. He replied; 'Mr. Hamlett, I'm not doing business now; I'm preaching the Gospel, and I believe every word in the old Bible.' I learned later that he had become pastor of one of the Northern Baptist churches in Shanghai, and was doing a splendid revival and evangelistic work."—S. S. Times.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.,
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Dern, Indiana

Tent Work in Argentina

In my last report I spoke of the tent campaign in Rio Cuarto and the annual conference of our Argentine churches which followed. These were three busy weeks but full of blessing.

From Rio Cuarto we went with the Bible Coach and tent to Alejandro where we remained two weeks. The mayor gave us permission to place the tent in the municipal playground in the center of town. However we made the mistake of locating it just a little too far from the corner. Many people therefore contented themselves by listening from the sidewalk nearest the tent without going to the corner to enter. Nevertheless we had the tent full every night with still more people listening from the street. The second week as usual the people came nearer and listened with more confidence. At the close there were twenty-five professed conversions.

Alejandro has been considered a hard town. It has even been called a graveyard for missionaries yet the offerings for our work there were greater than in any other town and the results in conversions also.

However, practically all the members have now gone to the corn harvest to remain from two to five months. One of the new converts is a Jewish woman wife of a merchant who is a brutal, ignorant atheist. She came weeping to confess Christ and said she was willing to suffer anything to be faithful. She has been having her Calvary: When I returned to visit Alejandro this week I found that her husband had beaten her and had thrown hot oil on her and then had accused her of being crazy and had taken her to Buenos Aires and had left her with her parents who are fanatical Jews. Several of the children who came to our children's meetings were also beaten and one has had to go to relatives.

The priest from Carlota also came and gathered up all the Bibles and Testaments that he could get in order to burn them. The parents of several children who were converted were persuaded to prohibit them from coming any more.

From Alejandro we went to Laboulaye and during the first week had large crowds and great interest in spite of the campaign of lies which the priest started against us. As I left at the end of the first week and Brother Romanenghi took my place I will leave the complete report of this campaign till the next time. From Laboulaye the tent was to be taken to Huinca Rananco and Realico.

C. F. YODER.

Why I Like My Missionary Job

By Albert D. Helser, F. R. G. S., Nigeria, West Africa
(Missionary of the Church of the Brethren)

(The following article by Mr. Helser, and published in "The Missionary Review of the World" is not of recent writing, but it is just as forceful from the standpoint of the reasons why a devoted missionary likes his missionary job as if it had been written yesterday, though a more recent report would give greater evidences of hope. The motive for missionary endeavor, at home or abroad, is ever the same—"Find lost men."—EDITOR.)

James Gordon Bennett sent Henry M. Stanley into Central Africa with the commission: "Find Livingstone, never mind the cost; find Livingstone and bring him back."

The Word of Jesus Christ to his Church is, "Find lost men; never mind the cost; find them and bring them back to me."

With this in mind H. Stover Kulp from the University of Pennsylvania and the writer, from Teachers College, Columbia University, traveled a thousand miles into the interior of North Central Africa.

On a crisp November morning we set our faces toward the land of our heart's desire. Six years in college and graduate work had made me a little impatient to be off.

By steamer to England and then on to Nigeria; by train, Ford, horseback or on foot we traveled 1,109 miles into the interior and located at Garkida, Northeastern Nigeria, south of Lake Chad, 1,030 miles from the West Coast.

The shadows of disease and death stalk everywhere among the pagans of North Central Africa and there are no cities of refuge. I visited a village which was deserted because of smallpox. Those who were able to go had fled to new quarters; they were helpless and hopeless. As we went near the door of a hut we heard a voice and saw a form of a woman blinded and disfigured with smallpox. There were dead to be buried with few to bury them. A few months before we had seen bodies twisted with cerebro-spinal meningitis. Lepers with bleeding hands and feet cry out for help from many a gateway. Little children scream and groan from the torture of heathen practices.

There are many languages in Central Africa and this creates a tremendous difficulty. In the Bura tribe where we are located the people knew nothing of a written language. There is no Bible, no school books, nothing on paper.

Ignorance, polygamy and devil worship in their worst forms are entrenched as deep as hell itself.

I like my missionary job because it is a commission from my Master himself, and because it is difficult but what gives a greater thrill is to realize that there is hope of victory.

The doctor vaccinated the children and some grown people in that small deserted village and we told them of the hope. Some were delivered from an awful death and told of a Savior's love. One father came running after us as we left. A child was in his arms and the father begged that delivering medicine might be administered. Lepers are being treated and some are showing marked improvement. The new ray of hope has put a new gleam in their eyes and a smile on their faces. Little children are exchanging their screams of despair for songs of joy and hope and their groans for loving words and prayers to Jesus Christ.

The language is being reduced to writing and the gospels are being translated into Bura and are printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Ignorance is beginning to give way. Ninety-four boys and sixteen girls have been enrolled in our mission school and have learned to read. There are small beginnings in industrial education. The missionary doctor gives regular instruction in sanitation and hygiene.

Harmful social customs and superstition are giving way. Young men are beginning to refuse the urge of their parents to take the second wife. Men who three years ago marched around the mountain and called for rain are now quietly kneeling in our little church and praying to God for rain. Some who watched through the long nights in fear of evil spirits now say the Lord's Prayer and "lie down to pleasant dreams."

It is a joy to serve Christ in Central Africa. Hopes are beginning to be realized and new and larger hopes are being born all the time.

I like my missionary job because it has a great future. As we write on the tablet of the hearts of the youth we are determining the future of the nation. We hope to see established a training center for teachers and preachers that will wield a determining influence over millions of men who are now pagans and Mohammedans. There is a great opportunity in our pagan area to win the people to Christ before they have been misled into accepting another religion.

There is a great field before us. More missionaries are needed in Nigeria. For 200 miles to the north and 1,000 miles to the east there are only two Lutheran missionaries. This field needs men who know Christ and will obey his Word.

A few weeks ago I was preaching near a sacred lake in Buraland and a horseman called for me to come quickly for a woman had been caught and mangled by a crocodile. I found her in awful agony. A great chunk of flesh had been bitten from her hip and there were other big wounds on her legs. We did our best but she died. When we asked about killing the crocodile they said, "Oh, no, it may have the spirit of a man in it and he would die." This is one of the superstitions that need to be changed. With God's help the time is not far distant when a woman will be of more value than many crocodiles. I like my job because it is God's work; it is difficult; it is needed; it is hopeful; it is worth doing.

spend the summer in Europe in research.

Other members of the faculty did the usual amount of outside work, such as visiting churches, making addresses, etc.

Scholarships

I have the promise of two additional scholarships, the donors of which will be made public when they are received.

The Stadium

It was a pleasure to announce that within the year, a Redwood Stadium was erected seating some 1500, all fully paid for by gifts. Now that athletics may be on a decline, I think the wisdom of erecting a redwood stadium rather than a very much more expensive one, is fully justified.

Recognition

Within the year all our degree courses were fully accredited by the Board of Regents of the State of New York. Also we are cooperating with the North Central Association in their revision of standards.

Salary Scale

The Board voted to approve a salary scale based upon the following plan: (1) Masters; (2) those with at least one full year in some graduate school in addition to the Master's degree, (3) and the Doctors, the North Central definitions of the above rankings being taken as the standard. It is to be noted that bachelors were not ranked for the reason that it is not the plan to employ those holding only the bachelor's degree.

Dr. W. S. Bell was continued as part-time field representative of the College.

The Seminary

Professor McClain also presented an encouraging report of the Seminary, which will likely be mentioned elsewhere in the Evangelist.

Educational Day

Notwithstanding the many calls and the general financial depression, the Board voted to authorize the observance of Educational Day again this year, the second Sunday in June. And while the gifts have been steadily reduced, yet they have been a very substantial help and we could not possibly drop that source of our income. Pastors and others, please take notice.

Some minor Faculty changes were made which will be announced later.

The report of the conditions of the College was so well received that the Board ordered it to be published as one of the numbers of our College Bulletin. This will be done before the close of school when a much fuller statement will be made.

All in all, the year has been good. What next year will bring with all the financial distresses which seem to confront us, remains to be seen. I am certain that the Church and our friends generally, ought to continue to pray and work for our advancement here.

Word recently received from Brother Floyd Sibert, pastor at Masontown, Pennsylvania, is to the effect that he had an enjoyable and profitable time representing the College at the inauguration of the new president at Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pennsylvania. About 200 colleges were represented.

At the last Faculty Club meeting, Professor Puterbaugh read a very scholarly paper dealing with his field in Chemistry.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Appetite
was a great correspondent

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The annual meeting of the Board of College Trustees convened here last Tuesday with the following members present: Brethren Teeter, Bell, Schaffer, Bauman, Ashman, Duker, Ronk, Workman, Carpenter, Benshoff, Switzer, Kem, and Alvin Byers. Professor McClain represented Southern California and the writer is an ex-officio member.

George T. Ronk was chosen president; George Kem, vice-president; R. R. Teeter, secretary; and Frank Clapper, treasurer—all were re-elections.

The routine business was disposed of in the usual way, followed by the President's report, the main points of which were that (1) the enrollment had not only not declined but showed an increase, and (2) the school could likely close without a deficit, i. e., that we could balance our budget.

This was due to a curtailing of over-head expense and increased receipts from tuitions. I watched the budget very carefully and estimated month by month the expense this year as compared with last year, and also our probable income.

Another thing is also important, viz., we received promptly the payments of the National Sunday School Association, the Woman's Missionary Society, and the Sisterhood Girls' donation. The Board is under lasting obligations to these three organizations and if it were not for the gifts of the former two organizations, the College could not successfully operate. Will the officers of these organizations please take note in making your budgets next year.

The Faculty

It was gratifying that I could make the following report on the faculty: For the first time in more than 6 years all the regular members were here. Professor Black spent last summer in the University of Michigan where he is working towards his doctorate in Mathematics. Professor Haun is submitting his dissertation in the University of Chicago for his Doctorate in Physics. Professor Puterbaugh is closing his research and writing up his problem in Chemistry in Northwestern University for his Doctorate. Professors McClain, Puterbaugh, Caldwell, Monroe, Ullman and the writer had articles accepted within the current year by certain magazines. Also many book reviews.

Mr. Schmuck, coach, will attend the University of Southern California this summer and also attend the Olympic games.

Dr. Ullman in the department of Psychology, brought out a book within the current year.

Dr. Bixler of the department of History has a book now in press. He expects to

MANSFIELD, OHIO

Paul's great treatise on the Resurrection concludes with these reassuring words: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." This report of God's activity among the Mansfield (Ohio) Brethren is indisputable confirmation of Paul's words—"Your labor is not in vain in the Lord." God has honored his Word. It has not returned void. There have been some very remarkable demonstrations of God's answer to prayer. The unfathomable way in which the Spirit of God may use the simple proclamation of his gospel has caused us to wonder and rejoice. Our faith which is of feeble framework has been bolstered and supported by these movings of the Spirit. We praise God for his Grace which he has so richly bestowed upon us all.

For the past few months the attendance has gradually been creeping upwards. In spite of sickness and depression the work is prospering. The Great Shepherd of the Sheep is taking care of his own and bringing the wandering ones back to the fold. The Sunday evening services which have been dispensed with for a brief season will be resumed in a short time. The need for prayer has been felt, and that need is to be met with a prayer meeting. Other great needs are being felt and supplied. A thriving Woman's Missionary Society is making its tally in service for the Lord. A great many minor items have yet remained untouched, but the future will bring opportunities and privileges which shall be appropriated.

The Spirit is working; hearts are being touched, and the prospects for a great spiritual revival are before us. Our hopes and our prayers center around this expectation. We covet the prayers of the Brethren.

Six souls were added to the church in January, one by letter, five by conversion. God brought us another harvest in April. Ten souls were added to the church, eight by baptism and two by letter. Four other souls accepted the Lord Jesus Christ but intervening circumstances precluded the ordinance of baptism. There is rejoicing in heaven, as there is also in the congregation.

The pastor and his wife express their deep sense of gratitude for the kindly reception which has been extended to them. There has been Christian fellowship. A hospitable spirit has been manifested on every hand. Willing cooperation has been evidenced. On numerous occasions the Brethren of the congregation have shown their appreciation of the servants God has sent them, with bestowals of eatables and clothing. A very unavoidable inference must be drawn—a Christian congregation has no peer nor parallel, if it is genuinely Christian.

HERMAN HOYT, Pastor.

NAPPANEE, INDIANA

Having almost completed three years as pastor with the First Brethren church at Nappanee, Indiana, may be an incentive at this time to give the brotherhood some idea of that which is taking place in this part of the field for Christ and the church. It makes but little difference where the pastor is located in service he finds work to do. There is plenty of work to do and being done in Nappanee despite the fact that we have eleven churches with a population of 3,000. Hence I shall cover the work accomplished during the past eight months in some of the departments of our church.

Let us go back to last Fall when we began the present year's work. It was voted by our church, in cooperation with the other churches of Nappanee, that we should enter into a union evangelistic campaign under the leadership of an evangelist named Colgrove. The result in additions to our church from these meetings were 45 who desired to affiliate with our church, plus an additional 6 who came forward in our own church, making a total of 51 in all. Then soon after we had our Love Feast, at which service 265 of our members united in obedience to their Lord's desire and received that blessing which I fully believe was the stimulus that made us prosperous in his cause during the fall and winter and thus far in the spring months. To me the fellowshiping in and at the Love Feast is a means of soul building and soul developing in Jesus Christ. For when people attend to the things of Christ he will bless them. The attendance at last fall's communion was the largest in the history of the Nappanee church. Since that time the attendance at Sunday school has been anywhere between 350 and 515. Attendance at the church services has increased and continues to increase. Offerings have been exceptional considering the times. We have no debts; we are not behind financially in any department. We have subscribed to all the appeals made by outside agencies, perhaps not as much as we should like but at least have done something when the special offering days have arrived. The pastor's salary is always paid on time. For nearly three years never have I known the church treasurer to hold me off one minute because of lack of funds to pay salary. I tell you the Lord is good to us and we appreciate and thank him for it.

In January, 1932, at a business meeting the church decided that the pastor should hold a two weeks' pre-Easter service. When the time arrived we went into the service, put our trust in the Lord and again he won the battle for us. A grand two weeks it was,—victory, victory, victory. At the first invitation in these services to accept the Lord individuals came forward in serious contrition and they kept on coming until 51 in all pledged themselves in faith to follow their Master and go with him all the way. Four of these people were in years ranging from 65 to 76. Four young couples and five other heads of families united as one in the church which they chose to make their place of worship and work for the Lord. The total since last fall coming into the church is 102 and we trust all shall continue faithful till the Lord calls them higher.

Last Easter Sunday was a great day for us. We started the day right by beginning with a sunrise service at 6 o'clock A. M., which was well attended. The Sunday school attendance reached 515, and in the following preaching services throughout the day the crowds were large, especially at night when the house was filled to capacity, the night service being climaxed with baptismal services. Then I must not forget to tell that over $400 was given by the church for Foreign Missions during the day and still more coming along. Then our meetings were so effective that it was deemed wise to continue them a part of the week following Easter Sunday. We continued the services until Thursday night of the following week and closed with our spring communion when over 300 gathered once again in that blessed fellowship and communion with the Lord, which should be incentive sufficient to send us forth to accomplish larger things in the future for Christ and the church.

This church has been kind enough to allow their pastor to help other churches in evangelistic work. It has been my happy privilege to hold evangelistic services in several of the Indiana churches since coming to this State. The last meeting was held with Rev. D. A. C. Teeter at Loree, Indiana, where we had the joy of witnessing 37 individuals coming to accept the Lord Jesus Christ and unite with the Brethren Church for which Church I always labor faithfully.

Thus we have good news to offer the readers of the Evangelist. We trust you will share in our joys as we delight in reading and learning of your successes through the contributions you send to the Evangelist. Let the Brethren Church remain true to her trust and the Lord will win for us. We cannot do it alone. "God himself is with us for our captain" and with him we shall win.

BENJ. F. OWEN, Pastor.

GEORGETOWN DELAWARE

Scenes of childhood come before my mind. There was a "revival meeting" in the old home church. The evangelist was a wonderful man in my sight and I was glad to have him stay in our home.

Time has passed and that evangelist is now pastor and it was my part to be the evangelist. We have just closed a short meeting with my Bible Chart Lectures with Brother I. D. Bowman at the Mt. Olivet church near Georgetown, Delaware. I was somewhat timid when I realized that Brother Bowman was one of my audience but his kindly spirit towards me dispelled all fear.

Brother Bowman is nearing the last mile post in the race of life and should our Lord tarry and the sun set behind the western horizon of his life, the hearts of thousands over the brotherhood will testify to the fact that a righteous man has gone to his reward. For fifty years Brother Bowman has sown the word of God with full assurance that to him that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward; for fifty years he has gone forth bearing precious seed and now he hears the time when he will come again with rejoicing bringing his sheaves with him.

I do not mean that Brother Bowman's work is over—far from it. He may live longer than I. I merely mean that the path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

My home, during the meetings, was with Brother and Sister Elwood Workman. Brother Workman has been a Christian but a few years but I seldom ever meet a man who has the Scripture so well in mind.

The church building is located on a cement pavement a few miles from Georgetown. The attendance increased from night to night until the last night we closed with a full house. Sunday was a big day. Saturday night Brother Harvey Evans took me to his home near Ocean View. Next morning I spoke in a house near by. Brother Evans is anxious that a work be started there.

We then hurried back to Mt. Olivet for a service at two o'clock. After this service we went to the water for baptism. We were not far from the ocean and it was my first experience at baptism in salt water.

Brother Bowman left before the meetings closed as he had an appointment in Virginia where he is now in meetings.

May the richest blessings of the Lord abide on the pastor and people as they labor together in this part of the Lord's vineyard.
R. I. HUMBERD.

FAITH'S VISION

Rev. P. M. Naff

*Transgressions' chains were 'round me bound,
Sin cast me down.
I bore upon my heart a load
Of sin and shame.
I heard that Christ from Heaven came down,
His gory cross was glory crowned
With pardon, offered on its ground.
My faith looked up.*

*Though everything seem dark around,
I will look up.
Though circumstances would confound,
I still look up.
Above this world a God there is Whose love for every child of His Unto my heart new courage gives,
When I look up.*

*The world is but a wandering place,
And I look up.
My Home approaches; swift its pace,
As I look up.
My Lord a promise true has given,
That sleeping saints, also the living,
Shall soon be raptured into Heaven.
So I look up.*

*Oh! Captive soul in chains of sin,
Will you look up?
For living hope, for peace within,
Will you look up?
Oh! Trust in Jesus, God's own Son,
Who by His blood salvation won,
And pardon gives to every one
Whose faith looks up.
Buena Vista, Virginia.*

THE TESTIMONY OF A CHRISTIAN LIFE

Miss Lanneau of Soochow, China, tells in Home and Foreign Fields the story of a recent convert. He lives in Soochow but went on business to another place. A Christian invited him to church there. He went but was untouched. Then he lived for some weeks in the home of a Christian friend and became conscious of a real difference in the home atmosphere. One night he saw his friend figuring away at accounts until nearly midnight. When he asked the trouble, his friend said, "I have seventy-eight cents I can't locate."

"Oh, that's nothing. I'll give you the seventy-eight cents and you go to bed."
"No, it's seventy-eight cents too much. I know it must belong to some one and I ought to pay it to him, but I can't figure out who it is. I must get it straight if I have to sit up all night."

He did get it straight and paid the money to the proper person the next day. This incident convinced the Soochow man that there was something in his friend's life that he ought to have in his own. Returning to Soochow he attended an outstation meeting, came again and again, and is now a faithful member of the church.—S. S. Times.

THE FIRE AT YALOUKI STATION

(Continued from page 2)

iron or composition roofs. We have been forced to take refuge in the church building simply because it is the only building left of sufficient size and suitable room. Fortunately, there are two small class rooms in the church, so there is a bedroom for each family. Then we have the mail room in common. The morning services are held in a shed that had been used for drying brick.

Mr. Hathaway is courageously setting to work to repair the damages. It would be enough to discourage almost anyone, to feel that at last the building work was almost done and one could devote their entire time to evangelistic work, and then suddenly to have to begin nearly all over again. However, we have taken it all to the Lord, and are willing to endure our share of the troublesome times that are coming upon the world.

Fortunately, the brick over the doors and windows held together quite well in spite of the fact that the supporting woodwork was burned out, so the wood is being replaced as quickly as possible. The next question is what to use for roofs. Everyone disliked seeing grass roofs put on again.

but iron, or composition would cost $600 or over for a single house, and with money matters as they are, it seems prohibitive. Some experiments are being tried to find other native material.

Our personal losses, though nothing in comparison to the loss of the buildings, were considerable and rather trying in some cases. For instance both households lost practically all their food stuffs, including for each from 7 to 10 dozen fruit jars filled with canned fruits and vegetables, which meant a great deal of labor. One of the strange things about it was that what our household lost was saved in the other one, and vice versa. So Miss Tyson and I eat off the Hathaway dining table, set with our dishes and silverware, but the food is largely cooked in their pans and in their kitchen. Thus we are happy together, being thankful for such things as we have.

After all is said and done, we feel very, very grateful, and if we get our money out of the bank that the government has promised to redeem, and if the grasshoppers don't destroy the next year's gardens, and if the threatened war doesn't cut off our connection with the homeland, we will indeed be blessed. If not—then we will rejoice anyway that the end is drawing near, and that we suffer in a righteous cause.

MARY EMMERT.

Memorial to Elder Thomas H. Broad

(Obituary)

Elder Thomas H. Broad was born in Cornwall, England, April 15th, 1873, and departed to be with the Savior whom he so dearly loved, on March 21, 1932, from his home at Narod, near Ontario, California. Had he lived on this earth but 25 days longer, he would have sojourned upon it for 59 years.

In his Cornwall home, he was married to Miss Ellen Kate Hendy, in 1898, and together they emigrated to America in 1901. To them were born six children, two of whom were planted in Paradise in their infancy. Of the surviving children, one son, Bert, resides in Spokane, Washington; a second son, Edgar, lives at Azusa, California; the older daughter, Mrs. Carl (Hilda) Ohler, dwells at San Dimas, California; while the younger daughter abides with her now widowed mother. One brother, William, lives in Sawtelle, California; a sister, Mrs. Clara Bath, lives in La Verne, California; while three sisters still live in England.

To a throng of sorrowing friends and now shepherdless sheep, the writer preached the funeral sermon—one of the most difficult tasks he ever confronted. In fact, had it not been for the earnest entreaty of the immediate family, he would have sat among the mourners, rather than in the pulpit. "Tom" Broad was the writer's friend—a friend who knows what friendship means. It has been our privilege to know him intimately for twenty years. Only Brother A. V. Kimmell, now pastor in Philadelphia, knew him as well, and that, before us. Brother Kimmell was pastor of the First church in Los Angeles, while Brother Broad was pastor of the La Verne church, when we went to California.

In a letter to the writer, Brother Kimmell says: "Dear Brother Broad, I wonder if he knows how much we loved him, and how much we are going to miss him. He was so closely associated with our work in Southern California, that to think of the growth of the Church in that District is to think of him. . . . For several years, we were the only Brethren pastors in Southern California. I think I was never able to make him understand what a help he was to me then, when as young men we were responsible for such big territory. When we began planning for the Second church in Los Angeles, he offered every encouragement. When it came time for work, he helped put up the tent; he walked the streets passing out advertising; he went into homes where he was known and almost compelled the people to come to the meetings, and most all his prayers followed the work and the workers. He helped to dedicate that old church at Compton Avenue; the same thing was repeated at Long Beach, as you well know, as the three of us worked together there. Then again at Whittier, where he gave those weeks of service of all kinds to make it possible to have a Brethren church there. How I wish it were possible for me to be with you and let our tears mingle together over the body of the first of the three of us to be called to the Lord. . . . Elder T. H. Broad was the first man it was my privilege to ordain to the Christian ministry. Though I have ordained a number since then, I have never been more confident that a man was called of the Lord, and would be used of the Lord, than I was of Brother Broad."

This fine confidence of Brother Kimmell was not misplaced. We do not hesitate to say that not in our lifetime have we ever known, and we scarcely expect to know in the future, a more faithful pastor to a flock than was "Tom" Broad. A more unselfish man never lived. And in all his virtues, he was tremendously enhanced and encouraged by his loving, faithful companion, Sister Broad. The tie between these two was sweet to behold. One union that none can doubt was made in heaven, "Tom" Broad was literally everybody's friend. And the more down-and-out a man was, the more he tried to befriend him. It was not even considered a task by him to visit a sick man, and to stay by his bedside and nurse him all the night long if his help was thus needed. Where others went not, he went. He loved the place where the need was greatest. And if there was need, he would wash the feet of a man where such washing was service, just as quickly as he would wash them beneath the communion table where the washing of that which was clean was a symbolic act commanded by his Lord. It is not to be thought strange then, that he was loved out of the Church even as he was greatly loved within it. If helping somebody is going to make one crown shine brighter than another, then we do not want to stand too close to "Tom" Broad in the crowning day! "There's a reason!"

Moreover, his family loved him. There are two sons that have not been driven away from their Lord or his Church by the inconsistent life of their ministerial father. Since the father's homegoing the writer has received a letter from the youngest son, Edgar. We could covet nothing more on this earth, than when once we leave it, our own boy could honestly write a similar letter. The whole letter could be summed up in one single sentence therein: "Brother Bauman, I loved my Dad!" No two were ever closer pals! A lesson for fathers indeed.

Brother Broad began his ministerial career when yet in the mines of Cornwall. He began preaching at 18 years of age. Within the Brethren Church he held the following pastorates: La Verne, Los Angeles, Montreal, Fillmore and Spokane. Without the Brethren Church he had charge of community churches at Norco, and at Narod. At the time of his departure he was the loved pastor at Narod.

The church at La Verne knew him as its shepherd for many years. The high spiritual and missionary status of this church today is in a large measure due to his ministry. His last work as the pastor of a Brethren church was in Spokane, Washington. This charge he had to leave on account of ill health (heart trouble), and upon the advice of his physician. On this account he returned to Southern California, placing his membership in the La Verne church, of which church he was a member when God called him home. Prof. McClain, who sits beside me as I write this obituary, and who visited the Spokane church during Brother Broad's pastorate there, says: "I never knew a pastor to be so universally loved by his people, and also by others outside his church." A striking testimony indeed!

We doubt if any minister in the Brethren Church ever closed his ministerial career in more striking fashion than did Brother Broad. It was on Palm Sunday at eventide in his pulpit at Narod, among the wonderful orange groves of Southern California, the very atmosphere heavily laden with their perfume, that he preached his last sermon. His subject was, "It Is Finished" (the last words of his Master on the cross). We have in our possession, as we write this obituary, the notes he used in that sermon. The notes from beginning to end are typewritten, except for the very last sentence. This is written with a pencil as though it might have been written there, even after the conclusion of his sermon: "And Now It Is Finished." Feeling in his usual health and strength, he went home, slept peacefully during the night, arose, took a brief walk out into the open air, stepped back into the house and suddenly dropped to the floor. His spirit was winging its flight to the land where hearts never fail.

Elsewhere in this issue of the Brethren Evangelist, appear two separate tributes in the form of poetry that were written by those who knew him well, and handed to us at the time of the funeral. We offer them because we believe they were merited.

In closing, the writer can only say that few friendships of earth have ever been valued by him, more highly than the absolutely sincere friendship of "Tom" Broad. Earth now means less, but Heaven means more. The City, "built without hands,"—the City of our God—is becoming a place exceedingly desired as one by one, folks like "Tom" Broad go sweeping through its pearly gates.

Elder T. H. Broad

LOUIS S. BAUMAN.

IN MEMORY OF REV. T. H. BROAD whose two great objectives in life were to

Defend God and Befriend Man

In vain I seek to right the wrong
Of praise withheld one day too long.
His friendship I did dearly prize:
And fain I'd paint upon the skies
His praise—that all the world might heed
My words. 'Tis this the world would read:

He boldly taught the Truth; did dare
Defend his God; did meet and bear
The stings of life without complaint.
The paths he trod were free from taint
Of vice. His stainless name implied
The good his life exemplified.
He lived to do each day God's will;
And daily strove some heart to fill
With happiness. He spread the cheer
That's born in knowing God is near.

'Tis thus I'd paint on heaven's blue
His praise, that all might know 'tis due;
Might know his every thought and deed
Had but one goal—to meet the need
Of every hour; to meet it right.
To him, as day did woo each night,
We know the Lord did justly say:—
Well done! Well spent this precious day.
He sought on earth not man's reward,
But life eternal with his Lord.

MERTON BARNES, Los Angeles, Calif.,
formerly of Fillmore, Calif.

TO OUR BELOVED PASTOR

With loving sympathy to Mrs. Broad and family.

He finished the work God gave him,
He did it the best he knew how,
And all the friends, who loved him, know
He rests with Jesus, now.

His life was true, and pure and clean.
As he wanted us all to be,
And as he walked among us here,
Christ's image we could see.

Such men as he can never die,
Their lives go on—and spread,
And we who love him dare to say,
Though gone—HE IS NOT DEAD.

There is no death for those whose lives
Are lived for Christ, the King;
They step from earth to Heaven's shore,
And there, with angels, sing.

They never die, who truly serve,
And if God sends them rest,
We must not murmur, in our hearts,
For God knows what is best.

Grieve not, dear ones, who loved him so,
Remember, how each breath,
He loved to show us how to live
That we might know no death.

He has but stepped ahead, dear ones,
Into that brighter day,
Leaving behind a shining path
Of hope, to light the way.

His memory, like a shining light
Shall point us to the sky,
Where face to face, we'll meet again,
In Heaven, by and by.

—MRS. SARGENT,
Member of Narod Community Church.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

A WORD OF APPRECIATION

So many letters have come to me from all over the brotherhood and so many of my brethren in the ministry have written to me during my illness that it is impossible to answer them all, so I want to take this way of replying to them. I have appreciated very much every one of those cards and letters and their good wishes and earnest prayers that have gone up to the throne of Grace in our behalf, and am happy to tell all our friends that God has heard and has touched our body and we are on the road to recovery. We can give a personal testimony to the power of God through the anointing service and prayer. When we were able to be moved we were taken to the Lutheran Hospital in Fort Wayne and Dumblin Clinic but the Lord had healed the spot from which the hemorrhages came so that they were not able to locate any cause for them. Now we must build up the blood, and feel that it will be done without a blood transfusion.

We have been very fortunate to have Brother Bame to take care of our work and fill the pulpit each Sunday. While we could not attend any of the services we have heard some fine things about Brother Bame's services. We want to thank him publicly for the wonderful way in which he has taken care of our work. If we continue to improve we hope to get to the services next Sunday and hear him.

C. A. STEWART.

VOL. LIV
Number 18

April 30
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

The Shield of Prayer

A Word of Counsel to Young Converts

TO keep the fair Deposit, to bring the precious treasure to Jerusalem, means hard fighting, constant watching. The power of evil is always eminent in the midst of us. Against it, religion finds that all her efforts have to be kept in perpetual strain. There is the tyranny of the visible, and there is the slowness of our hearts to believe in the unseen.

Though it is true that the world passeth away, and the lust thereof, while they that do the will of God abide for ever, yet it is the world that seems often real and stable, and the saints before the Throne invisible or dim.

We hope we are wrong, but it seems to us that many Christians imagine that they can keep the faith of childhood while neglecting those opportunities of converse with God that must be used, if the spiritual life is not to wither away.

No really great theologian, no really great believer, has ever lived, to whom prayer was not infinitely more important than any mere exercise of the intellect.

—SIR W. ROBERTSON
NICOLL in *The Seen and
The Unseen*.

“HE HEARETH THE PRAYER OF THE RIGHTEOUS”

"It Is Finished"—John 19:30

The final message of Brother T. H. Broad preached the evening before his departure to be with Christ

(Note: Just a few days ago, when Brother Louis S. Bauman was here in Ashland completing the obituary in memory of Brother Broad, he showed me the notes of the last sermon preached by Brother Broad and I suggested that its publication would not only be of interest to the many friends of Brother Broad, but would also bring spiritual help to all who read. Brother Bauman very heartily agreed with this suggestion and requested that I prepare the notes for publication. In doing this I have tried to follow faithfully the original manuscript, making additions only when necessary to complete a sentence or transcribe a thought which he had indicated with a word. Undoubtedly, there was much which cannot be recovered, but enough remains to reveal the secret of Brother Broad's life and ministry. It was the Cross of Christ, not merely as a doctrine preached in words, but also enthroned in his heart as the compelling motive of "self-forgetfulness" in a life lived for others. Brother Broad never got far from the Cross. In this last sermon he speaks to us once more the "old, old story!" a story which he loved, and which is often sung in the "Land where the Lamb is all the Glory."—Alva J. McClain).

Hark the sound! The silver trumpet peals its lingering notes through the falling shadows sounding the completion of the evening sacrifice and marking the beginning of a new day, the Sabbath of the Feast of the Jewish Passover. But to priestly pomp and power it was the "last trump." For the great High Priest of God has entered the true Holy of Holies, the veil has been rent uncovering to the view of every soul the Blood-sprinkled Mercy-seat. At last the sinner has a Savior, and the saint an Advocate—the ushering in of a new and better age, the age of Grace, signalized by the cry which came from Calvary's bloody Cross. "IT IS FINISHED."

He saved others; himself he could not save. There is a measure of divine truth in even the mockery of his enemies. For had he saved himself there could have been no salvation of others. A father was strolling beside a swift river with his baby daughter gathering flowers. Suddenly he thought of the approaching train and his own duty which was to set the turn-bridge that the train might pass. Leaving his little one he hurried to his post when a cry arrests. The child has fallen into the rushing stream. There is a brief but agonizing struggle between the call of duty and the call of the heart, and duty wins. The train with its load of precious humanity goes through in safety, but the cost is heavy. Too late the father comes back to the bank of the river. He saved others, but lost his own.

Such a tragedy finds a response in every normal human heart. It is the glory of self-forgetfulness in the interest of others. Consider then the glory of Calvary. Here was a victor in a well-fought battle who of his own accord yielded up the citadel of Life and marched out with colors flying, while from those lips stiffening in death there arose a veritable paean of triumph, "IT IS FINISHED!"

As the Oriental weaver sometimes betows the loving labor of an entire lifetime upon the completion of his intricate and beautiful pattern, so Jesus could look up into the Face of the Father and say, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." For the accomplishment of this work he was born and lived among men, always reminding them that "My meat is to do the Will of him that sent me and to finish his work." Hundreds of years before his birth the Psalmist had prophetically seen and declared his eternal purpose "Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared for me. In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast no pleasure. Then said I, Lo I come (in the volume of the Book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God." He was indeed "The Lamb slain before the foundation of the world."

On the Cross he paid the price of our Redemption. There the redemption money was counted out, piece by piece, as it came fresh-minted from the place of thick darkness and agony. And when the last penny was paid, the last debt cancelled, the last link forged in the unbreakable chain of God's Grace, the last span laid of that wondrous bridge which was to link time with eternity and a lost world with a forgiving God—then the work of Eternal Redemption was done.

A whole universe waited for the glad good news. Even in heaven the Angel Throng stood waiting and watching, their harp strings silent; for the message will come not only to bless a sin cursed earth, but will reach the very parapets of heaven. And when it comes, the harpers sound, while Cherubim and Seraphim swell the great chorus of Hallelujahs until every court is vibrant with the new found joy of victory. "It is finished."

It was finished for Christ Himself. Never again will he pass through the agonies of Gethsemane; never again will he need to go out into the darkness alone separated from the Face of God; never again will he stand in the place of sinners and suffer their doom. All this is finished forever; all the types and shadows; all the ceremonial laws; all that God had promised concerning the substitutionary suffering and death of his Son.

It is finished,
Death and hell no more shall awe;
Saints from hence your comfort draw.
Tune anew your harps, ye Seraphs;
Join to sing the pleasing theme;
All on earth, and all in heaven,
Join to praise Immanuel's Name;
Hallelujah! Glory to the bleeding Lamb.

It is finished for the Saints. O Death, where is thy sting? O Grave, where is thy victory? The bloody foot prints of the Crucified One in the dark cavern of death have turned to jewels, marking a bright and shining way into his Kingdom of Glory. Forever has he settled the wistful question, Where are our loved ones who have crossed the bar? Listen as he speaks to the dying thief, "Today, shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." They are with Christ. No more do the people of God need the mediation of human priests, for all priestly powers are now to be found in the Man of Calvary. We have a friend in the court of heaven, an Advocate who pleads our cause before the throne. And from his throne in the heavens he has poured out upon us that priceless gift, the Comforter who dwells within us.

It is finished for the sinner. And if redemption is finished, then there is nothing left to do. If the debt has been paid, then there is nothing left to pay. If our sins are put away by the Finished Work of Christ, then there is nothing to do but to accept the gift of God. Does any man suppose that Redemption can be had by some other way? If so, let him ponder this Scripture—"Prepare to meet thy God." But what can you do to prepare to meet a Holy God? Has not this God declared that "The soul that sinneth, it shall die?" You may deceive men by making the outside clean, but remember that God looketh upon the heart. You may weigh yourself by comparison with your neighbor who is not so good as you think he should be, but God will some day weigh us, not by the judgment and standards of men, but by what we think of Christ.

Before yonder mountains were brought forth before the valleys were scooped out, before man had fallen into sin; aye, before ever man had appeared upon earth as the direct creation of God, before all time God's redemption plan was made and his Only-begotten Son became the "Lamb slain before the foundation of the world."

(Here the notes of the manuscript, which were typewritten, seem to break off abruptly, and there is added in Brother Broad's own handwriting the significant sentence, "AND NOW IT IS FINISHED.")

Statistics for the first nine months of 1931 show a marked decline in both sickness and mortality, announces the Public Health Service.

AN ASPIRATION

Let me be a little kinder,
Let me be a little blinder to the faults
Of those about me.
Let me praise a little more.
Let me be when I am weary,
Just a little bit more cheery;
Let me serve a little better
Those that I am striving for.

IN THIS NUMBER

Some Challenges of the Christian Standard—Editor, . . . . .	3
Which Paper Do You Put First?—Editor, . . . . .	3
Editorial Review, . . . . .	4
The Place and Opportunity of the Small Church—S. C. Henderson, . .	5
Tithing in Hard Times—D. B. Brummitt, . . . . .	6
Significant News and Views, . . . .	7
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, . . . . .	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, . . . . .	9
Good Equipment and Efficient Methods Now in Use, . . . . .	10
Studying the S. S. Lesson—T. C. Lyon, . . . . .	11
Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits—C. D. Whitmer, . . . . .	11
Kagawa's Message to America, . . .	12
News from the Field, . . . . .	13-15
Announcements, . . . . .	16
In the Shadow, . . . . .	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Some Challenges of the Christian Standard

(Part I)

As we read the Sermon on the Mount we find ourselves challenged at every turn by standards of conduct, standards that measure fitness for membership in the kingdom of heaven. So great is the challenge of many of these pronouncements, so seemingly impossible of attainment, so contrary to human nature, that some have reasoned that they were not meant for our age, that they were not given for the guidance of men and women here and now, that they are really not standards of Christian conduct. If such a view were consistent with a faithful acceptance of the whole word of God, it would be an easy way of escape from a great responsibility. But it is not. There is no warrant for the assumption that some parts of the Word are to be taken seriously by Christian people of our day and some are not. We have simply got to face the challenge. The only alternative is refusal. And for the truly sincere follower of the Lord Jesus refusal is out of the question, though the duty required be hard.

At the very outset Jesus challenges men with the conditions, or rather we should say, the qualities that are necessary to possess the happiness or the blessedness that characterizes the kingdom of heaven. Here the emphasis is placed on what a man is, and not on what he possesses or the position he occupies. The quality of one's being is the important thing, and not what he is able to do, nor yet the race to which he belongs, nor the land in which he lives. There is no hint to these things in the Beatitudes. The requirements for membership in the kingdom are set forth not in any legalistic or materialistic terms, but in a highly spiritual state of being. And how lofty that state is! What a challenge to live up to it! Can we do it? By the grace of Christ we can. Paul says, "I can do all things through Christ."

That high quality of life that is to possess members of the kingdom is to be in evidence. It is not to be a secret quality, but one that is known and recognized, and that has a proper influence over other lives. The Christian is to be the salt of the earth, the light of the world, the saving, permeating influence in society.

These kingdom characteristics do not mean the annulment of all that was set forth by the law and the prophets, but a larger conception and a fuller and more spiritual practice of all that had been divinely revealed. That which is vital will remain. Jesus did not come to destroy, but to fulfill, and we are to follow in his way, both in life and teaching. If our righteousness does not exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees, it will in no wise let us into the kingdom of heaven.

Then Jesus sets forth some examples of how this higher spiritual standard is to show itself. Does the Old Testament forbid murder? Jesus forbids not merely the overt act, but the very thought of the heart, out of which murder grows. He will tolerate no anger, no ill-feelings, no hatred. He who entertains such an attitude toward another cannot truly worship God. His worship is a mockery. Let him make things right with his brother and then present himself before God's altar.

Was adultery forbidden by the law? So does the Gospel of the kingdom forbid it. But not only so; it strikes at the very root of infidelity—impurity of the heart. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he. If he thinks impure thoughts, if he cherishes lustful desires, his soul is guilty before God and his life is in danger of overt sin. For out of the heart are the issues of life. Not only should he guard his thoughts, but the very members of his body, that they be not an occasion of stumbling to him. The temptations to impurity are many and varied, and the consequences of impurity are vital and far-reaching, entering into many of the most serious problems of life and affecting the sacred relations of marriage and the home. Is not guarding against impurity a challenge to many a professing Christian of our day? The wide patronage of the sex movies and the extensive sale of salacious magazines would seem to indicate it.

Did the Law warn against untruthfulness? Aye, aye, for they had dishonesty then as now. It did not begin with Prohibition, though the wet proponents seem to find in that law the origin of about every evil under the sun. People were in the habit of breaking their vows and refusing to keep their solemn promises before God, even in those ancient days, and we find Moses issuing this statement: "When a man voweth a vow unto Jehovah, or sweareth an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word; he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth." The oath seemed necessary then to stimulate to truthfulness, but Jesus declared against it. It should no longer be necessary. The Christian should be so habitually truthful that no oath could make him any more certain to tell the truth, nor any more trusted by his fellows, than would just the simple affirmation. Such absolute honesty is a distinctly Christian standard and is a challenge to the practice of many a church member of our day.

Did the Law permit "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth"? Yes, it did, but Jesus said, "Resist not him that is evil; but whosoever smiteth thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." That means "Non-resistance." That prohibits retaliation. That requires going the second mile, and giving the overcoat to the one who has taken the coat. Do those words mean what they seem to say? Do we accept them and seek to practice what they teach? Or are we unable to rise to such heights? Surely here is a challenge to the last one of us who profess to be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. If that is the Christian standard, how short we are!

And do we read in the Law that men shall love their neighbors and friends? Yes, it goes that far, but it permits them to hate their enemies. Jesus said: "Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you." It is easy to love those who love you, and are kind to you, but to love those who are ugly and unkind,—that is the rub. To love those who treat you mean, who tell lies about you and who seek to undermine you, that is about the hardest job that one could imagine. It seems impossible and unreasonable. But Jesus did it, and he says we should do it, too. And by doing so, he says we show ourselves to be "sons of your Father who is in heaven." There we have the secret of it. It is a divine characteristic, a heavenly principle. That is why it seems so difficult, so challenging, judged by the standards of earth. And that also indicates the source of its great appeal. Because it is a godly quality, the more we dwell upon it, the more it draws us away from the things of earth, and the more willing we are to undertake the injunction: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

Which Paper Do You Put First?

Which paper do you put first in your home, that general religious paper you like, or your church paper? There are some very good religious papers of a general character, which any one can well afford to have in his home, if he can also afford his own church paper, and if he gives time to it first. But in these days of depression, many people are finding it hard to provide their homes with all the good literature they would like to have. In such a case which are to be given first place? We have no hesitation in saying that your church paper should have first place, just as in your religious activities you should give first place to your duties to your own church, rather than to religious work in general.

(Continued on page 8)

EDITORIAL REVIEW

A note from Brother B. F. Owen says: "Sunday, April 17th was another splendid day for us, 415 at Sunday school, three confessions and a large attendance at both morning and evening services. The Lord is with us and blessing the Nappanee church."

We are informed that the Cambria county, Pennsylvania, Brethren Christian Endeavor Union held its spring Bible conference in the First church of Johnstown beginning April 18th and concluding on April 24th, with Dr. K. M. Monroe of Ashland Seminary as the Bible lecturer.

They can to destroy the terrible drink evil are guilty before God and leem, but a moral problem that vitally affects life, and the church is duty bound to give attention to it. They who fail to do what they can to destroy the erible drink evil are guilty before God and man of the sin of omission.

The Ohio State Conference will be held at Bryan, June 14 to 17, and the good people of Bryan are confident they will be able to take care of all delegates handily. Brother C. A. Stewart, their pastor, was reported to be improving, the last word we had from there, and he and his people are anxious to see a large delegation present in June.

In a communication recently received from Brother John F. Locke, we learn that an evangelistic campaign is now in progress at the Bethlehem church near Harrisonburg, Virginia, with Brother E. L. Miller as the evangelist. He informs us also that the Bethlehem and Mount Olive churches, of which he is pastor, "made sizable gains in their offerings for Foreign missions this year, whereof we are glad and praise God."

The Shipshewana Young People's Camp and Bible Conference will be held at Lake Shipshewana, Indiana, July 17 to 24, 1932, and the Bible Lecturers will be Prof. A. J. McClain and Prof. K. M. Monroe, and Rev. S. M. Whetstone is to give a series of Stereopticon Bible Lectures. It is time for young people to plan their attendance. It will be worth the while of any church conveniently located to help to make it possible for worthy young people to take advantage of this splendid training and experience.

Have you feared that "hard times" was a hard time to encourage tithing? Dr. Dan B. Brummitt thinks it is a good time, and he gives his reasons in this issue, in an article kindly offered to The Evangelist. As one of the leaders of the Layman Company, he offers to Brethren churches an opportunity to secure Layman tithing bulletins suitable for use in connection with your own weekly church bulletins. In the interest of tithing promotion among our churches we call attention to the announcement on page 16.

Brother Earl B. Studebaker of Chicago, writes of his services at Loree, Indiana, during the absence from the pulpit of the pastor, Brother D. A. C. Teeter. Brother Teeter, as has been previously announced through these columns, underwent a successful operation for the removal of a cataract from an eye, and the operation is said to be "one hundred per cent successful," for which we are thankful. Brother Studebaker was impressed by the good work being done by the Loree church, under the leadership of Brother and Sister Teeter, who, thus far, have been compelled to labor under such a serious handicap.

A revival meeting at Roanoke, Virginia, conducted by the pastor, Brother Herman W. Koontz and assisted by a song leader of that city, resulted in eleven additions to the church. A Sunshine Choir was one of the special features of the revival program and the children demonstrated remarkable faithfulness. The church was greatly revived by the meetings and some new friends were made for the work. The Sunday school has increased forty per cent during the last six months, and Christian Endeavor work has been developed until there are now three growing societies. The Lord has been leading them through an unusually critical financial situation, and the indications are that they will eventually find their way through to complete victory. The people are appreciating the splendid leadership of Brother and Sister Koontz.

A newspaper clipping received from Elkhart, Indiana, informs us of some important pastoral changes. Brother W. I. Duker, pastor of the Elkhart church for ten years, during which time its membership has been doubled and a unit of a beautiful new church erected and paid for and a parsonage bought, has resigned to resume his school work, having been elected to his former principalship in Goshen. Brother H. F. Stuckman, for nine years pastor of the large Goshen church, during which time one among the largest and most commodious churches of the brotherhood was built, has resigned his Goshen charge and has accepted a call to the Elkhart pastorate. The newspaper report giving further information is published in this paper.

The Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, has recently experienced a revival under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller and the pastoral guidance of Brother J. L. Gingrich. These two energetic preachers made a splendid team and God used their consecrated energy for the reviving of the church membership, as is indicated by the fact that thirty-nine of the fifty-one who came forward during the meetings were reconsecrations. Eight new members were added to the church, three by letter and five by baptism. Sometimes sincere reconsecrations mean as much to a church as the addition of new members. And what church wouldn't be better prepared for aggressive work among the unchurched, if all its members were fully dedicated to the service of Christ. May God prosper the real revival spirit among our churches.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, pastor of the Smithville-Sterling congregation, writes of victory they have had in the church during recent weeks, a victory that came to a climax on Easter Sunday. A seven weeks' Sunday school contest resulted in a marked increase in attendance at both Sterling and Smithville, the high mark at the latter being 221 and the former, 82. This was a good preparation for the pre-Easter evangelistic campaign, bringing, as it did, many new people for the hearing of the message, and the result was a total of nineteen to make confession of Christ, two of which confessions have been made since the meetings closed. Seventeen have been added to the church. Brother Carpenter was his own evangelist and was assisted in the music by splendid local talent. Their monthly Church Night is another feature of their church work described by the word "Victory," the attendance ranging from 75 to 99.

We have a good letter this week from the La Verne, California, church, called the "mother church of the Southern California district." The work is going forward in a splendid way under the leadership of Brother Archie Lee Lynn, who cooperates with the church correspondent in giving us the write-up. Dr. Florence N. Gribble was recently with this church for a series of addresses which were highly appreciated and the farewell they gave her was impressive. Miss Estella Myers was also a visitor to this congregation. The evangelistic ministry of Dr. W. S. Bell is reported by the pastor as having been highly constructive and fruitful. Brother Lynn was loaned by his church for a revival meeting with the Brethren at Manteca, where Brother J. Wesley Platt is the faithful pastor, and who was unfortunate enough to be ill the first three days of the meetings. Brother Lynn found a prepared people and splendid hospitality. The La Verne people experienced a deep sense of loss in the death of their former pastor, Brother Thomas H. Broad, whose obituary appeared in last week's paper.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for the revival to be held at the Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, church, by the pastor, William Gray, beginning May 1, 1932.

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor of the church at Carleton, Nebraska, writes in a personal letter: "Our pre-Easter services resulted in fifteen confessions, letters and baptisms. Many gave testimony to the helpfulness and enjoyment which they received. The 'human pictures' are still a special feature and fitting close of each Sunday evening service. Several ministers of other denominations have expressed a desire to witness our next Lord's Supper and Communion, so we are extending them an invitation."

The Place and Opportunity of the Small Church

By S. C. Henderson

Someone has said that the most widespread "ism" of today is "Jumboism". Years ago the great showman P. T. Barnum, advertised the "Greatest Show on Earth" and in that show he had "The Biggest Elephant on Earth" that was named Jumbo. This subtle showman understood a bit about human psychology. Folks are enamored with the size myth. Nothing appeals to our American minds like bigness. We rate things by their size, numbers and big money. The worth of a movement is rated by the crowd it attracts.

A few months ago, an announcement was made of a world touring party. It was said that the party would see ... the largest city ... the largest dome, the largest church, the largest library, the greatest museum, the largest pyramid, the highest structure, the deepest depression, the world's most famous mosque, the world's largest amphitheater, the most famous battlefield and the most beautiful sarcophagus. The whole trip was a revel in superlatives. Nothing was worthwhile seeing unless it was great or stupendous. That was a phase of advertising that appeals to the average American. Nothing was said about the cultural, the beautiful, or the historical. That would not appeal to the man on Main Street. We want the highest sky scraper, the fastest automobile, the longest-winded dancer. The Marathon idea has even reached the reading of the Holy Scripture.

So many minds are submerged with things, big business, big factories and long railroads. It surcharges the very air we breathe. When the church and the home become enamored with materialism then ideals and religion vanish.

The tendency in our modern life is to ignore the things that are small and weak as being unimportant. But St. Paul took issue with that idea in his day when he said, "God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the things that are mighty." The atom serves its place in God's universe just the same as the great flaming sun far out in the milkyway. The wonders shown us through the microscope are no less wonderful than those seen through the telescope.

The size myth has often enamored the church. True, there is an inspiration in a crowd. Every preacher and public speaker will attest this fact. It has the effect that the cheering bleachers have upon a ball team. He feels the intensity of their breathless enthusiasm. It draws him out to his supreme effort. He is under the spell of the crowd. He can succeed by its presence, but the same effort will be a dismal failure if the crowd be absent.

Then the crowd is always conscious of itself. It is magnetic. A crowd attracts kindred minds to itself.

Yes, yes, a crowd is an inspiration. Jesus spoke to the multitudes and had compassion upon them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd. But the Master also delivered some of his greatest truths to lone individuals. To the Unknown Scribe, to the nameless woman at the well-side, and to Rabbi Nicodemus, a proud ruler of the Jews.

While we cannot deny that numbers, wealth and prestige are mighty adjuncts in building up a local church organization, but there is a lurking danger. Power that is wrongly applied becomes a dangerous thing. It may defeat the very purpose it is supposed to assist. I think it was Stuart Chase who makes this statement in one of his books:

"A wise president of one of our large universities recently remarked that the provision of the modern laboratory for able scientists is often the beginning of the end as far as their constructive work is concerned. So much energy is exhausted in planning new buildings and equipment that by the time they are ready for use the creative fire has burned low ... The laboratories of America far exceed those of Europe, and the scientists from abroad are amazed at the completeness and perfection of our buildings and equipment."

Then he went on to say that even in spite of this some of the small and poorer countries of Europe with their meager equipment have outstripped America in winning the Nobel Prizes for Physical Research.

In this machine age, it is so easy to put dependence upon equipment, organization and efficiency and to forget the power that propels it. A church is more than brick, wood, stone and art glass windows. These are only the visible manifestations, but the real invisible church is made up of human hearts knitted together by the bonds of Christian love and devotion.

A small congregation can possess these as well as a large one, and I have known some small churches that have put larger ones to shame when it came to devotion and brotherly service. While I speak of the Opportunity and Place of the Small Church, I am conscious of the fact that many, many little groups of various names and in divers places are struggling for their very existence. They are putting forth a noble fight for their existence. They have their problems and discouragements. It is to them that I wish to address this article.

I would first ask the question, WHAT RIGHT HAS A SMALL CHURCH TO EXIST? Some are telling us that it has no right. Too often a small church is made to feel like a poor man in the midst of his rich relatives. A home mission church is often made conscious of its pauperism by being spoken of as "the mission." But it is doubtful whether we can determine a church's sole right to exist upon a solely numerical or financial basis. A pastor in a

MY LITTLE CHURCH

*My little church, so humble, small and plain Where year by year I've worshipped there. What gain,
What lifts I've had upon a weary road,
How many lightnings of a heavy load;
In every pew I courage read, and grace,
Because of those who sat each in his place
Faithful and true, until the very end,
And every one of them to me a friend.
The pastors in the pulpit who have stood
For God and right, and everything that's good,
In solemn train they, too, come back and say:
"Forget not what we've said, watch on and pray."
My little church, so humble, plain and small,
I would not change you for the finest. All
You've been to me I can not well define,
Lifting my soul to Him of life divine.
And so to me it is a holy place,
In which I oft recall each vanished face
Of those I loved, who by the crystal sea
Are watching, waiting there to welcome me.
O little church, the peace and hope you've given
When many times my soul with grief was riven!
Love cannot fully measure or express
Your holy mission to uplift and bless.—Selected.*

denomination that numbers larger than our own told me that their classes averaged less than twenty members. This problem of the small church is not confined to the small denomination alone. Some very large denominations have some very small and weak local churches, while some small, weak denominations have some strong, flourishing congregations. The drifts of immigration and local traditions play their part in local church building.

We hear it said that we have too many over-churched communities. This may be true in some cases. There are communities where the shades of differences in doctrines and traditions are so slight that a union of some churches would be both desirable and practicable. But folks are more apt to emphasize their differences than their likenesses. The fact is, that churches are not as easily merged as banks or consolidated as railroads. Folks have different backgrounds, traditions and types of mind and doctrinal beliefs that each hold as a sacred heritage. The predominating church in a community is often loudest in its emphasis on overchurching by their weaker neighbors, while a few miles away one of their own denomination may be the small, weak church of a community and reluctant to close its doors.

It is often said that the cost of maintenance of a small church is too great a burden upon the community. But large churches have large budgets for maintenance. The small church is made possible by the individual sacrifices of its membership. But the interest of any individual in an institution is in proportion to the sacrifice he has invested in it. Behind the churches both great and small there is a small circle of interested folks who are making sacrifices because of the love and veneration they have for their church.

The small church has its place and opportunity. The small church may be a power for good in the community. A small church may do its ministry in serving a small community. A small church is not to be despised for God has used many a small church to do great service for him. A small church in a corner of a great city may work a transformation in the section where it is located. It can minister to a class of folks who might not feel welcome at a larger or more aristocratic church. It may serve well those who are too far remote from any other church.

A small church can minister to the spiritual and social welfare of many who would be overlooked in a larger group. It may serve as a source of friendship and comradeship to those who need it. There are times when men and women need human sympathy and kindness more than any earthly thing. How often, we hear the praise about the little church around the corner, where everybody is friendly and knows who you are. There is a desire in the hearts of lonely folks to be called by their first names and to be able to confide their heart's secrets.

To many a heart wandering far among strangers the little, old, home church holds its sacred memories. It was their shrine in boyhood days. There they grew up among their friends and playmates. There were father, mother, brothers and sisters. There their beliefs were moulded and their personal piety was fixed. The little old church was a sacred shrine where they found their Lord and confessed his name.

"In a little shaded grove where oaks and maples grew,
Whose leaves the breezes stirred, and the sunlight filtered through,
There stood a modest church with walls so plain and bare,
Within this humble chapel stood an altar fair;
To me it was a holy place, for Jesus met me there,
On bended knee, confessing sin, I sought his pardoning grace;
'Twas then the light of love shone in, he met me face to face.
—Rev. I. A. Barnes, D.D.

A small church may stand as an advocate of certain neglected doctrines and principles. It may emphasize the New Testament as its only creed and rule and practice in life. It may afford the opportunity for the observances of the commandments of the Lord and Master. It may maintain a unique place in the community by emphasizing Gospel truth and stressing the good life. How often some small church would gain both in numbers and prestige if it would let down on its method of baptism or the manner of observing the communion. The price of popularity in a community might mean the sacrificing of these principles. The loyalty to some principle is a worthy consideration. A noted man said to a group of young students, "If I were twenty-one again I would embrace some unpopular truth and work for its advancement." Truth needs an advocate. The Apostolic church was small and unpopular in its beginnings but it triumphed over all obstacles. It was only when Constantine embraced it and made it the state religion that the church lost its power and became corrupted.

A small church may be the recruiting station for God's Kingdom. A pompous city pastor said to a promising young pastor of a rural church, "Why do you remain out in that miserable little cross-road church?" The young pastor replied, "Sir, I am assisting you to save your city." Back of every big city church there are dozens and dozens of little white churches in the open country and little villages. The rural churches have literally poured their life blood into the big cities of America. As the river has its sources in the springs and creeks from the hills, so the large metropolitan churches have been fed

(Continued on page 15)

Tithing in Hard Times

By Dan. B. Brummitt

There is no better time to begin to tithe than a time of business depression. Then it takes both faith and courage.

If tithing were a sure thing, like buying five dollar bills for $4.00, it would have no more moral value than any other form of bargain hunting. Everybody would tithe; the man most careful to pay the tenth might be the most avaricious man in town.

That's not the tithing God has promised to bless. Tithing is a sure thing; and usually it leads to material betterment. But not always; and never, in any magical or non-moral way.

The law of the tithe is not a law for times and seasons. It does not rest on circumstances, whether good or bad. The true Christian will begin to obey it as soon as he realizes that it is a law, and that it is for his guidance and his good.

All true enough; nevertheless, there are special reasons and special values attached to tithing in hard times.

It is easy enough to thank God for pleasant experiences, though we know that often they may be spiritually barren. It is not so easy to be thankful for adversity, though difficulties and disappointments in our material affairs can provide the finest of disciplines.

Listen to Habakkuk the prophet:

For though the fig tree shall not flourish,
Neither shall fruit be in the vines;
The labor of the olive shall fail;
And the fields shall yield no food;
The flock shall be cut off from the fold,
And there shall be no herd in the stalls:
Yet will I rejoice in the Lord,
I will joy in the God of my salvation.

The tither who can make the prophet's words his own will not be deceived by prosperity, if and when it comes.

Prosperity is quite likely to come to the tither; remember that. Somebody has counted the Bible's references to giving. They total seventy-two. And forty-eight "show open promise of God's blessing to the giver."

During a spell of hard times a bank auditor examining the books of many Toronto business houses found entries in the books of John Macdonald & Co., that showed the firm was setting aside a tenth of its profits for religious and philanthropic work. He closed his audit and recommended to the bank that the Macdonald house should have all the credit it desired. It was the beginning of a new prosperity.

John H. Converse, when president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, was a tither who believed in doing more in hard times. One year, when his business was less profitable than usual, he gave $400,000 to religious and charitable work.

It is known and admitted that not everybody gets ahead financially by tithing. Why should he? "Getting ahead" may be a great curse. A tithing business man puts the fact thus:

"There are other successes than money ones. I've got something more than money out of tithing; it's given me happiness and contentment that I never could have bought. Suppose some of the New England families who tithed did not succeed financially? Could science measure the contentment which these families might have through knowing that God was a partner in home affairs?"

A man who is almost at the end of his resources will find his time of stress a good time to make new study of his life.

The head of a great business did this once, when he was worse than bankrupt. One day he opened his Bible at Genesis 28:22, drew a pencil mark around the verse, and said, "From this moment on, as long as I live, of all that God gives me I will give him one-tenth."

Since then he has prospered far beyond the ordinary. But what is more, he has made "hundreds of investments for human betterment and to advance righteousness on earth." The feeling that one can thus be a co-laborer with God is the greatest incentive to true living which man can have. It can make one's sunset days his best days.

A conscientious examination of your affairs now may actually show how you can save enough to pay the whole tithe. Consider more methodical ways of buying. Wait a week before buying something you think you want. Buy for use rather than for appearance or luxury-value.

Budget your income and outgo. Many people who begin to spend by a budget make a surprising discovery. They find that from ten to twenty cents of their dollar is being spent without producing any corresponding benefit.

So your whole situation may be helped as you see where your tithe can be paid without distress.

Whenever it can be put into practice, there's a big saving hinted at in the old saying, "He who cuts his own firewood is twice warmed."

Hard times are hard times for God as well as for us. His work suffers because, when depression threatens, so many cut off, first of all, their gifts to religion.

Never mind trying to explain the theology of it. You know that benevolent agencies face lessened incomes. Students who would gladly work must leave college for lack of funds; church enterprises are forced to retrench their work; the poor, the sick, the distressed, all must know keener their sufferings because the church has less money to spend in their behalf. So the tither who tithes in hard times is doubly blessed in his own life and in being the friend indeed who comes as the friend in need.

Tithing in hard times is a sharing of life with those whose "times" are harder than ours. None of our-tithe literally gives "to God;" it goes to men and women like ourselves. It broadens the base on which the world's total of usefulness must rest.

Hard times are good times to begin tithing, because it doesn't take so much moral backbone to tithe a small income as a big one. Many people have been tempted to quit tithing because their incomes became "too big to tithe."

A rich man told a missionary secretary during the war, "I'm sorry, doctor, but I can't give you anything for your work this year. Why, my income tax is a million and a quarter."

The tithe in hard times contributes to our spiritual self-respect. When we are prosperous, we may feel—as we should—that the tithe ought to be supplemented by free will offerings and gifts far beyond the tenth.

In hard times we may not be able to make these gifts. But we know that in tithing we are acknowledging God, and declaring our faith. We are not offering to God that which has cost us nothing.

It costs, to tithe in hard times. But not to tithe costs more, in values that are as real then as ever, and that will last beyond all times, whether hard or easy.

---

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

---

NEW EVIDENCE FOR EARLIER DATE FOR DESTRUCTION OF JERICHO

Students of the Bible will be interested in the new evidence unearthed indicating an earlier date for the Exodus from Egypt and the fall of Jericho. It will be recalled that Professor John Garstang, of the University of Liverpool Archeological Institute, and former director of Antiquities to the Palestinian Government, has for some time contended that the Exodus from Egypt occurred about 1447 B. C. and the fall of Jericho about 1407 B. C. His theory for these earlier dates is based upon fragments of pottery unearthed in the ruined city. Of the more than one hundred thousand fragments thus discovered only one fragment found on top of the burned heap indicated a date for the burning of the city later than 1400 B. C. The new evidence brought to light comes from the scarabs recently discovered in excavated Jericho tombs. These Scarabs were placed in the hands of Professor Percy A. Newberry, expert on scarabs and professor of Egyptian Archeology at the University of Cairo, for examination. Professor Newberry in making his report on these scarabs to Sir Charles Marston who has been financing various archeological expeditions to Jericho, reports that most of the scarabs ranged from the reign of the Hyksos kings about 2400 B. C. to the reign of Amenhotep about 1400 B. C. This, according to Sir Charles Marston furnished conclusive proof that Professor Garstang's theory is correct and that the Exodus from Egypt did not take place in the reign of Pharaoh Menepthah about 1229 B. C. and the destruction of Jericho about 1187 B. C. as has been widely believed, but that the Exodus occurred while Amenhotep the third was reigning in Egypt and that Joshua destroyed Jericho about 1400 B. C. The spade has ever been the ally of the Bible, corroborating the history recorded therein. Funds expended for delving into the sites of these old cities is well expended, revealing the circumstances of those earlier times and the conditions of the people. The Word of God still stands.—The Religious Telescope.

VOTES COUNT!

"A voteless people is a defenseless people. These words ought to be etched on the heart of every Negro. Until the Negro votes in the South, in the primary and general election, he will not get anywhere. For example, in Richmond, Virginia, no Negro teacher can become principal of the Negro public schools. They have there the slave system of white overseers and black underlings, and I am sorry to say that some of the black underlings defend the system! The school board told a delegation of Negroes who protested against this prohibition: 'When we think the time is ripe, we will give you Negro principals.' The Negroes of Richmond, if they would vote in force in the primaries, could reply: 'You will give us what we ask right now or we will put you out of office.' And they would not fail to get their demand. Virginia is the state where the Supreme Court has ruled that Negroes could not be prohibited because of race from voting in a Democratic primary. And from this decision no appeal has been made. The Negroes of Richmond fought this case through, but they have not used their victory in their own behalf."—Robert W. Bagnall in The Crisis.

SALARY REDUCTION

Rumors reach our desk occasionally of projected reductions in the salaries of pastors, officials, teachers and inner mission workers. Church councils and boards should not act hastily in taking such a step. The situation in the ecclesiastical regime, one notes first of all, is diametrically the opposite of the one in business. Instead of unemployment, the labors of pastors, professors and administrators have in fact increased. The ministry of mercy has brought tasks of relief and comfort such as few clergymen have ever before experienced. On the principle of equity, it is incorrect to make those doing more work the sufferers for a condition not applicable to them nor brought on by them.

It should also be realized that clergymen and workers in all church institutions are not included in the "economic cycle of compensation." During years of great prosperity their emoluments rose only to the extent that the higher cost of living made obligatory for payment of the necessities of their work. The increase in the amounts of money given for religious purposes during the years 1925 to 1929 went chiefly for expansion in property. No criticism is offered for the investments in buildings and the expansion of institutions. But salaries did not keep pace with the rise. It would have been a temptation to the personnel of the pastorate if they had leaped upward as in secular employment. But it would be unfair now to make clergymen submit to the ratio of secular deflation.

A third fact is, we believe, pertinent to the situation. We believe (we cannot cite figures in proof) that the majority of the clergymen give toward the relief of the unfortunate to a degree that entitles them to distinction. Folk in trouble go to the parsonage with a freedom not countenanced elsewhere. Most ministers give to these applicants, and with their gifts bear witness to the church's open-heartedness and to the Christian's sense of Christ's love for the poor. It is far better for the pastor to have a modest margin of resources which he needs for giving aid than to compel him to turn the supplicant away from the door. The alternative is to overburden his heart and deprive him of power to aid in Christ's name.—The Lutheran.

Which Paper Do You Put First?

(Continued from page 3)

But, what we started out to do, was to introduce you to the following editorial from the Watchman-Examiner, under the heading, "Interdenominational Papers." It makes an appeal which we have made before, and which needs to be often repeated. Just substitute the word "Brethren" for the word "Baptist" and it will read like it was written for our paper:

We make no war on religious papers of the interdenominational variety, for we believe in the distribution of all good literature. But for a Christian to take the best of interdenominational papers in preference to his own Church paper is to confess his indifference to the work of his own denomination and to close his ears to the calls of his denomination for service and consecration. The interdenominational paper has its place, just as the daily paper has its place, and just as the monthly magazine has its place. But no one of these can take the place of the denominational paper, which has to do with our doctrines, our polity, our missionary, educational, charitable and Church work.

As well substitute an almanac for your Church paper as to substitute for it an interdenominational paper that deals with matters entirely outside your denomination. To be a useful Baptist you must know what the Baptist world is doing, and you can learn what the Baptist world is doing only through your Baptist paper. Take as many papers as you please, but put first the paper that emphasizes the things in which you are, or ought to be, most interested. Pastors should urge their people to begin the new year right by subscribing to a denominational paper. If the pastors are in doubt as to which paper to recommend, we shall be glad to give them our opinion.

Every denominational leader and every secretary of every board acknowledges that no denominational effort can succeed without the thoroughgoing advocacy of the denominational press. If our papers, with their limited circulation, wield such power, what would be their effectiveness if their circulation were quadrupled? The managers of our denominational enterprises at any and every sacrifice should make continuous effort to increase the circulation of the papers that carry their messages and appeals to their denomination. We have scores of denominational representatives speaking in our pulpits and addressing associations, conferences and conventions. Do these devout men often make a plea for the denominational paper, which means so much to our organized work? We suppose their silence is due to the fact that they are so burdened with their own particular work. On the other hand, the denominational papers are striving to help these heavily burdened men in carrying forward their work. They owe it to the papers to help them in every possible way, not for the sake of the papers, but for the sake of the denomination. The pack horse must be fed.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

3 John, 1, 2, 3, 4; "The elder unto the wellbeloved Gaius, whom I love in truth. Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth. For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth." Moffatt says joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth." Moffatt says it like this: "The presbyter to beloved Gaius whom I love in the truth. Beloved, I pray you may prosper in every way and keep well—as indeed your soul is keeping well. For I was overjoyed when some brothers arrived and testified to the truth of your life, as indeed you do lead the true Life; I have no greater joy than to hear of my children living in the Truth."

And no more practical study could be made than to have copied this entire short letter, and let it stand without one word of comment. The great apostle John sets forth in all his gray-haired tenderness the true Christian life as exemplified by Gaius, and the empty, hypocritical profession of such a life as exemplified by Diotrephes. Having held forth the beauty of such a life as Gaius, he places in strange contrast the scheming Diotrephes in these words: "Only, Diotrephes, who likes to take the lead among them, repudiates me. So when I come, I shall bring up what he is doing, babbling against me with wicked words—and, not satisfied with words, he refused to welcome the brothers, checks those who want to welcome them, and excommunicates them from the church. Beloved, do not imitate evil but good; he who does good belongs to God, he who does evil has never seen God." (Moffatt). The greatest ambition in life is to be a successful, New Testament Christian. This is true because it has to do with the soul, its qualities and relations and destiny. Oh, that tremendous, momentous destiny of the soul! Its home—do you say? Well, in a million years from now we will be somewhere!

This brief description of the character of Gaius, how beautiful! The example of a man like that in any community, how uplifting to boys and men! What sermons for the church such a life preaches! Notice a few of the fine traits pointed out by John. "Thou walkest in the truth." This is fundamental. What care I whether you classify men as "modernists" or "fundamentalists", if they do not WALK IN THE TRUTH. The Brethren people have a truth to walk in which others have discarded; and this truth is vital with me, or I would never have accepted it, and given my best life to it. Not long ago a minister came across this saying on a church bulletin board: "This church emphasizes life, not doctrine." How singular! If that church had thrown to the winds "doctrine", it would be difficult to determine just what kind of "life" that church lived. I suppose they opened their "house-parties" with prayer! Do you think they had their overflow crowds when the minister announced that he would speak on "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord"? It would be interesting to know whether those in that congregation who had won the prizes at the card-parties were out in the front doing personal work in their evangelistic meeting; also, how many converts that church had in its current year. Believe me, this modern revulsion against preaching DOCTRINE is no more nor less than a smoke-screen to hide the fact that right living is the inevitable consequence of right thinking. And, "how shall they hear without a preacher" declares THE TRUTH; which John says, gives him "no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth." True Christian character takes its rise, unfolds its beauty, and impresses its virtue on the world from the fact of its having strong convictions on the very things which Christianity stands for. Looseness in rugged, New Testament doctrine can not mean otherwise than looseness in living—the kind of living which the New Testament cries out against. "Walk in the truth." We have spent a lot of time pointing out the danger that "our communions are not spiritual", while the fact remains that many congregations will do well if they have any such service at all: while there are many others which will do well if they have one-fourth of the membership to "show forth the Lord's death, till he come again", at such a service. Just "being good" is a nice gospel to preach, but John's greatest joy was "to hear that my children walk in the truth." "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

New Paris, Indiana.

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Ruth

Ruth the great-grandmother of David, is one of the loveliest characters of the entire Bible. To begin with her name is pretty. It means pity in our English tongue and friendship in Hebrew. How strong and fair she seems when we compare her with the two terrible women of the Old Testament, Delilah and Jezebel. Her story is one of transcendent beauty and of unflinching charm. What girl who knows the Scriptures has not wished she could be like Ruth!

The book which relates the story of the Moabitess is not exactly a biography, a novel, a poem, a drama, or a history. It is an episode, mostly biographical, of family life "in the days when the judges ruled." It is a picturesque idyll—a suburban pastoral—showing how truly good and great are some of the heroines of God's open country in a time when national disorder, social chaos, and religious degeneracy were rampant in Israel. It is real history, let me add hastily, but more than history: it is a story of God's providential care and concern for a Gentile foreigner who, when grace was vouchsafed her, became even more gracious than Shakespeare's "Sylvia." You will remember the great poet once asked concerning his heroine:

"Is she kind as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness."

No one has ever felt like raising such a question concerning Ruth, and especially not Boaz. He saw that her

"Golden touch could soften steel and stones.
Make tigers tame and huge leviathans
Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands."

I have often wished we had a good description of Ruth. Her piety, unassuming affection, loyalty, gentleness, and charity—always in evidence at home and abroad—should be portrayed on canvass. Thomas Hood, whose poetry has touched many, depicts the faithful young widow after this fashion:

"She stood breast high amid the corn,
Clasped by the golden light of morn,
Like the sweetheart of the sun,
Who many a glowing kiss has won.

"On her cheek an autumn flush
Deeply ripened;—such a blush
In the midst of brown was born,
Like red poppies grown with corn.

"Round her eyes her tresses fell,—
Which were blackest none could tell;
But long lashes veiled a light
That had else been all too bright.

"And her hat, with shady brim,
Made her tressy forehead dim;—
Thus she stood amid the stooks,
Praising God with sweetest looks.

"Sure, I said, Heaven did not mean
Where I reap thou shouldst but glean;
Lay thy sheaf adown and come,
Share my harvest and my home."

Over three thousand years ago the prosperous Boaz, who felt that he would forever remain Boaz-sit-by-the-fire, dreamed dreams that came true. And the book of Ruth tells the whole story.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Probably Samuel.
2. Where and When Written. Near 1100 B. C., in Palestine.
3. To Whom Addressed. Israel.
4. Authenticity. The idyl is historical.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. Ruth Deciding. Chap. 1.
2. Ruth Serving. Chap. 2. Faith's Choice.
3. Ruth Courting. Chap. 3. Faith's Venture.
4. Ruth Marrying. Chap. 4. Faith's Reward.

III. THE STORY OF THE BOOK

Probably during the times of Gideon did this beautiful pastoral have its origin. Elimelech, a Hebrew, with his wife, Naomi, left the plains and hills of Bethlehem and journeyed to the land of Moab seeking refuge from a devastating famine. The father and the two sons, Mahlon and Chilion, die, leaving three widows to mourn their passing. A decision is reached between them to return to Bethlehem, but Orpah remains behind. Upon their arrival, Boaz, a wealthy kinsman, redeems them. Ruth is married and becomes a Gentile ancestor of Christ.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Faith. Redeeming.
2. Key Verses. 1:16-17; 4:22.
3. Key Chapters. 1, 4.
4. Key Ideas. Friendship. Faithfulness. Courage. Protection.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

1. The value of the book is to be observed in its rehearsal of the history of the domestic affairs of one of the choice families of the period of the Judges. It is not an account of war, revolution, and its accompanying pestilences, but rather that of Providence leading where history is apt to be confused and genealogy is confounded.

2. Christ, like Boaz, is our Kinsman Redeemer. Boaz was known as "the strong one" and "in him is strength." How much more so in the case of Christ is this true. Our human and divine Lord became our nearest of kin in redeeming us from the awful ravages and destructiveness of sin.

Some day, sometime, Christ will sit on the throne of David to reign over an endless kingdom. Then the Gentile church, like Ruth, will share in a greater glory than earthly Israel.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

1. No circumstances, however great or small, escape the eye of Providence. Saints are made and sinners are marred by them.
2. Faith is the victory that overcometh the world.
3. Ruth and Boaz were saints. If a poor girl feels that the Christian life is not for her, let Ruth's example be cited; if a rich man says wealth and Christ do not go together, let the example of Boaz' fidelity challenge him.
4. How well the providential light shining out in darkness is set forth in the famous lines of William Cowper's hymn!—

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

"Deep in unaffathomable mines
Of never-failing skill
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will.

"Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head."

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSN.

MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

Good Equipment and Efficient Methods Now in Use

Ways and means that many schools are using to increase attendance, interest, and efficiency

An Electrical Map of Paul's Journeys

By N. B. Cox

Several years ago, as pastor of the Baptist church in Canonsburg, Pennsylvania, I had the joy of directing a Daily Vacation Bible School. We used the literature of the Southern Baptist Convention which called for the study of the Book of Acts for one of the classes. In connection with the study the boys made an electrical map of the journeys of Paul according to suggestions given in the teacher's book of instruction.

We obtained a piece of beaver board (a material used in making partitions in buildings) on which the scholars drew the map of Paul's journeys. A copper bolt was put through the map, the head serving to mark the city and the nut behind serving to hold the electric wire. An electric bulb was placed at the top of the map and dry cells were hidden behind it. The bulb used was taken from a flash light. At one side of the map were written in small letters the names of all the towns marked on the map with a bolt for each city. On the back of the map a wire (door bell wire) was run from each bolt (signifying a city) to the bolt of the corresponding town in the list of towns at the side of the map. The batteries and the bulb were connected by one wire. Another wire ran from the batteries to the teacher's hand and was placed by him on the city in his list which was the correct answer to his question. Another wire ran from the light to the pupil's hand and which he placed on the city on the map thus answering the teacher's question. If he answered the teacher's question correctly the bulb would burn, but if he answered it incorrectly it would not. For example, the teacher asks the pupil, "In what city was Paul stoned and left for dead?" At the same time he asks the question he puts his wire on the city of Lystra which is located in his list on the side of the map printed in letter too small for the pupil to see. If the pupil puts his wire on the bolt which marks the city of Lystra on the map the light will burn. If he puts it on any other city it will not. We found this very interesting and very instructive.

My present Sunday school class on the mission station where I am working is making one now, and we expect it to serve as well here as in the homeland.

Huehuetenango, Guatemala, Central America.

BIBLE CLASS ADVERTISING

By Elizabeth Williams Sudlow

Culled from various church bulletins are the following notices inserted by the active publicity directors of many classes. They serve to show the type of (pulling) advertisements being used by organized Bible classes.

"You can't get anywhere without starting," said a wise man. How about making a special effort to get started in this direction next Sunday morning?

Yesterday is an outlawed account. Tomorrow is a risky promissory note. BUT TODAY WHAT? It is REAL CASH! Invest it in something worth while. Don't waste it. It works best for the Lord in service. There is a snappy Men's Bible Class waiting for your presence every Sunday morning at 9:30. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good."

As to showing your appreciation of the Sunday school, don't "say it with flowers," but express it by coming in person.

Are you ninety-seven years of age, or seventy-six years younger, or in between those ages? If so you are neither too old nor too young for membership in the Men's Bible Class.

Claudius Salmasius, 1588-1653, was the most distinguished French classical scholar of his day. This learned man, on his deathbed said: "If I had only one year more I would spend it reading David's Psalms and Paul's Epistles." The habit of Bible reading is easily formed by attending the Men's Bible Class. There is no better time than now for beginning Bible study.

"Every man in the church also a member of the Sunday school" is a goal we are reaching for.

The man who goes to Sunday school is a seeker after Biblical knowledge. "Seek, and ye shall find."

Is one hour a week too much to give to Bible study with your brethren in the faith?

Is it not reasonable to think that . . . . . would be a better place if all the men attended Sunday school?

At various times our class has promised you a cordial, a friendly, and a hearty welcome. We will go even farther than that, and give you a ROYAL welcome. Just give us the opportunity to make good.

More desirable companions with whom to spend an hour each Sunday morning cannot be found anywhere than are found here.

There is nothing more pleasing than companionship with a group of intelligent men. Men who attend Bible classes are "above the average" in intellect. Come with us and associate with men of this kind.

Remarks to the point: "If you want your children to go to Sunday school go yourself."

A good prescription: "Take a brisk walk to Sunday school in the early morning, spend half an hour in Bible study, take a little time for conversation with friends, then make some new acquaintances. Be a good mixer. Repeat every Sunday."

The Men's Bible Class is one of the classes to which a baccalaureate sermon is never preached. The study is never finished. We should keep it up all our lives.

An example for us: "And as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day."

Indifference, neglect, and procrastination are three things that prevent men from attending Sunday school. If any of the three has taken hold of you, try to throw it off. Men: take note:

You can worship God in your home on Sunday.—but you don't.

You can worship God in the woods and in the fields—but you don't.

You can worship God on the lakes and on the river—but you don't.

You can worship God on the roads in the auto—but you don't.

You can worship God in our Bible Class,—will you?

An Old Company Pays Largest Profits—Wants New Stockholders. At the Sunday school the Men's Bible Class is open every Sunday morning at 9:30. We want new partners in our company, which is a live proposition, with large profits paid for good workers. Get in on the ground floor.

"What is the matter with this class?" one of the members asked. The class is all right; it only needs more men to support it.

Coral Gables, Florida.

CLOCK RECORDS FOR PRIMARY CHILDREN

By Jennie E. Stewart

Primary children are just beginning to take active interest in clocks and watches. A clock record card will prove interesting for one or more quarters of the year at this time. For younger pupils the one-hand system, which marks attendance only, might be used; but the older ones will like the minute hand also which marks points won in attendance, promptness, offering, home work prepared and deportment in class, five minutes for each point won.

We found a clock picture in an advertisement and use this for a pattern, cutting it out and using it for outline only. We sketched the face and the numbers on each clock and let the children color the frames to suit their fancy the last Sunday of the Quarter as hand work. They also fastened on the hands which were cut from black paper and attached to the face by means of a split clip, enabling them to move freely. The first Sunday of the Quarter we set the hands at twelve noon, each child present attending to his own. Then we moved the larger hand forward five minutes for every point the child had won that day.

Each Sunday the hour hand was moved forward an hour for each pupil present. If one was absent the hour was punched out and the hand set forward to the number corresponding with the Sunday he was again in his place. But the longer hand on each clock was set forward each Sunday according to the number of points won. If a child had a perfect record this was twenty-five minutes a Sunday and on the third Sunday he reached and passed the noon hour. When a child passed the noon hour with his long hand he was entitled to punch a hole in the margin of his clock frame and go right as many minutes past as he had won points. When he again reached the noon hour he punched another hole.

The interest in this longer hand and its movements became intense as the holes in the margin grew in number. If a child had a perfect record at the end of a Quarter he had five perforations in the edge of his clock and the longer hand standing at twenty-five minutes after twelve. If a child missed one Sunday but had a perfect record for every Sunday he was present, his card would show five perforations in the edge, with the longer hand standing at twelve minutes and one hour numeral punched out.

The children took their clocks home to show to their families and explain how they worked. Ours like them so well we used them again, but made them watches instead of clocks which they wore home, pinned to their breasts, at the end of the Quarter.

Boulder, Colorado.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar

with
Thoburn C. Lyon

ESAU SELLS HIS BIRTHRIGHT

(Lesson for May 8)

Lesson Text: Gen. 25:27-34; Golden Text: 1 Cor. 9:25

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Esau Sells his Birthright. Gen. 25:27-34

We are uncertain whether to moralize over the crafty Jacob, driving a hard bargain with a needy brother; or over the greedy Esau, who placed less value upon spiritual things than upon the satisfying of his own appetites. Surely the Christian will not wish to follow the example of either. Remember, though, that Jacob the supplanter later became Israel the prince of God, while Esau always remained Esau the Red. Every man who is born into the world has life and happiness for his birthright; others may have their influence upon us, but after all, we do not lose our birthright except by our own choice. God help us to see and appreciate relative values!

TUESDAY

Belshazzar Sells his Kingdom. Dan. 5:17-28

That he might, like Esau, carry out his own selfish lusts, Belshazzar failed to live up to the knowledge that he had of the God of Daniel. Because he chose to honor false gods who would not frown upon his licentious pleasures, the God of heaven found it necessary to take away from him his kingdom, and even life itself. Worse yet, it was not merely Belshazzar's physical self that was weighed and found wanting: it was his very soul. God grant that we may not sell our souls for even the most coveted treasures or pleasures of this world!

WEDNESDAY

Appetite and Christian Liberty. 1 Cor. 8:1-13

Paul makes it clear that it would in no way offend his conscience for him to eat meat that had been offered to idols; he knew that the idols existed only in the imaginations of men, and he would eat as unto the Lord. However, he also admitted that there were weaker brethren who would not understand his views and might be thereby led into sin, so that the work of Christ for them would become of no effect; therefore he would deny himself of a privilege that was rightfully his, and would eat no meat that had been offered to idols. There are certain personal liberties which the selfish may claim as theirs by right; but may no Christian ever sell his own birthright, or that of a weaker brother, for the satisfying of his sensual appetites!

THURSDAY

Self-Denial for Others. Rom. 14:13-23

The meat of this passage is summed up in verses 20 and 21. Perhaps we have no desire to indulge in strong drink, or tobacco, or cards, or dancing, and therefore feel that these verses have no message for us; but note the last phrase: "Nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth." Perhaps we have some innocent pastime, some personal practice which we know is all right in the sight of God but which is quite likely to be misinterpreted and misunderstood by weaker brethren. If so, may God give us strength to live in Christ-like self-denial for others!

FRIDAY

Rewards and Penalties. Jer. 35:12-19

If only the world might hear and understand the messages of this passage! They who, like the Rechabites, obey the commands of their Father in heaven shall receive a rich reward; but they who fail to heed the commands of their Father shall receive only evil. These words have been spoken so often that we no longer give them much consideration; but such is the word of God, and his word is sure.

SATURDAY

The Woes of the Drunkard. Prov. 23:29-35

The "wets" would have us believe that conditions today are much worse than in the days before prohibition. We have not altogether forgotten those pre-prohibition days, and their awful evils, but we have failed to continue to teach them to our children. If we are not to lose the ground which so many sacrificed to win, we must return to teaching the evils of intemperance. Let us pray for an awakened public conscience; for responsible and honest officials; and for strength to carry on.

SUNDAY

Warning from Esau's Folly. Heb. 12:14-17

God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, but it is sometimes hard to get back into vital relationship with him after we have sinned. Esau never did. Let us take warning from Esau's folly, and pray for strength to resist our appetites, and to remain in fellowship with our Lord, rather than to fall into sin and then have to return to him. Let us also pray for strength and wisdom to strengthen others.

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK 	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer
F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.	2301 13th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

11.—"Repentance vs. Remorse"

There is no merit in sorrow for sin. It is not current coin; but only crude ore, and very often it is "fools gold" at that. Doubtless the young men that are convicted of a foul crime, are all truly sorry for their sin, but possibly none of them give the smallest evidence of a changed heart. The conviction of the court has not been followed by a conviction of the conscience. Their sorrow grows out of the consequences to themselves, not for pity for the one they wronged, nor from any sense of the wickedness of their action.

Feeling of any kind is without moral worth. Its value must be determined by its expression. Before we can pronounce upon its character, we must ask, What are its results? That sorrow for sin that leads to sin's forsaking is genuine ore from the mines of the Kingdom, pure and priceless. But the sorrow that corrodes the life and breeds despair is spurious.

The sorrow of Judas, when brought face to face with the results of his teaching was no less profound than that of Peter; but it was of a different sort and produced the counterfeit remorse.

It was but a step to that added sin of suicide which cut off all opportunity for restoration.

The sorrow of Peter, on the other hand, kindled into repentance. Tears were followed by turning from sin to consecrated service. A life of loyalty and a martyr's death atoned for the weakness of the hour, and the memory of that brief lapse became a lifelong motive for courage and high endeavor. So the early experience of sin and repentance became a force for the development of final sainthood.

John the Baptist and Jesus both preached repentance; but neither of them said anything about sorrow for sin. With them repentance meant above all things else the turning away from sin. The feeling of sorrow is wholly secondary. Saul of Tarsus repented of his sins on the road to Damascus; but it is long before we found him giving expressions to any deep sense of sin. For the time he seems wholly absorbed in the thought of turning to new lines of service.

Today many a would be disciple halts at the threshold of the Christian life long and wearily because he has no deep feeling for sorrow for sin.

For want of this, he imagines that he cannot fulfill the Gospel demand for repentance. If such persons would only turn from all unchristian ways and ideals to the service of Christ and his Kingdom even though they had no feeling, they would find themselves accepted and blessed of the Master.

The coins of genuine repentance is a valuable adjunct to the currency of the Christian Church; but our spiritual life is sadly impoverished by its counterfeit; a hard and worldly but scrupulously orthodox deacon had been listening to a sermon on holiness. After service he said to the preacher, "That's all right for an ideal; but of course we can never live up to it. I do not rest my hope of salvation on my holy life, but upon the fact that whenever I commit a sin I always repent of it. Why I never abuse my horse, but I am sorry and ashamed afterwards." "Well," returned the preacher, "If your sorrow doesn't make you quit abusing him, it wouldn't save you from perdition."

Remorse is not repentance, nor can it take the place of repentance. Remorse weeps over sin, and then goes on to greater sin. Repentance forsakes sin so quickly that it sometimes forgets to weep. Remorse fixes the life more firmly in an evil way. Repentance turns the life into the way of righteousness. Remorse doggedly closes the door of hope. Repentance flings it wide open and lets in the sunshine of God's love.

A HUMOROUS CONVENTION

By the Schuylkill Branch of the Philadelphia Union

The convention doors opened at 7:49 P. M. The registration-fee was nine cents. As the delegates arrived, they were met by members of the reception committee stationed at the door, and were assigned to one of four hotels, "Gypsum Hotel," "Soakum Lodge," "Starvum Boarding-House," and "Dragum Inn." To each delegate was given a tag, on which the name of his hotel was printed, with a program.

When the delegates reached their hotels, which were small rooms adjoining the main convention-hall, they were placed in charge of a leader. Each group then made plans for a stunt to be given later on the program.

At about 8:30 P. M. the convention opened officially in the main room. After a period of Scripture-reading and prayer by the leader the humorous part of the convention began. The mayor of the city of "New Monia," where the convention was held, arose and welcomed the convention to his city, telling of its beauties and recommending the four hotels, giving their advantages, such as fur-lined bath-tubs, electric shoe-horns, etc. The welcoming address ended with the mayor's handing a large paste-board key of the city to the convention chairman.

The first conference was called "The Humorous Side of Missions," and was led by a former missionary chairman. The presiding officer introduced the song-leader, Professor Homer Rodeheaver, who led in the singing of humorous songs. The chairman then introduced the speaker of the conference, who told humorous events in the lives of missionaries.

The second conference was a "Humorous Question-Box" conducted by a former union president. When the conference opened, slips of paper were given out, on which the delegates were to write their questions. These were collected and given to the leader of the conference to answer. All questions and answers were, of course, humorous.

The third and last conference was a "Recreational Period." Persons were picked from each hotel and brought to the platform for competitive games and stunts, to the amusement of all. After this conference each hotel put on its stunt. The refreshments consisted of hot dogs and rolls and cocoa.

A beautiful Quiet Hour service, not humorous, closed the convention.—C. E. World.

peasants and industrial workers. This is the best way to counteract irreligion, communism and social evils. Cooperative farming under Christian leadership has proved very successful and has led Japanese farmers to look to God and to the Christian cooperation, rather than to communism, for a solution of their problems.

When Dr. Kagawa was asked what American Christians can do to help make this program effective, he replied: "The greatest need is for a revival of spiritual life in America. How can the army at the front receive much help from a reserve army that is weak or asleep? I find in America both the worst and the best; the lowest morality and the highest spirituality. America must purify and strengthen her own life. Why is it that while the divorce rate in Japan has decreased from 40 per cent to 10 per cent, the divorces in America have increased from 3 per cent to 17 per cent? Why is it that there are more murders in New York in one month than in all of England in a year?" Will American Christians accept this challenge, and not only seek a revival of spiritual life in our own hearts and churches, and an expunging of the blots on the 'scutcheon of our own nation, but can we not also help this devoted and valiant soldier of the Cross in Japan to fight the battle for righteousness and to extend the Gospel of Christ among his countrymen? As Dr. Kagawa remarked, "The missionaries of communism who come to Japan do not speak of themselves as 'foreign missionaries' but as representatives of 'The Third International.' The missionaries of Christ are the representatives of the 'Heavenly International' to all peoples. The time has come to drop the word 'foreign missions' and adopt the term World Missions. Advance the cause of Christ anywhere and we help to advance it everywhere."—The Missionary Review of the World.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.,
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR ATTENDANTS AT ANY CHURCH

I.

Thou shalt not come to service late,
Nor for the Amen refuse to wait.

II.

Thy noisy tongue thou shalt restrain
When speaks the organ its refrain.

III.

But when the hymns are sounded out,
Thou shalt lift up thy voice and shout.

IV.

The offering-plate thou shalt not fear,
But give thine uttermost with cheer.

V.

Thou shalt this calendar peruse,
And look here for the church's news.

VI.

Thou shalt the minister give heed,
Nor blame him when thou'rt disagreed.

VII.

Unto thy neighbor thou shalt bend,
And is a stranger, make a friend.

VIII.

Thou shalt thy brother respect,
As Christ, our Example, has left.

IX.

Thou shalt in every way be kind,
Compassionate, of tender mind.

X.

And so, by all thy spirit's grace,
Thou shalt show God within this place.

—Exchange.

Kagawa's Message to America

Probably no Christian Japanese and few in any station in life are as widely known and as influential for good as is the Japanese Christian author, preacher, lecturer and social worker, Dr. Toyohiko Kagawa, who has been in America lecturing in various colleges and cities. The readers of The Review are already well acquainted with his life and work, including his inauguration of the Kingdom of God Movement in Japan, which aims to win a million souls to Christ and apply the principles of Jesus to the social, economic and other phases of life in that empire.

At a recent luncheon, given to Dr. Kagawa in New York and attended by leading representatives of national and international Christian organizations, the guest of honor expressed his deep conviction that now is the time of greatest crisis in the world. It is a time when, as in the days when Christ was on earth, we are called to leave all and follow him if we would spread his Kingdom among men. We should be "gamblers for God," putting all we have and are on his altar and devoting all to his service. "Being a lukewarm Christian is not interesting or profitable," said Dr. Kagawa. He emphasized the fact that the Kingdom of God Movement in Japan is based on the teachings of Christ and on prayer. "Where there is true prayer the Church grows." We must take Christ and his program seriously and put his principles into practice, if we would win the battle against communism and against atheism, against sin and selfishness.

In Japan there are 70,000 Shinto priests and about 200,000 Buddhist priests, while there are only 2,000 Christian preachers. In 800 Japanese churches there was an addition of only about 800 new members last year. We need a revival in Japan. Through the Kingdom of God Movement some 50,000 converts have been won in the past four years. There is need for more preachers. The scholastic standing required by the theological seminaries in Japan is too high for the ministers who would go out to preach the Gospel to the millions of unreached Japanese farmers. Dr. Kagawa proposes to train 5,000 Japanese lay preachers for this purpose—giving them short-term courses in Bible, in social service, in evangelism, and in farming and handicrafts.

There is great need for Christian teachers, and Dr. Kagawa proposes to establish itinerating short-term Christian schools in country districts to meet the present great need for Christian education among the

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

SMITHVILLE-STERLING

Victory Messenger

Just a brief report of a few doings over in the heart of America. Victory is always a source of joy and a cause for praising God from whom all blessings flow.

Victory Sunday School Contest

Victory is the right word, for it well describes our Easter Victory Red and Blue Sunday school contest held in both schools during the seven weeks preceding Easter. The climax was reached on the last Sunday at each place, a record breaking day, with 221 present at Smithville and 82 at Sterling. The average attendance for the 7 weeks at Smithville was 159 and at Sterling 65. All past records were broken at Smithville. On the Sunday after Easter 30 new Sunday school members gained through the contest were present. Four brave chief captains aided by class captains led us to victory. John Hostetter, Ward Metzger, Miss Lilian Amstutz and Floyd Moine were the Chief Captains. They gave loyal support to our wideawake Superintendents, H. S. Rutt and Ernest Beery. Splendid interest prevailed during the 7 weeks and we never saw better team work. It was a real victory in the Lord's work.

Easter Victory Revival

Victory is again the right word in describing our revival campaign held during the two weeks preceding Easter. The attendance was good although sickness hindered very much. The members of the church prayed and worked earnestly for victory and feel revived and largely repaid. The whole church was awakened to new activity. There were 17 confessions and 2 since making 19, 17 of whom unite with the church, 16 by baptism and one by relation. Three new families and individuals from two other new families are included in this number. The song services were led by Warren Fouch in charge of the congregational singing and special music and by Mrs. Beulah Amstutz in charge of the "Jolly Broadcasters", the junior choir, while the pastor did the preaching. The contest aided the revival by bringing new people into the church services during the 7 weeks. The whole church is rejoicing over this signal victory for Christ and his Church. To Christ be all the glory and praise!

Easter Cantata

Victory tells the story of our Easter Cantata, "The King Eternal," rendered in a very creditable manner by a chorus choir of nearly 30 voices under the direction of Warren Fouch. It was given at Smithville on Easter Monday and again a few days later at the Rittman Brethren church. It reflected much credit on all who took part.

"Victory Church Night"

Victory well describes another feature in the work here, our monthly Church Night. A special program is prepared, consisting of Bible study, prayer, special music, readings and so forth, followed by a fellowship period. Although our members are quite widely scattered the attendance thus far has been very gratifying, ranging from 75 with a downpour of rain to 99 at the recent April church night, which was a welcome night for the new members both of the Sunday school and of the church. Any church that stands by the pastor and supports a program of work as the Smithville-Sterling church does is likely to succeed.

G. C. CARPENTER.

Smithville, Ohio.

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

The time has come for another report from La Verne, the mother church of the Southern California district. The outstanding things since our last report are as follows: The presence and blessing of dear Dr. Florence Gribble with us for seven of her spirit-filled messages; the Easter season with its salvation of souls and dedication of lives; the blessed Easter communion; and the glorious home-going of a beloved former pastor of this church, the Rev. Thomas H. Broad, who served here for twelve years. Dr. L. S. Bauman, who preached on "The Blessed Hope," at his funeral, to the 600 who crowded in and around the church, has written up the account of his death and funeral, so I must not say more here, but that his life work was most beautifully completed at just 59 years of age.

The quarterly business reports showed the various organizations active, but with the depression getting in a little of its work.

A touching farewell was tendered Dr. Gribble on Easter Sunday following the program, when 300 members of the Sunday school from the tiniest tot to the eldest, filed past her in farewell, showering her with flowers and gifts of every description. May God bless your testimony everywhere you go, Dr. Gribble, as he has at La Verne! We were Africa-enlightened by two splendid missionary addresses given by Miss Estelle Myers during this quarter also.

I am including with this report, an account of the two revival meetings, here and at Manteca, written by our earnest pastor, Rev. Archie Lynn.

"Dr. W. S. Bell's Meeting at La Verne

"Words fail to express our sincere appreciation of Dr. Bell's helpful ministry during the revival campaign in our midst. He held forth the Word of life in a courageous and capable manner. Large crowds greeted his ministry night after night, in spite of the downpour of rain.

"This field is kept closely gleaned. Therefore, we did not expect a large ingathering of members. The success of a meeting must not be determined on the basis of numerical additions to the church. A church must be revived, if she is to be evangelistic. Periodic revivals and perennial evangelism seem to the writer to be a splendid goal toward which every church should strive.

"Dr. Bell's meeting was a decided impetus in this direction. The church was quickened, her vision enlarged, her devotion deepened, and her loyalty to Jesus strengthened. It was a pleasure to have Dr. Bell in our home. He is a true yokefellow. We give thanks to God for his fruitful ministry, and for his memorable work in connection with the College and Seminary. God bless you Doc.

"At Manteca

"At the earnest request of Brother Platt and his church, the writer was loaned to them for an evangelistic campaign. This was our fifth trip to the central part of California in the last three years for addresses and conference work. Therefore, we have learned to know these people and to love them. What a privilege to fellowship with such dear Brethren as are to be found at Lathrop, Turlock and Manteca.

"The San Joaquin Valley was at its prettiest this time of the year with spacious fields of living green, miles of orchards laden with a gorgeous display of many-colored blossoms, beautifully fragrant, and eloquently saying this is springtime, and reminding us of the glorious spring time of the Resurrection morning. Praise his name! Arriving at Manteca, we found a good crowd at church on the first Monday night. Keen interest and large crowds were sustained throughout the meetings. Brother Platt had worked so hard getting ready for the meeting, that he had to go to bed for three days. Suffice it to say that Brother Platt and his earnest people had made great preparation for the meetings: Cottage prayer meetings, visitations, advertising the meeting, etc. Brother Platt is a true yokefellow, a humble, self-sacrificing, earnest, and capable man of God. It was a genuine pleasure to work with him. He has done a fine piece of work at Manteca. Brother Jennings and many of his people came many nights to encourage the meetings—a 60 mile drive. Thank you Brother Jennings. Many people from Lathrop were at the meeting almost every night. Thank you, Brethren, for helping us in the meeting.

"We made our home with Brother and Sister Guss Schmiedt. Thank God for this dear family in the Lord. The writer is from the hospitable South, but let me tell you, if you find sweeter fellowship and a better brand of hospitality, than we found at Guss Schmiedt's, you will have to go to heaven to find it.

"We thank you, Brother Platt and the members of your church, for the privilege of working with you in a meeting. May God richly bless the Manteca work. Brother Platt will report the meeting.

"We solicit an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood."

"ARCHIE LEE LYNN."

Reported by Mrs. Harry Good, Church Correspondent.

CHURCH CHANGE TO TAKE PLACE NEXT SEPTEMBER

Goshen School Board President Comes Here

The Rev. W. I. Duker, for the last 10 years pastor of the First Brethren church in this city, has resigned and at the beginning of the school year expects to move back to Goshen to resume his former position as principal of the Chamberlain school. His place here will be filled by the Rev. H. F. Stuckman, pastor of the Brethren church at Goshen and president of the Goshen school board. The changes will take effect in September, it being the rule of the denomination to give a six months' notice.

The Rev. Mr. Duker moved to Elkhart with his wife and son, Loren, about two years ago from their home at 624 Emerson street, Goshen. Until that time he had carried on his school work at the county seat, and also the pastoral work here. During his pastorate here the membership has more than doubled. In July, 1927, the cornerstone of a new church was laid under his charge, the building costing $37,000, which has been paid. This building is the first unit of the completed building, which, when finished, will give the congregation a $70,000 edifice. A parsonage has also been purchased and is now being paid for. The Rev. Mr. Duker is moderator of the National Conference of the Brethren church, which is the highest office of that denomination.

His successor is a native of Nappanee and comes from the Goshen church of which he has been pastor for nine years. He was invited to stay at Goshen indefinitely. He is a boyhood friend of the Rev. Mr. Duker, and has been in the ministry for the last 22 years. He moved to Goshen from Nebraska, where he served a pastorate for 12 years. He is a graduate of the Theological Seminary of Ashland, Ohio. He is credited with building and equipping the largest and most convenient church building at Goshen.

In addition to his church work, the Rev. Mr. Stuckman has taken an active interest in community projects. He is president of the Goshen school board at the present time. His family consists of his wife and three children, William, who is now in college; Mary Elizabeth who will graduate in June from Goshen High school, and Dorothy, who is a freshman in Goshen High school. Mrs. Stuckman is an active church worker. She is now president of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Goshen church.—From The Elkhart Truth.

LOREE, INDIANA

The Evangelist family is no doubt aware that Brother D. A. C. Teeter, pastor of the Loree Brethren church, has been laid aside for some weeks, having been forced to submit the most delicate of his members to the touch of the surgeon's knife. Brother Teeter had the cataract removed from his eye in the first part of February, and I am sure the many friends who know and love this dear faithful servant of God, will rejoice to learn that the operation was 100% successful. We are all praising God and thanking the skill of modern medical surgery and for the restoration of sight to our brother. May God richly bless and use his servant in the future, as he has been pleased to do in the past.

It has been the happy privilege of the writer of these lines to worship with the Loree Brethren, and to serve in the absence of Brother Teeter; I must say the fellowship of these meetings is a precious memory, and the inspiration received from the loyalty and faith of the good people of Loree is a lasting possession.

Loree has a well organized Sunday school. The superintendent and his corps of efficient teachers are wide awake. They give their time and talent unstintingly, and take seriously the responsibility of such a position. They make it a point to be at their posts at the appointed time. When we have said this, we have no trouble to explain the regularity of the Sunday school pupils; the attendance is above the average in percentage. During the five Sundays of our service, the largest attendance was one hundred and ninety-six. Only upon the occasion of the most severe snow storm of the season was the attendance noticeably reduced, and even on that day, we were glad to see well over one hundred. This is one Sunday school that does not sing the discharging song: "Sunday school is over and we are going home; good-bye, good-bye," etc. That song may have its place, but certainly has its effect; it sends the Sunday school pupils away from the church service. But at Loree this does not happen. When the pastor stands up to break the Bread of Life, his heart is gladdened as he looks into the faces of the entire Sunday school group.

Loree has a young people's group second to none; they are about sixty in number and rank among the most efficient Christian Endeavorers in the brotherhood. Besides conducting a Christian Endeavor meeting, which is an honor to Christ and a great help to the church, these splendid young people support the Sunday evening meeting in a wonderful way, and also conduct a mid-week inspirational and Bible study class, which is well attended. The writer has been privileged to meet and observe the work of young people in a great many churches, large and small, but he has rarely seen as capable and loyal a group of young people in any church.

Brother Teeter surely has reason to rejoice in the prosperity of this work. It is the signal of God's blessing upon him and his people and a fine compliment to himself, and also his good wife who is a capable and persistent co-laborer. It demonstrates the wise and effective way in which they are leading and feeding the flock of God. Brother and Sister Teeter are held in highest esteem, and have been extended a unanimous call to continue the work.

Loree is a rural church, and a splendid example it is, of the possibilities in our rural communities; often in these localities are found the richest deposits of faith and loyalty. It is true at Loree. May the Lord bless them all.

EARL B. STUDEBAKER.

Chicago, Illinois.

REVIVAL AT THIRD CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

A long time has elapsed since a report from this church has appeared in the church paper. We are always anxious to read of the many successes and victories of the other churches. We trust a few remarks concerning our own work may prove also interesting. We truthfully say that no records have been broken, neither have we had astonishing records established. Our work here is a hard, steady pull with more than the average amount of the opposition which one naturally expects. We do praise God that we have given ourselves over to the preaching of his blessed Word and to the causing of Satan all the discomfort possible. Space is too brief to relate the many ways we have met the challenge of the opposer of Truth. But every time we received a blessing and became stronger in the Lord.

Our further remarks will be confined to a brief report of our recent revival and evangelistic campaign which was conducted by R. Paul Miller. The Lord saw fit to turn the meeting into a constructive revival for the church. During almost all the time the pastor and evangelist directed their efforts to the reviving of the many indifferent members. There were two outstanding reasons for this: first, the church needed it badly; and second, the unsaved and unchurched would not attend any services. When the latter is true, it is impossible to convict them of sin. We discovered much sin and many sinners at home but could not bring them to a sin consciousness. We are praying for a continuation of the revival spirit that the unsaved may be finally won to Christ.

This was the first time the writer had the privilege of laboring with Evangelist Miller. We find him a most tireless worker, fearless preacher and congenial co-worker. Nothing of the high pressure, emotional or sensational methods were employed for sinners to make a false stand. We are certain the efforts of this meeting will bear fruit in many years to come.

The numerical results of the meeting are as follows,—fifty-one persons came forward during the three weeks. Of this number thirty-nine renewed their covenant with their Lord. Three came by relation. Two will retain their membership in their own churches. Five were baptized and received into the church. One is undecided. Many have expressed themselves as desiring to unite with the church but it is hard to join the church by proxy. We continue to pray God's blessing upon Brother Miller, a man God can and will use in just such a day as this.

JOS. L. GINGRICH, Pastor.

THE REVIVAL AT THE THIRD BRETHREN CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

We began this meeting with Brother "Joe" Gingrich and his people Monday night after closing at Conemaugh. We found that Brother Gingrich had made splendid preparation for the meeting. He had accomplished this in spite of the fact that he had much sickness in his home. However, one item that was encouraging was that the Lord sent to the Gingrich home a fine little baby boy just before the meetings began. Everyone seemed very happy over the occasion.

We found the Third church to be located in a district that has been very heavily churched and one that has been worked hard by the pastors who have labored here in the past. However, we have a nice church building here, a splendid parsonage, a congregation of around 250 people and in the spirit of optimism about the future that is most encouraging.

Brother Gingrich is himself a tireless worker. He is a great pastor and shepherds his flock with real love and oversight. It was a great joy to work with Gingrich. It was the first meeting I had ever labored with him, but it was a happy experience from the start. He is deserving of great success and I believe our Father God is going to give him far greater blessing in the way of a harvest for his labors than he has yet realized.

In this meeting we received splendid cooperation from Brother Schaffer, pastor of the church in Conemaugh, and Brother Ashman, pastor First church in Johnstown, who frequently brought delegations to add inspiration to our meetings.

There is here in the Johnstown district a splendid spirit of fellowship among our pastors, but this is not all, there is a fine ministerium made up of pastors of our own churches and those of our sister church, the Church of the Brethren. It was my privilege for the second time to meet with these splendid brethren and to address them. May God grant us more of such fellowship throughout the land. It is significant of far greater things than could ever be mentioned in this report.

I enjoyed greatly the hospitality that was extended to me in this parish. I had a most happy home with the Horner family, wherein is a true Christian mother and five splendid Christian young folks. It is a family of which any Christian mother could well be proud. I shall not soon forget the many happy days that I spent in their home.

That there is a future for the Third church of Johnstown is without question. It does not lie in a field of unsought people, but rather in the manifesting to the whole community the reality of Jesus Christ in the lives of his people, so that those who have thus far rejected Christ will find that they greatly desire him because of what they see of him in the lives of the members of the Third Brethren church of Johnstown. That as they see the devotion to Christ, the sacrifice of time and money for him, the living of separated lives, clean from the things of the world, their own hearts will yearn for a life that is evidently divine by the character and conduct that it has produced.

May our Father God greatly bless this church until our Lord returns.

R. PAUL MILLER.

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

On Easter Sunday we concluded a two weeks' revival, conducted by our pastor, Rev. Herman W. Koontz, assisted by an outside song leader, Rev. K. A. Painter, of the Baptist church. They preached and sang their way into the hearts of most appreciative audiences. The attendance averaged 110 for the entire meeting, of whom 15 were strangers, and we had a Sunshine Choir every night ranging from 22 to 38 members. Considering our small membership, we are both pleased and encouraged with the attendance.

Brother Koontz's sermons were full of inspiration and help to the Christian and a solemn warning of Eternal judgment to the unsaved. His clear explanations of some troublesome passages of scripture and the practical application made his messages soul-stirring and we believe that after listening to him every night for two weeks the membership was really revived and more closely knitted together. Only the Lord himself knows the ultimate good to come from the meetings. The results we can count are eleven additions to the church; three husbands and their wives, two young men and three children from the Sunday school.

In the past six months our Sunday school has increased 40%, reaching a new high-water mark last Sunday, with 138 present. We're hoping to have the average up to 150 by the time the Southeastern District Conference convenes here in June.

Several months ago we divided our none-too-large Christian Endeavor and organized an Intermediate Society. In just a few weeks they had so many attendants of junior age that we had to seek other leaders and organize a Junior Society. Now some of the parents who bring their children to the Junior C. E. find their way to the Senior C. E.

At the quarterly business meeting held the first week of this month, every organization in the church had a report to turn in, which showed that all departments are working. We believe any organization in church which works will grow.

Like death, the depression is no respecter of persons, and our church has suffered along with all others, but we thank the Lord that we have managed to keep off a threatening suit against the Trustees of the church by sacrifice and help from outside sources. We know this has come about by prayer and we give our Master all the glory. We still have heavy obligations to meet and we are trusting that our Heavenly Father will continue to lead us through the financial "whirlpools" by means of gifts, pledges, sale of church bonds and other miscellaneous receipts.

There is a spirit of love and unity among our membership that can be felt at every service. Often it is more than half an hour after the benediction before all the members are gone. When church members are friends (brothers and sisters in Christ), instead of merely acquaintances, then they are genuinely interested in each others' well-being and can easily be led by a consecrated pastor to do constructive church work. Such a spirit exists in the Roanoke church and we are hoping the wiles of Satan will not conspire to break it up. To this end we ask the united prayers of the brotherhood that the workers in this portion of his vineyard may be faithful.

MRS. J. HAROLD PUTT, Secretary.

The Place and Opportunity of the Small Church

(Continued from page 6)

from the little plain meeting-houses of the countryside. H. Paul Douglass in his book "A Thousand City Churches" says, "The city church is an evolved rural church." It is rather its historical heritage. The leaders in the large city churches received their ideas and religious training back in the old home church and they cannot get away from it. The churches in our county seat towns can trace their origin and growth to the several rural churches that are contiguous to them.

Some of these city churches might do well to cultivate the small churches nearby as recruiting stations. In a recent church survey in an Indiana county it was shown that the large churches in the city which was the county seat gained almost entirely through certificates of church memberships. While the small city churches and the village churches received their additions through conversion and the Sunday school. I have in mind a certain "First Church" that has fostered several Sunday schools in different parts of the city and adjacent country. The superintendent of the Sunday school told me that they not only received most of their conversions through these schools but they had been able to secure several talented leaders who were working in the "First Church."

Many times a small church grows discouraged when the promising youth move to the city, or some good family leaves the parish. But there are always fields to be reaped. The people of a small community live in closer contact with each other than do those of the city. It is far easier to make friends and acquaintances in the small place. The old home church must be awakened. Plan homecomings and other features that will attract others to fill the vacant places. Keep in touch with those who have left the community and refresh their memories with the binding ties of the old sanctuary.

A small church has an opportunity to train for leadership. At a conference of Methodist ministers' wives the question was asked, "How many were reared in churches of over 800 members?" and not one arose.

Then it was asked, "How many came from churches between 300 and 800?" and two stood. Then all who were from churches of less than 300 were asked to stand, and the entire congregation stood. The small churches have made their notable contribution of ministers, missionaries and lay workers. A surprising bit of statistics came to my notice some time ago regarding the small Sunday schools throughout the United States. In 1922 there were 144,450 Sunday schools in the United States. While the Sunday school work is largely planned in terms of the big Sunday school, yet as a matter of fact the great majority of our Sunday schools are to be found in the open country and villages of less than 1500 people. It is said that the Sunday school enrollment would not be alarmingly decreased if all the large Sunday schools were abandoned. The average Sunday school in the United States has an attendance of less than 60 and that means that there are many that are very small. It is from these small units that the church must look for her leadership. Here is the opportunity for the kingdom and the church.

Then the small church has an advantage in enlisting and discovering the talents of men and women for Christian Service. In the very large churches there are classes of folks who are overshadowed by others. Someone has called them the "Submerged membership." These good people have potential abilities but they are either too modest or are overlooked, or not just needed. But in a small group where workers are scarce these people are needed and come to their own. There is nothing that causes a man to have an interest in anything like a personal contribution. An old man came home from the mid-week prayer service and said, "That was the best meetin' we ever had—I talked twice." He had given something and he felt that he had received a blessing. A small church should never permit a "submerged membership"; there should be no unenlisted persons.

In some cases a small church as an organization is doomed to failure, but some of these groups still live in the lives they have touched and the Christian characters they have built. There is nothing greater than the nurturing of human souls to bless God and men. I have in mind a certain Dunker Church down on the edge of the hill country of southern Indiana, that now stands vacant. The soil was so thin and the opportunities so limited that it was impossible to hold the ambitious youth in that community. The old elder of the church was a man of rare insight. He urged his own sons and the young men of the church to get an education. As they grew up, they went away to college, leaving the old church empty of worshippers. But who dares say the old church failed in its mission? Out of that church there have come successful teachers, ministers, professional and business men who not only grace their professions but stand as men of Christian character and integrity. Perhaps it is a far greater work to build Christian men and women than to perfect a great organization, or build a cathedral.

But the small church need not necessarily remain small. It must possess a vision and a zeal for growth. It need not and should not be contented to remain as it is. It may have to fight adversaries. It will be called on to make heroic sacrifices. Remember that some large churches have grown from small beginnings. Some have struggled on for years and then have taken root and become like the sturdy oak. I read the story of the Baptists in Brooklyn, New York. In 1822 they had two members in Brooklyn that had to row across the river each Sunday to meet with five other Baptists in Manhattan. They began to hold meetings. They called in a minister, invited their neighbors and friends, called in the homes and little by little they grew to be one of the great denominations in the city.

The small church needs the enlistment of strong men and women. They need it in the pew as well as in the pulpit. They must not scorn the task of small things. William James said near the end of his life:

"I am done with the great things, and the big things. The great organizations and the big successes; and I am for the tiny, invisible forces that work from individual to individual."

That is needed in our small churches of today. When Theodore Roosevelt went to Washington, he sought out the little church of his choice and attended there. Sometimes he filled the pulpit himself. Many a man of smaller caliber would have sought for a larger church, but Roosevelt was a strong man, and went to the little church and contributed his influence and made it great. When men or women have talents, wealth or influence and ally themselves to a small institution they make it great. The small church needs the influence and leadership that these can give.

The small church has its place in many lives. I think of the noble Christian women who are giving their time, their efforts and prayers for the preservation of these little Bethels scattered over the land. Their work is not fruitless. They are rearing monuments greater than shafts of marble. They build not for time alone but for eternity.

Roanoke, Indiana.

THE NOBILITY OF WORK

When a philanthropist said pompously, "With your great gifts you ought To work for the great world, not spend yourself

On common labors like a common man"—He answered him, "The world is in God's hands!

This part he gives to me; for which my past

Build up on loves inherited, hath made Me fittest. Neither will he let me think Primeval, godlike work too low to need, For its perfection, manhood's noblest powers

And deepest knowledge, far beyond my gifts.

And if I leave the thing that lieth next, To go and do the thing that is afar, I take the very strength out of my deed, Seeking the needy not for pure need's sake."

—G. MacDonald.

The best "company manners" may be insured by paying a daily premium of courtesy at home.

THIRD CHURCH OF JOHNSTOWN, PA.

The Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania will observe the spring communion service on May 1, at the hour of 7:15 P. M. We invite all of like faith to share this service with us.

J. L. GINGRICH, Pastor.

TITHING IN HARD TIMES

Now you can plan a Tithing Campaign and save money by using the church bulletins we furnish including one especially written for this hour: "Tithing in Hard Times." The Layman's Bulletins now 32 in number are printed in the regular two-page church bulletin size with two pages blank for your own Bulletin material. This saves one-half of your printing cost not counting cost of paper.

Send for samples which include pamphlet "Teaching the Church to Tithe" containing full directions for a ten weeks' program of silent church-wide education at trifling expense. Non-profit, non-sectarian, non-legalistic, but simple clear and workable.

Please mention the BRETHREN EVANGELIST also give your denomination.

THE LAYMAN COMPANY

730 Rush Street

Chicago

IN THE SHADOW

BOWEN—Easley Sterling Bowen had lived for many years southeast of Fort Scott, Kansas in the edge of Missouri and passed away at the Fort Scott Hospital, March 18th, 1932, at the age of 56 years.

The funeral service was conducted from the home on Monday afternoon, March 21st by the writer, assisted by Rev. Isaac Grubb, the Baptist minister of Garland, Kansas.

His wife, three sons and a daughter remain to mourn their loss. Burial was made in the family lot of the Heavlyside cemetery of east of Garland, Kansas. L. G. WOOD.

GRUBB—Samuel A. Grubb was born in Butler county, Ky., on December 5th, 1845, and departed this life at the home of his son in Fulton, March 15, 1932, at the age of 86 years, 3 months and 10 days.

Mr. Grubb had lived in Bourbon county 62 years, having come from Kentucky when a young man.

He was married to Isabel Givens on August 4th, 1867, his companion having preceded him in death by 16 years. When the Civil War came he entered the service of the government, as a team driver, and served until the war was over.

The doctor called in his last illness was the first physician from whom Mr. Grubb ever required attendance.

He was well known throughout the county and highly respected by all who knew him.

Mr. Grubb was able to recall many early day incidents of pioneer life in this community.

Mr. Grubb is survived by five children: John W. Grubb, Lee Grubb and Mrs. Winnie Armstrong of Fulton; James A. Grubb and Bessie Grubb of Fort Scott, and two brothers: J. W. Grubb of Fulton and Frank Grubb of Rural route from Fort Scott, and fourteen grandchildren.

The funeral was conducted by the writer at the West Liberty M. E. Church, March 17, 1932, the Rev. Anderson, pastor of the church, assisting.

Many beautiful floral offerings were made and the body was laid to rest in the family lot in the West Liberty cemetery. He had been a devout Christian since he was 17 years of age. L. G. WOOD.

STEWART—C. A. Stewart departed this life at the Main Street Hospital, Fort Scott, Kan., April 14, 1932, at the age of 72 years. He had lived in this city for 45 years.

He is survived by a sister who resides in Spokane, Wash., also by the following stepchildren: George and Tom of Fort Scott, Mrs. Della Gates of Minneapolis, Minn., and Harry Reno of Joliet, Ill.

Funeral was conducted from the undertaker's parlors, April 17, 1932, by the writer. Burial was made in the Oak Grove cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

VAN LEAR—Charles T. Van Lear, aged 70, well known God's Mill harness maker, died at his home, April 6, 1932, after an illness of some three months. He had lived practically all his life in the God's Mill neighborhood and was a faithful member of the Mt. Olive Brethren church. He is survived by his widow, who, before her marriage, was Miss Emma Ridenour, and by five children, all of whom live in other states or cities. He was the father of Mrs. W. S. Crick of Fremont, Ohio. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, the writer, assisted by Rev. E. L. Miller, pastor of the Maureontown church. May the God of all grace comfort the hearts of those who mourn. JOHN F. LOCKE.

HAGER—Stephen Hager was born in Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 6, 1856, and departed this life April 15, 1932, aged 76 years, 2 months and 9 days. He was united in marriage to Betty Grimes in 1893 and to this union two children were born—Mrs. Frank Counts of Nappanee and Arthur Hager of Nappanee. This good father, who had lived in this community for fifty years, began failing in health six months ago. He was always of a cheerful nature but more so now, a few weeks before leaving this world, he made his peace with God. Our sympathies are extended to those left and we pray the Heavenly Father to sustain them in this their hour of need. Services were held at the home by the writer, assisted by Rev. E. J. Jacobs. BENJ. F. OWEN.

GARBER—Samuel C. Garber was born May 1, 1865; died Dec. 8, 1931, aged 66 years. He was married to Margaret Hawk, who died in 1918. He leaves five children—Mrs. Zoe Keim, Georgia, Clarence, all of Wooster; Ethel of Cleveland and David of Cincinnati; and also five grandchildren. He was a faithful employee in the railway mail service for 35 years. He was a lifetime member of the Homeville Brethren church. The funeral service was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Floyd Shirey and Dr. E. E. Jacobs. G. C. CARPENTER.

KENT—Edwin J. Kent was born one mile and a half south of Warkara, Ind., April 28, 1880 and departed this life March 13, 1932.

He was united in marriage to Velina F. Blessing, September 25, 1907, and to this union three children were born, all of whom are living. The two daughters, Ruth Maria and Irma Elizabeth, are living. He was united with mother and Robert is living on his grandfather's farm.

Twenty-five years ago this good brother united with the First Brethren church at Nappanee under the leadership of Rev. Chas. F. Yoder and has remained a faithful member of this church until the end. He was one of the active trustees of the church and attended to his services splendidly.

This devoted husband, faithful father, good provider for the household, excellent farmer and true American citizen was greatly missed by his wife, children, the church and all who knew him.

Services were conducted at his home near Warkara owing to his wife and daughter being unable to attend the church service because of illness, the service then being continued at the First Brethren church at Nappanee by the writer his pastor. BENJ. F. OWEN.

SMELTZER—Samuel Smeltzer was born in Locke Township, Elkhart County, Ind., December 8, 1872, and departed this life March 14, 1932.

He was united in marriage to Mary Ann Suder, Dec. 13, 1885, and to this union five children were born—Mrs. FIRM Troup of Nappanee, Mrs. Harry W. Scott of Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. Harmon Tobias and Mrs. Raymond Hark, both of Nappanee and preceded him a worthy fellow worker with Nappanee, and Elizabeth Viola, who passed away in infancy.

Early in life this good brother united with the Church of the Brethren but later in life came into the fellowship of this Brethren church at Nappanee and proved himself a worthy fellow worker in the church. He was a true and performing other duties that contributed greatly to the work of the church he loved.

The death of this brother resulted from an accident while working in one of our factories. He will be missed by all who knew him. Services were conducted at the First Brethren church of Nappanee by the writer.

BENJ. F. OWEN.

CLAVENGER—Daniel E. Clavenger was born in Drake Co., Ohio, July 19, 1864, and departed this life March 26, 1932.

May 6, 1928 he was the second time united in marriage to Mrs. Isabelle Harker, who sorrowed deeply at the loss of a splendid husband and the hearts of all the community go out to her as she laments the loss of her dear husband and the meaning of God's will for her in this trying hour.

This noble Christian brother cast his lot in the year 1868 with the faithful Gravelton Brethren church and worked in his quiet way as leader in the Sunday school, and was his best to this group of faithful people who have known him and understand the work going and are still working at it. But losing faithful members one by one is felt keenly by this noble group. Therefore let us pray the Heavenly Father to sustain his wife and all who are left in the community in this loss. The services were held in the Brethren church at Gravelton, Ind., by the writer. BENJ. F. OWEN.

ROGERS—John H. Rogers was born in Garrett, Ind., July 16, 1850, and departed this life April 5, 1932, at his residence in Nappanee.

He was united in a second marriage to Mrs. Allie Trillon, July 22, 1909 and they have lived happily together for 22 years.

In 1909 this dear brother united with the Methodist Church in Garrett, Ind., and held true to that faith until death.

For thirty-five years this brother was a faithful workman for the B. & O. Railway Co., and due to his faithful work the company granted him a pension and gave him a splendid testimonial in writing for his faithfulness while in their employ.

This loyal husband and provider will be greatly missed by his good wife and all who knew him. Services were conducted at Garrett, Ind., by the Baptist minister, by the writer, assisted by the Baptist minister. BENJ. F. OWEN.

DOUMA—Henrietta Duker Douma was born in Jackson Township, Elkhart Co., Ind., March 16, 1857, and departed this life April 7, 1932, aged 75 years, 22 days. She was united in marriage to Andrew Douma, Aug. 27, 1878, who preceded his wife in death Nov. 13, 1927, to this union seven children were born. The living children are, Julia Corwin, Nappanee, Ind.; William Douma, Goshen, Ind.; Susan Brackeen, Greenwood, Ind.; Martha Leeman, Milford, Ind.; Frank Douma, Muskegon, Mich. Two children passed away in early life.

This sister in early life united with the First Reformed church and remained true to her faith until death.

She was a noble character, quite cheerful in her old age and a keen thinker. Always conscious of the goodness of God, she loved all of his creation. She was proud of her children and relatives and especially pleased was she with two nephews, both of whom are ministers in our Indiana Conference—Rev. W. J. Duker, of the First Elkhart church, and Rev. Edgar A. Duker of South Bend, Ind.

The services for our sister were conducted by the writer at the Maple Grove church, near Paris, Ind. BENJ. F. OWEN, Nappanee, Ind.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

Our communion service will be held Thursday evening, May the 5th, 1932. All of like faith are invited to enjoy the service with us. W. R. DEETER, Pastor.

VOL. LIV
Number 19

THE

May 7
1932

BRETHREN EVANGELIST

THE PIONEER WOMAN

At Cherokee Strip, near Ponca City, Oklahoma, stands this bronze monument—"the Pioneer Woman", thirty-five feet high. It is the work of Bryant Baker, a New York sculptor, and cost $300,000.00.

Critics agree that the artist has put into this great work the spirit of the womanhood that has made America great. Forward she goes into the great west, with the faith and strength, the calmness and courage that will enable her to meet any emergency. With one hand she leads the citizen of the future and in the other she carries the Bible.

By that same equipment, and only so, can the womanhood of our day successfully cope with the critical situation with which we are faced.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Protest of Darrow

It is not often that Clarence Darrow loses a case, in spite of the fact that he has undertaken often to defend cases where defense seemed to be hopeless. But for the time being he has lost in the courts of Honolulu what is reported to be the last case he will ever undertake, one of the most notorious in modern times.

It is not my purpose here to discuss the merits of the case. There are some things that seem beyond the power of human courts to settle with justice to all concerned. After man has done all within his power, it should be remembered that in the last analysis "Vengeance belongeth unto Me; I will recompense, saith the Lord." In his court there will be no miscarriage of justice.

When the jury brought in its verdict of "Guilty," the aged Darrow indignantly denounced it as a "travesty on justice." Those acquainted with Darrow's philosophy of life will smile at his protest in the name of "Justice." To Darrow, there is no such thing as moral responsibility. Every crime is the inexorable result of factors over which the criminal has no control; he could not have done otherwise. According to this philosophy, the Honolulu jury could not have rendered any other verdict than it did! Why then protest against it? The only man who has a right to talk about "Justice" is the man who believes in God and freedom of the will and a Day of Judgment.

NOTHING to Repent?

The ex-Kaiser of Germany, now an almost forgotten and lonely fugitive at Doorn, recently gave to the newspapers an interview. Referring to his own past, he said, "I have nothing to repent. If I were to live my life over again, my duty to the fatherland would compel me to do exactly what I have already done."

During the late war-hysteria, the Kaiser was pictured as the arch-devil of the universe and responsible for most of the evils of mankind. The passing of the years has modified this estimate very greatly. During the war the war-making politicians were looking for a "Goat" and found a convenient one in Wilhelm. But after discounting to the limit all the charges laid against him, enough remains to give the lie to his most recent utterance, "I HAVE NOTHING TO REPENT."

Perhaps the worst thing that can be said about the Kaiser is that he has learned nothing from experience and history. But he is not alone in this failing.

There is a prophecy in the Bible which declares that "in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons; speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron." (1 Tim. 4: 1-2). There is nothing more terrible than the "seared conscience." For the repentant sinner there is Divine Mercy, no matter how deep the sin. But the "seared conscience" has no feeling of sin. To be "past feeling" (Eph. 4:19) spells a doom that is hopeless.

THE "Seared Conscience" of Rousseau

Rousseau, great French writer, is the classic example of the "seared conscience." As a boy he was a petty thief. He advocated adultery and suicide in his writings. He lived for years in the worst licentiousness. Most of his children were illegitimate and he sent them at birth to a foundling asylum. He was mean, vacillating, treacherous, hypocritical and blasphemous.

Yet in his Confessions he writes, "No man can come before the throne of God and say, 'I am a better man than Rousseau! ... Let the trumpet of the Last Judgment sound when it will; I will present myself before the sovereign Judge with this book (his Confessions) in my hand, and say aloud, 'Here is what I did, and thought, and was.'"

Just before he died, he said "How happy it is to die when one has no reason for remorse." Then addressing God, he said, "Eternal Being, the soul I give back to thee as is pure at this moment as when it proceeded from thee."

If we Confess Our Sins

Over against the deadly moral paralysis of Rousseau and the ex-Kaiser, let the reader compare Paul, greatest representative and trophy of the Grace of Christ. Looking back over his life, he finds nothing in himself of which to boast, but sums it up in one brief and searching "Confession," "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief." (1 Tim. 1:15).

To have sinned is tragedy great enough. But to sin and not be conscious of it is the tragedy of tragedies.

"If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."

But "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

To sin is folly. But, having sinned, there is no higher wisdom than to say with the

"Well Read"

This is spoken as a tribute to many persons, but it always has relative meaning. To be well read may be a credit or a curse; it may suggest a desirable companion or a dangerous one; it may promise ennobling conversation or the degrading kind; it may point to a constructive or to a destructive individual. One must know what has been read before he can decide whether being well read is an honorable state or not.

But who passes the judgment that pronounces one well read? The way the judge looks at life, what he selects as worth while determines whom he will designate as well read. The banker wants his well-read man to be a reader of books pertaining to finance and exchange, local, national and worldwide. The youth who reads only the sports pages in the papers can call none well read who wastes time on anything else. But another youth, interested in history or art, or travel, ignores records of sports and is bored to death if he must converse with anyone who is not up to date in the things that interest him. All of us limit this matter of being well read to the things that concern ourselves. We may say, "Oh, yes, he is well read in a lot of stuff that amounts to nothing." In this way we may be right, but we are as apt to be wrong.

Our being well read has something to do with the work we are doing. Thus a minister has his range of reading, as do doctors and lawyers and manufacturers and farmers and fruit grovers and poultry raisers. It would be fine if a farmer could find time to be well read in a great many things that do not pertain to his work, but he will probably profit most and become a far more interesting companion for others if he is well read on farm topics. The doctor does well, if he can get the time for it, to be well read on forestry and whale fishing, but his patients want to be sure that he is well read on medical lore, even if he knows nothing about trees and might suppose that whales are caught in steel traps.

Some of us are teachers in church schools. That is not our life work; we make our living working at something else. Teaching in church school is not remunerative now; it probably never will be. It is a work of love largely. It is a service rendered in Jesus' name for the uplift of persons we have as pupils. Is there any application of this matter of being well read to the church school teachers? It is not only applicable in a vague way; it is essential if the teaching is to count for much. In our times pupils are widely informed about a host of things, but they have limited information about the things that are supposed to be taught in the church school. These pupils look for teaching that comes from a well-read teacher—well read in the matters that pertain to the church school. The Bible, the church, the activities of the church locally and at large, the long list of things that rightly belong in the teacher's storehouse need to be gathered by much reading. Busy teachers—we all are that, but our pupils do not know that we are busy, and they do not excuse us for lack of information. Being well read is not the highest thing in a teacher's equipment, but it certainly has its place.—The Lutheran.

Taking in without giving out breeds corruption both in ponds and men. Soul-health demands service for others.

IN THIS NUMBER

Why Not a Motherhood Movement?—Editor, .....	3
Some Challenges of the Christian Standard, Part II—Editor, .....	3
Editorial Review, .....	4
A Mother's Day Message—E. M. Riddle, .....	5
Conscience—B. F. Owen, .....	6
God's Judgments Are Sure—Thomas Gibson, .....	7
Significant News and Views, .....	7
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, .....	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, .....	9
American Standard Bible to be Revised—M. A. Stuckey, .....	11
Good Equipment and Efficient Methods, .....	10
Studying the S. S. Lesson—T. C. Lyon, .....	11
Stewardship Suggestions, .....	11
"The Form of the Fourth"—Florence N. Gribble, .....	12
News from the Field, .....	13-15
Our Little Readers, .....	16
Announcements, .....	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Why Not a Motherhood Movement?

Dr. Frederick W. Shannon said a few years ago: "Far more important than the youth movement, one need not hesitate to say, is the motherhood movement." Verily, and why not have a motherhood movement? There is great concern these days about youth, and there is some reason for perturbation, but a far more vital and fundamental problem is that of parenthood, and especially, that of motherhood. If we can solve the problem of motherhood; if we can get mothers of the right sort; if we can put within their hearts ambitions that are noblest, choices that are highest, thoughts that are purest; if we can bring them to give themselves to ways that are blameless, habits that are temperate and self-controlled and speech that is kind and lofty, we will not need to trouble ourselves nearly so much about the problem of youth.

A motherhood movement calls first for an appreciation of, and a reverence for, the great office and ministry of motherhood. This is important because of the good influence it will have on those who have profited by the love and sacrifice of mother. Men and women and boys and girls cannot help being made better by having developed within their hearts a keen appreciation of the high and holy office of motherhood. It will make men more kind and considerate, more truly manly in their attitude toward women, and it will make boys more reverent and devoted toward the best friend they have on earth, and more gentle toward all women. And girls will be made more sympathetic and tender toward their mothers, and at the same time more helpful, if they are given a large appreciation of the sacrificial devotion that characterizes true motherhood. Not only so, but the loftier and more intelligent and more widespread the appreciation of the office of mother, the more glorious and more to be coveted will that high place appear to be in the eyes of all true girlhood, and the loftier will be the thoughts and the purer the motives and the more keenly understood the responsibilities as they under God approach its sacred precincts. And nothing is more vital for our day, or any day, than that motherhood should be entered into with a very real appreciation of its holy office and far-reaching responsibilities.

A second desirable element in a motherhood movement would be training for the responsibilities of motherhood. Does it seem strange to suggest such a thing? If so, it is because we have been accustomed to gross carelessness about the entering of the most sacred and most significant relationship of life. Many who have a right to express a judgment on such matters insist that ignorance and mis-information are responsible for much of the unhappiness of homes and the waywardness of youth. Many are the youth and maidens who enter into the holy estate of matrimony suddenly and with no serious thought and little knowledge of all that it involves, and take upon themselves the responsibilities of parenthood with little or no preparation for the training of young life. If they succeed we commend them; if they fail we blame them, and perhaps unjustly. Why were they so ill prepared for life's duties? Why had they not received instruction while under the parental roof and about the home fireside? Or why had the church been silent about such important matters? Why was not some means afforded whereby the needed training could be received? If we are to have better parents, they must be better trained, and unless we do have better parents, we cannot hope to cope with the youth problem. Surely a motherhood movement might well include better training for motherhood.

Another element of a motherhood movement might be an emphasis of the importance of a consistently Christian spirit and example in the moulding of character. However much a mother might understand young life or be equipped with methods, if she has not the spirit of Christ in her life and does not walk circumspectly before her children, all her skill and teaching will be of no avail. An inconsistent example can defeat a whole volume of good precepts. Nowhere is it more important than before children to "walk worthily of the (Christian) calling wherewith we are called," and to seek to "avoid the very appearance of evil." How quickly they imitate what they see done and take on the spirit they see manifested! This is a warning to both father and mother. A fit of ill-temper, an explosion of profanity, a showing of jealousy on the part of a parent will not be long in finding expression in the conduct of the boy or girl in that home. A cigarette smoking, card playing, theatre-going father or mother can expect to have that kind of a boy or girl. On the other hand the spirit of love and good will, the showing of strength and self-control, the example of temperance and righteousness, of Christian devotion and godliness, will soon find their counterpart in the young lives before whom they are enacted. Example, good or bad, is a powerful factor in youthful conduct and in character formation. How important, then, to maintain before the child a consistently Christian example! To both parents this is a challenge. But if one parent more than another influences the child during the first ten years of its life, it is the mother. God give us Christian mothers, more truly Christian mothers. That deserves to be the biggest factor in a motherhood movement.

Some Challenges of the Christian Standard

PART II

Last week we stopped at the close of chapter 5 of Matthew's report of the Sermon on the Mount. Going into the 6th chapter we find the Lord still stressing the righteousness required in the kingdom. "Take heed that ye do not your alms (Moffatt says, "practice your charity") before men, to be seen of them." The superficial doing of religious rites is aimed at. There must be genuineness, not hypocrisy, in what we do. This is illustrated by giving, prayer and fasting.

Do not play the hypocrite in your giving, Jesus would say, making a display of it, so that men will praise you. If you do it with that in view, that is all the reward you will get. Give sincerely and quietly and God will see and reward you. What a challenge to very much of our Christian giving today! How often we blow a blast on a trumpet, call the attention of everybody in hearing distance to us, give in the most public way possible. But it means nothing in the sight of heaven.

The same warning against hypocrisy is carried over into the practice of prayer. Long public prayers, filled with vain repetitions, made in an ostentatious manner, in an attempt to impress people with our sanctity or the beauty of our prayers,—these count for nothing. Only men, not God, hear such prayers. Prayer must be thoroughly sincere and genuine, if it is to reach the throne of grace. And the way to cultivate such sincerity is to pray much in secret.

Then the Lord gives an example of the content and form of acceptable prayer. How simple and direct it is! How full of meaning! There is the adoration of the Father; concern for the coming of the kingdom; petition for sustenance, request for forgiveness (and what a condition is imposed!—"as we forgive"); the desire to escape temptation; and the acknowledgment of God's ownership of the kingdom and the attributing to him of all glory and power. Then the Lord stresses further the necessity of forgiving, if we wish to be forgiven. That is the key to acceptable prayer. And how hard it is to use it! There is a real test of sincerity and an exposé of hypocrisy.

Still further is sincerity tested by reference to fasting. The hypocrites fast to make further show of their righteousness, but it is mere religiosity, a pretense of righteousness, a base representation of the real thing. Fasting is not forbidden, but when it is to be engaged in, it is to be a quiet, humble exercise of a desperately sincere heart. Fasting is to be done before God and not before men, as if it were a piece of public acting. It is something sacred, to be used only when it is the natural expression of a great heart passion. Do not abuse it. "Be ye not as the hypocrites."

(To be continued)

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Many little demons, whose presence may never have been suspected, are driven from the life when Christ comes in; it never fails. But merely joining the church gives no such guarantee.

Brother C. D. Whitmer calls the attention of young people to Shipshewana Training School, to be held July 17-24. See Christian Endeavor page.

We are informed by the secretary, Brother Homer A. Kent, that the conference of the Southeastern District will convene at Roanoke, Virginia, on June 14th and close on the 16th. He says the program will be sent us soon for publication in The Evangelist.

Brother Homer Anderson writes that he is holding services in the Gritter, Iowa, school house, where there is also a Sunday school being conducted, and though the undertaking is not wholly Brethren, yet he is bearing witness to the things for which Brethren stand and has secured the use of Brethren Sunday school publications in two of the three classes. That's loyalty.

Mrs. Mary E. Garber, wife of Elder A. L. Garber of Ashland who was an early editor and publisher of "The Brethren Evangelist", passed to her reward on Saturday afternoon, April 30, at the age of 72 years. Death came suddenly to Sister Garber, as a result of a heart attack, though she had been in ill health for some time. The Evangelist extends sincere sympathy to this aged former editor and brother minister, and to other members of the family.

Brother R. I. Humbert writes that he has made progress in getting acquainted with his new field at Martinsburg and McKee, Pennsylvania. Two have been added to the membership of the Martinsburg church since his last report, one as a result of a meeting he held in February. The various auxiliaries seem to be well organized and doing good work, and the church's small debt was reduced by a sizeable gift from an isolated member.

The Center Chapel church near Peru, Indiana, has enjoyed a revival under the leadership of its pastor, Brother J. W. Clark, who succeeded in leading nine persons to confess Christ and three to reconsecrate themselves to the cause of Christ. Seven have been baptized, and others await the rite. For the church members it was a revival of Bible reading and prayer, which is always a good kind of revival to promote. The numbers and faithfulness of the young people of this church continue to be a source of strength and encouragement.

Our correspondent from Masontown, Pennsylvania, writes that progress continues under the leadership of Brother and Sister Floyd Sibert. She makes mention of the revival held in January, previously reported, when 100 confessions were received and tells of the Sunday school's growth, having reached the average attendance of 315, the banner attendance being 428 on Easter Sunday. The Wednesday evening Bible study service has an average attendance of 101 and the Christian Endeavor attendance ranges from 150 to 200. It seems that there, as at other places, the depression is making people more responsive to the spiritual service the church has to offer.

Brother George H. Jones writes of the work at the Second church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, which he has been serving for some time with such encouraging results. He has received seventeen by baptism and five by letter since taking up the work. The Sunday school attendance registers about the 100 mark and the attendance at the preaching services is said to be greater than at the school, which speaks well both for the loyalty of the members and the messages of the preacher. The program adopted by this church and published some time ago in the Evangelist and which was calculated to intensify the devotion and loyalty and enlarge the vision of the members is bearing fruit.

We have received from a friend in Indiana a folder announcing the candidacy of Prof. J. Raymond Schutz for nomination to Congress from the Fifth District of Indiana. The primary is being held this May 3rd as we are going to press. Next week we will know the result. We wish Brother Schutz success. The Congress badly needs men of the intelligence, integrity, human sympathy and godliness that Schutz possesses. If there are not enough men of his party who believe in such high qualifications for public office to make him their candidate and then enough voters of all parties to elect him this fall, then there is something decidedly wrong with the new Fifth District of Indiana.

Brother A. B. Cover was his own evangelist in a pre-Easter campaign at the First church of Los Angeles and there resulted fifteen confessions of faith. Twelve persons promptly received baptism. Evangelistic preaching and efforts were continued after Easter and other confessions were received and five were baptized. The church is said to have been greatly revived. The pastor's musical ability has enabled him to organize and direct an orchestra that is proving a real service to the church. We are glad to note that "every special offering was lifted and folks did their best." Churches about which that can be said are worthy of being commended for their denominational loyalty, regardless of the size of their offerings.

Brother A. D. Cashman tells us in his letter this week that during the last month in the "regular services thirty-one precious souls . . . found their way to the altar" in the Second church of Los Angeles. Of this number twenty have been baptized, four await the rite, four were received by letter and three were recommissions. Prayer has large place in this church, and particularly intercessory prayer, and the two groups of intercessors doubtless had something to do with the splendid ingathering of souls reported. Prayer is not only a means of self-improvement, but a method of achievement as well. All auxiliaries are advancing, the Sunday school showing marked increase in attendance. The pastor reports the meeting held by Dr. Bauman last fall as resulting in sixty-seven confessions, twelve of which were received into the church by baptism.

Brother Fred C. Vanator gives us a good report of his work at Peru, Indiana, where he conducted a pre-Easter revival of one week, resulting in twenty-one confessions, nineteen joining the church by baptism and one by relation. Since the close of that intensive effort, in which the members gave splendid cooperation, four others have been received into the church, three by baptism and one by relation, making a total of twenty-five added to the church in recent weeks. The Peru church is alive with activity, something being planned for every age and class of members, so that the church is really being made the center of their interests and activities. The fifty active young people of that church add greatly to the brightness of its future. Bible instruction is not being neglected, as is seen by the two instruction classes, one being conducted by the pastor and the other by his capable wife. The merged Sunday morning service is an interesting feature, and the average attendance of 170 speaks well for its success.

Our good correspondent from the church at Elkhart, Indiana, says the work is going forward in a splendid way and that the spirituality is deepening. Though material growth is not equal to former years, as is the case elsewhere, yet they are holding up that side of the work with all the greater strain in the midst of these trying times and thereby gaining all the greater blessing. The Sunday school continues to grow and the prayer meeting attendance remains exceptionally high. As announced in last week's paper (and this is one time when a mere man beat a woman in telling a bit of news), Brother Duker's decision to leave the pastorate was met with reluctance and regrets on the part of his people who had enjoyed his capable leadership for ten years. The church has grown remarkably during this time and achieved very creditable accomplishments, as mentioned in our previous issue. But they are to be congratulated in having secured so worthy a successor in the person of Brother H. F. Stuckman.

A Mother's Day Message. By E. M. Riddle

(Honoring Our Mothers)

Hear the Voice of God first: My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother; for they shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck (Prov. 1:8, 9). Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee (Ex. 20:12). Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honor thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise; that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long upon the earth (Eph. 6:1-3). Jesus said: Honor thy father and thy mother; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself (Mt. 19:19). Will our readers also turn to 2 Timothy 1:1-5, and John 19:25-27.

It is beautiful to meditate upon the fact that this country sets aside a day in which to give honor to sainted motherhood. Whenever I think about the love of God, I always think of a mother's love for her child. In this, there is the noblest, purest and most unselfish form of human affection; a constant love that wavers not. Fatherhood is incidental in the history of humankind, but motherhood is fundamental. Long before the consciousness of the family arose, mother love with all its tenderness was there. In it there lies the beginning of all institutions. Upon the foundation stone of motherhood are built the pillars of the state.

St. John says, "We love him because he first loved us." How true is this of Mother Love? A father gazes upon his firstborn with pride of offspring. The large amount of his affection for the little mite comes because of his love for his mate. The little one wins its way into his heart. But the love of the mother is there even before the child is born. And it endures even unto the end. What words are sufficiently eloquent to pay tribute to the mothers of men? What can measure the depths of her heart? In the hour when the wayward child brings disgrace upon the home and parents the father's heart may grow hard with pride, but the love of mother never fails. She still with hope and faith clings to the last ray, when all seems in vain. Kipling has said it for us in verse:

"If I were damned of body and soul,
I know whose prayers would make me whole,
Mother O mine, O Mother O mine!"

Let us then on Mother's Day, again pay homage to Motherhood. It will be worth while to assemble ourselves in our various places of worship and do reverence to this great fact of human life. We will do well to exalt the memory of those mothers who have departed and give some token of affection to those who now serve. This is the noblest of all earthly love.

The world is in need as never before, of a GREATER SPIRIT OF MOTHERHOOD. When we pause for one moment and look at the wayward and misguided youth, at the increase in the number of hasty marriages and divorces, at the number of missing girls in the larger cities each year, does there not come to the mothers of this country the challenge to a greater fulfillment of their sacred charge? One of the solemn functions of motherhood today is to train children in right and sane ideas in regard to the social troubles that threaten the world. She may not be able to sound the depth of this question but at any rate the average mother can teach the simple principles of right thinking and right feeling toward other people. Mothers can do much toward the well-being of our country by sowing seeds of justice and righteousness in the hearts of the children. We can at least try to guard them from falling into the sea of unrest and hatred against those who have what they have not yet gained. At this very time, the mother can explain that there are undoubted injustices in the world, but that there are lawful and righteous methods of correcting these, and that today hosts of people, both those who have money and those who do not, are seriously engaged in trying to make conditions better for all men.

Again the world needs mothers, who can inspire their sons and daughters and lead them to all they have dreamed of for their future. Back of every good and great man stands a good woman. Only by the miracle of God, says one, will the soul of the child rise higher than the soul of the mother. True mothers dream dreams for their children. Somewhere out of the past rise memories of what they wanted to be, but never reached. In their children they have a second chance in attaining their ideals. Oh, the tragedy of it, where mothers have become so engrossed in social levities, in fashions, in clubs, in cars and cards that they have lost the realization that, "life is more than meat and the body than raiment." Yes, the world needs mothers NOW who have so kept their own lives that they can still clearly discern the eternal verities. Great mothers are not selfish. They will be mothers to the motherless of the community and the world. The instinct of possession, protection and caress, the primitive emotion of the heart, must overflow to the lives of the neighborhood's neglected, that the motherless of every state may be blessed by the motherhood of the world.

But this is not all of the program for motherhood. Out of this generation must come mothers who shall be able to lead America's youth, drifting as some may be, to the saving heart of the world's Redeemer. They must build the Rock of Ages into the stream of life of

MOTHER

"All that I am or hope to be I owe to my angel mother."—Abraham Lincoln.

"All that I have ever accomplished in life, I owe to my mother."—D. L. Moody.

"I attribute all my success in life to the moral, intellectual, and physical education which I received from my mother."—George Washington.

"If I am thy child, Oh, God, it is because Thou gavest me such a mother."—St. Augustine.

"If I prefer the truth it is due to my mother's teaching."—Chrysostom.

"My mother's kiss of encouragement made me a painter."—Benjamin West.

"The holiest thing under heaven is a good mother."—Voltaire.

"The world owes its gratitude not to me, but to the mother who inspired me."—Victor Hugo.

"My conversion took place—oh, momentous hour—at my mother's knee."—Charles H. Spurgeon.

today, that our sons and daughters may cling to it, and live. Teachers many, may teach, preachers by the thousands may preach, but unless a consecrated motherhood have the gift of God, the coming generation comes to the battleground of activity and responsibility without being fortified and prepared for their place. Praying mothers are still needed to win men for Christ Jesus.

The concluding statement is prompted by a verse gleaned several years ago from Ralph W. Emerson—

"What is Civilization?
I answer the power of good women.
Let us have the true woman,
The adorning, the hospitable, the religious heart,
And no lawyer need be called in
To write stipulations;
The cunning clauses of provisions of the strong investiture,
For the woman moulds the law-giver and writes the law."

No nation can rise higher than its mothers. The unit of national life is not the individual but the home; and the home is what mothers make it. The American home is by far the most important of her institutions. From the family came the school, the church and the state. The preservation of the high ideals of the American home will depend much upon the keeping of an exalted conception of the glory, the influence and potency of motherhood. Historians have said without hesitation, that the fall of the great Roman empire began with the decline and fall of the Roman home.

Friends may forsake us. Fortune may vanish. Ambition may die of despair, and hope forsake us. Tears may flood the vision and sorrow crush the heart. But when all have gone, there will always be—God and Mother.

Warsaw, Indiana.

Conscience

By Benjamin F. Owen

TEXT: Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth. Rom. 14:22.

We often hear conscience spoken of as the voice of God within us, and so it is in a sense. For God has put conscience in all of us, just as he has put reason, to guide us in the right way. Conscience is a sort of judge set in our hearts to tell us when we are right and when we are wrong. Conscience tells us this—whether we wish it or not—when we do the thing. Reason makes us know it is wrong to tell a lie, but conscience actually speaks when we do tell a lie. The work of conscience is to make us content and happy when we do right, and discontent and unhappy when we do wrong.

Paul says, Happy is the man who does not condemn himself in what he allows himself to do. In other words, who never allows himself to do what his conscience tells him is wrong. He indeed is a happy man; happy in the peace of the mind which a "good conscience" always brings, happier still in the knowledge that God is leading on in the narrow way, and upholding him by that grace and strength which can never fail him, even unto the end. But we must not be mistaken, and think that when a man tries to follow his conscience, he is sure to be happy at once. As long as there is a struggle between right and wrong, as long as we are only learning to obey conscience, and only learning to choose the right and refuse the wrong, so long we must not expect that peace which is the fruit of a long-tried faith and a steadfast walk with God. The happy man is he who chooses the right path fully, freely, heartily, without wavering, and without regret. He only knows by his own experience that religion's ways are indeed "ways of pleasantness, and her paths are peace."

When we tell people that this is the true way to be happy even in this world, a great many do not believe us in the secret of their hearts. They feel secure in that so much grief must be encountered before happiness. Then Satan, and the world, and their own corrupt hearts, point out to them a much shorter way or road to happiness. Sin is a pleasure for a time. The wicked may enjoy this life more than the good, for a time. God never promises his servants enjoyment of this world. It is not for that we are called out.

Now if happiness lies, as we have said, in a "conscience void of offence," how can those who never obey their conscience at all have any sort of happiness or enjoyment? The good man's happiness results from not allowing things to condemn. In other words, a good man's conscience never hurts, conscience' voice is dumb, because it has nothing to say, it rebukes not because it has naught to rebuke. Love reigns supremely. In a bad man conscience is quiet, and does not prick him because his conscience is dead. He has smothered it and killed it, and so it troubles him no more. How fearful this deadly calm, this peace where there is no peace.

Most persons live in a state between these two. They do not always obey conscience, and yet conscience is not quite dead in them. It pricks them and troubles them sometimes. They often have a feeling that they are doing wrong; they are giving way to temptation; not living up to their profession; neglecting duties, or at least all is not what it should be with them. Well for them, if they have that much conscience left. Good, if conscience has still power to make them uneasy and discontent with themselves.

How easy it is to stifle and deaden this gift of God. Each time we refuse to follow conscience we weaken its power. Refuse to listen now, it will not cry so loudly next time. Neglect its warnings a little while, it will cease to warn at all, and grow hard and dumb. This is one of the many bitter fruits of sin. Every sin we indulge, not only leaves guilt behind, but also helps to deaden conscience, and to make it harder to turn and repent. It is not the number of their sins that rob so many of heaven. It is the hardening, deadening effects of one sin on another that really destroy the soul. Wilful sin destroys its thousands, but deadness of conscience its tens of thousands.

Conscience must be true. Some people think and speak as if conscience were almost the same as God's Holy Spirit speaking to us, and therefore sure always to be right. They are sure they cannot be wrong, if they can say, "My conscience is easy, or bids me." Conscience can only tell us whether we are right or wrong, according to our knowledge. One man goes one way, the other another way. One feels his conscience tell him to be honest; the other says his conscience does not condemn him because he is a little shady in his dealings. One decides that the out-and-out life of faith and fellowship with Christ is the preeminently worth while and right thing; the other takes a more compromising course and says, please do not be too serious. Both, of course, cannot be right. So we must take care to have a right judgment in all things, and a true as well as a tender conscience. Conscience may deceive us, if we do not remember this.

Therefore, with God's help, never refuse to obey conscience. Obedience is the only way to keep it alive and tender. Conscience may in some things be ignorant or mistaken, but it is, under God's direction, our best guide.

Dedicate conscience to God and we shall not go far wrong in plain and practical matters. Then if we want an inspired rule by which we may gain the blessing of a happy and peaceful life, let us remember this, "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth." Nappanee, Indiana.

God's Judgements Are Sure

By Thomas Gibson

"The mills of God's grind slowly,
Yet they grind exceedingly small,
Though with patience he stands waiting,
With exactness grinds he all."

How applicable are these words to the judgments of God. Men are formulating new concepts of God, to suit their modern ideas. Recently, I read about a man who made a comparison between the God of the Old Testament, and the God of the New Testament, and he said, "The God of the Old Testament was a God of wrath, fond of sacrifices, ordering a man to kill his child, but the God of the New Testament was a God of mercy, who said, I will have mercy and not sacrifice. It is a foregone conclusion, this man knew little about the God of the Old or the New Testaments. He is the same God. He is the same yesterday, today and forever, unchangeable in character, and everlasting in duration. "I am God who changeth not." The same God, with the same attributes, besides love, and mercy, which are his chief characteristics, he is also a God of wrath, vengeance, and indignation, after a while the "cup of his indignation is going to be full, then he will make individuals and nations drink of the wine of the wrath of God, poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation."

If that man had read his Bible, he would have found, he was the same God who slew Aaron's two sons for practising deception, that slew Ananias and Sapphira for the same sin.

Most any Sunday school child knows that God never intended Abraham to slay his own child. It was a test of Abraham's faith in God being able to provide the sacrifice. The wisdom and foreknowledge of God saw that Abraham's faith "accounted that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure" (Heb. 11-19). Isaac was a type of Christ, being raised from the dead figuratively. Sometimes God is slow in meting out judgment to impenitent evil doers, but ultimately "his mills which grind slowly, grind with exactness." God was longsuffering to Pharaoh when he oppressed his people, and put heavy burdens on them grievous to be born. But eventually judgment was meted out to him. Belshazzar had many warnings to flee the wrath of God, but failed to heed them, but at last his profane feast was a warning of his death. God's indignation was kindled against Belshazzar, his lords, his wives, and his concubines, when they desecrated the vessels that were taken out of the temple of the house of God, in drinking wine from them in their impious feast, in their mirth and revelry. Reminded of what his father did, was a stern rebuke to him, and though his son, "O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knowest all this, but hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven." In that night was Belshazzar the King of the Chaldeans slain.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind surely, and with exactness." He is the same God that destroyed the city of Sodom and Gomorrah, and saved righteous Lot and his family, "because the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly" (Gen. 13-13).

It was the same God that caused a volcano on Mount Pelee, on the island of Martinique, to erupt with great violence, wiping out a whole city, except one soul, who was a prisoner in a dungeon, because the inhabitants of the city, a few days before the disaster crucified a pig in mockery of the crucifixion of Christ. "Christian Herald," August 30, 1902. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." The demands of the God of the New Testament, are as exacting, and his judgments pronounced on wicked and sinful men are just as severe. "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" says Jesus.

"The mills of the Gods grind slowly, but with exactness grind they all." May his longsuffering, goodness, kindness, and gentleness, yet lead many to repentance, before "the great and notable day of the Lord," when Jesus, the incarnate God of the New Testament, "shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power" (2 Thess. 1-8).

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6-7). This law obtains in both the material, and spiritual realm.

1816 Woolsey Street, Berkeley, California.

---

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

---

CAN RADIO BE "REFORMED"?

It is interesting to note the increasing volume of criticism of contemporary conditions in reference to radio. It is to be hoped that many more folks will soon become conscious of the fact that "isolated periods of decency do not make amends for insufferably long stretches of maladroit advertising and pseudo-entertainment." Dr. Lee deForest, who is credited with being the "father of radio," and at least has been one of its most eminent inventors, recently was moved to ask this question: "Why should anyone want to buy a radio or new tubes for an old set, when nine-tenths of what one can hear is the continual drivel of second-rate jazz, sickening crooning by degenerate sax players, interrupted by blatant sales talk, impudent commands to buy or try, actually imposed over a background of what might alone have been good music?" This is truly significant.—Reformed Church Messenger.

WET JOURNALS FIND THE GOING DIFFICULT

Perhaps it is true that most of the people of the country are wet. But if that is true they certainly are not the kind who believe enough in their convictions to support magazines seeking to advance the wet propaganda. For wet journals find the going difficult.

Some months ago it was Plain Talk which decided to quit. A lot of good things could be said about that magazine. But, as the months went by, it became more and more evident that by "plain talk" it meant any kind of argument in favor of booze. It passed out in the wave of publicity of special articles to show how much liquor can be secured in the leading cities of America. Plain Talk got lots of applause. But apparently nobody wanted to buy it.

The recent announcement of two weekly magazines that they will hereafter be published monthly is further evidence of the difficult way of the wet press. The first is Life. Most of us used to read it. It had clever fun—clean fun. You felt free to leave it on the library table where the children could get a look at it. But Life finally reached the place in its development where it thought that the only legitimate kind of joke was the one which ridiculed those who were in favor of the eighteenth amendment. It had a lot of fun doing it. But it evidently couldn't sell subscriptions on that basis. So it decides to publish monthly.

And now comes the announcement that The Outlook will be published monthly in the future. Shades of Lyman Abbott and Theodore Roosevelt! What an influence for social righteousness this periodical exercised but a few years ago. But it went wet. And now wet? It sought support of the wet interest and wet money. It turned to the DuPonts for financing. It called for those who favored liberalism in regard to Prohibition to rally to it. Perhaps they did rally, but they forgot to bring their checks for subscriptions.

There are a lot of bad investments in America in these hectic days. But we would place the investment in a wet periodical as about the worst.—Church Management.

WHEN IS WAR NOT WAR?

The answer means much to individuals and business in China. If insurance companies have their way, the Sino-Japanese clash is war. Holders of policies against property damage insist on official interpretation of the situation. The insurance companies contend that wars are "acts of God" and as such nullify insurance claims. Though China and Japan may not call it a war now, later on when the ex-soldiers start organizing for adjusted compensation, etc., etc., they will realize that it was a war.—Pathfinder.

"HARRIMAN NATIONAL BANK AND TRUST COMPANY"

"The Band of Personal Liberty, Fifth Avenue and 44th Street, 59 Liberty Street, New York"

"Pap"

This is the heading of an article sent out carrying the date of February 20, 1932. The sheet goes each month to bankers, chambers of commerce, public libraries, etc., to all the customers of this particular bank. This particular article is a dissertation on "hoarding." In it the following sentences appear:

"A personal investigation in New York results in general agreement that it is the bootleggers who are hoarding (stimulated by the Capone incident), and every safe deposit in the larger places can tell the same story. The prohibition law is at the bottom of the bulk of our economic condition. The proof is the exclusion by trial and error of all other possible causes. The use of liquor can be, should be, restricted; but the law as it stands is like a focal infection in the body working against all the labors of a physician to cure a disease. There is an economic and a moral side to prohibition. We are suffering in both. We think the evils of lying, deceit, law-breaking, murder, caused by the endeavor to flee this law, point, not to a futile attempt to enforce it, but to amendment. The economic gain would be immeasurable. It would end hoarding, increase employment, profit the treasury, and serve and benefit the people. To these ends, and an end of hoarding, 'baby bonds' as an instrument were as effective as a bent pin against a coat of mail."

Any financial institution guilty of so gross a misstatement of economic facts, guilty too of demagoguery so patent, deserves to be widely published in terms of its own propaganda. The man who is opposed to prohibition has a perfect right to state his case. The institution that favors repeal is justified in using every legal means to accomplish the result desired; but the "national bank" that stoops to the stuff the article herein quoted contains will receive in the long run just about what it deserves from people who do their own thinking and who expect from their bankers honest thinking.—Daniel A. Poling in C. E. World.

WHERE THE LINK IS

There is no relationship between prohibition and organized crime. The tie is between liquor lawlessness and organized crime. Prohibition does not produce crime, but liquor lawlessness has brought about disregard for laws, fairly and honestly enacted by the people themselves. That man is as much a criminal who breaks the prohibition law as is one who commits theft or arson. Liquor is the mother of crime and criminals.—F. L. D. in American Issue.

DEALING WITH CRIME

Many times we must think and speak of our crime problem. There is trouble at both ends of the line. There is not sufficient emphasis and training in home, school and church in early years, and the enforcement of the law upon the criminal when caught is pretty largely a farce. Supine judges and indifferent prosecutors are too prevalent. The criminal even caught in the act has a "fifty-fifty" chance of going free. It is not a local problem, it is universal. We noticed a headline in a village paper giving the news about a recent term of criminal court. The heading read, "Mercy Tempered With Justice." The judge is one of the finest of men as we happen to know, but we have all become inoculated with the idea that punishment must be light.

We are not in sympathy with the idea in some states that prisoners are to be coddled. We believe that the warden of Sing Sing Prison, New York State, is a most excellent and able man, but we think he has erred in providing for those in his custody better and more amusement and far more comfort than they would earn outside. Just stiffen up a little in catching and convicting criminals and in holding them to strict rules when imprisoned.—The Presbyterian.

A SCHOOL FOR PEACE MAKERS

At Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, will be held June 20th to July 2nd the Mid-West Institute of International Relations, which will give the opportunity for twelve days' study, under experts in their respective fields, of world relationships and the tremendous questions of the times—War Debts, Disarmament, the Manchurian struggle, and the like. This Institute is arranged by the American Friends Service Committee, which has already successfully conducted similar Institutes at Haverford College, Haverford, Pennsylvania; and which has recently been called upon to conduct child-feeding work in the distressed coal-mining districts.—The Baptist.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

I Samuel

The book of First Samuel opens with an account of the godly Hannah. Like Mary, the mother of Jesus, like the interceding Monica, and like the devoted Susannah Wesley, the mother of Samuel was a praying woman. Her soul was a tuneful harp gently played by the ever nimble fingers of the Spirit of God. What melody resides in her prophetic song.

"The Lord killeth, and maketh alive:
He bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up
The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich:
He bringeth low, he also lifteth up.
He raiseth up the poor out of the dust,
He lifteth up the needy from the dung hill,
To make them sit with princes
And inherit the throne of glory.

Nor does her paean of praise end here:

"They that strive with the Lord shall be broken to pieces;
Against them shall he thunder in heaven:
The Lord shall judge the ends of the earth;
And he shall give strength unto his king
And exalt the horn of his anointed."

This great hymn of thanksgiving is the result of answered prayer. Hannah, though barren, is favored by the ever-reigning Jehovah. The Lukan hymns of the New Testament are little, if any superior, to the lofty spiritual tone of this woman's prophetic utterance. Well might the angels have wished for the privilege of announcing, as they once did over Bethlehem's moonlit fields, the absolute sovereignty of a God who may be rejected, but never dethroned! That, in brief compass, is the abiding message of the writing which narrates part of the historic story of the Dark Ages of Israel.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Probably Samuel and others.

2. When and Where Written. Near Samuel's death. In Palestine.
3. To Whom Addressed. Israel.
4. Occasion. The end of judgeships and the beginning of the kingdom.
5. Authenticity. Pure history.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK (Biographical)

1. Samuel: After the Heart of Innocent Children. 1-7.
2. Saul: After the Heart of Pagan Kings. 8-15.
3. David: After the Heart of Israel's God. 16-31.

III. THE THEME OF THE BOOK

The theme of our present study is wrapped up in the meaning of the word Samuel in Hebrew. "Asked of God" is its English equivalent, and "Asking" may be easily recommended as its theme. Scripturally stated it stands thusly:

"Make us a king to judge us like all the nations," and (the consequence)

"They have rejected me, that I should not be a king over them."

Samuel must have wept in silence when he heard this request of the oi poloi.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Kingdom, King, Asking.
2. Key Verses. 10:25; 26:21.
3. Key Chapters. 2, 10, 12, 31.
4. Key Ideas. Not theocratic rule, through priests or judges; but monarchical rule through kings. Adaptation and advancement.

V. VALUE OF THE BOOK

This book evinces how God rules among men in spite of their short-sighted requests, their blistering failures, or even their glowing successes. The Psalmist reveals the method of the Eternal in this case.

"He gave them their request;
But sent leanness into their soul."

And Saul became the object lesson through which the Almighty did his teaching. His kingship was a decensus ad infernos. Jehovah may be made to speak now what he uttered later in Hosea: "I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath." Hos. 13:11.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Christ is the seed of David ever and always. Greater than Samuel, he is our Prophet, Priest, and King. Both lived well-ordered and blameless lives, the one of almost perfect human order, the Other of Perfect human and divine order. Samuel was a great judge; Christ is our Supreme Judge. Read Luke 1:31-33.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

1. ELI. The aged Eli is a really pathetic figure. He was as honest as Diogenes, but failed to turn the wick of truth high enough in his lantern to light the way for his sons. They were "Sons of Thunder" who never were converted and pulled the wool over the eyes of their placid, kind, but too affable father. They were crooked and sensual and devilish, quite like some modern preacher's sons. They flirted with the Sapphira's of their day in the midst of the worship and regarded the edificatory sermons as so much "tommy-rot and poppy cock."

2. SAMUEL. He was a judge of stern integrity, fearless and feared. As a Nazirite he lived an abstemious life and developed a strong, resolute will. He added prayer to his daily regimen and was a Seer with open eyes. He founded the School of the Prophets and taught young men wisdom and honourableness. When he died the nation mourned.

3. SAUL. Poor Saul! That is about all we can say for the handsome sheep-herder who had a greater chance than even Abraham Lincoln to make good, but, unlike the Great Emancipator, failed because he could neither keep the common touch nor stand unbridled authority. He began well and ended life in hopeless defeat; his regal years were full of self-inflicted misery, hate, and jealousy. Luxury and pride, chronic anxiety over affairs of state and sleepless nights spent hunting David "like a partridge in the mountains,"—these rendered him incapable of being a competent and useful king. Over his grave "under a tree at Jabesh" should stand a marble marker with the following epitaph deeply engraved—undying words from his own lips—"I have played the fool, and erred exceedingly." What a pity Saul could never have become another "Paul." Poor, poor Saul!

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Rom. 12:10—"Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another." Moffatt gives this rendering: "Put affection into your love for the brotherhood; be forward to honor one another." The gospel has been likened to a "pilgrim from heaven" bringing harmony to every heart and home. To every heart this pilgrim comes; to the door of every home he knocks for admission. And HARMONY is the great concern of God. In his material universe the planets in their orbits are never too slow or too fast; otherwise there would be a wreck of worlds. But human bodies also need to move in their heavenly appointed courses with God's precision. Otherwise there will be wrecks too. And what is more disastrous in time or eternity than a wreck of homes? Men are interested in studying all sorts of laws, why not a little study in the law of obedience to God's HARMONY? A conservative church-leader has said that three-fourths of the church's time, money, and energy are wasted in keeping Christians at peace. That is a startling statement. If all who have named the Christ as their personal Savior, would obey the law of Christian HARMONY, all this time, money, and energy could be spent in bringing the lost to Christ. And what is that law of Christian harmony? "In honor preferring one another." A great evangelist has put it like this: "I will sink myself out of sight for the good of the cause of Christ." At least, where this law holds first place in the hearts of men, there is very little discord.

And now I have my chance to say, there are three classes of weak Christians. (1) Those who are weak in the faith; (2) those who are weak in practice; and (3) not to be too precise, we can say those who are weak in moral conduct. The principle difficulty of those who are weak in the faith is, that they insist on substituting opinions for the faith. The kind of clothing, the color of the skin, the kind of music and musical instruments, the sleep of the soul after death, millennialism, Calvinism, Armenianism, the non-existence of matter, again and again have in various forms been contended for as though they were THE FAITH set forth in the Word of God. The fact is one can believe or disbelieve these things and yet get to heaven. These things are opinions. With many, custom becomes law. Not in the very distant past, baptism performed anywhere else other than in an open stream was thought to be quite out of place. When baptistries were introduced, that church officer who declared that such a device might be all right if the water was no warmer than 60 degrees, but he regarded it as unscriptural if the water was warmed to 70 degrees, has had a great many followers—and in a great many different ways. What is to be done with such who make custom law? Bear with them, if honest, until they put away their childish notions.

Then there is the Christian who is weak in practice. The Bible says for them to pray, give, meet with the brethren, grow in grace, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and so on; they do none of these things, thus breaking the harmony of God with a precious soul. These weak Christians have relatives in the church, and their indifference to the great law of harmony spreads, producing more discord. What is to be done with such trouble-makers? Well, what would Jesus do with such to bring about harmony in his body? Paul directed Timothy to "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine." And this last expression has much to do with bringing about the desired change. Moffatt says on this passage, "I adjure you to preach the word; keep at it in season and out of season, refuting, and exhorting men; never lose patience with them, and never give up your teaching." 2 Tim. 4:2. May I ask, Have you found a better way? Harmony, however, is worth while in the sight of God and his church.

Also, there is the Christian who is weak in morals. He is easily moved toward the right when he is with the right crowd, and just as easily moved toward wrong when with the gang who pulls that way. He is a problem for the sincere minister. But is he not a problem for God? After walking to the banks of the river in Paris four times to plunge in and end it all, and had raised the cup of poison to his lips three times, but some Unseen arm held him in check, Wm. Cowper afterwards wrote, "There is a fountain filled with blood"; for the "blood" saved.

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N. MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

American Standard Bible to be Revised

New Haven, Connecticut, January 28—A revision of the American Standard Bible will be published in 1941, according to an announcement made today by Dean Luther A. Weigle of the Yale University Divinity School, who is Chairman of the American Standard Bible Committee of the International Council of Religious Education.

"The American Standard Bible Committee was appointed in 1929 and has held a number of meetings in the last two years exploring the need of a further revision of the text of the American Standard Edition," Dean Weigle said, "The past forty years have been especially fruitful in the discovery of manuscript materials which constitute resources for the better understanding of the New Testament. At a three-day session held last week-end at Union Theological Seminary, New York City, the decision was reached to undertake a thorough revision of the present text, and the ten-year period until 1941 was set as the time within which the Committee hopes to complete this work. No release for publication will be made by the Committee before that year. This will be forty years after the publication of the American Standard Edition of the Revised Version in 1901, sixty years after the publication of the Revised Version of the New Testament by the English Revision Committee in 1881, and three hundred and thirty years after the publication of the King James Version in 1611."

The revision of the King James Bible was undertaken in 1870 by a committee of sixty-seven English scholars, collaborating with a committee of thirty-four American scholars, who labored for ten and a half years upon the revision of the New Testament and fourteen years upon the revision of the Old Testament. It was agreed that in case of differences between the English and American Committees the readings preferred by the English Committee should be chosen, but the American Committee was left free after a term of fourteen years to issue an edition containing the readings which it preferred. The American Standard Edition of the Revised Version of the Bible containing these readings was published in 1901, being copyrighted to protect the integrity of the text. This copyright is now held by the International Council of Religious Education, an organization of some forty Protestant denominations which are co-operating in all matters affecting Christian religious education; of adults as well as children. The Council appointed a committee of fifteen scholars, known as the American Standard Bible Committee, in whose hands it placed full control of the text of the American Standard Edition, with power to make such revision and changes or emendations as its judgment should determine. As in the case of the previous revision committees, all changes in the text must be agreed upon by a two-thirds vote of the total membership of the Committee.

The present membership of the Committee is: William P. Armstrong, Princeton Theological Seminary; Julius Bower, Union Theological Seminary; Henry J. Cadbury, Bryn Mawr College; Frederick C. Eiselen, Garrett Biblical Institute; Edgar J. Goodspeed, University of Chicago; James Moffatt, Union Theological Seminary; J. A. Montgomery, University of Pennsylvania; A. T. Robertson, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary; James Hardy Ropes, Harvard University; John R. Sampey, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary; Andrew Sledd, Emory University; J. M. Powis Smith, University of Chicago; J. R. Taylor, University of Toronto; C. C. Torrey, Yale University; and Luther A. Weigle, Yale University. Ex-officio members of the Committee are Dr. Harold McAfee Robinson, Chairman of the International Council of Religious Education and Dr. Hugh S. Magill, General Secretary of the International Council, who is secretary of the Committee.

Revision of the Bible becomes necessary, Dean Weigle pointed out, as English usage changes and modern research in Biblical literature progresses. The aim of the English Committee was simply to "adapt King James' Version to the present state of the English language without changing idiom and vocabulary," and to avail themselves of the further knowledge of the original text and its meaning which the growth of Biblical scholarship throughout a period of nearly three hundred years had made possible. They sought to make only such changes as were necessary for "greater accuracy, clearness and consistency." The Revision of the New Testament was published on May 20, 1881, and two hundred thousand copies were sold in New York on that day.

In 1901 an American Standard Edition of the Revised Version was published containing the readings preferred by the American Committee. It is now proposed to revise this American Standard Edition in the light of the manuscript materials which have become available in the last two decades.

(The Brethren Church will await with great interest the work of these scholars. They represent every wing of theological conviction and their efforts will be greeted with the usual scorn, indifference, and approval. These three attitudes will prevail if the world stands ten years hence. —M. A. S.)

Good Equipment and Efficient Methods Now in Use

Ways and means that many schools are using to increase attendance, interest, and efficiency

(Continued from last week)

A SUPERINTENDENT OF PROGRAMS

By Jennie E. Stewart

Almost any Sunday school large or small will find a superintendent of programs a useful officer, relieving the general superintendent, teachers, and department superintendents of a load of detail work that usually falls to their lot just when they have the least time to devote to it.

The superintendent of programs does not necessarily do all the drilling nor attempt to look after the whole matter of planning and putting on a program, but she is the official head, the supervisor, and general planner, using as her assistants the different departmental heads, the musical director, teachers, and such others as she may find with available time on their hands.

It is seldom wise to try to use too many helpers on any one program, so she wisely selects from among the older department helpers her committee for putting on the Thanksgiving program; from the young people's and the children's workers for the Easter, Children's Day, and Christmas programs, having a different personnel for each occasion, so as to pass the honors and the responsibility around.

The superintendent of programs should meet with the governing board of the school at the beginning of the year and have them decide with her which special days shall be celebrated by the school in a body, and which by departments only. She can then go ahead and plan for her year intelligently.

The denominational publishing houses like to have their schools use the missionary material they put on for special days, and most of them furnish this free if the school takes up a missionary offering, in connection with the program, for the cause upon which the material is based. The superintendent of programs has only to send for this in time, select her committee, and set them to work upon it. But if she decides —the school voting to do so with her—to use other materials, the Sunday school journals are full of it. We save all ours from year to year and can always find a wealth of material from which to choose for any of the big Sunday school days.

Many times the material can be so divided that the different departments can look after the drilling of their own section with only one grand rehearsal at the last for unification and co-ordination.

Sometimes the superintendent of programs allows one department superintendent to act as presiding officer at one program a year. This makes for good feeling and creates interest. She finds she has enough to do herself in looking after the announcements several Sundays before the event, and in attending to details on the great day itself.

Where programs are carried out in different departments simultaneously, the superintendent of programs meets with the different heads and helps plan their programs, but leaves most of the detail of preparation to them; but she must see that they are properly announced and that the preparations are not being neglected.

The superintendent of programs may use as much time as she has available during the intervals between programs trying to seek out new material among the Sunday school folks and develop it through smaller department programs for use when the time

(Continued on page 16)

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

LESSON

at the
Family Altar
with
Thoburn C. Lyon

JACOB AT BETHEL

Lesson for May 15)

Lesson Text: Gen. 28-10-17; Golden Text: Gen. 28:15

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Rebekah's False Council. Gen. 27:5-17.

Rebekah was partial to Jacob and sought to win for him the coveted blessing, even by deceit and trickery. In so doing she undoubtedly brought much added suffering into the life of Jacob, for God would certainly have brought about the same end in his own time and way. Today we need to pray that we may be spared from the false council of our best friends: "You are a fool to give up this opportunity just to do the work of the Lord!" Even so, let us be glad to be fools for Christ's sake, and in so doing we may find the coveted blessing—and find it in God's own way.

TUESDAY

Jacob's Deception. Gen. 27:18-29

We are made to think of Judas as we read these verses. In order to win his ends, Jacob had to lie not once, but repeatedly, and finally kissed his father with a kiss as traitorous as the kiss of Judas. In view of the sin by which he obtained the blessing it is little wonder that he had to suffer so much before God could give him his blessing. Perhaps if we were willing to wait for God to bring it about we might win his blessing sooner.

WEDNESDAY

Jacob at Bethel. Gen. 28:10-17

Jacob was already beginning to feel the weight of his sin. He had been forced to flee for his life, leaving his doting mother, and his home, and was here forced to sleep out in the wilderness, alone. His must have been a lonely and forsaken feeling. How like our God, to come to him at such a time with comfort and encouragement! "When other helpers fail, and comforts flee," then it is that the Help of the helpless abides with us. How we ought to love and serve a God like that!

THURSDAY

Elijah at Horeb. 1 Kings 19:9-14

God had appeared to Jacob in a dream. He came to Elijah simply as a "still small voice," giving him his message of encouragement and strength, and commissioning him to new service. It is well to note that God does not make his presence felt just for the novelty, or to afford some new experience; he has a definite message for us, a service he would have us perform. Whenever he has made his presence especially real, let us consider well what service it is he desires of us. Dare we pray that he will make his presence real just now, and commission us for service?

FRIDAY

Isaiah in the Temple. Isa. 6:1-10

Isaiah, too, had a vision of God, leading up to new service for him. Note that when he saw the sinless One his first thought was of his own sinfulness. This was followed by cleansing at the altar of the Lord, and then the call to service was heard. Let us pray for a fuller realization of our need, for a complete cleansing, and for courage to exclaim with Isaiah: "Here am I; send me!"

SATURDAY

Jehovah Our Keeper. Ps. 121

What a message of encouragement this Psalm would have been to the lonely Jacob! It is the God whose word created the heaven and the earth who has covenanted to help us. Not only does he guard our steps from day to day, but he preserves us from all evil, and shall preserve our souls—from this time forth, and even for ever more. Nothing more could be added; all that we are he has covenanted to guard. How could we worry, or fret, if we really believed all this? Let us lift up our eyes and our hearts unto him!

SUNDAY

The All-Seeing Providence. Ps. 139:1-12

Many a church member engages in things he hopes his pastor, or his neighbors, or his wife, will never suspect. If the presence of God could somehow be made real to these people they would realize that it makes little difference whether men know their misdeeds or not: there is ONE who sees and knows not only our deeds, but our very thoughts. What a difference it would make in the world if this were really understood and believed! To the sinner this is a dreadful thought, one that fills him with terror; but to the Christian, what comfort to know that he knows all, the heartaches as well as the joys, and that there is no place in all the earth, nor even in hell, where we can be away from his presence. What a wonderful Savior is Jesus, my Lord!

E. M. RIDDLE,
President
Warsaw, Indiana

F. C. VANATOR,
Associate
Peru, Indiana

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK

C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.

GLADYS M. SPICK,
General Secretary
and
Treasurer
2301 13th St., N. E.,
Canton, Ohio

Stewardship Suggestions

The following plans for presenting stewardship to Christian Endeavor societies have been issued by the Summit County, Ohio, Christian Endeavor Union.

1. Have the subject of stewardship in all its phases of time, money, talent, and life-work presented each Sunday evening in a ten-minute talk by some outstanding practising stewards from among the older members of your church.

2. Start a stewardship reading-contest among the members of your society. The Layman Company, 35 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, publishes thirty-six splendid pamphlets on stewardship which can be purchased for only forty cents a hundred. A sample package containing all their publications can be secured for fifty cents. Get this sample package; select four of the best and most suitable pamphlets, and get enough copies to supply your entire membership. Pass one pamphlet out each Sunday evening during the month. Plan a system of credits for those who read the pamphlets. Read Layman's leaflet No. 27 for an excellent reading-contest plan.

3. If you are especially ambitious and aggressive, you might sponsor a stewardship campaign for the whole church with the permission and cooperation of your pastor and church officials, the pastor preaching one sermon or a series of sermons on the subject and the Christian Endeavor societies promoting a stewardship reading-contest among the church members.

4. Present a playlet in a Sunday or mid-week stewardship service. "Thanksgiving Ann," "The Contract," and "Aunt Margaret's Tenth," from the Layman Company, and "Starting Right" are suitable. These can be secured from your denominational publishers or the International Society of Christian Endeavor.

5. Start a study class in stewardship, using the book, "The Way to the Best" by Robert P. Anderson.

6. Close the stewardship campaign with a decision service on the last Sunday, in which an appeal is made for Lifework Recruits and for Tenth Legion members. Have all who have made a serious decision sign the pledge cards as either Lifework Recruits or Tithers. Report the names with addresses to the county Christian Endeavor union.—C. E. World.

MOTHER AND I

By Geneva May Bowman

(One of our young friends and an Intermediate Endeavorer, living at Whittier, California, sends us the following verse, saying, "This poem expresses my idea of a real mother." This is Geneva's second attempt at writing poetry for publication. She is 14 years old.—EDITOR).

There's a girl that grew up on this rugged old earth, to become a dear mother to me, And as I look into that smiling face, the fragrance of Jesus I see.

I love no one better, save Jesus himself, whom I can claim as my own, Because when I've cares, she will wipe them away; when she smiles all burdens have flown.

Yes, she has the power to drive care away, she can cheer up this young heart of mine,

And after my mother has doctored me up, I have no more heartaches; I'm fine.

And best of it all, this is yet to be said, my mother spends some time in prayer.

The burdens she has, and my burdens too, she takes and leaves all with Him there.

She knows the Lord Jesus, she walks by his side, and if death ever steals her away, I'll know that she's with him in glory on high, and that I'll be there too some day. But we have the hope that death will not part, but that Jesus will come by and by, That together we'll go at the first trumpet blast, to our home that is waiting on high. Oh! we will spend all our time with our Lord, and there we will happier be. There will be no unrest, no grief and no pain; but sweet peace for her and for me. Whittier, Calif.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
 Financial Secretary Foreign Board
 1925 East 5th St.,
 Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
 Home Missionary Secretary
 Berne, Indiana

"The Form of the Fourth"

By Florence N. Gribble, M.D.

Daniel 3:25, "And the form of the Fourth is like unto the Son of God."

Over our spirits has come, as it were, a cloud. We do not define it as discouragement. We do not believe in discouragement. But nevertheless this fact remains: Fire has wrought great havoc at Yaloke!

Shall we be less able than King Nebuchadnezzar to discern the "Form of the Fourth?" As we read Miss Emmert's inimitable article in a recent issue of the Evangelist, we make a brief summary of our extensive losses.

Yes, the "wood and the stubble" of valuable buildings have been consumed. The cooking utensils and the kitchen of one home—the dishes and the silverware of the other—have also been devoured by the flames. Our libraries, our letter-files, our medical volumes in part have also been burned. All that was in the food-closets was swept away. Much of the missionaries' clothing perhaps some of the bedding was destroyed. Detailed lists of personal losses have not yet arrived.

But in the midst of it all, walking with the dear missionaries and the stalwart native Christians unflinchingly through the fierce fire so suddenly kindled was "the Form of the Fourth!"

Because HE was there, the brick walls and stone foundations yet stand! Only yesterday I was informed that in such a fire in the homeland only a portion of the bricks could have been salvaged from the fallen walls. Even the brick work over our doors and windows is intact.

Because the "Form of the Fourth" was there, the church, nearer to the flaming school house than the dwellings; and the hospital in the line of exposure next to the burning bush, and teeming with native patients are "remarkably" spared. How can we sufficiently praise him?

Because the "Form of the Fourth, like unto the Son of God," was there, no tools nor machinery were lost. The garage, the automobile, the storage-house for gasoline, the storehouse, and, thank God, the saw mill are spared.

Because the "Form of the Fourth" was there, no money orders, no drafts were lost. Some had just been cashed, some were received a few days later!

Because HE was there, no helmets were lost. What a catastrophe this would have been in a land where the sun's rays descend with deadly penetrating power!

Because HE was there, the dry season garden, scant though it was, remained unharmed; the cattle, the source of Yaloke's supply of milk, butter and "cottage" cheese, were not destroyed!

Because HE was there the school books and equipment and even the portable blackboards were saved from the burning building!

Because the "Form of the Fourth" was there, no one was injured, no lives were lost! How may we adequately express our thanks for this?

"We see no gold remaining," humbly writes our dear Miss Emmert. Ah, but, removed from the scene of the catastrophe, far from the ruins of the homes we loved, we see the gold!

Because the "Form of the Fourth" was with them, the gold of our missionaries' character has endured the fire's refining. Through the very pathos of the letters shines the golden secret of HIS presence, the golden testimony of our tried ones' victory! "We have told the Lord about it," they write in sweet humility. "We are willing to endure our share of the troublous times that are coming on the world," they add with dauntless courage. "We rejoice," they continue, "that the end is drawing near . . . that we suffer in a righteous cause." Beloved, the gold in our missionaries' character has not been consumed. "Not even the smell of fire has passed on them," (Daniel 3:27).

Because the "Form of the Fourth" was with them, the dross has but been refined from the characters of the native Christians who participated in the trial.

Who can doubt but that they too felt his presence, "on the roof of the schoolhouse, a seething mass of fire, trying to beat it out"?

Was it not because with these modern Shadrachs, Meshachs and Abednegos, risking their lives 'in those seething flames,—the roof as dry as the last of a very dry season could make it," (Seven times hotter than it was wont to be heated) Daniel 3:19—was it not because with them walked the "Form of the Fourth" that our missionaries have been enabled to write: "No one was injured, no lives were lost?"

Was it not because the "Form of the Fourth" was with them that the "vast majority of the natives rushed into the burning residences, carrying out everything (possible) from the houses?" "When a grass roof begins to burn it is dangerous for the cords burn, and the whole mass falls to the ground." "They worked nobly and risked their lives to save our property," write our missionaries.

Yes, the "Form of the Fourth" was with the Yaloke Christians, both white and black as they passed together through this testing. But for us, removed from the scene of the disaster, what does the Yaloke catastrophe mean?

In eternity, we shall thank God for the Yaloke fire,—we shall thank God for the rich harvest of consecrated possessions, and consecrated lives, which have come forth from this trial because as a brotherhood we have discerned in the fiery furnace the "Form of the Fourth" which is "like unto the Son of God."

phe spell for us? Easter of 1932 has come and gone, but praise God, the resurrection spirit remains.

Because the "Form of the Fourth" is with us . . . let us rally in the face of this disaster! Let it not depress us! Let it but stimulate our courage, our resolution, our determination, our faith. "Thou remainest," quote our missionaries. "The Lord isn't burned up yet," said Dr. Shipman of Chicago as he faced the ruins of the newly elected "Foundlings' Home" after the disastrous fire of 1876.

With victorious faith, then, let us look to see arising from the ruins of the Yaloke—that was, a better Yaloke—that-is-to-be. Let us, too, walk victoriously through this fire because the "Form of the Fourth" is with us!

"The natives risked their lives to save our property." Can not we risk our property to save their lives?—the lives of these joyous, victorious natives, and others who would be joyous and victorious like them, if they only knew our Lord and our Savior, if they could only discern the "Form of the Fourth" which is the Son of God? If so then of us, too, it may be written: "Not even the smell of fire has passed upon them." (Daniel 3:27).

May, may we not do more? May we not. (1 John 3:16) lay down our lives for the brethren?

MY MOTHER'S BIBLE

*This book is all that's left me now,—
 Tears will unbidden start;
 With faltering lip and throbbing brow
 I press it to my heart.
 For many generations past
 Here is our family tree;
 My mother's hands this Bible clasped;
 She, dying, gave it me.*

*Ah! well do I remember those Whose names these records bear;
 Who round the hearthstone used to close
 After the evening prayer,
 And speak of what these pages said
 In tones my heart would thrill.
 Though they are with the silent dead,
 Here are they living still.*

*My father read this holy book
 To brothers, sisters, dear;
 How calm was my poor mother's look,
 Who loved God's word to hear!
 Her angel face—I see it yet.
 What thronging memories come!
 Again that little group is met
 Within the halls of home.*

*Thou truest friend man ever knew,
 Thy constancy I've tried;
 When all were false, I found thee true,
 My counsellor and guide.
 The mines of earth no treasures give
 That could this volume buy;
 In teaching me the way to live
 It taught me how to die.*

—George P. Morris.

STEERING BY MOTHER'S LIGHT

A boat carrying a father and his little daughter was out at sea. While steering for shore, they were overtaken by a violent storm, which threatened destruction. The coast was dangerous.

The mother at home, conscious of the danger to her loved ones, lighted a lamp and started up the worn stairway to the attic window. "It won't do any good, mother," the son called after her. But on she went, put the light in the window, knelt beside it, and prayed. Out in the storm the daughter saw a glimmer of gold on the water's edge. "Steer for that," the father said. Slowly but steadily they came toward the light and at last were anchored in the sheltered harbor near the cottage.

"Thank God!" cried the mother, as she heard their glad voices and came down the stairway with a lamp in her hand. "How did you get here?" "We steered by mother's light," the daughter answered, "although we did not know out there what it was."

"Ah!" thought the son, a wayward boy, "it is time I was steering by mother's light." Before he slept he surrendered himself to God and asked him to guide him over life's rough sea. Months went by and disease smote him. "He can't live long," said the doctor. One stormy night he lay dying. "Do not be afraid for me," he said, as they wept. "I shall make the harbor, for I am steering by my mother's light."—The Christian Advocate.

Sister Sannie Klepser at the organ, provide the church services with most acceptable music.

The Altoona Rescue Mission invited us to have charge of one evening service and several car loads responded. Also a bus load visited the good meetings at Juniata, conducted by Brother R. Paul Miller. Three times this year envelopes full of tracts have been sent to every box holder of the local post office, both city and rural.

Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ with sincerity.

R. I. HUMBERD.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

PERU, INDIANA

For many days I have been promising the editor of the Evangelist that I would report the doings of the Peru church. The reason the report has not been forthcoming is not because there has been nothing to report, but rather that there has been so much to say that I have scarcely known where to begin. Those who have been readers of the "Witness" will know what has transpired up to the past several months, for mission pastors are expected to keep the mission supporters fully aware of what is being done with their mission offerings. But for the benefit of those who have not had access to the Home Magazine we may repeat somewhat.

During the past year there has been a decided upward trend in all the activities of the Peru church. The most outstanding movement has been the rapid increase of our young people's work. At the present time we have practically every age taken care of by some activity. The S. M. M., both senior, and junior, takes care of our girls. The Fisherman's Club takes care of our young men. The Signal Lights covers the missionary activity of the children. The Young People (young men and women), have the Christian Endeavor and the Young People's Forum. Between these organizations the young life of the church is kept pretty busy practically every night. They do not have time for outside of church activities and the whole desire of this fine bunch of young manhood and womanhood is centered in the life of the church. We have nearly fifty young men and young women around whom we are building. In the work we are seeking to do with these lives we have the backing of the older members of the church. The Young People's Forum is an organization which meets every Thursday evening at the parsonage under the leadership of Mrs. Vanator, for the purpose of getting facts pertaining to the Sunday school lesson and then have a half hour of real Bible Study, suited to their needs. This group meets at the same hour that the adult group meets at the church under the leadership of the pastor. In this manner we are coming in contact with about fifty persons in Bible study each Thursday night, for each group averages about twenty-five.

The increase in the Sunday school is very gratifying and by having the unified service each Sunday morning, beginning at 9:30 and closing promptly at 11 o'clock we are able to have practically every member of the Sunday school in the morning church service. Our average runs nearly 170 now. Sunday evening services are, we believe, more largely attended than any church in Peru, according to the size of the congregation.

The one thing that it gives us great pleasure to report is the result of our Week of Intensified Evangelism, which was conducted from Sunday, March 20th to Easter Sunday, March 27th. In this week there were twenty-one confessions, all of whom have united with the church, nineteen by baptism and two by relation. Since that time there have been four additional confessions, three of which have been baptized and one received by relation. This brings the total for our effort up to 25. The pastor was his own evangelist and the people here had a great prayer life, with the results coming by the power of God. We give him ALL THE PRAISE.

Brethren, we covet your earnest prayers for this very promising work.

FRED C. VANATOR, Pastor.

MARTINSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA

Spring is here and the gardens and fields are being planted, but were it not for the calendar we scarce would know that winter has passed. Of course we have had snow and some cold weather but yet a most wonderful winter. Surely a blessing to the unemployed who have little money to buy food and fuel.

We have been on this field but a few months and although it takes time to become acquainted yet we find lots of good people in the community and are beginning to love our own people more and more.

Our fall communion was well attended, many coming from a distance to be present at this service.

In February we held a two weeks' meeting with my Bible Chart Lectures. Mrs. Humbert acted as song leader. The audiences increased the first week until we had almost a full house. Then the flu struck our community and the second week was not so well attended. One person was baptized on the last Sunday afternoon, for which we thank God. This makes two persons who have been baptized since our last report.

At the election of officers, Brother Harry Replogle was again chosen to pilot the church in the capacity of moderator. One Sunday morning, our Sunday school superintendent, Brother J. E. Dilling, announced a surprise. It proved to be a check of $250.00 from an isolated member. This greatly reduced a small debt on the church building.

The W. M. S. meets monthly for devotions and mission study and two Christian Endeavor societies hold their regular meetings. Sister J. E. Dilling at the piano and

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The writer is serving an emergency call as supply pastor. The Mission Board, unable to help this place, and the Depression—we know there is a Depression in Johnstown, deeply affecting the membership, made it impossible to hire a full time pastor. This situation was faced squarely and the church decided to make the budget fit into the income. The continuation of the industrial panic has warranted the wise action taken at that time.

The unfortunate situation of this church, withdrawal of support by the Mission Board and the unusually large number of Protestant churches in this section of our city, has made this territory an exceedingly hard one in which to expand, especially * * * in * * * view of the establishment of another Church of the Brethren congregation, shortly after or about the time of our establishment here.

The condition has changed somewhat, we feel. The Sunday school has steadily climbed until it now registers on and over the 100 mark each Sunday. And the most remarkable situation of all is the fact that we always have a larger attendance at church services, than at the school session. The only church the writer has ever served in which a condition like this existed. We credit this change in attitude and spirit to the setting up definitely of a goal for every department of the church. This we set about accomplishing by charging each department with the dynamic of our Lord's purpose, that all parts of the church, Sunday school, Y. P. S. C. E., W. M. S., Class organizations, and all, were simply departments through which each age and each soul could function for God. The writer can see no sense in singling out one particular part of the church's activities and ignoring the rest, or discrediting the rest. If worship and spiritual growth are not fundamental with every one, the morning service has no business to exist, it is a parasite on the church.

We have given a number of letters since we began to supply the preaching but we have also taken in a number. Since taking up the work we have baptized 17, received five by letter and have a number looking forward to baptism.

Most of the credit for this situation which is so encouraging, is due to the leaders. We have room to mention only the heads of the various departments—Brother Lewis Hostetler of the Sunday school; Mrs. Web. Hammers of the W. M. S.; G. B. Baumgardner the Moderator; Joe Byers our Chorister; and Lester Claycomb of the Y. P. S. C. E.

Since goals of a fourfold nature are held up before the organizations to check themselves by, the members of the Second church feel that they have a real accomplishment to their credit, by comparison with their own past records. Only comparisons with other similar institutions are odious. We can compete against ourselves, when we look back at past records. The success we have then is the most valuable, as we are learning by past mistakes and growing stronger by the conquest of self.

The Second church has set for itself a task that only it may succeed in, and in that accomplishment, we have no fault to find with what another church may do, or criticism of the kind of leadership the other church may have, but rest assured that a church is only Big when it scorns to build itself upon the disgruntled membership of another or subtly tries to undermine the fellowship and Christian confidence that men may have in each other. Whether such conduct springs from our own or another denomination, it is seldom, in the long run, profitable.

The Love Feast and Communion services of the Second church will be held on the night of May 6th, beginning at seven o'clock, Daylight Savings time. All surrounding brethren are invited to be present. There will be special preaching services Wednesday, Thursday and Friday preceding the Communion. GEORGE H. JONES,
Supply Pastor.

ELKHART, INDIANA

Our work is going forward in a very remarkable way, the different department heads make favorable reports of their work from time to time and there seems to be a deeper spiritual interest. It is needless to tell you the material grown is not to be compared with former years—we are learning something about sacrifice and what is meant by giving till it is felt,—we are still "holding on" with a firm grip.

Our mid-week services continue to be most interesting and of deeper spiritual growth; attendance very frequently is as large as a Sunday morning service. They are conducted in the usual way, songs, prayers and Bible study conducted by the pastor.

The Sunday school is going forward, attendance larger than any previous year and the primary department needs more room. For the coming year Brother Walter Lichtenberger was elected Superintendent with Brother Lloyd Ulery assistant.

The greatest jolt our people have received in years, came to us when our pastor, Brother Duker, asked to be relieved of his work as pastor. Ten years of service, such as Brother Duker and wife gave to the church, endeared them to the church, caused them to find their way into the hearts of the people, and made this no easy task for either the pastor or his people.

He served us long and faithfully. He has mingled in our joys and sorrows. He has been with us in sickness and death, has enjoyed our prosperity and encouraged us in adversity. All these experiences over a period of ten years has made him more than an ordinary pastor.

Through his leadership and contact with people of our city in its various organizations, we are no longer a little obscure church, but recognized as one of the leading churches of the City. Through "Duke's" untiring efforts our usefulness as a church as well as individuals has been enlarged and our responsibilities increased.

After all the greatest mark of tribute we can give Brother Duker and wife for their years of service and devotion is to Go forward, to hold our possessions and go on to greater victories.

While the resigning of their work cast a gloom over all, we soon rallied to the necessity of carrying forward the Lord's work and of choosing a successor to take up the work. The church extends a call to Brother H. F. Stuckman of Goshen, Indiana, and the call was accepted. He comes to us, not as a stranger; we know his strength and ability as a pastor, having served the Goshen church for nine years.

When he enters his new field may he find men and women who recognize God's work, and even the greatest among us are only servants, and the real test of service is in being a good follower. May the Father lead us in "paths of righteousness."

EDNA NICHOLAS.

CENTER CHAPEL, PERU, INDIANA

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Some time has passed by since our last report of the Center Chapel church. On February 14th a Bible Reading and Praying Revival began, and for two weeks soul-stirring messages were delivered by our pastor, Brother J. W. Clark. Brother Harley Zumbaugh was the song leader. Nine persons confessed Christ, one a man over three score years of age, and three consecrated themselves to the work of the Lord. Seven have been baptized and the others will be a little later.

While the gain in souls was not so many in number, we know the seed was sown and we will prayerfully await the increase as the Lord has promised. Preceding and during the revival the verses read were equivalent to almost twice the verses contained in the entire Bible. Great interest was shown each night, and several nights the crowds were so great many were turned away for lack of room. Previous to the revival our pastor urged the people to read and study their Bibles and to pray unceasingly. He stressed the reading of the Book of John.

A very good interest has been shown in the Sunday school and the attendance has been very good. We have a large number of boys and girls who faithfully attend the Sunday school and preaching services. Both the Senior and Junior Christian Endeavor are doing a fine work under good leadership. A short while after National Conference, Brother and Sister Foster came to us, showing the pictures of the African field and their curios. The talks from both of these Christian people were very interesting. We praise God for such faithful Christians.

In closing we ask the prayers of God's people, that those who are out in sin, may yet be brought to him before it is too late, also that God will give us wisdom, love and strength to carry on his great work until he comes.

MRS. GEO HUDDLESON,
Church Correspondent.

FIRST CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

How speedily time passes! We can scarcely realize that it is time to report again. We praise the Lord in that he has blessed our humble efforts during the intervening months. We rejoice in the faithful members, who have upheld our hands in prayer and have aided the pastor in every way. Any success that has come was not ours, but the work of the faithful ones added to our own as under-shepherd, in watering and God gave the increase.

Depression, financially, raised the question as to securing an evangelist to lead us in a campaign for souls. We aimed to secure one locally, but the one approved by the congregation was already dated; so it was decided that the pastor holds his own meeting. After the Official Board so decided, the pastor consented upon condition that the congregation indicate their willingness to cooperate. The vote was taken with the result that an almost unanimous support was pledged. The Church Federation urged a city-wide Pre-Easter Evangelistic campaign; we took advantage of a simultaneous effort in which many souls were gathered in this metropolis of the Western Coast. Our own efforts resulted as follows: fifteen confessions of faith, twelve of whom have already received the sacred rite of baptism; the membership was spiritually strengthened; and the entire work revived to that degree that it is visibly manifested in larger attendance and a spirit of cooperation fostered. We give God the glory and only are humbly grateful that he used us to witness for him.

It was suggested that inasmuch as the Pre-Easter effort resulted gloriously, that a Post-Easter revival continue. Evangelism has been the dominant note of our preaching since then with the result that the spirit of revival continues. Last Sunday evening, we baptized four who could not be present at the first baptismal service, and a splendid young lady who came from the Nazarene church received the sacred ordinance and will come into full fellowship with us. Our communion service was also held following the meeting in which we obeyed our Lord in the things he left us as means of grace. The attendance was large and the Spirit's presence was manifested in happy faces and devoted hearts.

Other happenings that may be of interest to the brotherhood were the following: Preceding our revival meeting, the orchestra under direction of the pastor gave a program which was appreciated by a large audience present. This organization is now about three years of age, still an infant, but walks rather sturdily. We play only for the glory of God. On the evening of Easter, the Choir under the direction of Helen Deibert, one of our own girls, and the orchestra gave a combined musical program to the edification of those present.

Our Quarterly Business Meeting was held April twelfth. Reports indicated progress in all departments of the work. Financially, we feel what the entire world feels; every special offering was lifted and folks did their best. We desired these offerings larger but our people are not swimming in wealth and thus the pastor feels all did their best. We have several families that we aid as we can. We try to remember always that "God loveth a cheerful giver." As we close this report, we are looking forward to the observance of Boys' Day, Mother's Day and Children's Day with special sermons and programs. Pray for us that God may keep us in his will.

Your humble servant,
A. B. COVER, Pastor.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH AT LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The work of the Lord at the Second Brethren church is one round of constant activity which is characteristic of so many of our sister churches over the brotherhood. How greatly we rejoice in the victories at so many places. It is so much more human-like to rejoice over the successes of others when success crowns one's own efforts; but in the Lord, we rejoice with others even when more meager results are realized in the local work. Too often we are tempted to fail to consider the larger interests of the cause of Christ in the whole invisible body, and of the denomination as a whole, by a shortsighted interest in one corner of God's vineyard. However, that which is nearest, personally witnessed and directly supported does command a greater interest. After all, it is the combination of the local groups with enthusiasm for their own distinctive fields that make up the larger units of which we all are a part.

In reporting our victories in this field, we are reminded of the statement of Paul in II Cor. 4:7 where he says: "But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." We have had disappointments by "leaning on the arm of flesh which fails us" but rejoice over the great results through his power which never fails. We are glad for the promise of God in Habakkuk when he said, "Though it tarry, wait for it, for it will surely come." While accessions in the past have been somewhat scattered, yet in the last month in our regular services, thirty-one precious souls, consisting of nineteen adults, and the rest young people and intermediates, found their way to the altar. Twenty of these have received the rite of baptism, four others await the rite, four were received by letter, while three came for reconsecration. Our anticipations are as bright as our realizations, for we have a large group of prospects, many of whom are under mighty conviction. Concerning these, we are assured that the Lord will not disappoint faith.

This faith is particularly centered in two special groups of intercessors. One, composed of the sisters of the church, meets each Tuesday afternoon from 1:30 to 3:00 o'clock, and the other composed of men, meets each Thursday evening from 7:30 to 9:00 o'clock. (The regular mid-week prayer meeting is on Wednesday evening.) Of a truth, we can sing, "Sweet Hour of Prayer." The pastor has never before experienced such sweet fellowship, nor sensed the nearness of the Divine Presence, nor has felt such power as in these meetings. It is the general feeling of those who attend these meetings that we have just witnessed the beginning of "greater works than these."

The most blessed results of these special prayer meetings are those that do not appear in numerals. Only to be in the midst is to know the full story. We cannot describe the impulses to higher and purer living, the drawing of members together in love and unity, new joy and sincerity in worship in the pew and unusual liberty and power in the pulpit. How we praise God for it all.

All the auxiliaries of the church have shown new strength and interest. The average attendance of six recent Sundays compared to the same period of last year showing an increase of 115 is an indication of this. A week ago there were 477 present. Six Christian Endeavor societies are working under splendid leadership. Two lively Sisterhood organizations are doing fine work. In addition to conducting the regular monthly meetings which have been largely attended, and striving to meet all national goals, the Women's Missionary Society, under the capable leadership of Sister Lilly Monroe, has done a noble work in caring for the poor of this community, 325 garments and thirty comforts being distributed the past few months and many boxes of food distributed from the commissary supported by all groups.

We are sorry for our neglect in reporting our meeting of last October with Dr. L. S. Bauman as evangelist, and Leo Polman as song leader. What a time of spiritual refreshing that was! As for visible results, sixty-seven people responded to the invitation. About forty of these decisions were made by children in the Sunday school, practically all of whom were denied the privilege of baptism by disinterested parents. A number of these parents are now becoming prospects for the Church. Most of the adult confessions were made either by people from a distance who could not be attracted to our church, or were not faithful to their vows when confronted with the requirements of church membership. We refused to compromise for the sake of numbers. There were several valuable reconsecrations. We were happy to receive twelve into membership by baptism.

Concerning finances, we have been able to meet all bills until the present month when all the ready cash was not available for the payment on our church debt. We know that God will provide now and honor the faithfulness of this people who have been giving liberally out of their poverty. In view of the drastic cuts in wages and working hours on the part of our members, we consider what has been done a miracle from God. We are giving $800.00 for Foreign Missions, besides making one of the largest contributions to the Home Mission board in the brotherhood.

We were very happy for the messages from, and fellowship with, our missionaries, Dr. Florence Gribble and Miss Estella Myers. They were a great blessing to our people. How sorry we are for the great loss at Yaloke! May God cause this to redound to his glory in some way! How precious Romans 8:18 must be to the missionaries in their trial! Let us know no defeat! God is able for all emergencies! His grace is sufficient! Let us pray one for another and by depending mightily on the Lord, "abound unto every good work" remembering to give him all the glory and praise.

A. D. CASHMAN, Pastor.

GRITTER, IOWA

We have Sunday school at 10 and preaching at 11 every Sunday morning at the Gritter school house. This undertaking is just partly Brethren. It has a Brethren preacher, a chorister who is Brethren and of the three Sunday school classes two are taught by Brethren teachers, and two use Brethren quarterlies. Because we cannot preach in our own church is not saying we cannot help hold up Brethrenism. Neither do we have to sit down on the stool of "do-nothing" for fear of being called a cut-rate preacher. Unless something unforeseen takes place, we will have something better to tell you soon.

H. W. ANDERSON,

North English, Iowa.

MASONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

A portion of the Keystone State is ready to report.

Rev. and Mrs. Floyd Sibert came to us last fall from Akron, Ohio, and began work in their new field with zeal. The attendance and interest began to increase immediately. In January our annual revival was held, and it was one of the best ever held in the Brethren church at Masontown. One hundred souls were won for Christ. Rev. and Mrs. Sibert make a splendid evangelistic party. Rev. Sibert did the preaching, and Mrs. Sibert did the children's work and took charge of the overflow meetings, so that none might be turned away. Several from that group expressed a desire to accept Christ, and were taken into the main auditorium to give their confessions. Some who have steadily refused the great invitation for years, stepped out during the meeting, and Masontown Brethren saw their prayers answered. Men, women and children seemed eager to "see Jesus." We were made to rejoice over the large number of young men who made the great confession. The Sunday school broke all former records, and reached the high mark of 390 during the meeting. On Easter Sunaay, however, we went still higher with 428 in attendance at Sunday school. We feel we can soon be called "one of the big churches." Of the 428 present on Easter Sunday, 101 were men.

During the quarter just closed, our Sunday school has maintained an average of 215. The Wednesday evening Bible Study has averaged 101. The Christian Endeavor has a steady attendance of 150 to 200.

Each Thursday evening the young people above sixteen years of age, meet at the parsonage for their special Bible Study. They are now studying "The Acts." The attendance at these meetings averages about forty, although there have been as many as fifty-four. (We are thankful for a spacious parsonage.) These young people also attend the regular Wednesday evening Bible Study at the church. So, the young people at Masontown get three periods of definite Bible study each week. Plans are being made to provide a mid-week Bible Study Class for young people between the ages of twelve and sixteen.

The Wednesday evening services have had as many as 125 in attendance on several occasions. We have just finished a study of I John, and are now studying church ordinances, in preparation for the spring communion which will be observed early in May.

Rev. Sibert recently represented Ashland College at the inauguration of the new president of Washington and Jefferson College at Washington, Pennsylvania.

In addition to the regular activities of the church, our people are kept busy caring for the needy. It is worse here than in most places, for both banks in town closed, taking the savings of almost all the people, and there is no work. Perhaps that partly accounts for the renewed interest in the Lord's work. David said, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." Psalms 119:67. We are wondering if, in times of prosperity we would again forget. May the Lord keep us all true to him till the day of his coming.

MABEL G. WILSON,
Corresponding Secretary.

THE SIX VISIONS OF THE APOSTLE PAUL

Paul was a chosen vessel, and in extremities he received special divine manifestations, the very help that he needed.

1. On the road to Damascus. "I have appeared unto thee for this purpose to make thee a minister and a witness." Acts 26:16.

2. At Jerusalem in the temple. "Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles." Acts 22:21.

3. The call to Europe at Troas. "Come over into Macedonia, and help us." Acts 16:9.

4. At Corinth. "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace." Acts 18:9.

5. At Jerusalem in prison. "As thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem so must thou bear witness also at Rome." Acts 23:11.

6. At sea in the storm. "I believe God, that it shall be ever as it was told unto me." Acts 27:33.

These in their connection give the main points in the heavenly illumination and divine guidance of the Apostle Paul for about twenty-five years, from his conversion to his journey to Rome. They gave him understanding of the person and mission of Jesus Christ, a knowledge of his redemption for us and an insight into the Kingdom of God. It was the time of the four great missionary journeys and the extension of the Gospel far into Europe.

These were early years of preparation for later tasks to his martyrdom and triumphal crowning, but these special visions mark the beginning of new scenes in the great program of the dream of life.—E. W. Curtis.

GOOD EQUIPMENT AND EFFICIENT METHODS NOW IN USE

(Continued from page 11)

comes. Department leaders are human, they have their favorites and these they bring forward on every occasion. But the superintendent of programs has the responsibility of discovering the neglected talent and seeing that it is given a chance.—Sunday School Times.

Boulder, Colorado.

OUR LITTLE READERS

WHEN A BOY THINKS OF HIS MOTHER

By Percy B. Prior

When he is hurt.

When he is about to go to bed his first night away from home.

When he is thirsty at night.

When he is hungry.

When he has good news to tell.

When he wants money.

When he attains honors.

When he hears something said against women folks.

When he sees a dog he would like to bring home.

When he would like to leave the baby and join the gang.

When he is losing in a family dispute.

When he thinks he is drowning.

When his mother is sick.

When he was grown to be a man.

Sydney, Australia.

A BORROWED MOTHER

By Flora Swetnam

Tommy Davis sat in his Sunday school class and listened while his teacher told them that next Sunday was Mothers' Day and that no boy was to come without his mother.

"But what if she can't come?" one boy asked.

"Then you must do a little extra work on Saturday, so she won't have so much to do. How many of you think that a good plan?"

Every hand went up in a hurry. "All right," smiled the teacher, "I'm going to see if you remember that."

On the way home they all talked and made plans about how they would get mother to come. All but Tommy. Tommy had no mother. It seemed to him a long, long time since she died. He lived with his aunt, but she was Harold's mother. Harold would take her to Sunday school.

As Tommy wandered along he wondered what he would do. Then he thought of such a good plan that he almost laughed out loud. He could hardly wait for tomorrow to try it. The next morning he surprised their neighbor, Mrs. Archer, by walking in and getting right to business.

"Say," he began, "have you got some work I could help you do next Sunday morning?"

Mother makes our house a home

"You wouldn't work on Sunday, would you?" she asked.

"I—I—mean Saturday," said Tommy.

"Do you want to earn some money?"

"No'm," replied Tommy. "I don't need any money. I—mean—I don't need much money."

"What is it then?"

"I need a mother to take to Sunday school, because next Sunday's Mothers' Day. My teacher told me to be sure and bring one."

"And—you haven't any mother."

"No'm. That's why I want to help you do your work so you can go. That's what she said—my teacher, you know."

"Well, Tommy, why do you want me?"

"Because," said Tommy truthfully, "I never saw you go. I thought maybe you would this once."

"Tommy, you make me ashamed," she told him. "Well, you come around here Saturday morning and I'll see if I can't find you something to do."

"And can I take you to Sunday school?"

"Bless your heart, yes."

"Thank you," said Tommy. "I'll be here early."

"If your aunt doesn't need you," she said.

"Oh, Harold's going to help her," Tommy answered. "She's his mother, you know."

Tommy ran home very proud and happy. All the week he thought of things to do on Saturday. When Saturday came he went running to Mrs. Archer's. She seemed glad to see him. He blacked the stove, swept the porch and walk, and went with Mrs. Archer to the grocer's to help carry the things back.

When they came back, she baked a cake and let him scrape the bowl.

"Did your own mother let you scrape it sometimes?" she asked.

"Aunt Elizabeth does," replied Tommy. "I have half and Harold half. I can't remember mother much."

"I think you were five when she died," said Mrs. Archer.

"And now I'm eight. It's a long time."

When the work was finished, she gave Tommy a quarter. "But I didn't want to be paid," he began.

"This isn't pay," she told him. "Take it to Sunday school. Mothers do give their boys something to put in, don't they?"

O yes'm. Thank you. I'll be here early."

He dashed off home and showed his quarter.

"I had a dime for you," said his aunt.

"Keep it, Aunt Elizabeth," he told her. "I'd rather have this."

The next morning Tommy walked proudly into Sunday school with his borrowed mother and sat beside her till time to go to class. A lady near him noticed that he wore two flowers and asked why.

"The white one is for my dead mother and the red one is for my borrowed mother," explained Tommy.

"I'm going to let Tommy borrow me every Sunday after this," promised Mrs. Archer.

"O my," said Tommy, "won't it be great!"

University, Alabama.

The best sermon on the golden rule is an act of brotherly kindness which costs the doer something.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

LANARK, ILLINOIS

The Lanark, Illinois Brethren church will observe the Holy Ordinances on Lord's day evening, May 15, 1932. Our isolated members and all of like precious faith are invited to share in these most blessed ordinances with us. C. C. GRISSO, Pastor.

McKEE, PENNSYLVANIA

The McKee church plans to observe the spring communion service, May 15th at 7:30 P. M. A cordial invitation is extended to neighboring Brethren.

R. I. HUMBERD, Pastor.

MARTINSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA

The Martinsburg church plans to observe the spring communion service May 8th at 7:30 P. M. A cordial invitation is extended to neighboring churches to observe this service with us.

R. I. HUMBERD,
Pastor.

LINWOOD, MARYLAND

The Linwood Brethren church will hold their semi-annual love feast on Sunday evening, May 29th, beginning at 7:30. These services will be preceded by a three weeks' revival service conducted by Brother R. Paul Miller of Berne, Indiana. To all these services Brethren are most cordially invited. Why not have delegations from surrounding churches? Come, Brethren, help us in these services. May I kindly ask the prayers of the faithful for our success in these services.

J. L. BOWMAN, Pastor.

VOL. LIV
Number 20

THE

May 14
1932

BRETHREN EVANGELIST

FATHER AND SON

THE HEBREWS, that people who knew more truth about God nineteen hundred years ago than any one else, were written a letter by an apostolic convert to Christianity who was one of their own race. We have it in the New Testament under the heading, The Epistle to the Hebrews. It seeks to arouse the Jews contemporary with Paul of Tarsus and Peter of Capernaum to the messianic significance of Jesus of Nazareth. Its opening four verses are the major principle of Christianity with reference to receiving eternal life. The introductory sentences describe God's contacts with man and refer to revelations of His will received by former generations and given to prophets. They came as occasions arose and as the eternal plans of God unfolded. Through such divers portions and divers manners of communication from the Creator to Abraham's heirs, the Jews attained a position on earth such as was enjoyed by no other people. "We be Abraham's seed," they proudly declare, "and have never been in bondage to any man." The legacy of an early covenant indeed became theirs.

A NEW WAY OF INHERITANCE

BUT in these last days," this letter states, "God hath spoken to us by His Son, whom He hath appointed heir of all things." The relationship describes a new channel of inheritance. What God gave in times past through a chosen people and in fact more than was ever before bestowed from heaven on mankind, now comes through Jesus Christ.

THE process of reasoning was one which our Lord Himself used when He said to the disciples, "Ye believe in God; believe also in me." There is no division of grace in the divine mind. The title to blessedness throughout all eternity is through the Son, to whom the Father has given all things. Such being the dispensation under which we live, folk must not depend on their own merit or worthiness. They shall look unto Jesus and through Him receive from the Father.

IT is widely published that folk are seeking eternal life. Let the Church guide them by plain words to find what they seek where God has placed it. It is in Christ, entirely in His hands and exclusively His to bestow as He chooses.—The Lutheran.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Evidence of Christian Experience

Christians should always be ready to give a reason for the faith which is in them. And there are many good reasons for believing in Christ as the Son of God. But if you find yourself unable to answer all the attacks of the enemy, do not become panicky. The healed blind man, you will recall, was unable to answer all the arguments of his inquisitors but he was sure of one thing—"One thing I know," he said, "whereas I was blind, now I see."

If you have had a personal experience of the saving power of Jesus Christ, you know more than all the unbelieving sceptics in the world. We have in Ashland a coal-dealer who is also somewhat of a Christian philosopher. In a little publication, which serves as an advertising medium for his business, he wrote recently:

"If some atheist should tell you that honey is not sweet, you would give him, the laugh. You had some on your fried mush for breakfast and you know. If he were to tell you that salt is poison, laugh again, for you have been using it every day for fifty years. If he tells you that to eat bread is an antiquated absurdity, laugh again and go on eating bread. If he tells you that the Bible is not true and Jesus Christ is not divine, tell him he lies and go on enjoying your salvation and eternal life."

IF I Were Dictator

Several weeks ago two Jewish Rabbis of Cleveland spoke to their congregations on what they would do if they were dictators. One of them, Rabbi Brickner, after outlining his program of social and economic remedies, added, "There are a few small things I would regulate, too. I would eliminate competing churches, and would compel ministers to preach about problems that affect the people's welfare, instead of quibbling over texts and indulging in hair-splitting theological sermons."

Rabbi Brickner poses as "liberal thinker," but if he had the power it would be just too bad for those of us who still believe in Jesus Christ as the only Hope of a lost world. For the Deity of Christ, and his Atonement for sin, and his Resurrection from the dead, would all be regarded by Brickner as "hair-splitting theological prophecy of the future. It is one of the welfare."

Fortunately for the Christian people of this country, Mr. Brickner is not "dictator." But his utterances constitute an ominous prophecy of the future. It is one of the strange paradoxes of human history that "liberalism" at last becomes so sure of its "liberal principles" that it proposes to force them upon the world and silence all dissenters. This is precisely the movement which, according to Biblical prophecy, will finally consummate itself in the anti-Christ of the end who for a brief time will dictate the politics, economics and religion of the world. "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb" (Rev. 13:8).

In all the Universe there is but one Jew to whose hands can be safely entrusted the power of dictatorship. That Person is Jesus Christ the Son of God. Some day and it may be soon, Christ will become the Dictator of the world. Rabbi Brickner and all the other so-called "liberals" should read the second Psalm, and "Kiss the Son lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

A MAN Without a Country

Leon Trotzky, who helped overthrow one of the greatest empires on earth, has become a most pathetic figure. Outlawed and exiled by his own Bolshevik associates in Russia, broken in health, he has sought in vain for permission to seek medical help in the other countries of Europe. And now even Turkey, where he has been living, wants to get rid of him, but there is no place to go.

Like Napoleon, the governments of the earth are afraid of him because he has sworn to rest not until they are overturned. Even the Kaiser found a refuge in a civilized nation, but no one wants Trotzky. The nations feel that his presence would be a constant threat to the foundations of government and society.

The tragic plight of Trotzky is an earnest of the final doom of all those who persist in rebellion against God's King, our Lord Jesus Christ. They will at last be outlawed and exiled from his eternal Kingdom. In that Kingdom there will be no place for rebels. For such there is only banishment forever to the "outer darkness." Jude describes their end with one of the most terrible sentences in Holy Scripture: they are "Wandering stars to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever."

THE Optimism which is Hopeless

A writer who conducts a daily column in one of the great eastern newspapers was recently taken to task severely by a reader for criticising the present order of things politically and socially. The reader says to the columnist, "Don't you go out of your way sometimes to expound the philosophy of defeatism? Do you enjoy posing as having no hope at all?"

The columnist with spirit denies the charge, saying, "I am not a pessimist—I am happier than you, for I look forward to a higher type of civilization than the one to which you cling." ... The species of optimism which hopes for the reform of a rotten egg is the most hopeless of all."

Even newspaper writers, who know little or nothing about the Christian viewpoint, are beginning to see more clearly than some preachers that the present world-system is utterly perverted and must be rebuilt. The only difference of opinion concerns the method we must take to do the work. We believe that the creation of a new world is the work of Christ, and must begin with the re-creation of the individual souls which compose it.

PATCHERS, Wreckers and Constructionists

In the last analysis there are but three attitudes toward the desperate plight of the world today.

First there are the Patchers, men who are still in love with the present world-system, and who are working frantically to patch it up with various expedients. But the patches do not hold well, and the ship is sinking in spite of all they can do.

Second, there are the Wreckers, who are convinced that the old ship is no good. The quicker it is scuttled, they argue, the better off we shall be. Let it sink and build a new one.

Third, there are the Constructionists. They do not love the old system and are perfectly willing to see it pass away. But they know no new world can be built permanently without material which is enduring. Therefore, they have been at work preaching the Gospel of Christ for the regeneration of men, and in the meantime they wait for the coming of Christ who will construct a new social order out of the "living stones" of newborn men. You cannot build anything lasting out of "wood, hay and stubble." You cannot build an eternal kingdom out of ideals and principles. Such things are worthwhile only as they become incarnated in twice-born men. The Christian is the only true Constructionist.

It Is Not Always Easy

To apologize.

To begin over.

To admit error.

To be unselfish.

To take advice.

To be charitable.

To be considerate.

To keep on trying.

To profit by mistakes.

To think and then act.

To forgive and forget.

To shoulder a deserved blame.

BUT IT ALWAYS PAYS!

—Selected.

Only by being careful of our manner of life can we be at all carefree.

IN THIS NUMBER

Fathers Who Deserve to be Honored—Editor, .....	3
Are We Treating God Fair?—Editor, .....	3
Editorial Review, .....	4
Father and the Religious Training of Youth—Freeman Ankrum, .....	5
"You." A Message to Fathers—A. W. Conner, .....	6
Studies in the Book of Revelation—R. I. Humbert, .....	7
Significant News and Views, .....	7
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, .....	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, .....	9
The Conversion of an Educated Person—D. R. Piper, .....	10
Studying the S. S. Lesson—T. C. Lyon, .....	11
Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits—C. D. Whitmer, .....	11
Robert Louis Stevenson and Missions—J. W. Burton, .....	12
The Story of the Cock and the Hen—Mrs. Orville D. Jobson, .....	12
News from the Field, .....	13-15
Our Little Readers, .....	15
Announcements, .....	15

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Fathers Who Deserve to be Honored

A little girl paused in the midst of a Mother's Day celebration and asked, "Why don't they have Father's Day, too?" That is what many adults have been asking, realizing as they do that there is another side to the problem of home responsibility and influence. And, in truth, there is such a "day," that is, in certain localities. For a number of years there have been scattered efforts at the launching of a day in honor of fatherhood, but the Father's Day idea has not captured the popular imagination like Mother's Day, nor has there been general agreement as to the time of such a celebration, though recently there is effort to center on the third Sunday in June. We would not be arbitrary as to when such an observance should be held, but we do think it should be of such nature as to include both daughters and sons, as Mother's Day celebrations ought to include both. The Biblical injunction is "Honor thy father and thy mother," and it comes with force to all children regardless of sex. Daughters as well as sons need to show honor to father and fatherhood, and they ought to cultivate a better acquaintance with father and a better understanding of father's responsibilities and problems. It is important that both sons and daughters shall have a more intimate understanding and a truer appreciation of both parents, and also that both parents shall better understand and take more seriously their responsibilities and make larger use of their far-reaching influence.

We would not introduce any invidious comparisons as to the relative deserts of father and mother to honor. It would be folly to attempt it, if we had desire. We are quite sure it would be difficult to find a true father who would allow any competition on his part with a faithful mother for honor. The loving, sacrificial spirit of the real mother-heart is incomparable to that of any other human relationship. But after due honor and consideration has been rendered to motherhood, there remains much to be said in behalf of fatherhood. Father's influence and responsibilities cannot be overlooked in any worthy consideration of the welfare of the home and the child, and the father who sincerely seeks to do his duty is worthy of honor.

The father who seeks to give his child a clean, strong, healthy body is being true to a bounden parental duty and consequently is deserving of high honor. The heritage of good health is a priceless boon, and it is the father's first duty to do everything in his power to make it possible for his child. That means not merely guarding the little child's health and caring for it in sickness and disease, but it means maintaining a clean life and right habits on the part of any young man who hopes some day to become a father. That responsibility strikes out forever the foolish claim to "personal liberty" to indulge in strong drinks or to leave them alone, to saturate one's body with nicotine or to refrain, to take a dip into vice or to keep oneself pure, as he may choose. No man has a right to take uncleanness into his life in any shape or form if in his heart there rests the hope of becoming a father. Only they make really worthy fathers and are deserving of true honor who pass on to their offspring the very best physical heritage possible.

The father we honor is also one who does his best to discharge his legal responsibilities to his children. No father needs to be told that the law requires that he shall provide, at the very least, shelter, food and clothing for those of his household. He who deliberately refuses to make such provision can be legally punished for his dereliction. Moreover he is expected to make possible such cultural advantages as he is able. The child must be given the opportunity of at least a common school education, and the father and mother must cooperate with the state in seeing that the child takes advantage of this opportunity. The child has a claim upon his father for the provision of those things that are necessary for his physical well-being and for his development into a life of usefulness, and he who has the true father-heart will not wait to be compelled by organized society to do his best in these ways for his offspring. Some one has expressed this phase of father's task in the following silly doggerel which was sung at a Fathers' and Sons' banquet to a tune of which it was not worthy:

"Dear old Daddy is the man I'm singin' about;
Dear old Daddy, he's sure a regular scout;
Mother washes all our necks,
But Dad's the one who signs the checks;
Dear old Daddy is the man I'm singin' about."

Of course, father's job is far bigger than that of "writing the checks," nevertheless he is the logical provider of the home, and no man who has his health and strength and self-respect wants it to be otherwise. And every child owes a debt of gratitude beyond that which he is likely to be able to pay to his father who works long and hard and sacrifices much for the largest welfare and happiness of the young life within his home.

But above everything else the father who is deserving of honor is one who seeks, to the very best of his ability, to meet the moral and spiritual needs of his children. To fulfil the noblest demands of fatherhood a man must be a Christian, and his aim as a father must be higher than merely that of having children well-born; higher even than the development of physically healthy and intellectually strong personalities; it must rise to the building of character that is morally vigorous and the awakening of a soul that is spiritually keen. He must recognize the duty of teaching his children their rightful relation to God, of bringing them up in the knowledge and admonition of the Lord, of cultivating in them the habit of divine worship and of loyalty to the church, and encouraging them in the living of the exalted life, the kind that Jesus declared should be the light of the world. If he shall faithfully teach them the word of God, prayerfully lead them to seek the will of God and carefully guide them in the way of God, and if in all his teaching he shall strive to demonstrate the truth in his own life, he shall be a faithful father indeed, worthy in the highest sense, deserving the honor of his children and enjoying the confidence of God, even as did Abraham of old.

Are We Treating God Fair?

One of the most vexing problems that faces the church today is that of finances. Practically every congregation is finding it difficult to meet its local budget, and many are running far behind. And offerings for the general work of the church are falling off, and though the various directors are exercising the very utmost of economy, it seems scarcely possible that they shall be able to do more than hold their own, if indeed they shall not be required to retrench. The severity of the problem is due to the financial depression that lays so heavily upon all classes of people everywhere, and for that reason church leaders are exercising a large measure of consideration in order that they shall not lay upon the people burdens greater than they can bear. And it is right that they should do so.

There is also an obligation resting upon the membership of the church to exercise economy in individual affairs. In fact, economy should be the never-failing policy of every Christian in his personal affairs, whether the times be good or bad, but the duty is doubly strong in times like these. Economizing ought to begin with the individual's expenditures and not with the church's budget, but in actual practice it is just the other way around. Vast numbers of Christian people are cutting down heavily on their giving to the church while practically continuing their normal expenditures for personal pleasure and convenience. That is unfair to the church; it is an inconsistency against which people must needs be warned.

No one who really loves his Lord would require the church, which is the body and bride of Christ, to pay the cost of these hard times. And yet there are many who are thoughtlessly doing that very thing. They do very little denying of themselves the things they want, when they have the money in their pockets, but they are quick to shave off their pledges to the Lord's work. And that brings discredit upon the church and makes it the subject of much adverse criticism.

The Christian Standard is sharp in its criticism of the church at this point and thinks it is merely handing out "tips" grudgingly to the Lord. We quote it as follows:

The way in which the church of Christ finances its enterprises is nothing less than scandalous. The ordinary congregation is doing pretty well if it averages twenty-five cents per member per week. Many average down around five or ten cents apiece per week. Let us suppose the average to be twenty-five cents. Certainly many men with fair salaries or wages give on the quarter level.

That quarter will not purchase two gallons of gas. It will not cover the cost of driving an automobile three miles. It will not purchase one quart of good oil. Yet the man or woman who tosses it in the plate thinks nothing of jumping in his car for a spin of, not three miles, but ten and twenty miles. He will grudgingly toss the Lord a quarter on Lord's Day morning and then take a fifty-mile spin on Lord's Day afternoon.

There are some places where one can see motion pictures for a quarter, but in the first-run houses it is usually impossible to enter for less than thirty or forty cents and in many of them the better seats cost fifty cents. When the head of the house takes the wife he pays from sixty cents to a dollar and sometimes he takes the children as well. But how often he considers it outrageous that you suggest a dollar a week for the Lord. He can't afford that!

The average youngster demands his share of sweets and so, too, do grown-ups. Probably they should have some. But how much candy can one buy for a quarter? How many sundaes and sodas and frappes and banana splits can be crowded into one quarter? There is such a thing as high school students, children of church members, spending thirty-five and forty cents for such confections in one afternoon. Try suggesting that they give the Lord as much as they give the soda fountain and candy store.

And tobacco. If there is such a thing as a good five-cent cigar a quarter a week will certainly not provide one a day. And we understand that one does not do much better than two packages of cigarettes for a quarter. Surely no smoker has much ground for complaining if church officers waste any of his money if he does not give more than he makes go up in smoke every day or so.

How far will a quarter take one in any secret order? What sort of concert or entertainment can one attend for a quarter? How far can one telephone or telegraph for a quarter? How many street-car rides are in a twenty-five cent piece?

In the light of all these facts it can not be that those who "give" on the twenty-five cent plane really conceive of themselves as paying for value received. They can not possibly rate the work of the church so low. They must be making their contributions on some other basis.

When the traveling man in the sleeping-car comes to the end of the run he gives the porter a dime, perhaps a quarter. When the "red-cap" carries his grips he gives him the same kind of coins. When the hotel valet serves him and the waitress in the restaurant completes her service he parts with at least a dime. In the course of every day he gives away at least a quarter, if not many of them. If he plays golf he does the same for caddies and other aides.

Here seems to be something akin to the "gifts" of these church members. Gratuities they are called, not because they are always given graciously or with gratitude. They are given out of custom and to quiet the conscience of the giver or the spirit of the servant. They are said to be un-American and probably they are. There is something mean and menial about them.

But it does not seem to occur to those who grudgingly give the Lord a dime or a quarter, when they are able to give much more, that they are really just "tipping" God for about the same reason that they "tipped" the porters.

(Continued on page 8)

Brother J. Raymond Schutz won the nomination to Congress from the Fifth District of Indiana, as we anticipated he would. And now we predict that he will be elected at the November poll with as much positiveness as he was nominated last week.

Our good correspondent and secretary of the Northern California District Conference gives us a very readable report of their gathering at La Verne, April 3 to 10. A unique feature of this conference was the bringing of basket lunches on the part of delegates. This not only cut down on the expenses, but added to the spirit of sociability.

As we were going to press Dr. Bame came into our office with the information that the reports on Brother Stewart's health are encouraging, also that the church at Bryan, Ohio, will observe Holy Communion on the evening of May 15th. Dr. Bame, who has been supplying the pulpit since Brother Stewart became ill, will have charge of the service. It is hoped that the pastor will be able to be present also.

We are in receipt of a most gracious letter from our aged Brother Thomas Gibson, who resides at Berkeley, California. He renews his subscription to The Evangelist at considerable sacrifice, and expresses such keen appreciation of the editor's humble efforts that we wish to express our sincere gratitude in this public way. Brother Gibson also enjoys writing for the paper, and we are glad to publish a not infrequent contribution from his pen.

President Edwin E. Jacobs in his College News this week gives the program of the commencement activities, some or all of which some of the College friends at a distance may wish to attend. The College turns out the largest number of graduates in the history of the institution this year, there being 70 to receive the Bachelor Degree, the total number of graduates in all courses being 106. The total number of full-fledged college students to be enrolled this year reached the high mark of 401, and the grand total of all students in all departments was 732. The church has a right to be proud of the growth that has been realized in every way under the capable leadership of Dr. Jacobs, assisted by a most excellent faculty. The college deserves your loyal support on Educational Day, the second Sunday in June.

Brother Robert D. Crees, pastor of the church at Kittanning, Pennsylvania, writes of a highly appreciated Bible Conference conducted by Brother A. V. Kimmell, of the Philadelphia First church. Brother Kimmell proved himself not merely a successful Bible lecturer, but a leader of music also, particularly of the children's chorus. The preaching of the Word resulted not merely in the edification of the membership of the church, but in the conversion of seven souls and one reconnection. Brother Crees has been giving much attention to Bible instruction and to the training of the young people for service. He reports five added to the church by baptism previous to the recent Bible Conference week and since his last report.

Doubtless we will be supplied with a report later, but we wish to call the attention of the brotherhood to the fact that the Theological Seminary of Ashland College, held its second annual graduation exercises last week. Prof. Alva J. McClain, Associate Dean, preached the Baccalaureate sermon in the Ashland Brethren church on Sunday evening of May 1 and Dean J. Allen Miller gave the Commencement Address on the Wednesday following in the College chapel. One graduate, having completed the seven year course, received the Bachelor of Theology degree. That person was Rev. Raymond E. Gingrich, who has been serving successfully as pastor of the Fair Haven church near West Salem, Ohio. We extend congratulations to Brother Gingrich. The first graduate under the new Seminary program was Rev. Delbert Flora, who received his degree last year and is now the successful pastor of the church at Udell, Iowa. Other members of the Seminary faculty, besides the Dean and Associate Dean mentioned above, are Dr. K. M. Monroe and Prof. M. A. Stuckey. All four faculty members are appreciated by the students and are recognized by the brotherhood for their splendid Biblical scholarship. The Seminary along with the College, will benefit from the offerings made on Educational Day.

---

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

Brother C. D. Whitmer's Shipshewana announcement failed to appear last week, as stated in our Editorial Review, but it will be found in this week's issue on Christian Endeavor page.

The College Board of Trustees is asking for the lifting of the regular Educational Day offering the second Sunday in June. The goal is: An offering from every congregation. Let every one do his best, for the cause is worthy.

Father and the Religious Training of Youth

By Freeman Ankrum

In the ninth verse of the twenty-eighth chapter of first Chronicles, we have the picture of a wise old man, the king of a great nation, giving some masterful advice to a brilliant son. The message comes from the lips of a king whose heart had been seared by the hot iron of remorse. Not a long list of "Thou shalt" or "Thou shalt not" was given this young man who was soon to succeed his father in a great work, and as the head of a kingdom. The instructions were simply, "Know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind." Then followed the enumeration of the results, good or evil, which should follow obedience or disobedience. David could not point to his own record as his record was not without its dark pages. Naturally this brings up the question of a father's part in the religious training of the youth. Solomon, soon after the advice was received, took his place as the king. Nevertheless in spite of his father's instructions he failed in the end. No one can say that the training and instruction should not have been given. The responsibility of training and teaching cannot be escaped by the parent. It is true that the realization of many a father's hope in the career of a son or daughter may never be realized. They may fall far below the standards of life that have been held before them. Some will even renounce their father's religion and their Father's God, but in so doing their blood is upon their own heads.

It will be noted that David says very little about himself in his address to his son. Neither is it necessary to go into a long explanation as to who was meant by "The God of thy Fathers." David as a father had not been too busy in times previous, to have public relationship with the God he now recommends to his son. The three sons of him who founded the Dunker Fraternity all united with the church of their father when they were sixteen or seventeen years of age. Their father's God was their God. Knowing the Founder through the written records that he has left, we would hardly conclude that the sons knew nothing about the God of their father and the demands made by him until they reached the middle teen age.

Busy youth, regardless of how many demands may be made upon it by secular education, will be as quick to grasp the religious training now as of old. Unfortunately the age in which we live has almost destroyed the old-time, self-sufficient family circles. This has become an age of specialization when we designate certain tasks and labors to specialists that were formerly done by parents. The children were formerly trained in the home along religious lines, now they are turned over to the Sunday school for an hour a week. This being more or less mass education, the full force of the individual, father-to-son training or instruction is lost.

The father must still exert the greatest influence in the training of his youth. Though he may not be able to follow the methods of his boyhood or his grandparents, nevertheless his influence is there. They who will follow him in other lines are not adverse to following him along religious lines. Naturally a father cannot give that which he does not possess. He cannot lead unless he has an object toward which to lead. The impetuous Peter could not be brought to Christ by Andrew his brother until Andrew first found Christ. Until a certain age at least a boy's father is his hero. All too many times there comes the awakening when the boy may not look upon his father as the strong and flawless man that he had once considered him. Though in his own flesh he may be weak, if he knows the Master he will be able to point his teaching toward the one who is all strength. When the ruddy face of boyhood becomes the lined face of age, and the hair becomes a crown of white, he is still a boy to the father. Though he may have long been out from under the parental roof and have a roof of his own, the now aged father is still solicitous of his well-being. Age has become a veneer which the eyes of the world cannot pierce and so it sees the man. The eyes of the father look through it and still sees the boy of tender age who sat upon his knee and listened to his teachings. When the years of so-called manhood come, and the lad has left the old estate he may apparently forget and ignore his father's God. The instruction has become a part of his being which he cannot escape, and which perhaps at times he may seek to hide deep within himself, nevertheless it is there.

He may stray not only to one far-country but to many far-countries, yet he cannot stray or flee from the religious instruction that has been implanted in a once tender heart. Though the

MY FATHER

By John H. Styles, Jr.

*My father is the finest man
In all this world to me;
He's all that's good and brave and true—
The things a man should be.
There never was a better friend
Or wiser one than Dad;
He's just the truest-hearted pal
A feller ever had.*

*My father's creed is faithfulness;
He seeks to serve his God,
His loved ones and his fellow-men;
Content is he to plod
Along the quiet ways of life;
He wants no tow'ring fame
Or mighty wealth—his goal is this:
A pure, unsullied name.*

*My father is the kind of man
That I would like to be;
He's wholesome, gentle, just, sincere—
The soul of honesty.
I want to live a life like his,
And oh, I want to prove,
My right to bear my fathers' name
And share his priceless love.*

son become old and wrinkled and gray and the old home only a memory; though there have long been two mounds in the silent city of the dead, with weathered headstones bowing over their hallowed dust, and even though it come to pass that cattle graze over the rounded mounds where once stood the house that echoed to childish laughter and children's running feet; yes, though hushed forever the mother's song and the father's admonishment and prayers, yet hidden deep under the debris or experience of years may still be found a sacred picture—a father sitting by the table, his Bible upon his knees, childish faces looking in rapt expectancy, while a mother rests in silent relaxation from the duties of the day. The wood in the old fireplace crackles and the sparks fly hissing. Tongues of flame start up the dark and cavernous depths of the old flue, hesitate as though they were changing their minds, and then are lost. The grotesque shadows parade across the somber walls, while the wagging tongue of the old clock calls out the seconds of their passing. Yawns are half subdued and quieted are the shufflings of tired little feet, while father quietly turns the pages of the well worn and familiar old book. The clearing of the throat, the final adjustment of the spectacles and then the beginning of the chapter. Perhaps hesitating just a little at first but growing stronger and stronger, until the reader and the message become one. Interest increases upon the up-turned faces and the cares and worries flee from the tired face of the mother on the other side of the hearth, as the message of God's love is brought to them. The chapter ended, the old book is closed and carefully laid upon the stand, the glasses gently folded and placed upon the worn cover and then there comes the voice of the reader uplifted in thankfulness for the blessings of the day, meager though they may have seemed to some, and a request for safe keeping throughout the night that has enwrapped them in its dark embrace. Then the "Good nights," the flying feet, the tucking into bed. Utter forgetfulness? No; only seemingly so. This cannot be forgotten though sleep may soon visit the weary eyes.

The years between youth and old age are long, but memory leaps the gap at a single bound. The treasures of yesteryear cannot be reached as there is a door between them and us, but fond memory places a roseate glass in the door through which we may look upon those scenes of yore. Then perhaps that very son, grown to manhood, in later years in some far-off country surrounded by the husks of sin and failure, may pause to remember his father's God.

Flora, Indiana.

"You:" A Message to Fathers

By A. W. Conner in "Christian Standard"

(Founder of the Boy-Friend Movement)

Dr. Dearing, of Oakland City College, in an address before the Indianapolis Kiwanis Club, said: "The biggest outstanding need of the youth today is a closer and more intimate contact with parents.

"We are either ignorant or blind if we do not admit there is a problem to meet regarding the youth of today. There is a great youth question. Understand, however," said he, "I am laying no charge at the feet of youth. There are only two great forces which affect youth—heredity and environment—and youth chooses neither.

"What the youth of the world needs is just you."

Well said! good Doctor; none has said it better, but do you know that when you talk about "establishing closer and more intimate contact" of fathers and sons, you are putting the "grease where the squeak is"? Who ever knew of a case where father and son were chums, companions, having daily, friendly interviews, that the son ever went wrong, if the father was all right?

Youth not only needs you, but youth wants you.

In a Boy-Friend campaign, in which over four hundred boys were attending, each boy was asked to write the name of one known man whose friendship he would rather have than that of any other man he knew.

No boy knew whom the other boys were choosing. The result was over 40 percent of the boys chose another man than their father, and 30 percent chose the same man.

Not only does youth need you and want you, but youth will get you and keep you. In the town of A the writer conducted a Boy-Friend campaign; among other things, I gave a series of talks to a large number of boys who appeared deeply interested. I was greatly pleased with the way the boys gave heed to my words. Just one year later, I came face to face with the same company of boys.

I thought, "Now is my chance to find out how many of these boys remember what I had told them." I asked a dozen leading questions; the boys twisted and turned, scratched their heads, but not a question could they answer. More vexed at my own dullness than their thoughtlessness and with some feeling, I said: "What do you fellows remember?" Quick as a flash a majority of them shouted: "You, Mr. Conner."

There it is! They did not get my ideas, but they did get me, and they were keeping me.

Every man is a giant in some boy's eyes, and no man here or hereafter can escape the reflex influence of his own personality.

Be assured the youth of today will get you; they are getting you every day. But who are you? That is a vital question.

Are you a dad that only talks to your boy when you want to lecture him? Are you a dad that only furnishes him with money after a brain-storm? Are you a dad that lives in a duplex? Are you a Mr. Jekyll or Dr. Hyde? Are you a dad that's always telling your boy what an excellent boy you were, but showing him by your daily life what a faultfinding, complaining man you are?

Are you a dad that keeps your smiles for your visitors and frowns for folks who have to live with you?

One of America's great humorists was entertaining guests at his home. Wit was flowing free and merriment running high when one of the guests turned to a little girl in the family and said: "My! my! haven't you a funny papa?" The little girl quickly replied: "Yes, when we have company."

If any of these characteristics are yours, you may be assured that you will meet yourself in the life of your own boy some day, but if, on the other hand, you are patient, considerate, striving always to understand your boy, and see all things from his viewpoint as well as your own, you will meet your better self in the princely life of your son and be able to sing with Malloch in his splendid verse:

MY SON

"I, that had yearned for youth, my own, again,
And mourned the wasted hours of younger days;
I, that had sighed for spring, for summer, when
The snows of winter covered all my ways;
I, that had prayed for years, for only one—
Have found that prayer answered in my son.

"He is myself again, with hopes of old,
With old temptations and with old desires;
He is myself again—the clay to mold
Into the man, and all the man aspires.
Who says that youth returns to us no more?
He is as I was in the days of yore.

"In my own days, in my own days of youth,
Ah, how I wished a comrade and a friend!—
To help me keep the quiet path of truth
And through temptation my own feet attend.
So shall I journey onward by his side,
His father—yea, his comrade and his guide.

"I, that have failed, shall shape success in him;
I, that have wandered, point the proper path;
I signal when the signal lights are dim,
A roof to fend him from the storms of wrath—
So we shall journey upward, I and he.
And he shall be the man I meant to be."

Honest to goodness, men, how does your boy get you? That is the question! We must face it. There is no espe; let us face it like men. Let us come down from the mount of cold-hearted indifference and alienation and get to the gang and start something. I do not mean an organization, club or lodge. Let us start a movement in the hearts of parents, a movement that will enable us to see it that "youth gets us, and gets us right."

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

Study No. Two

This is the only book in the Bible that promises a special blessing to the person who will read it. It does not say that we must understand it all to get the blessing. Blessed is he that readeth." And if you cannot read, get someone to read it to you, "and they that HEAR." Above all things get this book into your minds somehow.

A Book of Prophecy

"The words of this prophecy." This is a book of prophecy and is written in sign language. A railroad guide book is also a book of prophecy. It prophecies that a train will pass through a certain city at a certain time and will arrive at another city at a certain time. It also has its symbols and signs. Here is a little star; there are parallel lines and here is a little cross,—what can these signs mean? Somewhere in the SAME book we find their meaning. The star means "daily," the cross means that the train runs daily except Sunday, etc., etc.

It is thus with Revelation. The signs are explained somewhere in the SAME book—the Bible. We find an illustration of this in Chapter 1:12, "I saw seven golden candlesticks." What do these candlesticks represent? We are informed in verse nineteen that, "The seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches." From chapter four on through the book we must find most of our meanings in the Old Testament.

Living in the Future

The blessing of verse three is not merely to the one who will read or hear the words of this prophecy, he must "KEEP those things which are written therein."

We all live in the future. It is because of some bright hope in the future that we can better bear the burdens of the present. A boy in college, while eating soup and other cheap foods in the restaurant, would call to the other boys, "Well boys, maybe next week I will be living high and can feed you fellows with chops and oysters." That young man had a rich uncle and every day he was expecting to hear of his death and because of this prospect he could better bear the privations of the present.

It is thus with a Christian. Nothing will cut our roots loose from this world like prophecy. It is a light that shines into the darkness of the future. This knowledge will work a change in our attitude towards life and will be even as Peter says, "Seeing that we look for such things we will be diligent that we may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless."

Reading Influences Life

There are certain things that are absolute. Step over the register of a heated furnace and you have no choice as to the results—you will get warm. Place yourself in that sphere and the warming of your body is certain. The blessing here is just beyond reading and keeping of this book, that is, it follows the reading and keeping. Place yourself in this sphere and the blessing is certain. Little can we know how much our future happiness is bound up in our knowledge of this book.

What we read determines largely the thoughts of our day. A peculiar suicide was given much space in the newspapers of the nation. Within a few days several other suicides took place in such a way as to prove that they got their impulse from reading those articles. Reading those articles wrought a curse in the lives of many, but reading Revelation will work a blessing.

"John to the seven churches which are in Asia." These were real churches but it does not mean that there were but seven churches in Asia. Seven is God's number of completeness and Revelation is God's book of completeness. Loose threads that ran all through the Bible are brought together in this book. Thus these messages, in chapters two and three, have a message for churches of all ages, as well as to those addressed.

Promised Peace

"Grace be unto you and peace." What wonderful words. This book reveals wonderful things that are to happen—a tribulation such as never was to this time, no nor ever shall be (Matt. 24), but before a single judgment is revealed our Lord stops and assures us that when these things come to pass and men's hearts are failing them for fear, it will be nothing but peace for his people.

The earth is to rock and quake; mountains will topple over; the courses of rivers will be changed; the sea will roll high; islands will be jostled out of their places; no longer the bright sun at noonday but in its place a great dark ball, filling the world with a terrible clammy chilliness and with a horror of gloomy darkness; no longer the silver moon in the heavens but a sickly, scarry orb of blood; no longer the quiet twinkle of the stars at midnight but the stars (or meteors) shooting and hissing and burning and blazing through the heavens.

This terrible sight of a universe in convulsions will unloose the confidence of men and their hearts will fail them for fear, but before a single one of these judgments are revealed, we are assured of peace and safety to those who have taken refuge in him.

Martinsburg, Pennsylvania.

---

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

---

ENGLAND'S CRIME—DUE TO PROHIBITION?

England has been held up with considerable justice as affording an example of effective law-enforcement. It is therefore all the more interesting that she is now worrying over an "alarming" increase in crime. The last year for which the figures have been made up is 1930, which shows an increase of indictable offenses within that year of nearly ten per cent. We have been told that our crime record was due to prohibition. Crime within the United States has decreased since 1930, while in England there has been an increase—and England does not have prohibition. There, as in our own country, the proportion of youthful offenders has been disturbingly large. Neither in England nor here is it some law on the statute books which leads to crime. It is the lack of a law written on the heart.—The Presbyterian Advance.

WE ARE THE GUNS

We are the guns of war.

We are new in the story of human hate, and yet we are old. Our ancestors are the clubs with which in the long ago men slew their fellows, the arrow that sped true from one man's hand to his fellow's heart, the sword, the spear.

Into the lineage of hate bequeathed to the world through these we have entered.

For centuries we slept in the iron-mines of the world, biding our time.

We waited for man to bring us forth and at costly toil shape us to do his will.

He molded us into guns, for hate and distrust and fear in his heart.

He devoted his science to make us strong, his mathematics to aim us straight, his organizing-skill to feed us, his loving labor to save us from rust.

We speak only at his bidding. We roar only when hate overcomes his reason. We slay only when nothing but death will satisfy his inward and imperial desire.

Whichever nation wins when we are trundled forth to war, we always conquer.

The last foeman to overcome us is the Spirit of Good Will, born in the heart of youth, dedicated to the deepest values of the human soul.

We tremble only at the bidding of him who said, "Blessed are the peace-makers."

We are the guns of war.—P. R. Hayward, in C. E. World.

GOVERNOR MOORE THANKS CHURCHES FOR PRAYERS

A wish that "more churches would pray for their public officials" was expressed by Governor A. Harry Moore, of New Jersey, in a letter read at the session of the West Jersey Presbytery April 19.

Governor Moore's letter was in reply to a communication sent from the last meeting of the presbytery in which the executive was advised the church body was praying for him.

"I feel the need of your prayers in my administration," the Governor wrote. "I am frequently in churches, but it would be a good thing for the churches to pray for the civil leaders."

Prayer for public officials is a Christian duty emphatically enjoined by the New Testament. Paul (1 Tim. 2:1, 2) writes: "I exhort therefore, first of all, that supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings, be made for all men; for kings and all that are in high place." This includes presidents, governors, congressmen, legislators, and all civic leaders. Christians should remember this. If there were more praying for our government there would be less reason for fault-finding.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

IN THIS DECADE

A young man recently did us the honor to inquire, "What will be the leading characteristic of this decade? Will it be the controversy concerning Fundamentalism and Modernism?" To the latter query we replied "No." The Modernism that stirred discussions ten years ago and brought forth proportionally dictatorial Fundamentalism has largely disappeared. It rested on post-war humanitarianism. It has since become either humanism or it has ceased to attack the traditional doctrines of Christianity. It was too narrow a platform for the sincere interpreter of the New Testament. Some of its devotees have fallen into the abyss of agnostic liberalism. That controversy is now history.

Today's currents in theology are more oppositely opposed to each other than were those of a decade ago. On the positive side there is a revival of regard for the tenets of the sixteenth century. In the Lutheran Church we will relive the experiences of the first generation of Protestants. Not humanitarianism but spirituality and access to God will concern us. Indeed one is frequently startled by meeting articles and lectures that deal with the simplest and most fundamental phases of revealed religion. On the negative side there is a stark agnosticism relative to soul and the soul's faculties, Materialism, with "science" as its interpreter and dictator, has not only no room for a personal God in its reasoning, but he is in its way. A machine age dares recognize no commander of physical force and no ethical laws not resting on production.

It will be a great decade in which to live and confess Christ. We older men are confident as to the issue. The young men and the young women coming from seminaries and schools will battle for the Lord and his kingdom "right valiantly."—The Lutheran.

Are We Treating God Fair?

(Continued from page 4)

Let us not treat God like a porter. There are many noble Christian people who are suffering real hardship and it is with sad hearts that they find it necessary to cut down their apportionment to the Lord's work. For them we have only sympathy. But for those who are complaining about the numerous and urgent calls of the church, while they insist on continuing a dozen and one foolish or unnecessary expenditures for personal pleasure or convenience we speak words of warning and remonstrance. Let us treat God fair.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Matt. 20:27, 28. "And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Moffatt says it like this: "And whoever wants to be first among you must be your slave; just as the Son of man has not come to be served but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for many."

In earlier days, the church taught that it pleased God for his followers to punish the body. Priests sought out the desert places where they lived in filth and degradation. By so doing they thought they were serving God. The story goes that a monk of Syria built a tower and for thirty years lived upon it. His food was sent up to him by means of a basket and rope. Here in rags and dirt he lived, often praying fifteen hours a day. Ill informed people as they passed by would exclaim: "What a servant of God is this!" But in all these years of privation and torture, he did not render any service to God.

Likewise deluded Christians wore hairy garments which punctured the body, put pebbles in their shoes, crawled upon their hands and knees, until their bodies were well nigh exhausted, thinking that by doing such it would please God. Finally the people began to ask, where is the service in torture? Martin Luther, crawling upon his hands and knees up Pilate's Stairway, in Rome, remembered Paul's statement, "The just shall live by faith." He immediately sprang to his feet, and began his great career by preaching justification by faith.

Jesus taught us in the text referred to what service is. He reversed the world's idea of service, and of greatness. Trying to be helpful to men is one thing; to walk all over them is quite another thing. The Master taught that the only way to serve God is to serve man. He was most at home among the sick and infirm. What strange contrast in his greatness as one who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many. His teaching IS MARVELOUS; but HIS PRACTICE is sublime. He taught baptism in water by seeking John and the Jordan river. He taught humility, but he used the towel and the basin himself. Then he said to the disciples, "The disciple is not above the Master." One of Paul's fundamental statements is found in Phil. 2:7: "But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

What I am trying to say is, praying, singing, communing at the Lord's table, our Savior taught and practiced; but as acts of worship. It is highly important to worship, but Christian service consists in doing something for humanity, AND THAT SOMETHING IN THE NAME OF THE LORD. Philanthropy in the name of Christ is vital to our holy religion. Philanthropy without such religion is a mockery in the sight of God. Commercial service and Christian service are two very different things. Christian service is "entering by the door of the sheep"; Commercial service is "climbing up some other day." The devil is most happy when he can get Christians to carry flowers to the sick in the name of some Sunday school class, lodge, or Endeavor society. Just leave Jesus and his church out of our service for our fellow man, and the devil will lead in a mighty applause.

A little boy gave a penny to go into a missionary box. He wanted it to go to help his older sister who was the wife of a missionary in India. With that penny a tract was bought, and his name written on it with a prayer that God would use it to convert some one in that heathen land. For some time the tract lay unnoticed among so many other larger gifts. But a missionary's interpreter noticed the name of the child, and decided to honor the little white child so far away. He read the tract. He was not a Christian himself, but that message from that little boy was used by an All-Wise God to bring about his conversion. Then through this strong character a great many others who at first seemed almost impossible to reach was brought to Christ.

"The pebble in the streamlet's source
Has changed the course of many a river;
The dewdrop on the baby plant
Has warped the giant oak forever."

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

II. Samuel

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates;
And be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors:
And the King of glory will come in."

With these words the ancient chorus of Israel must have greeted David, the illustrious king of the Jews.

A voice from within the gates responded:
"Who is this King of glory?"
The singers shouted back:
"Jehovah strong and mighty,
Jehovah mighty in battle."

Under the spell of such a coronation hymn as this David no doubt quite forgot that he ever was the son of Jesse the Bethlehemite. He was no longer the shepherd, poet, and musician of Saul's court, but rather the man-of-war of the people. Truly he was a representative character whose masculinity carried with it the usual virtues and vices which accompany verility. Men and women loved David in spite of his weaknesses. He had a great heart and a comely figure, was cunning in action and prudent in matters of state. For these considerations alone he was greatly admired.

David, so the continued story of the Second Samuel leads us to believe, forgot God, but God never forgot him. His eye was on the Eternal much of the time, but not all of the time, and when he faltered the eye of the Eternal was more fixed than ever upon his mind and heart. In fact, what better testimony of that fact can be found than his famous song close to the end of this book. Did he ever sing sweeter than this?—

"With the merciful wilt thou show thyself merciful,
With the perfect man thou wilt show thyself perfect;
With the pure thou wilt show thyself pure;
And with the perverse thou wilt show thyself forward.
And the afflicted people thou wilt save:
But thine eyes are upon the haughty,
That thou mayest bring them down."

Who was it that was merciless, imperfect, impure, perverse, haughty, but David? Is this not, at once a self-written revelation and indictment of the career of "sweet psalmist of Israel"? Furthermore, is not this the key to the passion of his entire life? In spite of great weaknesses, did he not press hard after the heart of God? To ask these questions is to answer them.

In 1869 Elizabeth P. Prentiss wrote a penitential hymn of several stanzas which admirably depicts the spirit of David as he stooped to kiss the smiting rod:

"Let sorrow do its work,
Send grief and pain
Sweet are thy messengers,
Sweet their refrain,
When they can sing with me,
More love, O Christ, to thee,
More love to thee,"

Were David here to play this beautiful gospel sentiment on his harp, tears of gratitude would no doubt course down his cheeks in remembrance of God's grace.

But I must continue the song:

"Then shall my latest breath
Whisper thy praise;
This be the parting cry
My heart shall raise,"—

What praise did David whisper in death? His immortal words constitute a theme rich enough for an angel symphony:

"And he shall be as the light in the morning,
When the sun ariseth,
Even a morning without clouds;
As the tender grass springing out of the earth
By clear shining after rain."

"Shining after rain." Ah! there is the secret of the triumph of David. Through his Spirit God triumphed over him.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Probably Samuel, or Nathan.
2. When and Where Written. After Samuel's Death. In Palestine.
3. To Whom Addressed. Israel.
4. Occasion. The establishment of David as king in Israel.
5. Authenticity. The book is historical.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Triumphs of David. 1-10.
2. The Trials of David. 11-24.

III. THE STORY OF THE BOOK

Second Samuel is a continuation of First Samuel. It records the major facts of the reign of King David. It begins with his accession to the throne and ends with his death. During a period of forty years he ruled successfully and gave Israel its really great Heroic Age. His triumphs and troubles are related in emboldened lines and no attempt is made to cover the weaknesses of the Psalm Singer. He must be judged in the light of the Psalter and the historic annals of the Old Testament. He shines brightest in the Psalm Book, however.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. King. Mighty Men.
2. Key Phrases. II Sam. 22:25-27; 23:4.
3. Key Chapters. 12, 22, 23.
4. Key Ideas. Defeat in Triumph. Triumph in Defeat.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

Aside from its historical and literary value, the book of Second Samuel evinces how God views a man like David. It proves that "the Lord seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." Furthermore it proves that "I triumph still, if thou abide with me."

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

David was a direct ancestor of Christ. He stood midway between Abraham and Christ. The afflictions of the Bethlehemite serve as a background of prophetic truth pointing to the cloudless day for men, Israel and creation, when Christ shall appear anew. The eighteenth Psalm may well be studied at this point. As David was central in Israel's government, so Christ will be central in the Kingdom Government that shall have no end. Unlike David, he will be a sinless and perfect King.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

1. "Be sure your sins will find you out." "As you sow so shall ye reap."
2. "Every angel of joy and of sorrow swept, as he passed, over the chords of David's harp, and the hearts of a hundred men strove and struggled together within the narrow continent of his single heart." (Trapp).
3. "David's giving himself to ease and pleasure was the root of all his wretchedness. Standing water gathers filth. As the crabfish seizeth upon the oyster gaping, so doth Satan upon the idle." (Trapp).
4. David was a shepherd, a born musician, a profound lyric poet, a great man-of-war, a powerful administrator, a worthy statesman, a choice friend, an excellent father, and a man after the heart of God.

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.

MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

The Conversion of an Educated Person

By D. R. Piper

We are accustomed to compare the conversion of the hardened sinner with that of Saul. The parallel extends as far as the fact of a cataclysmic experience common to both, but ends there. With the drunkard there are the chains of physical habit to be broken, and there is the already broken will to be restored and directed Godward. But with Saul of Tarsus the chains were those of mental habit, of a hard and fixed philosophy of life reinforced by a high degree of education. He was not the victim of self-indulgence as in the case of the person who sins against himself, nor had his life been surrendered to misanthropic motives as in the case of the man who has repeatedly sinned against society. What stood in Saul's way, and led to his wrong course, was his lifelong intellectual training in a strict religious faith, augmented by unusual moral enthusiasm; good traits gone wrong and strengthened in their wrongness by education.

Probably the nearest parallel we could find in the world today would be that of an educated Mohammedan or Hindu converted to Christianity. In America our nearest parallel is that of a person educated in the sciences who is convinced that all religion is a refined survival of superstition.

What would have to happen first in the conversion of such a person would not be a profound sense of personal sin, but the overwhelming consciousness of having made a terrible mistake, of having directed the whole course of his life by erroneous conclusions. Is not that what happened to Saul? The sense of past guilt came overwhelmingly, but so far as the record goes, it came later. Then we find Paul saying that he had been among the worst sinners in the world. But at the moment of revelation, there on the Damascus road, Christ smote Saul of Tarsus with the sudden profound sense of his terribly mistaken course. This Christ whom he had been persecuting was not after all the founder of a heretical cult, but the very Son of God who could speak to him out of the blazing light of heaven. Saul's plea was not for pardon, but for direction: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" This was, however, a real surrender. It was the surrender of a man who had been misguiding his own life, to a Christ who could give him right guidance.

Such a surrender in itself involved a cleansing from sin, for the essence of sin is the exaltation of self or of anything else above God. But there is a distinct difference in the mental remaking at conversion of an educated man who has given himself in good conscience to a false conception of the universe, and that which takes place in a person who has ruined his life by weak-willed self-indulgence. That the mental reconstruction must be more profound is illustrated in Saul's case by his need of that long period of solitude in which to orient his thoughts to the new conception of life which was involved in the revelation of Christ as his Savior.

To put it differently, religion takes the supreme place in one's life at conversion, and all one's other knowledge must be tested by it and adjusted to it. One's philosophy of life can no longer be a success philosophy in the worldly senses, or a fatalistic philosophy, or a scientific philosophy, but a spiritual philosophy. Aside from its cleansing from sin, faith in Christ works its most profound change in the believer's intellectual life. His world is no longer a solar system, it becomes a Christo-centric system. Christ must be "all and in all" not in some mystical sense, nor merely in the sense that he commands one's greatest loyalty, but specifically in the sense that he is the exemplar of life's ideals and the key to one's whole philosophy of life. Paul later summed this all up in a single phrase, "For me to live is Christ."

Obviously, for the educated person who has a well-defined interpretation of the universe, as the Pharisees had and as scientists today are supposed to have, such a change requires a readjustment so profound that it is nothing short of mental revolution. If the planets today should decide to desert our sun, and to center their activities about some other orb, that would require a change in the cosmos comparable to the mental change which must take place within an educated pagan whose whole life must be recentered about a spiritual faith.

Manifestly, this change is more profound in an older person than in an adolescent whose mental habits have not become fixed. It is also far more profound in an educated person who has a definitely thought-out philosophy of life to which he has committed himself, than in one who has drifted mentally and thought nothing through for himself. Jesus said that it is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. Do you think, if he were with us in the flesh today, he might say that just as strongly of the educated person who has adopted a "purely scientific" view of the world?

For one thing, intellectual achievements, as a minister recently remarked, "produce a thicker shell through which the Spirit has to penetrate. For another thing, the plain variety of sinner may violate God's law but rarely denies God outright; while the intellectualist often builds up a stone wall of philosophy between himself and heaven, or else holds to a working code that politely "bows God out of the universe."

This is not intended as an invective against science or education, any more than Christ's words were an invective against wealth. But conversion requires the subordination of both wealth and knowledge to the ends of Christ's kingdom.

What would happen in the mind of a person thoroughly trained in modern scientific knowledge when he passed through the experience of conversion? Would he, or should he, abandon science and renounce all the learning he has acquired? Is that what Paul did? Instead, we see him "passionately persevering" in the use of his knowledge. But he has recentered it about Christ. He now reinterprets its meaning in terms of his new-found faith. He is completely freed from his bondage to the Law. He no longer pivots his life on a chain of knowledge binding him to that legalistic center-post. He also recognizes the limitations of his knowledge, how powerless it is, and how many things there are which it cannot explain. What "the law could not do," Christ has done for him.

Now that is a picture of the readjustment of all thought and knowledge to the Christian faith. We must expect the scientist to reinterpret scientific facts and discoveries in terms of the spiritual truth of the Christian Religion. He no longer makes culture or science, the center of his mental universe. He realizes its limitations. He sees the great spiritual truths which science does not explain. He feels the spiritual forces which are in God and Christ, above science. And he interprets his faith in terms of his familiar knowledge, making it do service to Christ.

We have dwelt on this in order to see clearly that this mental revolution plays a far greater part in most present-day adult conversions than we are accustomed to think, especially in this educated paganism which we euphemistically call civilization. For a highly-educated adult, or even a half-educated adult who is committed to his modicum of knowledge, it requires an experience so profound that it unsettles all learning, makes fluid all the past values which the individual regarded as unchallenged. This is why adult conversion often comes only after some profoundly disturbing experience, such as long illness, great sorrow, heavy loss, or other misfortune which breaks down mental barriers and brings with it a feeling of utter helplessness and a childlike willingness to seek and know the truth.

This may also help to explain the profound peace of mind which follows conversion. We are accustomed to credit this largely to the lifting of the load of sin, and the consciousness of reconciliation with God. And rightly so. But in addition it stops mental conflicts. It brings the peace of inner harmony. It creates out of the former chaos of theory and knowledge the order which comes when the spiritually integrating power of Christ relates all things to himself as the center and goal of our being.

Do you think that a little emotional preaching would ever have converted Saul? Will it suffice for a modern, educated pagan? Can you name any man-made method that will suffice? When you realize the profound psychological change which must take place in an adult to make him mentally a Christian, you see that only the power of God can bring it about, and you abandon the attempt to explain conversion on purely psychological grounds. It may not come just as it came to Saul, but if the power of God is not in it, it is not conversion.—Adult Bible Class Monthly.

The new Department of Commerce building in Washington was built at a cost of $17,500,000. Designed to house 5,400 workers, it has six interior courts to insure plenty of light and fresh air. There is a completely equipped hospital in one section of the building.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
With
Thoburn C. Lyon

JACOB AND ESAU RECONCILED

(Lesson for May 22)

Lesson Text: Gen. 33:1-11; Golden Text:
Eph. 4:32

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Jacob and Esau Reconciled. Gen. 33:1-11

The whole account makes us realize how Jacob dreaded, and even feared, to meet his brother. No doubt, through all the long years of his exile his conscience had been heavy with the thought of the wrong he had done, and now every thing was done that might aid in placating the wrath of his brother. We too have an elder Brother against whom we have sinned in times past; we may avoid his presence now, if we will, even as Jacob so long stayed away from Esau and the home of his father, but there is coming a time when we must meet him. How much better to be reconciled now! And praise God, we know he will not come to meet us in his wrath, but in full forgiveness and love, with joy at the reconciliation.

TUESDAY

Dealing with Offenders. Matt. 18:15-22

Our topic for today takes for granted that we will want to forgive those who have offended, and is particularly concerned with our way of dealing with offenders. Whenever we neglect any of the principles of God's Word we suffer, and it cannot be estimated how much needless suffering has resulted because Christian folks have reversed, or have neglected altogether, the procedure outlined in verses 15-17. Let us search the Scriptures, that we may know his will more fully, and let us strive always to do his will.

WEDNESDAY

The Unmerciful Servant. Matt. 18:23-35

This story of Jesus is so very pointed and plain that it needs no comment whatever—only meditation: have I been as the unmerciful servant? This principle is expressed many times in the New Testament, as in the familiar phrase of the Lord's prayer: "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." We dare not harbor an unforgiving spirit, and until we have forgiven our brother, "even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven" us, we dare not face our Lord.

THURSDAY

Kindness Enjoined. Zech. 7:8-14

We need not turn to the New Testament to find kindness and brotherly love enjoined, although many people seem to feel that this quality is lacking in Old Testament Scriptures. In this passage note especially that if we hear God's voice and willfully turn away and refuse to heed, he will refuse to hear us when we call to him in time of need. Note too that it was the refusal of God's people to heed that made the land desolate: is it not true that the widespread desolation throughout the nation and throughout the world today is due to this very thing? May we and all God's people turn to him anew and heed his words with gladness, that we may again receive his blessing.

FRIDAY

Forgiveness Enjoined. Col. 3:5-14

If we remember that we ourselves, in time past, have walked in evil ways (v. 7), perhaps we should have more patience and a more forgiving spirit toward those who now walk in such ways. The meat of the whole passage is in v. 13: "Even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." Without love and forgiveness (charity, v. 14), we are not yet perfect. Let us pray for more of the spirit of love and peace and mutual forgiveness that Jacob and Esau manifested in our lesson for this week.

SATURDAY

Winning our Enemies. Luke 6:27-38

Verily, this is "a hard saying: who can hear it?" The thought is not that we should wantonly abandon all our goods to the unrighteous, but rather that when we do good merely among our friends we have still rendered no Christian service. Sinners daily serve their friends. God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were not friends he died for us: we should have the same unselfish love for our enemies. God help us to dedicate ourselves anew to truly Christian service, seeking to save that which is lost.

SUNDAY

God's Forgiveness. Matt. 6:9-15

Thank God this prayer was not intended only for the people of another age! What a perfect gem it is, and how we need to emulate and practice its simplicity and directness! Would that men would consider well all that this prayer means, and that we would pray more often after this manner! Let us pray that he may deliver us from the evil of an unforgiving spirit.

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK 	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio
--	--	--

C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. Duball Ave., South Bend, Ind.

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

12—"Principles vs. Precepts."

Principles are seeds of power, and progress. Precepts are but props of weakness. Principles in life are like the bits of colored glass in the kaleidoscope. Though few in number they are capable of producing infinitely varied and beautiful results by the revolution of circumstances. Precepts are like the denominator to a fraction. Multiplying them only decreases its value.

Johnny Lazybones is in the grammar school, and every evening he asks his mother to show him how to do his examples. She, patient and good-natured mother that she is, has done all her boy's examples for him since he entered the primary school, and he has copied her work, to the marvel of his teachers and the benefit of his standing in his classes. Yet Johnny has less power to understand the problems now than he had at first and his mother sighs as she says, "The poor boy seems to have no head for arithmetic!" Poor boy indeed. But the fault is with his mother more than with him. Her mistaken kindness has nearly ruined all the head he had at first. If she had refused to tell him every step, and had explained the principles, letting him work them out for himself, he might have been a genius today instead of the dunce that he is.

Johnny has a host of imitators in the Christian church. Not that they are all lazy. Far from it. Many of them are really zealous, conscientious disciples. But they are the victims of a mistaken ideal. They have been trained by a false method of spiritual culture, and so long as they adhere to this false method their zeal cannot save them from ultimate disaster. They are accepting a counterfeit gospel in place of the true coin and conscientiousness on their part will not transform their loss into gain.

They are the disciples who seek for a definite "Thou shalt," or "Thou shalt not," by which to decide every question of life and conduct. They find it in the Bible if possible. If not, then in the rules of their church or the advice of some older disciple. When all other means fail they treat the Bible like a heathen oracle and extort an answer by blindly touching its pages and reading the passages thus pointed out.

Such methods do not produce strong, virile sainthood. They do not develop spiritual intelligence and power. They do not increase the fruitfulness and influence of the church. Their only result is a manifestation of spiritual pettiness that is closely akin to frivolity. They keep the disciple in a state of perpetual infancy.

ATTENTION!

ENDEAVORERS:

School days are drawing to a close, and vacation will soon be here,—where will you spend your vacation?

Haven't decided; in fact, have scarcely thought about it.

Well, then, how about
S H I P S H E W A N A ?

What's at Shipshewana?

The Young People's Camp and Training School.

Just how would that benefit me?

It would give you spiritual, Intellectual, physical and recreational training.

When is it held?

July 17 to 24. And I advise you to begin now to lay your plans to attend.

C. D. Whitmer,
Publicity Superintendent.

Jesus embodied all righteousness in two principles. Love to God and love to man, and bade his disciples solve life's numberless problems by those. What result? "Blunders?" Yes, blunders many and failures more. But in spite of blunders and failures,—nay, even by the aid of these, growth, progress, strength, manhood. That has been the history of the church. It must be your history, my young friend.

Don't you remember how you bungled and fumbled over that difficult problem in "quadrates" when you were in the high school? The teacher refused to help you, and made you work it out for yourself, and when, after more than a week of hard thinking, you conquered it, you knew that you had taken a long stride in your knowledge of algebra.

Why not do the same in the School of Christ? When some hard question of duty thrusts itself upon you don't search for precepts, don't ask your pastor or Sunday school teacher. They have problems enough of their own. Think the matter out for yourself in the light of the Gospel principles. You may blunder sometimes, and get a figure wrong here or there, but practice will quickly make you perfect, and every question thus answered will mark a forward step in your spiritual life. It will stand for a definite increase of wisdom and power.

In the quality of the converts he rejoices and adds this testimony: "The best specimen of a Christian hero I ever met was one of the native missionaries."

It was James Chalmers, the pioneer missionary to New Guinea, that captivated Stevenson's imagination and turned him into a hero-worshipper. Writing to his mother on board the S. S. Lubeck, between Sydney and Tonga, he says: "We have a very interesting party on board. Messrs' Chalmers and Hunt, of the London Society, and Mr. Brown, of the Wesleyan. Chalmers and Brown are pioneer missionaries, splendid men, with no humbug, plenty of courage, and the love of adventure. I have become a terrible missionaryite of late days: very much interested in their work, errors, and merits. Perhaps it's in the blood, though it has been a little slow in coming out. No, to be sure, I always liked the type. Chalmers, a big, stout, wildish-looking man, iron-gray, with big bold black eyes, and a deep straight furrow down each cheek. Etat forty to forty-five."

Over and over again Chalmers is mentioned in his letters. To his close friend, Sidney Colvin, to whom most of the "Vallima Letters" were written, he says: "I wish you to get Pioneering in New Guinea, by J. Chalmers. It's a missionary book, and has less pretensions to be literature than Spurgeon's Sermons. Yet I think even through that, you will see some of the traits of the hero that wrote it; a man that took one fairly by storm for the most attractive, simple, brave, and interesting man in the whole Pacific."

A year later he writes to professor Baildon: "I could hardly change (life) with any man of my time, unless perhaps it were Gordon or our friend Chalmers: a man I admire for his virtues, love for his faults, and envy for the really Al life he has ... I shall look forward to some record of your time with Chalmers. You can't weary me of that fellow: he is as big as a house and far bigger than any church."

Little wonder then that Stevenson confided to Chalmers himself in a letter written shortly before the latter's death: "But, oh! Tamate! If I had met you when I was a boy and a bachelor, how different my life would have been."—Missionary Review of the World.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

Robert Louis Stevenson and Missions

By Rev. J. W. Burton, Melbourne, Australia

There is little doubt that the first state of Robert Louis Stevenson, in relation to Foreign Missions, is that of many an uninformed writer today, and the manner in which his point of view was changed is one of the romances of literature. The quiet, persistent pressure of facts completely changed his attitude, and the bohemian "R. L. S.," who has charmed a world with his stories, poems and essays, actually became a Sunday school teacher in a Samoan mission school, and a supporter of missions to the day of his death!

"I suppose," he writes, in a paper read before a missionary meeting in Sydney in 1893, "I am in the position of many persons. I had conceived a great prejudice against missions in the South Seas. I had no sooner come there than that prejudice was reduced, and then at last annihilated. Those who deblatrate against missions have only one thing to do, to come and see them on the spot. They will see a great deal of good done, they will see a race being forwarded in many different directions, and, I believe, if they be honest persons, they will cease to complain of mission work and its effects. At the same time, and infallibly in all sublimary matters, they will see a great deal of harm done. I am very glad to think that the new class of missionaries are by no means so radical as their predecessors. I have spoken to many missionaries, and I have pleasure to say that the most intelligent among them are of one opinion, and that the true one. They incline to think that it is best to proceed by little and little, and not by much and much."

It was in the Marquesas Islands that Stevenson first came into touch with the missionary on the spot, and his picture of the Pere Simeon, is one of the finest he has ever drawn. "I had feared to meet a missionary, feared to find the narrowness and the self-sufficiency that deface their publications, that too often disgrace their behavior." But in Pere Simeon he found man truly serving in the Spirit of Christ, whose business it was "to smooth the pillows of this dying family of man." ...

It was, however, during his long residence in Samoa, where he built himself a beautiful home at Vallima, some four miles from Apia, that he came into the most intimate and sympathetic touch with missionary work, and there the missionaries were among his closest and most valued friends. Of the Rev. W. E. Clarke, a London Missionary Society missionary, he writes: "The Excellent Clarke up here almost all day yesterday, a man I esteem and like to the soles of his boots; I prefer him to anyone in Samoa, and to most people in the world; a real good missionary, with the inestimable advantage of having grown up a layman. Pity they can't all get that!"

Stevenson grew impatient with those easy critics of missions who blame without discrimination the heroic efforts of these comparatively unknown workers: "Those who have a taste for hearing missions, Catholic or Protestant, decried, must seek their pleasure elsewhere than in my pages. Whether Catholic or Protestant, with all their gross blots, with all their deficiency of candor, of humor, and of commonsense, the missionaries are the best and most useful whites in the Pacific."

The Story of the Cock and the Hen

By Mrs. Orville D. Jobson

(Fourth of a series of African Folk Stories, collected and selected by Sister Jobson, missionary of French Equatorial Africa, and published at intervals in The Evangelist.—EDITOR.)

Once upon a time in the very old days the cock and the hen were jungle fowls, and did not know village life at all. They lived in the jungle and were feared by all the animals, because they had large red combs on their heads, and they said that these combs were full of fire.

Now all animals are very much afraid of fire, so the cock and the hen ruled the jungle, because if ever one of the animals displeased them they said: "If you do not do what I want I will burn you with my comb. Do you not see that it is red-hot?"

One day the old mother Leopard came home and found that the fire in the kitchen had gone out, and she said to her little cub: Run to the cock's house and ask him to give you a few bits of glowing charcoal to make our fire."

The cub went obediently but he found the cock fast asleep, and he was afraid to wake him.

The mother Leopard said, "Take a little dry grass and creep up softly to the cock and light the grass from his comb." But the cub was afraid to go alone, so his mother went with him. They crept up to the sleeping cock and hen gently and put the dry grass against their combs, but it did not light, and the grass was not even scorched, and the mother Leopard put out her paw and touched them, and the combs were quite cold, although they looked red-hot.

Then she knew that the cock and hen had been telling untruths all these years, and she said. "Now I know that you don't tell the truth. Your combs are quite cold; there is no fire in them. The animals will not fear you any more; I am going to tell them all about it."

The cock and hen did not wait to hear what the animals in the jungle thought about it. They packed up their things and ran away to the village, and since that day they have never returned to the jungle. They have always lived with men, and they like being safely shut up at nights, for even now the Leopards have not forgotten and kill them if they find them out at night.

Bozoum, Par Bangui,
French Equatorial Africa.

INDIA SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION

The annual report of the India Sunday School Union presents a year of unusual progress. Miss Elizabeth Moreland joined the staff. She is allocated to that work for three or more years by the American Free Methodist Mission. Many deputation visits were made to various parts of India by Dr. James Kelly, Secretary of the British Section of the World's Sunday School Association, during his two months' stay in that country.

Note:—The Examining Board should at all times thoroughly question the candidate concerning this message, in order to define its meaning clearly to the candidate and ascertain beyond question if he accepts it.

7. What experience have you had in Christian work?

- In Sunday School?
- In Christian Endeavor?
- In Gospel Team work?
- In preaching?
- In other ways of serving the Lord?

8. In what way has the Lord blessed your Christian work?

9. What educational preparation have you?

- Common School?
- High School?
- Collegiate?
- Seminary?
- Otherwise?

10. What further educational preparation do you plan?

11. How much of your educational preparation have you taken at Ashland College or Seminary?

12. Do you plan to take additional educational preparation at Ashland?

13. Do you promise to devote full time to the Christian ministry?

14. Have you been called to become the pastor of a church?

MINISTERIAL EXAMINING BOARD—

Chairman, Charles H. Ashman.

Secretary, Jos. L. Gingrich.

W. C. Benshoff.

KITTANNING AND BRUSH VALLEY

The Kittanning Brethren church has just had such a great blessing that we simply must pass on the news to others. We have just closed our First Annual Bible Conference. Brother A. V. Kimmell of the Philadelphia First church was the Bible Lecturer. The meeting lasted only a week, from April 16 to 22, but the results will last for many weeks. The whole church has received a new vision, a renewed love for the Bible, and a deeper interest in the study of the Word of God. Brother Kimmell used in most of the lectures a chart portraying the dispensations of the Bible which helped to clarify the plan of the Bible. A question-box was used and created much interest. One feature of the meeting was the Sunshine Choir of about 40 children, who sang choruses under Brother Kimmell's direction and attended faithfully almost every night. Three male quartets from different churches sang on various nights. Other churches sent delegations several evenings, the Brush Valley church being represented splendidly Wednesday evening. The Bible Conference closed with the Communion Service. Even though the meeting was not evangelistic, God honored the preaching of his Word and seven young men and women made the great confession besides one reconsecration. We expect all of the seven to be baptized and become members of the church.

During the past few months we have completed the study of the Book of Romans in the prayer meeting services at both churches. The Christian Endeavor Expert classes that have been studying throughout the winter have closed with eight graduating from the Brush Valley church and four from the Kittanning church. A Teacher Training Class is being conducted at Brush Valley by the Sunday School Superintendent, Brother C. L. Hooks, while the pastor is teaching one at West Kittanning.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Commencement Events:

Baseball at Ashland; Heidelberg, May 21; Otterbein, May 24; Wooster, May 28 (May Day).

Friday, May 27, Junior-Senior Banquet.

Saturday, May 28, 10:00 A. M., Redwood Stadium, May Day Exercises. Sophocles' "Electra."

Saturday, May 28, 12:30 P. M. Alumni Banquet, at La Charme.

Saturday, May 28, 8:00 P. M., High School Auditorium, Senior Class Play—"Broken Dishes."

Sunday, June 5, 3:00 P. M., Baccalaureate Service, Park Street Brethren Church, President Edwin E. Jacobs.

Wednesday, June 8, 10:00 A. M., Chapel, Recognition services.

Wednesday, June 8, 8:00 P. M., Park Street Church, Class Address, Dr. B. O. Skimmer, State Superintendent of Schools of Ohio; followed by the President's Reception in the church parlors.

Thursday, June 9, 10:00 A. M., College Gymnasium, Annual Class Day Exercises.

Junior Recital, College Chapel, 8:00 P. M., May 17, Misses Tieman, Helbert, and Reed.

Graduate Recitals. College Chapel, all at the hour of 8:00 P. M., as follows:

Misses Gardner and Mason, May 25.
Misses Jesson and Berkheiser, May 31.
Misses Neff and Webster, June 1.
Misses Steele and McKinley, June 2.
Misses Kime and Hoppes June 6.

Graduates:

Bachelor's Degree .....	70
Two Year Education .....	29
Piano .....	2
Voice .....	1
Public Speaking .....	4
Total .....	106

Total for the year:

The College of Arts and Sciences .....	401
Summer School, 1931 .....	322
Special Departments .....	105
Grand Total minus all duplicates .....	732

This is the largest graduating class in the history of the institution. Seventy with the Bachelor's degree is a large number and makes Ashland one of the ranking colleges of Ohio.

Mr. Herman Hoyt, of Ashland, of the pre-seminary course, is the valedictorian.

Miss Geraldine Ryan, of Ashland, of the arts course, is the salutatorian.

Friends of the College are cordially invited to attend the above named events.

Educational Day has been set for the second Sunday in June. The Board of Trustees at their last annual meeting again authorized its observance. Printed matter will reach the various churches soon.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

STATEMENT OF FACTS FROM MINISTERIAL EXAMINING BOARD OF THE PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Inasmuch as certain misrepresentative reports are being circulated in the Brethren Church concerning the work of the Ministerial Examining Board of the Pennsylvania District Conference of Brethren Churches, we present the following facts which we are prepared to prove:

1. No worthy candidate for the Eldership has been rejected solely because of lack of sufficient educational preparation.

2. No candidate has ever been rejected just because he has never attended or graduated from either Ashland College or Seminary.

3. The final rejection or acceptance of any candidate for the Eldership in our District rests with the local congregation. The Board, after careful examination, only recommends to the local church.

4. The Ministerial Examining Board serves absolutely under the direction and control of the District Conference, annually reporting its work in writing for the approval, revision, or rejection of the Conference.

5. The Standard for Examination of Candidates for the Eldership in our District adopted at the Conference held in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in October, 1930, according to which all candidates are examined is as follows:

1. "Do you feel definitely called of the Lord to the Christian Ministry?"

a. In what way has this call come?

2. Has your local church recommended you to the Ministerial Board for examination?

a. When and in what way?

3. How long have you been a Christian?

4. How long have you been a member of the Brethren Church?

5. Are you married?

a. Is your wife in accord with your becoming a minister?

b. Are you the husband of more than one living wife?

c. Are your children Christians? Members of the Brethren Church?

6. Do you believe in and accept the Message of the Brethren Ministry?

In March we published the first edition of "The Brethren Herald", quarterly parish paper designed to bring a message to people we could not personally reach. It has been received with much favor in the entire community. Since our last report there have been five baptisms and accessions to the Kittanning church, and one to Brush Valley. On May 15, the Blanco Brethren church has to have a Brethren preaching service for the first time in many years. Will you pray that this church may be revived, reorganized, and given a new vision of the work of the Lord? We praise him alone for the victories that have been won.

ROBERT D. CREES, Kittanning, Pa.

REPORT OF THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT BIBLE CONFERENCE

Once again we desire, through the columns of the Evangelist to report the annual Bible Conference of the Northern California Brethren churches, which convened in Lathrop between the third and the tenth of April. Although the arrangements for the conference were perhaps a little less elaborate than in previous years, the fellowship enjoyed was of the highest type, the messages inspiring, the attendance very good, and the general results strengthening to all three churches participating.

Heretofore we have planned for all-day sessions during the entire week with two meals each day served by the hostess church, and financed by the conference. Realizing the wisdom of cutting down expenses as much as possible, and still desiring to have the same social and spiritual contact, we arranged for afternoon and evening sessions only, asking those who came from a distance to carry with them a basket lunch for evening refreshment. If we were a bit dubious about the feasibility of the plan at the outset, our doubts were truly without foundation, as every one cooperated. The informality, of all helping to do their bit, made for the happiest time of fellowship, the plan working out most satisfactorily. The members of the Lathrop church were most generous with their hospitality, causing all who attended to feel perfectly at home. They spoke many times of the blessings they felt they had received and there is no doubt that the benefits were reflex, for as you give, so shall you receive.

We were indeed happy to have our dear Sister Gribble accept our invitation to be the principal speaker on our program. As she has so gloriously fulfilled the great commission of our Lord as given in Matthew 28:18-20, the program committee thought it very fitting to select the word "Witnessing" as the general theme for the conference. Several inspiring, heart searching messages were given by those who took part in the program. Brother Wine, from the Church of the Brethren in Empire brought a very fine expository message along that line of thought. Short talks on "Witnessing in the Home" and "Witnessing in the Business Life" were given by lay members. Some very worth while thoughts were brought out and were much appreciated by all.

Rev. J. Wesley Platt, pastor of the Manteca church, and Rev. N. W. Jennings, pastor of the church at Turlock were untiring in the efforts they put forth, to make the conference a spiritual blessing to all who availed themselves of the privilege of attending. I wish it were possible to pass on to the readers of the Evangelist some of the thoughts presented by these servants of God. The two first messages brought by these speakers had for a general thought, "The Death and Resurrection of our Lord." They had in mind the hope of putting resurrection life and glory into the conference, a desire which was definitely realized. Other discourses presented dealt with such subjects as, "Ye are Witnesses of These Things"; "Be Your Own Best Self" and "Seven Foundations or Fundamentals." The latter subject was presented under seven distinct heads. Genesis 1:1 and John 1:1 were chosen to prove these points; first, In the beginning, God; second, God created; third, God spoke; fourth, God came; fifth, God redeemed; sixth, God is here; seventh, God is coming again. Judging from the type of subject matter, one would realize that real spiritual food was not withheld.

It was with deep regret that Dr. Gribble was not able to appear on the program as many times as was arranged. She spoke Tuesday evening and expected to speak again on Wednesday afternoon, but was taken very ill with a serious cold and was not able to be out again until Saturday. On Thursday an anointing service was held for her by Brothers Platt and Jennings. To the faithful, believing child of God, this service is always a blessing, and truly the grace of God was manifested in a wonderful way, in restoring our sister. The happy, trusting spirit of Sister Gribble was an inspiration. She assured us she had had a happy time with the Lord in her illness, and no doubt her prayers did much toward the successful outcome of the conference.

The entire day, Saturday, was given over to the young people. Dr. Gribble brought them a message in the afternoon.

Sunday, we were happy to have with us Rev. Roger Darling, who spoke both in the morning and evening. Brother Darling served as pastor in this district for so many years he is greatly loved, and never fails to have among his listeners many of his old friends. Even though Brother Darling is not working entirely in the Brethren Church, he is still a Brethren, and we appreciate and are thankful for his loyal support.

Dr. Gribble brought her last message, "Why the Waste, For the Glory of God and the Testimony of Jesus Christ," on Sunday afternoon. Almost all, if not all, of the churches in the brotherhood have perhaps heard her speak along this line, so you know how she moves her audience with the tender message she brings to you. When we hear truths presented by a person so spirit-filled, one who has sacrificed so much and is willing to give more, we are moved to weigh ourselves in the balance. Are we doing all we can to witness for him in the home land, and through our prayers and material gifts to help carry on the work she has given her life to?

The Conference closed Sunday evening. We had indeed been blessed. To the little church and her faithful people in Lathrop we extended our thanks for their hospitality. Ere I close this little article I want to add just a few lines which I am sure will interest many readers of the Evangelist. The Lathrop church will soon celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary. It is the oldest Brethren church in California, and it was through the faithful sacrifice and the desire of its early members to witness for Christ, by establishing other Brethren churches in this beautiful state, that we have such a strong constituency in Los Angeles and vicinity. From a little acorn sturdy oaks have grown, so from the little church in Lathrop, seed sown has brought a real harvest. A short history of the work of these early pioneers was given by Sister Lois Shank, one of the three surviving members who helped to carry on the work of expansion. We are small in number in the Northern District, but we are proud to claim as one of our number the mother church of California.

If the Lord tarries, the Conference for 1933 will be held in the Turlock church.

Resolutions adopted at the close of the Conference are herewith submitted for publication, along with the annual report.

Resolutions Passed by the Northern California District Conference, Meeting in Lathrop, California, April 3d to April 10th

Whereas, it has pleased the Almighty God to give us the privilege of assembling again in Conference, and

Whereas, we have immensely enjoyed the Christian fellowship that has been manifested in all the services, therefore be it

Resolved, that we, as a Northern California Conference, especially thank God for giving us the privilege of having our dear Sister Gribble with us, and hearing her inspiring messages, but deeply regret that illness has prevented her from attending all the services, and be it further

Resolved, that we, as a Conference extend to Brother Wine thanks for the fine fellowship and splendid messages given by him, and be it further

Resolved, that we wish to express our appreciation to Brothers Platt, Jennings and Darling for their contributions in the way of messages, which were an inspiration to all, and be it further

Resolved, that we especially thank the Turlock Brethren for their attendance and support to all the sessions of the Conference, and be it further

Resolved that we, as a Resolution Committee, heartily endorse Brother Platt's report, and commend his work as a member of the Home Mission Board at the National Conference at Winona Lake, and be it further

Resolved, that we approve of the suggestion that a fund be raised to help defray the expense of a delegate to represent Northern California Conference at the General Conference each year, and be it further

Resolved, that we as a Conference spend much time in earnest prayer to God to guide us as a church in our local and national problems, and finally,

Brethren, whereas the blessings mentioned have been but a small portion of what we have received, we present these resolutions with the recommendation that they be accepted, to the glory of God.

RESOLUTION COMMITTEE:

Paul F. Gibson,
Melvin Stoner,
Freda Wolfe.

MRS. CLARA LUNDAHL,
Conference Secretary.

TOO BUSY TO LIVE

(Commended to Persons Afflicted with Huryitis)

He hadn't time to greet the day,
He hadn't time to laugh or play;
He hadn't time to wait a while,
He hadn't time to give a smile;
He hadn't time to glean the news,
He hadn't time to dream or muse;

He hadn't time to train his mind,
 He hadn't time to be just kind;
 He hadn't time to see a joke,
 He hadn't time to write his folk;
 He hadn't time to eat a meal,
 He hadn't time to deeply feel;
 He hadn't time to take a rest,
 He hadn't time to act his best;
 He hadn't time to help a cause,
 He hadn't time to make a pause;
 He hadn't time to pen a note,
 He hadn't time to cast a vote;
 He hadn't time to sing a song,
 He hadn't time to right a wrong;
 He hadn't time to send a gift,
 He hadn't time to practice thrift.
 He hadn't time to exercise,
 He hadn't time to scan the skies;
 He hadn't time to heed a cry,
 He hadn't time to say good-by;
 He hadn't time to study poise.
 He hadn't time to repress noise;
 He hadn't time to go abroad,
 He hadn't time to serve his God;
 He hadn't time to lend or give,
 He hadn't time to really live;
 He hadn't time to read this verse,
 He hadn't time—he's in a hurry.

—Grenville Kleiser, in Churchman.

Justice in judgment is a much-needed christian virtue. A modest slowness in forming opinions denotes a really fine and strong character.

N PARTNERSHIP WITH HIS FATHER

I heard somewhere of a bishop who had been traveling over the country preaching for fifty years. One morning he came down for breakfast at a hotel and was seated at a small table opposite a young man. Before the bishop could unfold his napkin the pleasant young man had said, "Good morning." "Good morning," replied the bishop.

There was a moment's pause and then the young man said eagerly, "I am a traveling man."

The bishop thought of the thousands of miles he had traveled in his ministry and said, "So am I."

"My line is jewelry," pursued the young man.

The bishop thought of Malachi 3:17, "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, at that day when I make up my jewels," and answered, "So is mine."

"This is my first trip," said the young man.

The bishop replies, "I have been traveling for the same firm fifty years."

"I represent my own house, for I travel for my father," continued the young man.

"So do I," said the bishop earnestly.

Then said the young man eagerly, "I am determined to make good, for when I go home I want to carry father a good report."

"So do I," responded the bishop prayerfully.—Selected.

OUR LITTLE READERS

FOLLOWING DADDIE

By Florence Jones Hadley

"Harold, Harold, where you going? Come back, dear," and Louise Wade called anxiously from the doorway to her little son of three years old, who was valiantly trying to follow after his father, who had gone out to the field.

Harold stopped, then started on again, calling back, "I'm dess goin' after my Daddie. See, muver? I can walk dess where Daddie does," stretching his tiny legs to place each foot in the tracks ahead of him.

"But you must not go, dear. See how muddy it is. Come back and mother will show you a better way. Come," reaching out her arms persuasively.

The child shook his head as he plunged on. "I guess my Daddie knows the very bestest way, and I am goin' where my Daddie does." On he went, his tiny feet sinking deep in the mud of the path.

Mother started and picking up the child who resisted with all his little might, stood still on the muddy road. "Look, dear, see how deep the mud is? Mother's boy could never get through there."

The child looked a long minute, then.

The boy wants a father to be a pal, and a father enjoys the companionship of his boy.

"Can't I go where my Daddie goes? Is mud dess for big folks, mamma?"

The mother felt something like a stab in her heart at the artless but searching question, but before she could answer the little fellow straightened as he declared, "When I get big I'm dess goin' where my Daddie does. Can't I, muver? I can go in the mud, too, for my Daddie dess likes the mud. When I get so—big—I can go, can't I muver?" and his blue eyes shone with pleasure at the thought of following Daddie, even through muddy ways.

Mother said nothing, for there was nothing she could say that would not let her little son know that his Daddie, while the best of men, as Louise valiantly declared to herself, was not careful enough of the paths he took through life.

He took the path that led to where "the boys" met for a good time, taking a few drinks just for the fun of breaking a foolish law and getting away with it, as he declared with a relish. And he laughed at his wife's remonstrances, saying that a man must be a man, not a sissy to sit down with his embroidery or the latest novel. Oh, yes, to be sure, there were some very questionable stories told at the meeting place, stories that he would not repeat to her, but were all right for men folks.

Then, John was apt to be careless in his conversation, saying things she did not wish her child to hear, bits of harmful gossip, even "swear words" would slip from him so easily, "just to make it emphatic," as he would say laughingly, pinching her cheek as he reproved her for her foolishness.

Louise was thinking of all this, and to her they were the mud and the mire that her little one had declared he would go through just to follow Daddie. For did not Daddie know the very bestest way?

That night as Louise sat with the little fellow cuddled in her arms, sleepy, although he would not admit it, she was thinking it all over, for all day long the thought of "following Daddie" rang in her ears until she found it had set itself to a little tune.

As the lids dropped over the blue eyes at last, in spite of the determination to keep awake till Daddie went to bed, Louise looked down on the sweet, innocent face, seeing again the muddy path, the tiny feet trying to set themselves in each step made by the father's larger feet, she heard the promise that when he was "so—big—" he would follow Daddie, come what would, for his Daddie knows the very bestest way. Then she told the story to John, who had laughingly offered a penny for her thoughts.

It was a very sober Daddie who listened until the story was finished. "And it was easy then," concluded Louise, "for I was there to keep him out of the mire, but I may not always be there, and it will depend on you, John. Harold is going to follow you, he says, and he is of such a determined nature that I do not doubt that he will keep his word. Oh, honey, what about it?" and the tears came with a rush as she turned to her husband.

For a long minute John was silent, then, slipping his arms around her, he answered, "Daddie is going to take the very bestest path he knows, little girl, and it will not be through the mire, either. From now on, there is to be a new path, one that our little one can follow with clean feet and pray God that mother may long to be near to see to it that Daddie keeps his path straight and clean. Going to follow Daddie, is he? Bless his heart, what a little sermon he has given."—The Presbyterian Advance.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA

The First Brethren church of Dallas Center, Iowa, will observe communion service Sunday evening, March 15, at 7:30 o'clock. We invite all of like faith to enjoy this service with us.

AUSTIN R. STALEY, Pastor.

ASHLAND, OHIO

The semi-annual Spring communion service of the Ashland, Ohio, congregation will be held on Sunday evening, May 15, at 7 P. M. Neighboring Brethren and all of like faith are invited to participate in this blessed service.

DYOLL BELOTE, Pastor.

WILLIAMSTOWN, OHIO

The semi-annual communion service of the Williamstown Brethren church will be held May 15th, at 8:00 o'clock P. M. The customary invitation to all of like faith is extended.

CONARD SANDY, Pastor.

GRETN A CHURCH, BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO

The Brethren at this place will hold their mid-year communion service at 8:00 o'clock on the evening of May 22. All of like precious faith are invited to share this service with us.

CONARD SANDY, Pastor.

EDUCATIONAL DAY

THE SECOND SUNDAY IN JUNE

The Board of Trustees of Ashland College has again authorized the observance of this day. The National Ministerial Association in the past also sanctioned its observance, as well as the National Conference.

THE NEED

As the readers of the Evangelist well know, our gifts count as if they were interest paid on Endowment Funds at the rate of 5%. This means that every $1,000 given counts as if we had $20,000 in Endowment Funds.

The College lacks over $100,000 enough permanent funds to keep it in the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. This means that we MUST receive gifts to the amount of over $5,000. This is a large amount to collect annually and the gifts on Educational Day must furnish the bulk of this amount.

These gifts, of course, go into the common treasury and therefore help the Seminary as well as the College. Both are closing a most successful year, but they could not if it were not for the gifts.

Let the churches make this a matter of deep concern and prayer. Goal: An offering from every congregation.

THE EDUCATIONAL BOARD

OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH

VOL. LIV
Number 21

May 21
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

EDUCATION

Dangerous Education

Godless education is the world's most dangerous force. Germany tried it previous to the Great War and the world suffered horribly from it. There were no private Christian Colleges in Germany. Had there been there would have been a great and influential body of cultured and capable men and women who would not have been subject to military domination as were the large group of intelligentsia who, early in the war, issued a manifesto to the world justifying Germany's position. Let Christian colleges die and worse wars than the one just closed will harass mankind. If the Christless, scientific mind controls the university laboratories where are discovered and tested the destructive forces of nature and the political powers as well, we may be sure that Satan will not fail to take due advantage in order to wage war against Christ. The educated Saul of Tarsus was a most potent and fearsome enemy of the Savior until Jesus captured his great, disciplined and cultured powers for his cause and Kingdom. In the kingdom of culture Jesus must reign. Upon regeneration and his kind of education Jesus must depend to save the world from going wholly against him.—President M. B. Adams, in Western Recorder.

Educational Day

The second Sunday in June is the time to lift your offering for Christian Education.

The Slogan: An Offering from Every Congregation.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Baby Martyr

At last the dreadful days of suspense and waiting are over for the Lindbergh parents. The lost child is found, murdered evidently, the pathetic martyr of a pretended civilization which cannot control its own lawlessness. It would not be true to say that the "heart of the world" goes out in sympathy to the sorrowing father and mother. For the world contains people who evidently cannot be touched with such feelings, else there could have been no kidnapping nor murder. But there is no decent man or woman living whose heart is not touched with the tragedy at Hopewell.

NOT the First

Nineteen centuries ago a Child was born in Bethlehem, a Child who was destined to sit as King upon the throne of David. A Roman king, ruling in Judea by the grace of Caesar, decided to make sure that there would be no competitor for his position and therefore gave orders to kill every child in Bethlehem two years old and under. Between the slaughter of the innocents by Herod and the slaughter of the Lindbergh baby by the gangsters of the modern world there is not much difference, except that no one had the power to prevent the former, but we have the power to prevent such things as the recent tragedy.

WHAT Will We Do About It?

The entire country has been aroused with the kidnapping and murder of the Lindbergh baby. The search for the criminals has assumed world-wide proportions. The President has officially thrown the federal resources behind the search. Congress has devoted time to a discussion of the case and a bill is proposed authorizing the offer of a one hundred thousand dollar reward. Private fortunes have been placed at the disposal of the Lindberghs. Literally millions of people are demanding that something be done.

We can find no fault with this mighty surge of indignation and determination to bring the murderers to justice. All this is entirely justified. But it needs to be pointed out that America will never make any real progress against crime until we become aroused thus over every similar act of lawlessness. Not very long ago, a little group of playing children were raked with the machine guns of gangsters on the streets of New York. People read about it at the breakfast table, and promptly forgot the matter. In the sight of God, the Lindbergh child is not worth more than the baby of an unknown tenement mother. Until this country comes to the place where human life, everywhere and anywhere, is regarded inviolably sacred, little progress will be made against its destroyers.

THE Jewel of Consistency

Many of the people of this country who are crying for speedy vengeance upon the killers of the Lindbergh child are at the same time speaking in terms of praise regarding the "Russian experiment" and demanding that the United States recognize the Soviet government. Yet the Soviet has legalized the killing of children. In Russia, if you have an unborn child that you do not want, the government will not only authorize its destruction under certain conditions, but will furnish a surgeon to do the work. Try to remember this next time you hear of someone pleading for the recognition of the present Russian government. It will help you think straight.

AN Eye for an Eye

There is at present a widespread demand in this country for the abolition of capital punishment, and strange to say it comes for the most part from those who claim to represent the scientific viewpoint in the field of criminology. Doubtless, the murder of the Lindbergh child will give this agitation a setback. At any rate, most people seem to feel that in case the killers are apprehended the ancient Mosaic law should be applied—"An eye for an eye." If the sentimental professors feel differently, apparently none of them so far have had the courage to declare themselves. But once the wave of public indignation is spent, as it will be, they will come forth again. They will tell you that criminals are not responsible, but should be treated as those who are diseased and sick are treated. And the criminals will laugh, and go on killing.

Some twenty-five hundred years ago the land of Israel was infested with the prophets of Baal. Archaeology, by unearthing the pitiful skeletons of newborn infants buried under their temples, have proven their rites of worship included the awful institution of child-sacrifice. Remember this the next time you read of Elijah's contest with the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel. At the end of the contest, Elijah took 450 of them down to the brook Kishon and cut them in pieces there without mercy. It was severe justice, but it cleared the land of the baby-killers. Perhaps the modern machinery of justice needs a little of Elijah's steel.

THERE is One Who Cares

But no matter what may be done in the interest of justice, there is no human help for the bereaved parents. All mere human words of consolation are but bows drawn at a venture. We may hope, therefore, that their eyes will be turned toward him Whose words have never failed to bring comfort of the sorrowing heart; and that they may find in him the peace that the world cannot give. There is no healing of the troubled heart apart from Christ.

Enthroned in the heavens, our Lord is just as interested in the life of a child as he was while upon earth. He who took little children in his arms and blessed them; he that made a little child the symbol of those who enter into God's Kingdom, and pronounced a stern doom upon all those who cause them to stumble; he that notes the sparrow's fall—he will not forget.

BEST of All

This Lord of ours, to whom a little form is infinitely precious, is coming back to earth to establish his Kingdom on the earth. In his days there will be no organized crime, no kidnapped children, no parents sitting in the loneliness of sorrow. "He shall save the children of the needy and break in pieces the oppressor. . . . And precious shall their blood be in his sight." (Psa. 72:4, 14)

In that glad day parents will not be called upon to guard their children from gangsters and degenerates, and "The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing the streets thereof." (Zech. 8:5).

AFTER SURRENDER

Is it a dangerous thing to surrender fully to the Lord Jesus Christ? God's children are sometimes actually afraid of making a full and unconditional surrender to him for fear that he may take some advantage of them after this is done. The only "advantage" God will ever take over a fully surrendered child is to bring advantages into that one's life better than one's best hopes or desires. Jacob held off from surrendering fully to God for many years—and they were weary, unsatisfying years, even in the midst of temporal prosperity. But Jacob finally "let go and let God," and new blessings began. He was to meet his brother Esau the next day; he knew that Esau had promised to kill him, and word had now come that Esau was coming to meet him with four hundred men. This was one of the circumstances undoubtedly used of God to bring Jacob, in fear and trembling, to his long-delayed surrender. And what happened when day dawned and the dreaded "collision" with Esau came? "And Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck, and kissed him; and they wept." Somehow God had gone ahead, as he so often does, and had changed the heart of the older brother. Who can say that Jacob's surrender was not a factor in opening the way, in God's mysterious working, for this miraculous change? So the two brothers met, not in hatred and possible murder, but with the old-time love like two little children again. It is always safe to surrender to God. The only danger is in failing to surrender.—Sunday School Times.

IN THIS NUMBER

Support of Education the Duty of All—Editor, . . . . .	3
Some Challenges of the Christian Standard (Part II)—Editor, . . . .	3
The Catholic Lament for Religious Liberty—Editor, . . . . .	4
Editorial Review, . . . . .	4
The Teaching of Religion in a College of Arts and Sciences—E. E. Jacobs, . . . . .	5
What Ails the Church?—H. M. Oberholtzer, . . . . .	6
Significant News and Views, . . . .	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, . . . . .	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rensch, . . . . .	9
Brethren Young People's Camp, . . .	10
The Princeton Declaration of the Church and Missions, . . . . .	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, . . . . .	11
Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits—C. D. Whitmer, . . . . .	11
Answers to Prayer on the Mission Field, . . . . .	12
News from the Field, . . . . .	13-15
Our Little Readers, . . . . .	16
The Tie That Binds, . . . . .	16
In the Shadow, . . . . .	16
Announcements, . . . . .	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Support of Education the Duty of All

Educational Day, the second Sunday in June, has been set apart by General Conference as a time for the lifting of an offering for the support of the educational interests of our church as represented by Ashland College and Seminary. By means of these institutions the church has gone into the business of education, and she is not without warrant for doing so. We say, without hesitation, that it is a phase of the church's true task and that every church and Christian is duty bound to support it.

The teaching responsibility is set forth in the Great Commission. The church is commanded not merely to "go" and "make disciples" and "baptize", but also to "teach"—"teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." Teaching is divinely enjoined. We sometimes forget that. We are wont to stir up enthusiasm about the "going" and the "making of disciples", and we are insistent upon the "baptizing" of all converts according to the truly apostolic mode. And this is all good. But we are all too prone to pass by the "teaching" responsibility with little thought or concern. And that is not good, nor is it wise. We are not in harmony with the divine plan when we leave education out of our program, nor are we laying a strong and enduring foundation on which to build a church. Knowledge gives power and fortifies against error, while ignorance undermines and weakens. And they are both wise and obedient to the will of God who give serious attention to the spread of knowledge, the building of intelligent personality and the training of young people for larger service.

Not only must education needs be done, but it is important that it shall be done under Christian environment, from the Christian viewpoint and in harmony with denominational standards. It is difficult to over-emphasize the importance of this consideration. The world is needing Christian youth today in its places of leadership as never before, and one of the most effective means of producing that kind of leadership is by Christian education. The chances are many times greater of getting the right kind of education. The chances are many times greater of getting the right kind of education at a frankly Christian school than at a large state school that makes no pretense of imparting religious instruction and Christian idealism. Moreover the noblest and most useful Christian leaders have been those who cherished, and developed a loyalty for, the viewpoint and practices of a denomination. Denominational loyalty means strong convictions, and men of such convictions are the kind that the Christian world needs today and the kind that the church needs to give it power and aggressiveness. If the church has something to stand for, let it build convictions to that end, and guard against an educational environment that would tend to neutralize such convictions. That can be done effectively only in a school where denominational ideals prevail. Only a church-controlled school can insist on a Christian viewpoint being presented in classrooms and a respect for denominational tenets fostered. That gives reason for the maintenance of a denominational college and places upon every member of the church an obligation to support it.

Another very vital reason for the church's engaging in educational work is for the training of its spiritual leadership, particularly its ministerial and missionary forces. The church cannot carry on its mission without such leadership, and it is important that that leadership shall be trained, if it is to do the most efficient work. Paul recognized that at the very beginning and admonished young Timothy, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." And the great apostle exemplified a high degree of such preparation in his own mental equipment. The need was never greater for a thoroughly trained ministry than now, and the church has wisely made provision for such training. The college and seminary are dedicated to that end and young men and young women are invited to come and there be prepared for the greatest work that God has given into the hands of humankind. And they are coming and are being trained, and God is calling these young disciples into his fields of service and honoring them with success. That training must be continually made possible to those whom the Lord shall choose. The school must be maintained. That is the duty and the challenge of every member of the church.

The time is at hand when an offering should be taken for the promotion of the educational work of our church. The time may not seem very propitious, from a human point of view, but God's needs cannot wait on man's convenience. This is the time that has been set, and loyalty requires cooperation. It does not specify the amount; God does not require impossibilities of us, but merely that we shall do what we can. Everyone can do that, and be found in the way of duty. If every one will do what he can—not the very least, but the best,—the Lord Jesus will crown that effort, whether it be small or large, with his blessing and we shall have victory. Let every member of every church make an offering to the educational phase of the church's divinely appointed task.

Some Challenges of the Christian Standard

PART III

The last section with which we dealt had to do with ritual, or elements of worship. It must be done sincerely, and not as a mere matter of form, if it is to be acceptable worship in the sight of God. We are now ready for the section beginning with the 19th verse of the 6th chapter of Matthew.

Jesus continues to set forth the righteousness required of members of the kingdom, but here the Christian is shown in his proper relation to the things of the world. What will a man set his heart on? What will he put first in his life? It may be that he will give first attention to gathering and accumulating the treasures of earth. These are good in themselves, but they are not good enough to put at the very center of life. They are passing and cannot be depended on. It is better to set the heart on spiritual realities, upon the values of heaven, for they abide and no one can take them from us. It makes a difference, a vital difference, as to what one spends most of his time seeking, and what one places highest value upon, for that determines the character of his life. Continual seeking after worldly treasures makes the heart cold and greedy and materialistic. Character is formed by, and is found upon the same plane, as the affections of the heart. We become what our treasure is.

Jesus further stresses the value of the spiritual as against the worldly and selfish by referring to the eye and its clearness of vision. What are we using our eyes for? What are we in the habit of seeing with them? The things of spiritual significance, the larger use, the things of eternal worth? Or nothing but materials and commercial values and things to be possessed? Is our vision clear and penetrating, with possibilities of service, or is it beclouded with selfishness and dulled by material possessions? It will make a vast difference upon our lives as to which it is. Jesus' words are striking: "The eye is the lamp of the body: so, if your Eye is generous, the whole of your body will be illumined, but if your Eye is selfish, the whole of your body will be darkened. And if your very light turns dark, then—what a darkness it is!" (Mofatt). The man who has no eye but for things that are selfish, who is always seeing and coveting things of material worth, is like a person without a light standing in the midst of darkness; he gives out no light. But he who has a vision for spiritual things, and sees with eyes that are generous and unselfish, he is full of light and his whole being radiates a benign influence.

There are no two ways about it, he who persists in setting his heart on the world, desiring the things of the world, must give up the things of the kingdom. He who worships wealth cannot worship God. To choose one means to deny the other; to hold to the one means to give up the other. They are like two masters; they cannot both be served at the same time. As Moffatt translates it, "You cannot serve both God and money."

In the remaining verses of this chapter our Lord rebukes the spirit of anxiety and concern on the part of the child of God for the common provisions of life. This is the same spirit of over-concern for the things of this world against which Jesus has just been speaking, differing only in the circumstances. In the one case the mind of the individual is given over to his abundance of worldly goods and in the other he is occupied by his lack of them. Both have their minds set on material things and not on God. Both are forgetful of him and thereby dishonor him. Whether absorbed with thoughts of the treasure one is laying by in store, on the one hand, or of that with which one hopes to obtain the necessities of life on the other hand, in either case the Lord is forsaken and his goodness and mercy treated with contempt. Be not anxious about such things as food and clothing. "The Lord knoweth that ye have need of these things." He who notes the sparrow's fall will not fail to provide for every need of his children. Do not worry, but "seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

(To be continued)

The Catholic Lament for Religious Liberty

We are strong believers in religious liberty, that is, the right of any person or group of persons to worship God according to the dictates of his or their own consciences, and without molestation. But the guarantee of freedom of worship does not carry with it any insurance against criticism of the conduct of the worshippers or of the doctrines they may hold. If a religious group sets forth teachings that seem to others to be false, or if they aspire to ends that affect the common welfare, there should be perfect liberty to expose the error and to point out the truth, and men should be privileged to exercise themselves in every possible and proper way to prevent the leaders of such erroneous cults and ambitious organizations from getting into positions of public trust where they may work against the welfare and liberty of the masses.

This applies very definitely to the representatives of the Roman hierarchy. They cry about the lack of religious liberty, but it is hard to believe it is a sincere cry, for they have perfect liberty to exercise themselves in really religious ways. We are rather inclined to think that the bed-rock foundation of their lament is the fact that the temper of American Protestantism stands squarely across the path by which the Catholic hierarchy would reach the place of political dominance in this country that it exercises in South American and many European countries. Protestantism has reasons to know that such dominance would mean the supplanting of religious liberty with papal control and religious tolerance with arrogance. And because Protestantism is disposed to guard against such an eventuality, we are hearing Catholic leaders complaining against religious prejudice and asking for liberty. That, we think, may be the answer to the question which puzzles The Presbyterian of the South, who, commenting on the demand of a Roman Catholic speaker at the recent Goodwill Conference at Washington,

(Continued on page 8)

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother J. L. Bowman informs us that the communion service for the congregation at Linwood, Maryland, previously announced for May 29th has been postponed till June 5th. Neighboring Brethren are invited.

Two district conferences are to be held in June,—the Southeastern District Conference is scheduled for June 14 to 16 and the place of meeting is Roanoke, Virginia; the Ohio Conference is to meet June 14 to 17 at Bryan.

The Brethren Sunday School Institute of Western and Central Pennsylvania is to be held at Berlin, where Brother N. V. Leatherman, general secretary of the National Sunday School Association is the pastor. The date is May 24th, and the program is one continual offering of good things from morning till night.

Dr. K. M. Monroe, secretary of the Seminary faculty, writes of the recent Seminary commencement exercises, concerning which we made comment in a previous issue. He also recalls his Bible lectures before the union meetings of the Brethren Christian Endeavor societies of Cambria county, conducted in the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

The treasurer of the Southeastern District Mission Board gives the apportionments of the various churches for district mission work and he is desirous that the churches concerned shall pay their amounts promptly. The treasurer is Brother George A. Copp of Strasburg, Virginia. We hope these churches may be able to come before their conference with their apportionments all paid.

In a personal communication from Brother Homer A. Kent of Washington, D. C., he says, "We are happy to announce the arrival of a little son into our home, May 10th. His name is Wendell Eugene. Both mother and baby are doing well." We rejoice with and congratulate Rev. and Mrs. Kent at this blessing of God upon their home.

The churches of the Ohio district are urged to endeavor to have their mission apportionments paid up to date by the first of June, when Brother R. A. Hazen, financial secretary-treasurer, will close his books and print his report for the district conference. You do not want your church marked in arrears with its apportionment, if it is at all possible to pay up. Do it now.

Attention of members of the Southeastern District Conference is called to their conference program published in this issue. Some good things are in store, and when Conference speakers go prepared to give something good, they like to have a goodly attendance there to receive it. Besides the district talent, Prof. Alva J. McClain is to be present as the special lecturer.

Brother E. M. Riddle reports a meeting he recently held at the Dutchtown church eight miles out from Warsaw, Indiana, resulting in thirteen confessions, twelve of whom have been received by baptism and one remains to be baptized. The church was much revived by the services. The prayer meetings and the singing by the young people were the features of the congregation's efforts.

Our correspondent from Allentown, Pennsylvania, reports an enjoyable communion service recently held, when Brother I. D. Bowman and his wife were present and Brother Bowman added to the spiritual enrichment of the occasion by his teaching. The congregation helped their pastor and his wife celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. We, too, congratulate Brother and Sister Christiansen and wish them many more years of happiness and service together.

On the Sunday school page Prof. Stuckey supplies us with detailed information about the Young People's Camp and Training School to be conducted by the National Sunday School Association in cooperation with the Indiana Conference. The place is Shipshewana; the dates, July 17 to 24; the conference is planned for young people of high school age and older, and young folks from any part of the brotherhood are welcome; besides information is given concerning schedule, expenses, and about every other phase of the institution that you might desire. If your questions are not all answered there, write to Prof. M. A. Stuckey at Ashland, Ohio.

The Summit Mills congregation of near Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, recently enjoyed a season of spiritual refreshing under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller and rejoiced to see twenty-six souls make the good confession, twenty of which were baptized on the last day of the meetings. Brother Willis E. Ronk, who shepherds this congregation along with his Meyersdale charge, says this revival was conceived in the minds and hearts of the people rather than urged upon them by their pastor. That speaks well for the spiritual earnestness and concern of the membership, and also for the spiritual nurturing they have been given by the minister. Brother Miller greatly enjoyed his services with this congregation with its strong, substantial members and its splendid young people.

The Teaching of Religion in a College of Arts and Sciences

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

As is well known, by far the majority of the more than six hundred colleges of arts and sciences in the United States were church-founded. It has come about, however, in the course of events, that in not a few cases, the church control has either been completely severed or at least greatly reduced. I note that now in referring to these colleges, many publications designate them as "church connected" colleges. I have come to speak of them as "church-founded" colleges, which seems to me to be the better designation. The reasons for the above-noted conditions are several, but two are prominent.

First of all, in many cases, the controlling church has lagged behind educationally and did not share the scholastic ideals which these church-founded colleges came to possess. Whether right or wrong, the colleges became restless under restraint and sought more freedom in presenting what they thought to be the truth. One needs only to read the history of culture from the early centuries on down to find that the discoveries of Galileo, Kepler, Copernicus, and others were not accepted by the rank and file of the people of Europe. Even so great a man as William Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, which by many is regarded as the greatest discovery ever made within the field of biology, rejected the works of the above-named men, as did also William Shakespeare.

Within the more recent past, the great English universities at Oxford and Cambridge, maintained a freer atmosphere. And this atmosphere was more or less transferred to the early American universities. Meanwhile, as before indicated, many church colleges were founded with the avowed intention of giving some form of Christian education. It should be noted en passant that in many, perhaps most of these colleges, the education of ministers of the church was the chief aim. It should also be noted that since the complete training of the Christian ministers is no longer the major function of these church-founded colleges but has been transferred to the theological seminaries, the atmosphere and spirit of these colleges have also more or less changed.

So it has come about that many church-founded colleges have become more or less severed from the control of the denominations which gave them birth.

But a second reason appears. In addition to the changing function and scholastic ideals, there has been a reversal in the religious convictions and attitudes of many of these colleges. And therein is the crux of the entire matter of what we have come to call "Christian education." While driving the scholastic horses with a tight rein, the rein over the religious half of the team was rather more lax. Many of these colleges did not teach the Bible at all, or else taught it from a purely secular standpoint. It was history, literature, philosophy, or even science, but was not in any sense the revealed Word, which the founders of the college thought it to be. Instead of "teaching religion", they taught "about religion" with the evident result that many of the courses were unfruitful in the way of personal conviction. When a teacher does not hold convictions, what can you expect of the pupils?

To be added to this, there has been, as everyone knows, a liberalizing tendency in practically every field of human activity,—government, the family morals, and amusements, so that by far the majority of students set out from home for college with ideals far more liberal than those of their grandparents, who may have in certain cases, been the founders of the very college which these young people expect to make their alma mater. And it often happens that the parents of these boys and girls demand a stricter mode of religious life at college than they were willing or able to enforce at home.

My own personal opinion is, that Christianity at church colleges can and ought to be taught with power and conviction. This is much easier to say than to do, for the several reasons above noted, but headway can be made, but it can not be made by setting up Bible departments as distinct and conflicting departments of the school. (I am not speaking here of Seminaries but of departments). These departments may be necessary for the purpose of administration but from the standpoint of truth taught there need not be, and certainly should not be, any dissention. Proper training, a scholarly bearing, a broad outlook, and a sympathetic understanding on the part of the teacher, will have a telling effect in classroom work in Bible study as it does in every other department of a college of arts and sciences. A cringing, apologetic, and inferiority attitude, no less than one of narrow bigotry, will defeat the purpose of any course, whether religious or otherwise. The courses ought to be approached as in any other department, with the conviction that the subject matter is both true and important and then from that angle proceed to set forth the various aspects of truth.

To believe that Christian education in the sense in which I conceive it, is an easy subject to handle, is to fail to understand its difficulties, but I maintain that the Christian approach should be maintained in all subjects. I am fully aware of the difficulties in our own college where they are doubtless less than in some other colleges, but aside from this angle of education, it is hard to see why several hundreds of liberal arts colleges should exist. Otherwise, they would be just another cog in the educational machinery of the country.

As I see education today, I am firmly convinced that the church-founded college can offer the advantages of a liberal education under more nearly Christian surroundings than any other form of educational institution. And when the junior college (a delusion greatly loved these days), which is after all but two more years of high school continued under high school conditions, is set up, then nothing will be left for the Christian college to do but to stand back and look on. And may some unseen power save us from that melancholy day!

ASHLAND COLLEGE

An accredited college, under the leadership of President Jacobs, seeks to remain true to the ideals of its founders, and continues in the control of the church.

What Ails the Church?

By H. M. Oberholtzer

Both friends and foes are inquiring today, "What ails the church?" There seems to be something very seriously wrong. Our expectations are not realized. We are often disappointed and sometimes almost discouraged. Of course, nothing ails the Christian church as far as its foundation and principles are concerned. It was divinely instituted. It is founded upon the rock of God's eternal truth that cannot be moved. Jesus said that its foundations are so secure that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The true church, composed of the newborn and Spirit-filled, is Christ's and he will defend and protect it against every evil power and influence. Nothing can corrupt or destroy it. It is "the ground and pillar of truth" and, although assailed from within and without, it will gloriously triumph. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

But when it is asked, "What ails the church?" It is the company of believers in Christ that is organized into various denominations and local groups that is considered. Many are Christians only in name, yet they are said to belong to the church. Many are a hindrance rather than a help. Some are "spots in our love-feasts." Yet, with all of its weakness and imperfection, it is the greatest religious body on earth and its influence in the world has been the most beneficent. However, we cannot be boastful, for we must admit with shame that the church has come far short of attaining or accomplishing what is justly expected of her. There is evidence of something seriously wrong.

When we are sick and call a physician he first considers symptoms. He will probably feel the pulse, take the temperature and ask various questions that will reveal to him the symptoms that will help him to render a correct diagnosis and administer the proper remedy. Let us, in the case before us, also consider the symptoms that we may discover the ailment and to wisely prescribe the remedy.

One of the most noticeable symptoms of ailment in the church today is the small attendance at public worship that prevails so many places. I know that some churches are boasting of large attendance, but many churches with a large membership do not have the proportionate number of members attending services that some of our smaller churches do. I know, too, that a large attendance does not always indicate a healthful spiritual condition, and that it is not the most important objective. It is indeed better to have a small group of God-fearing, devoted and faithful worshippers than a large number of formalists and hypocrites. Yet, I am convinced that our many absences from public worship is a sure index of serious ailment. Empty seats stare at us in brazen mockery every Lord's Day, casting a gloom over our worship, dampening the fervor of our praise and the ardor of the gospel message and giving mute but forceful evidence that there is something seriously wrong. Many seem to have no scruples against Sunday visiting or any other desecration of the Lord's Day. A visit with a friend on the Lord's Day may not be out of place, if it does not interfere with the worship of God, for which the day is intended, but too often it does interfere and becomes the chief cause of empty seats. The automobile is a convenient vehicle to take people to church and will bring the church close to those who are miles away, but too often it is headed in the wrong direction. The summer slump is becoming increasingly disastrous, and is being prolonged into the autumn. We are worried with plans and schemes to restore the lost interest of church members and have scarcely recovered from one slump until another is upon us. But small attendance is not our ailment, it is only a symptom.

The absence of young people from church services in many places is particularly noticeable and the question arises, what ails the church that she does not interest and hold her young people? It is claimed that modern youth cannot be interested with the simple gospel message and that they demand entertainment, amusement, excitement and thrills. Efforts have been made to satisfy these demands. Hymns have been set to livelier tunes; choirs, choruses, orchestras and bands have been organized; moving picture machines have been installed, with picture programs instead of sermons; parlors have been furnished for social enjoyment; gymnasiums have been installed and athletic contests promoted; even dancing floors and billiard tables have been provided by some churches. Thus with much expense and concern many have sought to interest and hold the young people, but competing with the devil and the world in this way is very difficult and ends in failure. If now and then a church seems to hold its youth by such methods, they are not helped spiritually. I am inclined to believe that our young people are just natural young people and that they are reflecting the spirit and influence of their homes. As a rule they are not as much to blame for their lack of interest in the church as their parents. This, therefore, is only a symptom pointing to a serious ailment.

Again it is asked, "what ails the church that it is so hard to raise money to promote its interests?" Social, commercial, political and other organizations raise large sums to promote their interests and do it easily and cheerfully. Raising church funds is often the meanest drudgery which very few are willing to undertake. To mention giving for the support of the church or the promotion of missions is offensive to many church members. It must not be done often and then just as briefly as possible, lest the sensitiveness of the selfish and greedy be irritated. Most people have had to cut down their expenses recently to live within their income, but some make their first and biggest cut on their church support. Many are not sharing in the financial burden. They say they cannot. Perhaps so, but how about the poor widow that gave her two mites? Often the pledges do not cover the budget. Offerings fall off. Deficits occur and are hard to meet. Money is by no means everything, nor the main thing, but giving is usually a fair index of the spiritual health of the church. A depleted church treasury is therefore only a symptom rather than an ailment.

These, as well as other symptoms that might be pointed out, all suggest serious spiritual ailments, the most significant of which perhaps is the lack of faith. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." It is impossible largely because without faith one lacks the spiritual urge to obedience and sacrifice. People work and fight for that in which they truly and firmly believe. We need a strong, determined, unflinching and unwavering faith in God, in Christ, in the Bible and in the church. Too many profess to believe in Christ as their own personal Savior and as the only Savior for lost humanity, but their indifference and inactivity belie their profession, or at least indicate a very weak faith. Like Peter, when Jesus was taken to his trial, they "follow him afar off," and therefore repeatedly deny him, perhaps not in word, but in their conduct. Doubtless this accounts for many absences from public worship, for stinted giving and for the ineffective and inefficient lives of many. Let us draw near to Christ and yield ourselves more unreservedly to him. Let us abide in him that he may abide in us. Let us seek that courageous and constant faith that results from true consecration and from personal experience and knowledge, like that of Peter and John after Pentecost, when in the face of the threats of their persecutors, they said, "We cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard." Theirs was a can't-help-it faith. With such faith one cannot help but go to church on the Lord's Day, and he is moved by an inner urge to win others to Christ, to pray much, to give liberally, to study his Bible daily and to honor his Lord in every way possible. Such faith surmounts difficulties, endures hardships and triumphs over depression. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (1 John 5:4). Without it we fail.

Furthermore, where faith is lacking love is also lacking. The most important commandment of all is to love God with all the heart, mind, soul and strength. Jesus said, "If a man love me, he will keep my words." Love "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth." "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." "The friendship of the world is enmity with God." Then away with worldliness and carnality. "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" "The world passeth away and the lusts thereof," for "the whole world lieth in wickedness." Why are we so fascinated with the pleasures of this life? Why can't we love God from whom all blessings flow? Let us subdue the flesh and renounce the world and the devil and submit ourselves wholly to God. We have a hard time trying to serve God and to be spiritual, when we at the same time yield to the flesh and the world. We blunder, we fail, we are disgraced and discouraged. Half-hearted service makes one miserable. Let "the love of God be shed abroad in your heart," until you "become rooted and grounded in love," and it will be your chief joy to do his will. Then no task will be too hard and no sacrifice too great. Love makes all burdens light.

But how shall they believe and how shall they love, if they do not know? How pathetic were the words of Jesus to the woman of Samaria, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink." But she did not know. Too many church members do not know Christ though they have Bibles and go to church frequently. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," free from doubt, from fear, from selfishness, from worldliness and from all sin. Too many are merely bystanders and onlookers, but not intimately related to Christ and therefore do not know him. "Oh, how you'll love him when you know him." And how faithfully you will serve him. Another ailment then is lack of vision. "Where no vision is, the people perish." (Prov. 21:18).

These ailments are traceable, in large part, to the lack of religion in the home. In this modern materialistic age very few homes find time or inclination for daily family worship. Most people seem to be carried away in the mad rush for material gain and worldly pleasure, and their luxuries and extravagances have almost smothered out their spirituality. They seem to have but little concern for their spiritual welfare. Prayer, the Bible and the church must give place to other interests. Even the Lord's Day is devoted more to recreation and pleasure than to worship. Frequently the church and its leaders, even the pastor, is openly and freely criticised in the home, creating suspicion, discontent, doubt and indifference and opening the way for neglect and sin. No wonder that the faith of many is weak, that their love lacks fervor and that their vision is obscured. This also accounts very largely for the failure of the church to hold its young people. Too many homes are not supporting and co-operating with the church, but are rather opposing and hindering the influence of the church. Vanity, self-indulgence, carnality and worldliness hinder and destroy spirituality. When children and young people are not carefully instructed, guarded and directed in true Christian living in the home, the church has a difficult task to hold and interest them. Often the inconsistencies, hypocrisies and deceptions of parents destroy the confidence of their children. There are other causes for our failure to hold the young people, but the lack of spirituality and of sympathetic cooperation in the home is perhaps the greatest. It is true that there are many homes that are truly Christian, where God is revered, the Bible read and the church upheld, but it must be acknowledged that the breaking down of religion in the home is all too prevalent, which is an indication of and a contributing force to the approaching great apostasy foretold in the Scripture.

The remedy is not far to seek nor hard to find. Let faith in God be established in our homes. I refer to something more than the mere assent to the reality of God and the rightness of his cause. I refer to a deep-seated, heart-felt faith, a sin-renouncing, a flesh-subduing and world-conquering faith and trust in God, that produces unquenchable love, undaunted courage and unselfish service. The members of such homes will regularly attend the services of the church, faithfully participate in its activities and generously give for its support. There is no doubt that if all our homes were centers of whole-hearted faith in God and genuine devotion, our church financial problems would be easily solved. The children and young people from such homes would early yield their hearts to Christ and find their greatest delight in faithfully serving him.

There may be other ailments and other cause for our alarm and distress. Even the ministry may be to blame for not giving proper instruction and spiritual guidance or for unfaithfulness in home and personal visitation. But I dare not make this article too long with further discussion. We may all be to blame. Let us all draw near to God and seek the fullness of his indwelling and abiding presence that we may be more faithful and diligent in his service and found faithful when Jesus comes again..

Sidney, Indiana.

---

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

---

THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS

The Ontario Grand Chapter of the Orange Order of Canada at a recent meeting held in the city of Peterboro passed a resolution urging the reading of the Scriptures every morning at the opening of school, and closing with the reading of the Lord's Prayer. There are many people who might rightly be dubious about the teaching of the Christian religion in schools because of the many varieties of faith and belief and the multitude of "isms" that pass current with many people for Christian truth. But to the reading of the Scriptures without comments by the teacher there are surely few who would object. Carefully selected passages of Scripture read in the ears of the pupils each morning might be productive of untold good. The mind is plastic in school days, and what is heard and learned then is retained. To start off the day with a passage of the Bible, and to bring before boys and girls, young men and young women some of the "wonderful words of life" might be for many the most important part of their education. There are many children attending our schools who from one year's end to the other never hear or read the Bible. Their highest and best interests are thus neglected, for any system of education that does not include in its curriculum a knowledge of the Divine Word, and minister in some way to the spiritual side of human nature, is an utter failure. Even the reading of the Scriptures in the ears of the pupils of our public schools every morning would have an incalculable moral and elevating effect on the pupils' minds. If for no other reason than as a factor in education such a suggestion should be supported.—The Evangelical-Christian.

DO NOT BE MISLED

We should like to see in every section of our country a warning and protest against the high-powered, highly-financed propagandism, with little regard to fairness, argument, or fact with which Prohibition is being assailed at the present hour.

Much of this propagandism is sheerly psychological in its purpose and effect. It is not based upon calm judgment, or upon any appeal to reason, but has as its purpose the development of a mass movement against Prohibition. In such propagandism there is an obscuring of the issues, a misrepresentation and vilification of the "dry" movement and its leaders, and an utter irresponsibility in the statement of alleged facts.

The Prohibitionist who recognizes that there is another side to the matter cannot object, and never has objected, to fair argument, nor even to anti-Prohibition propaganda. The "wet" should be as free as the "dry" to uphold and advocate his cause by legitimate ways and means. But he may well fear the stampeding of public opinion by denunciation and by false and irresponsible statement.

So, we say, and we urge that the word should be passed on: Accept no statement or plea for what it professes to be. Test and analyze every statement. Inquire and search for the facts. Do not be too ready to conclude that Prohibition is a failure, or that the legalization in any form of the liquor traffic would be a success. We had full experience of such legalization and it never succeeded. Meet the pleas and alleged statements of facts of "wet" advocates with open mind, but with relentless critical challenge and judgment.—The Congregationalist.

PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS IN AFRICA

Countless billions of locusts, moving inexorably forward at the rate of 100 miles a day, are laying waste great sections of West Africa and adjoining parts of the Union of South Africa. In some places, farmers living in the affected districts said, the insects seemed to be moving in a cloud 500 miles wide and three times that long.

Attempts were made to attack them from motor trucks, but they soon outdistanced the trucks. Airplanes also were used without effect, and the authorities declared all they could do was to wait until the locusts began to breed and then attack the swarms separately.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

THE INFLUENCE OF WOMEN

In the very vigorous campaign put on to obtain for women the right of suffrage, one argument urged and repeated with greatest emphasis was that women would vote to check the liquor traffic. To a degree that promise has been fulfilled, and we think that in 1928 woman voters did a great service for prohibition. But we have been amazed that so many women are such violent "wet" advocates. There are a few that out-do the men in their demand for legalized intoxicants. We could name a few who seem a little less than crazy on the subject. We do not question their right to agitate on either side they choose, but really a woman "wet" seems to us as something incongruous. Some of these women have children. We do not think their grandchildren, if they ever have the joy of possessing them, will say with pride when they grow up,

"My grandmother was a vigorous, outstanding advocate of liquor." They may say it, but not with joy and pride. We men are inconsistent. We want wives, mothers, sisters, sweethearts, friends to be better than we are.—The Presbyterian.

JUDGE SABATH'S OPINION VINDICATED

Attention was called recently to the danger of wives and husbands playing bridge—or playing as partners in bridge games—as set forth by Judge Sabath of Chicago, who held that it was a prolific source of divorce. In New York a game of bridge, in which a husband and wife were partners, led to more tragic results. In an argument between them after the party was over the wife threw a pair of scissors at her husband, the wound from which became infected and produced his death. The judgment of the judge as to the dangerous aftermath of such participation in bridge has in this case a tragic vindication.—The Presbyterian Advance.

The Catholic Lament for Religious Liberty

(Continued from page 4)

D. C., that Protestants, since they are in the majority in this country, shall give his church religious liberty, says, "Just what he meant by that is hard to understand." Then he goes on to remark, and truly, that "One of the cornerstones of this country is religious liberty, that every man may worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, with no one to hinder him or make him afraid. He seemed, too, to overlook the fact that it was the Protestants who, in the founding of this nation, gave to the Catholics, as well as to other religionists, the religious liberty which they claimed for themselves."

Our contemporary is right, this clamor about religious liberty is unjustified. Catholics have all the religious liberty that any other religious group possesses, and no one is seeking to deprive them of it. But they are discriminated against politically for certain positions because of the preposterous claims of the pope to the right to exercise temporal power. Liberty loving Americans do not wish to jeopardize their freedom by putting into the highest office of the land a man who may be tempted to play into the hands of the arrogant bishop of Rome.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

I Kings

Written and oral history are but the lengthened shadows of the men and women who have lived nobly or ignobly on the earth. Hardly in any book of the Old Testament do we find such an excellent illustration of this fact as in the books of "The Kings." Everybody is interested in kings and queens; thousands of subjects have died for their ruling sovereigns and will continue to do so as long as the world stands.

First Kings is a part of Second Kings. Originally the books were one narrative like the writings of Samuel and the Chronicles. But in our Bible they appear in separate parts—almost equally divided. In fact, the period of history between Samuel and Solomon is but an account of the royal government under Saul and the royal exploits of David.

Matthew Henry has an interesting comment on the family and lineage of David. "There is in these books special regard to the house and lineage of David, from which Christ came. Some of his sons trod in his steps, and others did not. The character of the kings of Judah may be thus briefly given:—David the devout, Solomon the wise, Rehoboam the simple, Abijah the valiant, Asa the upright, Jehoshaphat the religious, Jehoram the wicked, Ahaziah the profane, Joash the backslider, Amaziah the rash, Uzziah the mighty, Jotham the peaceable, Ahaz the idolater, Hezekiah the reformer, Manasseh the penitent, Amon the obscure, Josiah the tender-hearted, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah, all wicked, and such as brought ruin quickly on themselves and their kingdom. The number of the good and bad is nearly equal, but the reigns of the good are generally long, and those of the bad short."

In the far-famed reign of Solomon and the building of the temple the Jews witnessed their Golden Age. It is hard to estimate the prosperity of that day in statistical terms; it is sufficient to say that riches and luxury abounded and religious and moral decay set in. The vast empire of Solomon, with all its pomp and splendor, was soon doomed to disintegrate and pass into the hands of petty and unscrupulous kings.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Perhaps Jeremiah or Ezra, the Scribe.
2. When and Where Written. Perhaps during the exile, around 550 B. C.
3. To Whom Addressed. Israel.
4. Purpose. To trace the history of the Hebrews through their greatest prosperity to the division of their kingdom.
5. Authenticity. The writing is real history.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK (Biographical)

1. David. 1-2.
2. Solomon. 3-11.
3. Rehoboam and Jeroboam. 12-14.
4. Ahijah and Asa; Baasha and Omri. 15-16.
5. Elijah and Elisha. 17-19.
6. Arab and Jezebel. 20-22.

III. THE NARRATIVE OF THE BOOK

First Kings opens with an account of the last days of David. Solomon, his son, by Bathsheba, is made king and establishes a reputation for greatness and wisdom. His chief exploit was the building of the temple with the aid of Hiram of Tyre. It was dedicated in the midst of great ostentation and display. The close of his reign was marked by great wealth, voluptuousness and idolatry, and severe chastisement and hectic sorrow. The kingdom was divided and a history of the good and bad kings is given. Elijah is introduced as the prophet of God who figures largely in the lives of the notorious Ahab and his even more terrible wife, Jezebel. The book ends abruptly and is continued in Second Kings.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Kings. Royalty.
2. Key Verses. 2:12; 11:13.
3. Key Chapters. 8, 18, 21.
4. Key Ideas. Kings and Kingdoms; Apostasy and Ruin; Godliness and Blessing.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

This writing evinces how man's failure in governing the affairs of a nation—a theocratic Israel, a monarchical people—is off-set with the undying fact of the never-failing government of God. God is never dead; he ever lives and reigns. Man may not recognize that fact, but God uses man's distress and disaster to glorify himself. He uses the temple and also the ash-heap cities. Kings may abandon their thrones, but God never abandons his.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Christ is presented in First Kings as greater than either David or Solomon. When he came to the hilly slopes of Bethlehem's plain, we see David's greater Son and Solomon's Peer. The Kingdom of Christ will not be divided and shall stand forever. Read Daniel. Also consult Isaiah 9:7.

VII. THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK (As found in the meanings of the respective names in the Hebrew tongue. The Scripture passages include important messages.)

1. Solomon. (Peaceable). I Kings 2:11. 12.
2. Rehoboam. (The People is Enlarged). I Kings 11:1-10.
3. Jeroboam. (The People become Numerous). I Kings 14:6-16.
4. Ahijah. (Jehovah is a Father). I Kings 11:38, 39.
5. Asa. (Physician). I Kings 15:11.
6. Omri. (Untaught, or Impetuous or like a Sheaf). I Kings 17:25, 26.
7. Baasha. (Offensiveness). I Kings 16:1-4.
8. Elijah. (My God is Jehovah). I Kings 19:14.
9. Elisha. (God is Salvation). I Kings 19:19-21.
10. Ahab. (A Father's Brother). I Kings 21:17-29.
11. Jezebel. (Unmarried, Chaste). (Irony). II Kings 9:22.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

John 18:37—"Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." Moffatt puts it thus: "So you are a king?" said Pilate, "you!" "Certainly," said Jesus, "I am a king. This is why I was born, this is why I came into the world, to bear testimony to the truth. Everyone who belongs to the truth listens to my voice."

A great religious convention had assembled in this country. At one of the sessions a cablegram was received from another assembly in Europe. The message was opened and read in the midst of the great American audience and contained these words: "MAKE JESUS KING." The enthusiasm knew no bounds. Men cheered, and then wept for joy at the prospect. It was no new announcement to the world; but these three words coming over land and under water were about as important as any ever received.

Jesus says, "To this end was I born." The angels so announced it at his birth. The idea was already a favorite with Paul, for he had declared to his brethren, "For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet" (1 Cor. 15:25). Political conditions in Palestine were such that, at the word of Christ, the whole Jewish nation would have sprung to arms to make him king. But his was not to be an earthly kingdom. There were greater things than kingly palaces and a throne room; but the greatest facts in human experience are sin, grief, misery and sorrow. Jesus came to deal with these and be their remedy and comfort. Who but the Son of God could master such troubles?

But in a very large sense, man can do but little to make Jesus king. The Scriptures teach that it is the "Eternal Purpose of God to Make Jesus King." Whatever man does about it—whether he helps or hinders—that fact is settled in the divine economy of grace that Jesus is to be king. It would be to the everlasting credit of man, if he joined heartily in God's program in carrying out such a decree. But this one item in the plan and purpose of God in which man was not consulted. If God is the worthy Father of the race, as many believe he is, then he can plan for man's future happiness as he has for man's present and past happiness. Has he not met every condition so far?

But why argue? Every follower of God's plan must join in that movement, or take the consequences of his own folly. And the first step will be to make Jesus king over our own lives. Nothing short of this arrangement will satisfy. It is not that man can not join in such an enterprise. He can, if he will. Is the Son of God not represented in the Scriptures as standing at the door and knocking for admission? "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me" (Rev. 3:20). That is his attitude. No door will be forced. "If any man open the door" is the entreaty. He expects to be treated civilly, at least. Don't disgrace him! He is a royal Guest. Give him the best room, not some obscure corner as though ashamed of his presence. What earthly ruler would stand for such uncouth treatment?

"Behold a stranger at the door!

He gently knocks, has knocked before;

Has waited long, is waiting still,

You treat no other friend so ill."

If Jesus is to be king over our lives, then the principle of submission must obtain. And there is battleground in the whole religious problem of the soul. Talk about submission to Jesus in some quarters, and men will smile as though you were out of your mind. Like Peter upon a certain occasion when the Master was getting very close to him, exclaimed: "Thou shalt never" * * * And yet, he is seeking the throne room. Unless there is submission on the part of the citizen there can be no government. Unless there is submission on the part of the soldier there can be no army. The lack of submission to the expressed will of the church has overthrown many a congregation. And it will do so again. The vision of the "seven golden candlesticks" is significant, and expressive—a wonderful symbol. But in the midst of the seven candlesticks was "one like unto the Son of man." Submission to HIM!

W. I. OUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N. MAGAZINE SECTION M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR, ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

Brethren Young People's Camp

Shipshewana Lake, Indiana
July 17-24, 1932

Promoted by
THE NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL
ASSOCIATION OF THE BRETHREN
CHURCH

In Cooperation with the Indiana District Conference

Description

This Camp and Training School for Brethren young people is being conducted by the National Sunday School Association in co-operation with the Indiana District Conference. While most of the young people and their accompanying adult leaders will probably come from the Indiana churches, the camp is open to Brethren young people from every part of the brotherhood. During the present year it will be held together with the Bible Conference.

Location

The camp site is pretty Shipshewana Lake, which is sixteen miles east of Goshen and twenty-two miles east of Elkhart. South Bend is thirty-six miles to the west while Warsaw and Peru are forty-two and eighty-five miles respectively to the south. Brighton is fifteen miles and Bryan is fifty-five miles and Huntington is seventy-five miles to the southeast.

Dates

The conference is to open on Sunday, July 17th. There will be a night program for young people. On the next day, Monday, July 18th, registration will take place. However, it will be advisable for some students to come on Sunday and worship at Shipshewana in order that all things may be in readiness for an early camp opening. The camp ends on Sunday, July 24th. At all events, let it be remembered that all students must be present by July 18th.

Who May Attend

The camp conference is planned for young people of high school age and above and their adult leaders. It is hoped that there may be something near an equal representation of both girls and boys. Churches should keep this in mind in selecting their representatives. No church is limited to any particular number of delegates. It will help to have each group accompanied by some sympathetic adult leader.

What They Should Bring

The campers will lodge in cottages or tents. The girls will be housed in the Girls' Lodge. Tents will be provided. Each camper should bring linen and blankets and camp pillow. Camp clothing may be worn. Each student should bring his or her bathing suit, athletic equipment, Bible and notebooks.

Daily Schedule

The morning program will consist of morning watch, class periods for instruction and chapel worship. Dinner, as well as the other meal hours in the dining room of the Hotel, will be a time of joyous, wholesome fellowship. The first part of the afternoon will be spent in rest and reading. Directed recreation, consisting of hikes, games and contests will follow. Then to the lake for boating and swimming. Evening vespers will turn the heart to worship. The Bible Conference Program will close the day and prepare busy, happy people for refreshing rest.

Leadership Course

One type of course will be offered, from which each camper will be required to choose according to directions which will be announced by the dean. The courses will meet for one period each daily.

13. The Principles of Teaching—III—Rev. W. I. Duker.
14. Sunday School Organization and Work—III—Rev. S. M. Whetstone.
15. Life Work Guidance and Social Activities—III—Prof. R. R. Haun.
16. Expert Christian Endeavor—III—Rev. E. M. Riddle.
17. Biblical Archaeology—III—Dr. K. M. Monroe.
18. Bible Study and Doctrine—III—Prof. M. A. Stuckey.

Extra Courses

- c. Practical Church Music—II—Mrs. M. A. Stuckey.
- d. Bible Studies for Intermediates—Miss Helen Garber.

The Camp Staff

Administrative: Dean, M. A. Stuckey; Business Manager, W. I. Duker; Dean of Boys, R. R. Haun; Physician, Dr. M. D. Price.

Instructors: W. I. Duker, S. M. Whetstone, K. M. Monroe, E. M. Riddle, Mrs. M. A. Stuckey, R. R. Haun, Miss Helen Garber, M. A. Stuckey, and others.

Rev. F. C. Vanator of Peru, Indiana, has been asked to have charge of the chapel and vesper music this season.

Expenses

This year each camper will pay $8.00 for the whole camp expense. Such items as registration fees, room and board are included in this amount. This will be collected by the business manager who will assign campers to their lodging place. Last year some students bought books; this year there will also be students who will desire books. However, to eliminate the cost involved in purchasing books, it has been planned to have the instructors present outline studies to their pupils. This will save considerable expense to the churches that have already cooperated in this work. Additional expense will be what the individual makes it. Churches will make a good investment in assisting young people to meet the necessary expense of camp life.

Preliminary Observations

Requests from all parts of the brotherhood indicate that this school is growing in popular favor among the brethren. It is our earnest desire that it will become a training center for Brethren young people and adults at large. Pastors and Sunday school superintendents will have problems lightened in their own parishes if they send capable and talented young people to this school for instruction. Ashland College students were permitted to attend the conference in former years are desirous of spending their vacation at Shipshewana again this year. To them it was a real treat of instruction, worship, and recreation. Let us help the youth of our church to build a greater Brethren church.

Extra Suggestions

To those coming from a distance, let it be suggested, and especially in the case of girls, that an opportunity will be given for light housekeeping. This can only be done in a limited number of cases. Write the Business Manager relative to the matter.

Following the evening vesper service the Bible Conference will be in session for over an hour. The campers are urged to attend this very helpful hour of worship. It is voluntary, however, and absolute quiet should prevail on the grounds during that time. Any outside activity will be under strict supervision.

Registration Blanks

Register Now. Send to Rev. W. I. Duker, 1101 Middlebury St., Elkhart, Ind.

Name .....
Age ..... Date of Birth .....
Street .....
City ..... State .....
Church .....
Office, if any .....
Sunday School Teacher .....
Courses Desired (use numbers) .....
Plan to arrive on .....

The Princeton Declaration on the Church and Missions

A group of leaders, deeply interested in the development of greater missionary interest in the home church, and larger spiritual fruitage in the work abroad, met in Princeton on April 12th. There were present missionaries, pastors, laymen, seminary professors and board secretaries. These did not officially represent any organizations but met informally for conference and prayer. After careful consideration of the present crisis, through which many boards are passing, the following statement was adopted.

In the next issue of THE REVIEW we expect to publish extended comments on this Statement, especially as it relates to the cause of apparent decline in missionary interest in the home churches and the supreme need of the hour. The Princeton Statement is signed, in behalf of the group, by a special committee consisting of Dr. Robert E. Spear of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, Dr. C. S. Cleland of the United Presbyterian Church and Dr. T. H. Mackenzie of the Reformed Church in America. It is as follows:

In response to the call of the Committee of Foreign Missions of the Western Section of the Alliance of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, a group of members and officers of the foreign missionary agencies of some of these churches (the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., the United Presbyterian Church and the Reformed Church in America) met in Princeton on April 12, 1932, and

(Continued on page 15)

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
with
Thoburn C. Lyon

JOSEPH THE DREAMER

(Lesson for May 29)

Lesson Text: Gen. 37:1-11; Golden Text: Rom. 12:17

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Joseph the Dreamer. Gen. 37:1-11

There is a time, we read, for everything; a time to speak and a time to refrain. Joseph the Dreamer apparently had not yet earned these words of wisdom—and a great many of us have not learned them even yet. God had revealed great things to Mary concerning her son, Jesus, but she did not at once publish them but rather pondered them in her heart. David was anointed king, but went back to his flocks until God should call him for the place. But Joseph, in youthful indiscretion and boasting at once made his dream known. While God overruled it all for good, still it brought much needless suffering to Joseph, to his father, and to his brethren. Let us pray for wisdom, that we may know when to speak and when to refrain.

TUESDAY

Solomon's Dream. I Kings 3:4-15

Today, if we had an experience like Solomon's when we awoke we would be apt to say, "Oh, well, after all, it was only a dream!" Perhaps God would speak to us more often, in various ways, if we were more ready to hear. Solomon asked for wisdom, and God not only granted his request, but gave him more beside. We are reminded of the text: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Let us put first things first, and see if God does not reveal himself and his will to us more fully, and give us his richest blessing.

WEDNESDAY

The Centurion's Vision. Acts 10:1-8

The Centurion is a striking example of the promise that he who wills to do God's will shall know the will of God. And God is no respecter of persons: if we worship God as sincerely and devoutly as did the Centurion we may expect him to reveal his will as fully to us. It need not be a special vision, such as was given the Centurion; God may reveal his will to us through the guidance of his Spirit as we read his word, or as we commune with him in prayer. But we must sincerely desire to know. The Centurion proved his sincerity by doing that which he had been told to do; may we also prove our sincerity in the same way!

THURSDAY

Peter's Vision. Acts 10:9-16

God had given the Centurion a vision of his need; He now gave Peter a vision of filling that need. So does God provide for all the needs of his children. Not only was the Centurion blessed, but Peter was also blessed in the filling of his need. Surely all of us have been given a vision of the world's need, and if we would follow God's guidance more fully, the whole world, and we ourselves, would be richly blessed.

FRIDAY

Obedying the Vision. Acts 26:12-20

This experience of Paul's was one of the most real and vivid that ever happened to him, and we find him telling and retelling it again and again. The difficulty with most of us is that we have drifted into the church in too formal and casual a manner; we have done nothing either very good or very bad, and the vision of Jesus our Savior is not as real to us as to Paul. Let us pray that God may give us a better vision of our own state without him and of our blessed condition with him; there will then be no question about obeying!

SATURDAY

Visions Promised. Joel 2:28-32

This passage is not without its difficulties in interpretation, and has certainly caused much dissension and abuse of doctrine. But we need not depend on this one Scripture for the promise of vision: read John 16:13, for example. God grant that our hearts and minds may ever be open to the guidance of his Spirit, and to no other spirit, that we may be saved from error and guided in the way of truth.

SUNDAY

The Favor of Jehovah. Prov. 3:1-12

Many are the ways in which God speaks to us; for example (vs. 11 and 12), he may even speak to us through chastening. But what blessings follow when we live so as to find favor in the sight of Jehovah! A few are mentioned in our Scripture for the day. Let us not be wise in our own eyes, but ever seek his favor!

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK 	GLAODS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St. N. E., Canton, Ohio
C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

"Excuses vs. Reason"

Things outwardly similar may be wholly unlike in essence. The living rose is far removed from its waxen imitation, however perfect the workmanship of the latter. The diamond and the gem of paste have nothing in common except their appearance, and even that cannot deceive the initiated. Yet superficial observers are often led astray by mere external resemblances. How many persons, for example, fail to distinguish between a reason and excuse. They look upon the words as practically synonymous, the ideas as identical. In point of fact, however, the only relation between the two is that of outward appearance. In essential character they are as remote as the opposite poles.

An excuse is a manufactured article. A reason is a natural growth. An excuse is essentially untrue. A reason must be true, or it is no reason. An excuse reveals weakness and a lack of real manly courage. A reason removes the appearance and suspicion of evil, and makes "righteousness to go forth as the light, and judgment as the noonday." He who can render a reason for his conduct commands respect even though his action may not meet with popular approval. But there is nothing else in this world so utterly inexcusable as an excuse. It is a most senseless thing, a COUNTERFEIT COIN, without value and having no claim to respect.

Excuses are an invention of the devil; and unfortunately he never takes out a patent. On the contrary, he is best pleased when men make free use of his most brilliant ideas. Nothing can be more gratifying to him than the eagerness and skill with which men turn out excuses and place them on the market.

An excuse always implies wrong-doing or failure. Were there no wrong, there would be no excuses. The excuse aggravates the very evil from which it springs. He who frankly confesses a wrong has taken the first and most important step towards amendment. He who manufactures an excuse for his shortcoming has forged a fresh link in the chain that binds him to perpetual evil.

Defined in plain Anglo-Saxon and reduced to its lowest terms, an excuse is a lie. It is never anything else. Doubtless, the excuse maker is often unconscious of falsehood. He has exercised the utmost care. His words have been thoughtfully chosen. He has woven in every strand of truth that circumstances furnished. Yet, after all, the product is only a lie. He may have mixed with it enough of truth to deceive himself; but others are seldom deceived. The excuse usually fails to fulfill its promise. It neither conceals the wrong nor in any degree alleviates it.

Sin and the excuse for sin are twin sisters. The first sin led to the first excuse. The sin is easily forgiven. The excuse is unpardonable; and we despise our first parent for giving it utterance. When men and women shall make an end to excuses we may look for the Millennium; nor shall we wait long for its coming. The final triumph of God's Kingdom will be heralded by a period of honesty. Confession will take the place of evasion, and hearty obedience will conquer the spirit of unwillingness. Men will no longer spend their time, their energy, and their intellectual force in concocting excuses for the neglect of duty and responsibility. On the contrary, every energy will be bent towards the earnest and cheerful fulfillment of duty, every thought devoted to most useful and effective service. Blessed is the man who never makes an excuse; for verily he is not far from the Kingdom of God.

South Bend, Indiana.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
 Financial Secretary Foreign Board
 1925 East 5th St.,
 Long Beach, California

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
 Home Missionary Secretary
 Berne, Indiana

MISSIONS

Answers to Prayer in the Mission Field

By Dr. Florence Newberry Gribble

Mark 16:20—"And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

When we put our trust in God, when we, like the early disciples are willing to go everywhere preaching the Word, we shall indeed find the Lord working with us and confirming the words by signs following. In a very practical way what shall some of these signs be to us who now go forth as missionaries? In every way we shall find that God answers prayer. It is our purpose at this time to enumerate a few of the practical ways in which God answers prayer and confirms the word by signs following. First of all we find that he answers prayer in our going forth. Almost a classic in our Brethren literature has become the simple story of James Gribble's going forth to the Foreign Field, leaving his home with only enough money to reach New York. He stopped at the office of J. D. Adams, at that time the Secretary of the Africa Inland Mission, in Philadelphia under whose auspices he was going to the Field, to confer with him. "How much money have you, Gribble?" said Adams. "Enough with which to reach New York," replied the young man. "I like your faith," said Mr. Adams. "at present we have no funds on hand but I doubt not that the Lord will provide for you." Mr. Gribble went on to New York. Here he met Mr. Hurlburt, a director of the Africa Inland Mission. He asked the same question. "I had enough money to reach New York," was the reply. The answer was the same, "I like your faith. I have no surplus funds but I doubt not that the Lord will provide for you." That evening a meeting was held in Brooklyn. Money was handed to Mr. Hurlburt for the passage of an outgoing Missionary. This money was turned over to Mr. Gribble for his passage to England and was not sufficient for him to go further. That night Mr. Hurlburt spent an hour in the home of an old friend, Mr. Morse. These two men were very intimate fellow-laborers in the Lord's work, they had long been fellow-intercessors. "Morse," said Mr. Hurlburt, "I want you to join with me in prayer that the out-going passage of one of our young candidates may be fully paid." Morse readily complied. That night upon his knees in prayer he asked the Lord for the balance of Mr. Gribble's passage money. The Lord spoke to him. "What about that $250.00 that you have in the bank?" Morse was surprised but willing. His only question was, "How shall I do it, Lord?" It was all he had in the world, yet so complete was his consecration that he did not hesitate. God gave the guidance that he asked. The next morning the bank was to be opened at nine, the boat was to sail at ten. Mr. Gribble was already upon the boat with passage paid to England in full faith that in some way the Lord would provide the rest of the way. An old man came rushing across the gang-plank and in breathless haste threw into his hands a bag of gold. It was the $250.00 which Mr. Morse had just had time to withdraw from the bank and deliver to Mr. Gribble in English pounds. The Lord had confirmed the word by a sign following.

There was a time later in the history of our work when it was necessary to go forth with shortened funds to meet a great emergency. James Gribble was in Africa, his wife was in Paris, in poor health, having received a cablegram requesting her to remain in Europe until complete recovery. She yet felt the urgent call of God to go forth to the Foreign Field immediately. Funds were not sufficient. Mr. Bennett who was going forth at this time had not himself been able to obtain passage on the boat, so crowded was it, and now he was to depart for Antwerp in faith that such passage might be secured. A check for Dr. Gribble arrived shortly after and was immediately endorsed and dispatched to him with instructions to purchase passage if obtainable. The boat was leaving Antwerp November first. November first dawned and passed, there was no reply. November second came in an agony of great suspense, there was now only one hope to get the boat at Lalpallice and yet there was a great difficulty. Even should passage have been obtainable one could not embark by lighter at the French port of Lalpallice without a ticket. November second wore on, the weary trusting one having accomplished in the forenoon all that could be done in the way of preparation, went to her room at the French Bible Institute in Nozent for prayer. On passing the office she asked the young lady in charge to come to her room for a message at four o'clock. Reaching her room she wrote the message. It was to Mr. Bennett, "Hoping to embark I shall meet the boat at Lalpallice tomorrow." Then followed hours of prayer. Hours when it seemed that Satan was met in very person. Hours when it seemed for a time that he would conquer. Yet had not God said, "Nay in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us?" Four o'clock came at last. The praying one arose to respond to the expected knock at the door—it came. Picking up the telegram upon the table she went to the door. To her astonishment the young lady held in her hand another telegram. The recipient tore it open and read these words, "Your ticket is being sent you by aeroplane." It was necessary to leave in the morning. Willing hands did the necessary packing. That evening there arrived at the Institute a young Missionary who was also embarking at Lalpallice and who had been especially prepared as a companion for the difficult train journey. The next morning the little party left the house. In the hall gathered the Institute students for the final word of prayer. Simultaneously the door-bell rang, the morning mail had arrived and in it the ticket which had flown from Antwerp on the wings of the wind. The students sang "God Will Take Care of You." There was not a dry eye as the little party went forth. Again God has confirmed his Word by signs following. The wonderful sign of answered prayer.

We have known the Grace of the Lord as he has graciously vouchsafed to answer prayer in illness. In 1914 a long journey was undertaken to the hospital at Mengo, Uganda in order that health might be restored to the Medical Missionary who could find no help and no succor in a land where no colleague in the medical work was to be found. One stage of the long journey, during which the patient was carried three hundred miles upon an iron bed, was made by rail. At the railway terminus a rest house had been offered to the missionary party. Owing to sleeping sickness regulations it was impossible to take porters upon the train. The bed of the patient was put in the box car at the rear of the train and as the missionaries looked to God for the supply of the imminent need, porters to carry the bed of the sick one to the rest house as well as to carry their other belongings, a calm, sweet assurance came into their hearts that God would answer this very prayer. Arriving at the railway terminus Mr. Gribble jumped from the box car to look for the answer to his prayer. A courteous English gentleman stepped forward to greet him. "Have you any need of porters?" he said. "Yes" was the reply, "my wife is ill, we have been given the privilege of the rest house some distance from here, I need porters to carry my wife's bed and my goods to that point." A look of surprise and almost of amazement came over the gentleman's face. Then he spoke. "This afternoon I had a strange impression. I felt that I must meet this train with some of my employees. I felt that someone would be arriving on the train who would need porters. I tried in vain to rid myself of this impression. Finally I yielded and calling my employees together I said, 'Boys, how many of you are willing to meet the evening train after hours today?' These twenty-one have volunteered." As he spoke he pointed to twenty-one of his black employees standing at a respectable distance. "How many porters do you need?" he said to Dr. Gribble. "I need just twenty-one," humbly replied the man who was receiving such a remarkable answer to prayer. Then the Englishman spoke with increased astonishment, "I am not a Christian man," he said, "but I shall hereafter believe that God hears and answers prayer." Can you and I doubt that even in these days as we go forth to preach the Word of God he will confirm his call not only in our going forth in health, but also in illness through the sign following of answered prayer?

But to the Christian worker more than the financial provision for our going forth, more than answered prayer for healing, and for shelter in illness, is prayer answered for conversions. We can take space here for but one illustration. In the early days at Bassai when Mr. Gribble was working there alone, he was employing a large number of Kare workmen, many of whom understood the Baya language. To them daily, as he gathered them together for prayer, he talked to them of Jesus who is mighty to save. The first of these workmen to respond was named Yakanenze. The Holy Spirit worked deeply upon his heart, convicting him of sin. He longed to know the Word of God more perfectly. Fearing the ridicule of his fellow workmen, Yakanenze, like Nicodemus of old, came to the Missionary at night with the old, old question of salvation. Then again he was told the story of Jesus and his power to save. "What must give up?" he asked. "You must be willing to give up all," replied the Missionary. Anything which stands between you and seeking to reveal Jesus to others." Yakanzenze knew that the Missionary had but one wife. "I'm already married," he said, but I have purchased another wife and had thought soon to take her." Polygamy is one of the greatest questions and one of the most intricate which the Christian church must face in Oubangui-Chari. "What does your religion teach me about this second wife?" said Yakanzenze. "It teaches," said the Missionary, "That God would give one man one wife and one wife alone." It was too early to give the teaching which we later gave, that one wife was the type of the Church, the Lord's own bride. In Oubangui-Chari there was as yet no church. The few Christians who had been gathered from various tribes during the waiting time at Carnot had not yet been organized into a church, so very few were they in number. Yakanzenze listened to the Missionary's teaching and then like the young man whom Jesus looked upon and loved, he arose and went away sorrowful for he had great possessions. The possessions of the Kare and of other tribes in Oubangui-Chari are not estimated in dollars, neither in franc. There are no banks, neither does the wealthy man of these tribes acquire enormous herds of sheep or goats. As he accumulated produce or native or European money this money is invested in sheep and goats. It is true, but these small herds are not allowed to accumulate beyond the purchase price of a wife and so Yakanzenze's great wealth, all that he had and all that he hoped to have, would have been expressed in terms of wives. Wives from whom at that time he could not think of relinquishing. Long days he remained away and then one day he came to tell to the Missionary, "I have come to say to you that Jesus is dearer to me now than plural wives could ever be. I give up the hope of this second wife. Not only that but I give up altogether the hope of ever having plural wives. I take Jesus to be my all." You may imagine the Missionary's joy as these first converts come from tribes which have so long waited in darkness. He rejoices, however not in the convert alone, but in the faithfulness of God who, in the midst of the blackness of heathendom, has reached forth the arm which is mighty to save and has snatched a brand from the burning. In this gracious manifestation of his mighty power he confirms his Word by signs following. That sign which you and I both long for as we continue our labors for the Master, the sight of souls saved.

(To be continued)

terest continued to hold the fort. Plans were made for the Warsaw pastor to conduct a special series of services. There had been splendid preparation, prayer meetings and choir practice, for several weeks, besides a call for support in every way was made in nearly every home of the community.

The response to these meetings by the community was very fine. They were hungry for the manna of life. Young people were very active filling the choir platform each night with from 18 to 25 in number. They were under the direction of Louie Engle. For a rural section, their singing and special numbers were extraordinary. The Warsaw church assisted two nights with delegations and music.

The church membership was enlivened and given an urge to call a shepherd for the flock and thirteen made the great confession, twelve being received by baptism the last night of the meeting. One who has been afflicted for years, a young woman, will be baptized in the lake during the summer.

This is the home of Elder Thomas Plew and his wife. May the Lord be merciful to the new helpers in the work and also to those who have stood by his cause so well for these many years.

REV. E. M. RIDDLE.

SUMMIT MILLS, PENNSYLVANIA REVIVAL

The Summit Mills Revival is now history, but a history that carries with it many pleasant memories. This revival was different from many revivals in that it was not "talked up" by the pastor. It was a spontaneous growth in the lives of the members. About two years ago some of the members felt the need of a revival and began to speak their feelings to their pastor, who encouraged them. Over a year later the matter was brought before the church for consideration at which time some suggested that we make an effort to secure Brother R. Paul Miller as evangelist. We were able to secure him for a date April 19th to May 8th, through another church's cancellation.

The pastor was more than gratified with this spontaneous growth of a desire for a revival. We had long recognized that our method of receiving new members into the church was not wholly satisfactory. Here, we have a week of services both Spring and Fall preceding the communion services. During these services, we receive enough members to indicate a normal growth,—of the young people from our families. This method fails in two important respects, (1) our reach is limited largely to our families, and there is very little opportunity to reach outsiders, (2) the church misses the spiritual fervor coming from revival sermons, and from active cooperation in the salvation of the lost.

This revival was a true revival in that it was born within the church and the church was really revived. There is noticeable a new spiritual fervor, new shining faces, and a new happiness. The series of meetings was worth all it cost in time and in money for the sake of the church apart from converts.

We are glad however that the results are not limited to the revived church. There were in all twenty-six converts, and this number represents both young and old. Four new families were reached in securing both the father and mother of the home. This represents a splendid increase in the church

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

SEMINARY NOTES

The evening of May 1, Brother McClain delivered the Seminary Baccalaureate sermon in the Ashland Brethren church, on the subject, "The Ministry of the Son and the Ministry of Men." Monday evening, Seminary students and their lady friends or wives, Seminary faculty and wives and President and Mrs. Jacobs, to the number of twenty-nine, attended our Junior-Senior banquet at the Otter Hotel, where a splendid program was enjoyed, and which featured Ashland Seminary as a Good Ship on a cruise. This dinner was held in honor of our only Senior, Rev. Raymond Eugene Gingrich. Tuesday morning, at our regular Chapel, Prof. Stuckey gave a pre-Communion Meditation, which was followed on Thursday evening by our first Seminary Communion service, attended by both Seminary and pre-Seminary men, some of the College faculty, and the Seminary faculty. Our second Graduation service was held in the College Chapel, Friday, May 6th, with Dean Miller addressing the assembly on the theme, "Can a Thinking Man be Christian?" Dr. Jacobs conferred the degree of Bachelor of Theology upon Rev. Gingrich for his satisfactory completion of four years of College work, and three years of Seminary work.

Reverend Gingrich is pastor of our Fairhaven, Ohio, church.

The writer was invited to deliver six lectures, April 18-24, before a Bible Conference composed of the six Brethren Christian Endeavor Societies of Cambria County, Pennsylvania. The Conference was held in the Johnstown First church. Our young people of the county, and their leaders, are to be commended on this yearly endeavor.

K. M. MONROE.

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The First Brethren church of Allentown, Pennsylvania, held their spring communion service Wednesday evening, May 4th, with forty-seven around the tables. A deeply spiritual atmosphere pervaded the entire meeting. We were privileged to have with us Brother I. D. Bowman and wife as well as Milton and daughter Leona. As we all know they prove a blessing wherever they go and where Brother I. D. Bowman is there is sure to be a feast of spiritual food, as well as the blessed fellowship of prayer. It was the best communion service we have had in a long time.

Brother Bowman and wife remained at the parsonage until Saturday. Thursday evening, May 5, the members of the church gathered at the parsonage to meet with them in a social way and incidentally to help celebrate the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of our dear pastor, Brother S. E. Christiansen and wife. We left, after a pleasant evening, wishing them many more years of wedded bliss.

MRS. JAMES KAMORE,

Corresponding Secretary.

907 Tilghman St., Allentown, Pa.

DUTCHTOWN REVIVAL

The Brethren at Dutchtown, a strictly rural community eight miles from Warsaw, Indiana, enjoyed the blessings of a good revival immediately after Easter. They had no regular preaching during the winter months, but a Sunday school with good in-membership. Twenty were baptized the last day of the meetings.

The work of the evangelist was greatly appreciated by both pastor and people. There was no criticism of methods by either; but only the strongest commendation. He did not resort to the sensational nor did he use "clap trap" methods; but his methods were sane and wholesome. Brother Miller preached the Whole Gospel, forcefully, fearlessly and with power. The Holy Spirit was truly present and brought conviction with the message. The prayers of this people follow Brother Miller in his campaigns for souls for Christ. It was a real treat to have these three weeks of fellowship in the home and in the church.

WILLIS E. RONK.

THE REVIVAL AT SUMMIT MILLS

The Summit Mills congregation is located about three miles out of Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, and is cared for by Brother Willis Ronk along with his Meyersdale charge. It is strictly a rural church, and its members are mainly of the solid type, staunch Brethren. It was in this section that the Brethren Church had much of its early strength and leadership. It was in Meyersdale that the Brethren Publishing Co., had its first plant. In Summit Mills are many people who can remember back to the days of the early leaders of the Brethren Church.

Though this be a country church, yet it has a vitality surpassing many city churches and it has a field of possibilities that point to a real future growth and prosperity. There is a wealth of young people here to be developed into a strong congregation within the next few years. There are strong laymen in this church who are living true Christian lives, and who have stood, and will continue to stand in stalwart and loyal support of the faith they hold.

I have never had more pleasure in preaching the Gospel than to these people. They love the Word. It has been a joy to see their hearts rejoice at every new truth. For a church of its size, the prayer meetings were excellent, and more fine spirited and earnest praying would be hard to find. The attendance held up strong from the first night, at times taxing the capacity of the building. Everyone who had a duty performed it faithfully and gladly. It was a real pleasure to observe these folks work, and worship, and rejoice in the Lord. The fellowship among them was hearty, and I formed friendships here which I trust shall ever remain alive.

This was my first meeting with Brother Willis Ronk. I found him to be a true workman, thorough, and capable in all he does. He has done a strong work in building up this congregation to where it now is. Except he had used careful wisdom and judgment, together with a lot of hard work this church would not be where it now is, nor would a revival have been possible. He is a man that has spent his strength to the limit in his work. I learned much from him. I hope to have the pleasure of working with him again and thus strengthen the bonds that exist.

My home while here was with Brother and Sister Ronk, and it was a most happy home indeed. The folks that live in that home are happy in each other and in the Lord, and that makes those who share their home to enter into their joys. Everything that could have been done to make my stay pleasant was done. There is nothing more to add.

May our Father God bless this pastor and people abundantly in my prayer. That he will do so is assured, for they are together seeking to do his will.

R. PAUL MILLER.

SOUTHEASTERN DISTRICT MISSION APPORTIONMENT

Hagerstown .....	$100.00
(Paid $50.00)
Bethlehem .....	20.00
Washington .....	25.00
Trinity .....	20.00
Garden City .....	10.00
Lost Creek, Ky. ....	15.00
Mathias .....	40.00
Hammer .....	10.00
Limestone .....	15.00
Linwood .....	30.00
St. James .....	50.00
Maurertown .....	72.00
Dayton .....	12.00
St. Luke .....	20.00
Liberty .....	28.00
Round Hill .....	30.00
Roanoke .....	36.00
Mt. View .....	25.00
Oak Hill .....	40.00
Red Hill .....	12.00
Winchester .....	10.00
Mt. Olive .....	35.00
Gatewood .....	12.00

It will soon be time for the conference to convene and I would be glad for the congregations to send their amounts to me so that the chart can be made up before the conference meets.

GEO. A. COPP, Treasurer,
Strasburg, Virginia.

FORTY-FIFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the Southeastern District of Brethren Churches

To be held at The Brethren Church, Roanoke, Virginia, June 14 to 16, 1932

CONFERENCE OFFICERS

E. L. Miller .....	Moderator
F. G. Coleman .....	Vice Moderator
H. A. Kent .....	Secretary-Statistician
J. F. Locke .....	Treasurer

MISSION BOARD MEMBERS

President, F. G. Coleman; G. H. Haun, G. A. Copp, E. L. Miller, W. S. Baker, Dr. J. M. Tombaugh, Member Emeritus
--	--

PROGRAM

Mr. Floyd W. Hartman, Washington, will have general supervision of the Conference music

Tuesday Afternoon, June 14, 1932

- 2:30 Opening Session. Devotions cared for by Moderator Miller and Mr. Hartman.
- 2:45 Address of Welcome. Rev. H. W. Koontz, Pastor of the Entertaining church
- 3:00 Response by Delegates according to Roll Call of the Churches (one from each congregation)
- 3:15 Conference Organization: Election of Officers Appointment of Committees.
- 3:50 Address: "The Opportunity of the Brethren Church at the Present Hour. Prof. Alva J. McClain.

Tuesday Evening, June 14, 1932

- 7:30 Song Service and Prayer
- 7:45 Bible Study. Rev. J. L. Bowman

- 8:05 Special Music.
- Offering
- 8:10 Moderator's Address, Retiring Moderator, E. L. Miller.

Wednesday Morning, June 15, 1932
6:30-7:00 Quiet Hour—Rev. H. E. Eppley in charge

Sunday School Session

- 8:45 Devotions. H. C. Dooley
- 9:00 Sunday School Address. Rev. John F. Locke
- 9:25 "Methods of Teaching." Prof. Alva J. McClain
- 9:50 Open Forum and Presentation of Standard of Excellence of National Sunday School Association. Rev. H. A. Kent

Departmental Session

- 10:00-11:00 W. M. S. and S. M. M. in charge of Mrs. Geo. Simpson and Miss Ruth Sensenbaugh, respectively
- 10:00-11:00 Ministers' and Laymen's Session: Address: "How Conduct and Maintain a Spiritual Prayer Meeting." Rev. Paul M. Naff
- Address: "What Emphasis Should We Place Upon the Distinctive Doctrines Dear to All Brethren" Rev. H. W. Koontz

Mission Session

- 11:00-12:00 Mission Board Reports by Members of the Board, Directed by F. G. Coleman, President of the Board.
- Reports from Mission Points—Winchester, Buena Vista, Cumberland
- Missions Address: Rev. W. S. Baker, Member of District Mission Board

Wednesday Afternoon, June 15, 1932

- 1:30 Devotions by Rev. Geo. A. Copp
- 1:45 Business Session—Minutes; District Missions; Conference Location; Selection of Board Members; Ministerial Aid; Property; National Executive Committee; District Executive Committee; College
- 2:45 Address. Prof. Alva J. McClain. (Subject to be announced)
- 3:30 W. M. S. Mrs. Geo. Simpson in Charge

Wednesday Evening, June 15, 1932

- 7:15 Opening Song Service
- 7:30 Devotions. Rev. J. E. Patterson
- 7:40 Short Missionary Play by S. M. M. of Roanoke Church
- 8:10 Special Music. Washington Brethren Quartet
- 8:15 Evangelistic Sermon. Rev. F. G. Coleman

Thursday Morning, June 16, 1932

- 6:30-7:00 Quiet Hour. Rev. Emerson Rohart in Charge
- 8:30 Song Service
- Devotions by Rev. J. W. Dodson
- 8:45 Business Session: Statistician's Report; Committee Reports; Treasurer's Report; Minutes, etc.
- 9:45 Address. Prof. Alva J. McClain. (Subject to be announced)
- Departmental Sessions
- 10:30 W. M. S. and S. M. M. led by Mrs. George Simpson and Miss Ruth Sensenbaugh, respectively
- 10:30 Ministers and Laymen led by Moderator: Address: "As a Young Man Looks at the Ministry." Rev. Emerson J. Rohart

Address: "Keeping Faith with Hol-singer and Mack." Rev. H. E. Epley

Thursday Afternoon, June 16, 1932

Young People's Session

3:00 Inspirational Song Service led by F. W. Hartman. Special Music arranged by Mr. Hartman

3:45 Short Address: "My Bible and I" by Miss Mithiline Hausenfluck of the Winchester Church

4:00 Short Address: "Youth's Need of the Cross" by Preston Campbell of the Washington Church

4:15 Reading, Miss Virginia Brumbaugh of Roanoke Church

4:25 Short Address: "The Glory of the Cross" by Louis Glenn Locke of Maurertown Church

4:40 Short Address: "The Challenge of the Cross to Youth" by Burnley Connor of Roanoke Church

4:55 Closing Hymn and Prayer

(There is much beautiful scenery in and about Roanoke. A sight-seeing trip will be arranged for the time following the afternoon session to be enjoyed by all those who wish to have part in it.)

Thursday Evening, June 16

3:00 Song Service and Devotions by G. W. Chambers.

3:45 Special Music (To be arranged)

4:00 Announcements and Felicitations

4:30 Closing Conference Sermon.

Rev. A. J. McClain.

Respectfully submitted,

HOMER A. KENT,

Conference Secretary

BRETHREN SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE

for Western and Central Pennsylvania to be Held in the Berlin Brethren Church

Tuesday May 24, 1932

Beginning at 10:00 A. M.

PURPOSE

To inspire and help one another to better appreciate the evangelistic work of the Sunday school, particularly as emphasized by the words of our Lord in the great commission: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations,—teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

PROGRAM

The Visitors Session

0:00 Hymn, Devotions and Remarks from the Chairman. Rev. Leslie E. Lindower

0:10 "How Can We Draw Visitors?"

Rev. Walter Nowag

0:20 Discussion

0:30 "Making New Members from Visitors." Mrs. Harry Jones.

0:40 Discussion

0:50 "Introducing New Members to Christ." Rev. Wm. H. Schaffer

1:00 Discussion

The Pupil Session

1:10 Hymn or Special Music

1:15 "The Pupil as a Disciple."

Rev. Geo. H. Jones

1:25 Discussion

1:35 "The Pupil as An Evangel."

Rev. E. S. Flora

1:45 Discussion

1:55 Dismissal

NOON MEAL IN THE CHURCH, 35c

The Teacher Session

1:30 Hymn and Prayer

1:40 "The Sunday School Teacher's Theology." Rev. W. E. Ronk

1:50 Discussion

2:00 "The Sunday School Teacher's Method." Prof. A. B. Cober

2:10 Discussion

2:20 "The Sunday School Teacher's Program for Evangelism."

Rev. Claud E. Studebaker

2:30 Discussion

The Officers Session

2:40 Hymn and Special Music

2:50 "Providing Teacher Training."

Rev. J. L. Gingrich

3:00 Discussion

3:10 "Arranging a One Hour Sunday School Session. George Dively

3:20 Discussion

3:30 "Planning for Decisions for Christ."

Rev. Floyd Sibert

3:40 Discussion

3:50 BRIEF BUSINESS SESSION

EVENING LUNCHEON, 25c

Inspirational Session

Prelude

7:30 Song Service (Combined Meyersdale and Berlin Choirs)

Special Music and Offertory

Presentation of National Sunday School Association Standards

Address: "Christian Dynamics for the Present Day Sunday School."

Rev. Charles H. Ashman

Hymn

Benediction

Postlude

DRYS PRAISE BEER PARADE IDEA AND SUGGEST FEATURES FOR FLOATS

Chicago, Special—"In their suggestion of a nation-wide Beer Parade Day, the Wets for once, have made a mighty fine proposal which should enlist the interest and cooperation of all thinking American citizens," declared Colonel Patrick H. Callahan, President of the Louisville Varnish Company, and Vice-President of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation, in a statement issued from the Foundation's headquarters here.

"The beer parade idea is all right," continued Colonel Callahan, "if our good friends among the Wets would only stick to facts and present to the people a demonstration of what beer really is and what it has meant in the history of America during the past one hundred years.

"By all means let us have a Beer Parade 100 per cent true to facts! Here are a few suggestions that should feature every such demonstration:

"Let the Beer Parade show the brewer, not only as a tax-payer, but as a tax-collector; not only handing Uncle Sam $2 362-, 361,000 during the pre-prohibition government tax period, 1862 to 1919 inclusive, but, transferring from the people's pockets to his own, during the same period approximately $66,644,266,598,—a gross fee for his trouble of some $64,281,905,598!

"Give the careful student of economics a place in the Parade with an ample microphone by which to broadcast the fact that for every man employed by the brewer, at least two others were and would again be displaced because of money diverted from legitimate industry.

"The honest beer parade would not omit some presentations of those who, in the past, have really paid the brewer's taxes and would again were beer re-legalized.

"But here is a prospective future picture when and if beer comes back under Uncle Sam's protection. It is merely an automobile driven by a beer-drinking chauffeur, paying the tax—just one of 26,000,000 potential victims of restored booze which would make every highway in America a trail of menace and tragedy. And don't forget the streamer for this float, reading,

'The Latest Official Figures Show That Auto Deaths in England, a Wide Open Beer Country, Are Nearly Three Times More Frequent Per Thousand Car Registrations Than In the United States.'

"These floats might be multiplied but we believe that their appearance in every beer parade would not only be appropriate but might go far toward saving America from re-enacting the costly farce of license and Government protection for booze."

BIBLE READERS IN BELGIUM

During the World War many of the Belgian soldiers had their first contacts with Protestant religious workers and since then a very deep religious current has been developing in that little land. Recently a reproduction of the Bibles in use at the time of William Tyndale, the Oxford scholar, who became a great English reformer and biblical translator, has been on display in the shop window of the Flemish Methodist church in Antwerp, which is part of the important and growing work in Belgium of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This has resulted in the sale of many new editions of Bibles and New Testaments, in French, in Flemish, and other languages. The reproduction, chained to the pulpit, as was the custom in the old days, attracts special attention in Antwerp, because it was in Belgium that Tyndale was treacherously arrested and imprisoned for his Protestant faith. It was also in Belgium, in Vilvorde, 23 miles from Antwerp, that William Tyndale, because of his Protestant teachings, was strangled and then burned as a heretic on August 6, 1536. Today, after nearly 400 years, the Book he died to make understandable to the people is being widely read in Belgium, and his prophecy that the day would come when "every ploughboy should have the Word of God" has been fulfilled.—(The Christian Advocate, Methodist.)

Work for world brotherhood by giving free play to your sympathies toward the foreigner.

THE PRINCETON DECLARATION ON THE CHURCH AND MISSIONS

(Continued from page 11)

after a day of prayer and conference and discussion voted to record:

1. THEIR GRATITUDE TO GOD for the measure in which, in spite of difficulties and financial depression, their churches have been enabled to maintain their foreign missionary work;

2. THEIR ASSURANCE that by the blessing of God these churches will in due time restore and enlarge their work abroad and will go forward to the full accomplishment of their duty in association with the national Christian churches which have been established and with which it is their joy to cooperate;

3. THEIR UNFALTERING CONFIDENCE in the true basis of missions; in the great acts of God for the redemption of mankind, and in particular in the historic fact and the universal meaning of God's deed in sending his only begotten Son to be our Savior, and in his incarnation, his life and teaching, his death on the Cross for the redemption of the world, and his resurrection as the beginning of a new God-given life for redeemed humanity;

4. THEIR CONVICTION that the uniqueness and universality and absolute significance of Christ and his Gospel must be unswervingly maintained by our churches against all movements of syncretism or adjustment which compromise or imperil belief in the aloneness of our Lord Jesus Christ and the unique indispensableness of his Gospel, and that nowhere save in this truth of Christ and about Christ is there any hope for the love and righteousness and power of redeemed human lives and a redeemed human society.

5. THEIR JOY in all the movements of change, or turning and overturning, in the attitudes and conceptions of men's minds, in missionary methods and processes, in political and economic conditions, in the Church and in the world which serve to lead men to Christ as the only Lord and Savior, and to bring Christ to his rightful place as the only Lord and Master of mankind.

6. THEIR ABIDING FAITH in the church as the enduring agency of the Gospel and their reliance on the Holy Spirit as the sole source of its power.

7. THEIR DEEP SENSE OF THE NEED OF PRAYER and their hope that all to whom God has entrusted leadership in the missionary enterprise should realize that prayer is their most important work; that prayer should be the atmosphere and spirit of our mission board offices, and that in missionary cultivation throughout the churches primary emphasis should be laid upon the development and strengthening of prayer groups and upon individual intercession.—Missionary Review of the World, May 1932, P. 274.

(Editorial Note: This is a significant statement. It is recorded here for the benefit of our readers. M. A. S.)

OUR LITTLE READERS

BETTER THAN PLANTING A TREE

Little Chester stopped short on the mountain trail, and glanced gloomily about him. Then he frowned and muttered: "Trees, trees, trees everywhere now! What'd be the good of planting another one that wouldn't grow—maybe? And if it did, it might take it a—million years to get as big as the others. Grandpa didn't think about up here."

Chester had just come back to his mountain home in the high Sierras, after a long visit with grandpa and grandma in the big valley. While there, he had often heard grandpa telling what a fine thing it would be if every one planted a tree. After awhile, then, there would be beautiful shade. fruit, or nut trees growing everywhere.

Suddenly Chester thought of a verse grandpa had taught him, and the frown left his face as he recited it. It was:

"If you've nothing else to do,
Plant a tree.
Plant it while you still are small,
Long before you're big and tall,
In its shade you oft may rest,
Be by fruit or bird song blest—
Cheerilee."

Again he looked about at the great pines, firs, spruces, and cedars lifting their fine, green, tapering heads far up into the blue sky. In some places they were so close together there was hardly room for another one to stand. And just below him, down there along both sides of that big ravine, he could see the grove of giant redwoods—the great sequoias—the largest, oldest, and grandest tree on the big, round globe on which we live. Why, people came from all over the world to see them! One tree that was hollowed out was so big a stagecoach could pass right through it without touching the sides, and a good-sized house could be built on the stump of another one. Upon a monster, lying flat on the ground, a large drove of horses could find room to stand. And old? Why, when Jesus was a little boy they were old, old trees even then.

Chester walked slowly on along the trail, thinking about them. He had often listened when his father and the forest ranger had talked of them. My, if we could only plant a tree that would grow up to be like one of them! But he couldn't there. He frowned again. What grandpa said was all right down in the valley; but up here where there were trees, trees, trees everywhere now—well, it wasn't any use that was all there was about it. And yet he did want to plant a beautiful, beautiful tree.

Just then the trail turned, and Chester's heart jumped like a scared rabbit. Fire! Right below him a little patch of grass and brush was bursting into flame. In no time at all it would reach that big brush, and then it would go blazing away to the very tops of those big, pitchy pines. Then it would jump wildly from tree to tree and race away like mad, burning forest houses, everything! But, worst of all, it would destroy the grand old redwoods that had been growing for thousands of years!

"They must be saved! They must be saved!" cried Chester. But how? There was no time to run for help. "I must stop it. I must stop it myself!" he decided quickly. If he did not act at once, it would be too late. But what could he do?

He glanced wildly about. Already the flames were jumping up and making little, crackling noises. They were hungry, and wanted to eat those fine, big trees down there. Was there nothing—nothing that he could do to stop them? He looked here and there, thinking hard. Then he caught sight of a little spring trickling near. In a twinkling he tore off his jacket ran to the spring and dipped it in. When it was dripping with water, he dashed down the hill with it.

At one spot the flames had almost reached the big brush. He rushed there quickly and began to beat at the blaze with his wet jacket. How hot it was! The flames hurt his hands and face, but he did not stop. They hissed and snapped at him like angry snakes, yet he kept beating away wherever one showed. At last that part was out, and he was almost breathless.

Again he ran to the spring and wet his smoking jacket. Then he tackled another flaming spot. The smoke made his eyes hurt and water so that he could hardly see, but he kept beating away at the snapping flames. Though his clothing began to scorch and smoke and his face to smart from the fierce heat, he fought doggedly on to save the great golden redwoods.

His breath came in sobbing gasps; his throat and tongue grew hard and dry, and his beating arms ached and ached; but he kept thrashing away with his jacket, now a mere smoking rag, wherever a hissing flame raised its red, angry head.

Only one little flaming place left now. He must put it out, though he was so worn and tired he could hardly lift his arms for another stroke. Half blinded, he staggered to it and managed to thrash it out. Then, weak, panting, and dizzy, but happy, he closed his eyes and sank down in the warm ashes. He had saved the great, golden grove!

He heard a shout, the sharp gallowing of a horse's hoofs; and some one caught him up and swung him in front of a saddle horn. A voice cried: "Chet, you're a little wonder! You've saved the fine old redwoods. A few yards more, and the fire couldn't have been stopped before reaching them."

He opened his aching eyes. It was the forest ranger, his face a bit pale and a scared look in his eyes.

"I—I couldn't plant a t-tree," the boy stuttered with dry tongue, "s-so I—I t-tried to s-save one."

"You've done a sight better, boy," said the forest ranger, giving him a hug. "You've saved a whole grove Mother Nature planted five thousand years ago."—O. H. Roesner, in the Continent.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FLORA, INDIANA

The First Brethren church of Flora, Indiana, will observe the Spring Communion service Tuesday night, May 31, commencing at 7:30. The invitation is extended to those of like faith to share this service.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

HOLMES-MYER—At the home of the bride near Flora, Indiana, Saturday morning, April 23, occurred the wedding of Mr. T. Benton Holmes of Camden and Miss Mabel Myer of Flora. The wedding was witnessed by both families and friends, and was a simple ring ceremony. The bride is the pianist of the First Brethren Sunday school of Flora. Ceremony by her pastor, the undersigned.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

IN THE SHADOW

HOOVER—Samuel Hoover was born January 24, 1859 and died April 10, 1932, at the age of sixty-three years. His wife, Sister Jennie Hoover, is a member of the Brethren church at Martinsburg. Although not a member of the church, Mr. Hoover professed conversion on his death bed and a few days later departed into the hands of a merciful God, but a God whose mercy is found only in Christ Jesus our Lord. Although he sought the Lord so late in life, yet it is our sincere hope that with the heart he believed into righteousness and like the penitent thief, entered into the joy of the Lord as a trophy of the marvelous grace of our God. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

R. I. HUMBERD.

RINKER—On April 14, 1932, Marion Rinker was very suddenly called away while delivering some goods to a home in Muncie. While on the porch before he got away from the house, he was stricken with heart trouble and expired in a few minutes. He was born January 29, 1895, in Delaware county, Indiana, and reached the age of 36 years, 2 months and 10 days. He had been a member of the Oakville Brethren church for thirty-two years. He leaves to mourn his sudden departure his widow, Maggie Rinker; three children, six grandchildren and a large group of friends. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, S. Lowman, in the Brethren church of Oakville, assisted by Rev. Polemas of Daleville.

S. LOWMAN.

STUMP—William H. Stump of Germantown, Ohio, passed to his heavenly home April 13th, 1932. He was a lifelong member of the Brethren church at Gratis and when his health permitted, attended its services. He was 83 years, 7 months and 28 days old when called out of this life. His wife preceded him by some four years or more, at which time the undersigned was called from Muncie, Ind., to conduct the obsequies. He leaves a family of seven children to mourn their loss, and 17 grandchildren and 4 great-grandchildren. Due to an extremely close friendship of many years the undersigned was asked to conduct the funeral services. The family has our sincere sympathy in their bereavement.

GEORGE H. JONES.

VOL. LIV
Number 22

May 28
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Courtesy, The Evangelical-Messenger.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, GETTYSBURG

Memorial Day

To all the heart-wounds touched afresh this day
As on the Soldier's resting place we lay
Thy flowers, Christ, in tender memory,
Give healing, thou,
This eventide.

And for the sorrowing ones who yet remain,
To whom the heart-break and the bitter pain
Come like the memory of an old song's sad refrain
Have pity, thou,
This eventide.

For all the losses of the lonely years—
For all the weight of shed and unshed tears,
For all forebodings, and all coming fears,
Give quietness,
This eventide.

By all the flowers of youth in battle slain,
By all the woman's heritage of pain;
The prayer that it may not have been in vain.
We leave with thee,
This eventide.

Poems for Special Days and Occasions
Richard R. Smith, Inc., Publishers

Everette H. Dunning.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Dull Repetition of Unbelief

Every little while some one, priding himself upon his imagined originality, launches an attack against Christianity, and timid believers begin to tremble. If they were better acquainted with the history of such attacks, they would smile. For unbelief long ago exhausted its various arguments, and now can only repeat them under new names.

As a recent writer remarks, "Ingersol stole from Paine; Paine swiped freely from Voltaire, and Voltaire appropriated his cynical ideas from the Attic philosophers who, in turn, robbed the grave of Confucius."

The canon of unbelief was closed almost as quickly as the canon of Scripture. The devil is not infinite in wisdom. There is nothing new in his program. All his arguments have been answered long ago. His ministers, standing in pulpits today, may boast their "modernism," but they can only repeat parrot-like the hoary-headed negations of past centuries.

THE Illusion of Noise

Doubtless everyone remembers the story of the man who, disturbed by the ear-splitting chorus from the pond on his farm, contracted with a hotel to deliver a ton of frog legs, and after dragging the pond found but two frogs. He wasted his time but learned a valuable lesson, namely, that noise is no necessary indication of numbers.

Both the political and religious life of America is cursed with this illusion of noise. A senator recently received in one day several hundred telegrams advocating the passage of a certain bill, and by investigation discovered that all of them were sent by one person. The modern newspaper has helped to make the illusion of noise. Tomorrow morning all over America people will read newspapers advocating certain ideas and opinions. If he is wise, he will not be disturbed but will remember that all these newspapers may represent the opinions of one man, the man who owns or controls the chain, generally Mr. William Randolph Hearst.

One is reminded of the nine tailors of Tooley Street who addressed a petition to the King of England, beginning it with these words, "We, the people of England—"

Do not be deceived by the illusion of noise, either in politics or religion. Many of those who claim to speak for the "people" are only speaking for themselves.

THE Gloomy Burial Service

The Methodists are busy changing their song books, marriage and burial rituals. With some of these changes we can have but little or no sympathy. But one proposed change in the burial service is surely a happy suggestion. It will eliminate the phrase "ashes to ashes, dust to dust."

If there is anything difficult for me to understand, it is why ministers who know the glorious Gospel of God's Grace persist in dropping clods of dirt on the caskets of believers and repeating the gloomy dirge, "Ashes to ashes, dust to dust." Such a committal may be appropriate for unbelievers, but I shall never use it for one who belongs to Christ.

"Dust to dust" is part of the curse laid upon fallen man, and from which Christ has redeemed them that believe. Why not talk about redemption, beside the grave of the Christian instead of about the curse? Listen to our Lord beside the grave of Lazarus. The earth-bound Martha insists upon talking about the decay of the body, while he talks about the Resurrection, and the Life, and the Glory of God. Why not use his Words instead of the words of the cynical writer of Ecclesiastes who rose no higher than "things under the sun?"

The Christian's body may go down to the dust for a "little moment," but even in the dust that body belongs to the Lord, and he will raise it up (1 Cor. 6:13-20). If we need a ritual of committal, let us phrase it in the language of the New Testament writers who talked about Resurrection instead of Dust.

THE Deflation of the Ego

William T. Ellis, writing on a recent Sunday school lesson, says some pointed things about the days in which we are living. He remarks that "Nowadays we are seeing the deflation of the Ego. The mad obsession of selfishness has about run its present course. In every sphere the balloons of self-importance have been pricked by the pin of reality. We have had no end of lessons; even though it be but the old lesson of the Garden of Eden. Disillusioned in his self-exaltation, pride and arrogance, man is once again beginning to whisper, in awe, the Name of God."

There is a great deal of truth in these words. But the problem is to keep man's ego deflated. It has been deflated more than once; at the Flood; at the tower of Babel, and in many other experiences down through the centuries. But the bubble has always come back, and with each recurring deflation it grows bigger. Man learns little about himself, as a sinner, from history.

The greatest inflation of man's ego is still ahead, when the world will enthroned the Man of Sin in the temple of God as the apotheosis of its own feeling of importance.

Only the Sword of the Spirit can permanently deflate the ego of humanity. In the light of the Word men at last see themselves as they really are, creatures whose very breath is in the hand of God. And the Cross of Christ is the place where the human ego withers up and dies, giving place to a more worthy life. The Apostle Paul found it so and has left us a testimony of what happened in his own life: "I have been crucified with Christ," he writes, "And it is no longer I that live; but Christ liveth in me; and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God who loved me and gave himself up for me" (Gal. 2:20 ARV).

MORAL Apathy in High Places

It is useless to deny that during the past decade there has been in this country an astonishing descent into the inferno of lawlessness, self-seeking and moral indifference. Lawlessness and crime are not, after all, the worst things. The worst is that men have become indifferent to the situation, and are apparently willing that it shall be so. Why have people in general gotten into this state of mind? Doubtless, there are many factors, but a recent newspaper writer points out one which is often overlooked.

He writes, "At the beginning of the decade the national government was attacked by brutal and conspicuous corruption. No clear word about it was spoken in high places. On the contrary, they sat silent, hoping that the people would forget, calculating that the evil would be overlooked. Is it surprising that public spirit weakened when it was demonstrated from the highest places that the corruption of government was not something anyone ought to care deeply about?"

Political parties, for the most part, are like the Pope—on the assumption of infallibility, they feel it would be a mistake to apologize for their own misdeeds. If you ask how they got this way, the answer is that fear of the voters made them so. The voting public still labors under the delusion that leaders can be found who make no mistakes. Confession of sin in politics is at present fatal. As long as the people demand infallibility and can see no value in honest confession of mistakes, the political parties will go on claiming everything and admitting nothing.

Flirting With Disaster

"The real fact about our civilization," says Professor Reinhold Niebuhr, of Union Theological Seminary, New York, "is that it is flirting with disaster. There is as yet no proof that we have the social imagination to bring the economic intricacies of our common life under the control of reason and conscience."

"Europe, faced with the anarchy of tariff barriers, knows that some kind of economic reciprocity must be developed, but lacks the moral energy and good will to overcome her confusion. America insists on large debt payments from Europe but refuses to accept Europe's goods. All of the western nations are anxious to sell Russia the machinery which she needs, but arouse warlike passions when Russia tries to pay for the machinery with her raw products. We conduct our international relations, in other words, with a social imagination hardly worthy of primitive savages."

IN THIS NUMBER

A Christian Faces Memorial Day—Editor, .....	3
Getting at the Cause of the Trouble—Editor, .....	4
Editorial Review, .....	4
Memorial Day Sermon—John F. Locke, .....	5
The Work of the Holy Spirit—I. D. Bowman, .....	6
How to Make the Best Use of Children's Day—Mrs. W. H. Koontz, ..	7
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, .....	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, .....	9
A Teacher Training Association that is True to the Faith—C. H. Benson, Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, .....	10
Selected Plans for Committees, ....	11
Missions and the Present Crisis, ....	12
News from the Field, .....	13, 14
Our Little Readers, .....	15
Announcements, .....	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

A Christian Faces Memorial Day

A decided change has taken place in the popular Christian attitude toward war in recent years. No longer is there a disposition to glorify war, or to exalt the heroes of war above other noble men of earth. A little more than a decade ago men were struck broad awake by the terrible calamity of war, and during the intervening years the folly and utter futility of it have been growing upon them. Moreover the wrongness of war and the shameful hypocrisy of Christians engaging in it have penetrated the Christian conscience as never before. Men are no longer proud of the deeds of war; the recalling of them brings a sense of shame and remorse. Consequently the old-time war ballyhoo is not well received by Christian audiences today, nor even by popular patriotic assemblies. What then is the Christian to do as he faces Memorial Day? Is there no longer any place for such a patriotic occasion in his life?

The Spirit of Gratitude

Yes, there is a place for Memorial Day in the Christian scheme of things, for the outstanding emotion called forth by this occasion is gratitude for the sacrifices that others have made and the services they have rendered, and gratitude is a Christian grace. That is the spirit with which the Christian faces Memorial Day. He pays sincere tribute to the nation's noble dead and to its equally noble living, not as a sign of approval of the wars in which they engaged, but as a grateful recognition of all they did and endured in the name of patriotism. The Christian does not forget the noble deeds and sacrifices of the past, but seeks to deepen the memory and esteem of those who served their country well and at great cost. The memory of such includes not merely those who served in times of war but also those who served in times of peace; not only those who laid down their lives in armed conflict, supposed to have been fought in behalf of sacred principles, or rights, or doctrines, which the government lacked the wisdom and patience to secure in nobler ways, but also those who fought with the weapons of peace to drive out entrenched evil, to purify the currents of influence, to correct weakening habits of thought and conduct, and to contribute in various ways to the larger life and welfare of their fellowmen. Some of the loftiest and truest examples of patriotism are found off the fields of battle, in the quiet ways and affairs of life. But wherever real patriotism is found, there is occasion for gratitude, and wherever men and women serve and sacrifice for the common good, there are those who deserve to be honored.

Law and Order

But the Christian must do more than remember and do honor to the heroic souls that have gone before. Christian patriotism is not complete with merely esteeming with gratitude the heritage of the past. On this point Annette Wynne wrote in the now defunct "Youth's Companion" the following verse:

Is it enough to think today
Of all our brave, then put away
The thought until a year has sped?
Is that full honor for our dead?

Is it enough to sing a song
And deck a grave, and all year long
Forget the brave who died that we Might keep our great land proud and free?

Full service needs a greater toll
That we who live pledge heart and soul
To keep the land they died to save
And be ourselves, in turn, the brave.

Edmund Burke once wrote: "The days of chivalry are all gone by." But Dr. David James Burrell dissents: "No, never—never, while men are ready to pledge life and fortune and sacred honor for God and humanity." But are men ready to do that? Surely the Christian ought to be; he is faced with no less a challenge as he contemplates the spirit of Memorial Day. He ought to show forth the patriotic devotion that will fight for law and order, truth and righteousness, and will be unalterably set against all the forces of evil. There is need of that sort of a spirit and attitude right now as never before. There is need of men and women who will take up the fight for righteousness, law-observance and sobriety where others have laid it down—take it up at a time when there is a likelihood of suffering ridicule and persecution. And that need becomes a bounden duty. Dr. Charles G. Aurand has said: "Patriotism regards the victories of the past as a sacred trust for the future. On a tablet in the Old State House in Boston are these words, 'May our children preserve this sacred trust.' Lincoln at Gettysburg spoke of our being 'dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have so bravely advanced.' If these principles are worth dying for they are worth keeping, not by carving them on marble, but on the living hearts and consciences of our people. This 'unfinished task' will demand the fullest measure of devotion, that our religious, political and social institutions now so vigorously and insidiously attacked, shall be enduring and perpetual."

Among the various phases of the "unfinished task" which the Christian is challenged to take up is that of promoting social and civic righteousness. The present state of lawlessness is a challenge to the Christian citizen, and may we not say also, a rebuke to his indifference or carelessness to citizenship responsibilities. And the most widely neglected is that of voting. Dr. Raymond L. Forman of New York City, preached a sermon entitled, "Pews at the Polls", and in closing he said: "No man can be a good Christian and a poor citizen. Jesus bade men fulfil their duties as citizens and pay the imposed tribute to Caesar's government. Not perfect, and some of the incumbents were not without reproach and corruption; but only through the faithful performance of civic duty can governments improve. Nothing can be hoped for, when men refuse to vote and refuse to pay." And of equal importance to these duties, or rather, growing out of these, is the duty to obey, and encourage obedience to, the law. It would surprise and astonish us if we knew how much of lawlessness is due to the disobedience of nominal Christians, or those whom they directly influence. And not a few are practicing disobedience toward the Prohibition law, some because of smartness and some because of appetite. Hear what Dr. Burrell says about such folks: "The man who reserves the right to disobey any law whatever because it does not please him is a constructive anarchist. The only liberty we know is liberty under law. . . . No man in America is free to do what he pleases, unless to do that which is consistent with the expressed will of the people and the rights of other men. Whether it be the Sunday law, the Volstead law, the Income Tax law, or any other, no man can be a good citizen and disregard it." Nothing is more important from the standpoint of government right now than the building up of a widespread spirit of obedience to law, and Christian people may be rightly expected to set the example.

Wrongness and Futility of War

The Christian faces Memorial Day with the conviction that war is wrong and utterly futile. And there is possibly no way by which we could more faithfully memorialize the dead and honor the living soldiers than by building strong in the minds of our people that conviction. It would seem scarcely necessary to stress the fact of the wrongness of war. It is so desperately wicked that it is difficult to understand how anyone could glorify it. The whole war program is a horrible, sordid mess, fostered by lies, producing hatred and murder, and accompanied by crime and immorality. It develops in men the beast of the jungle and all the finer instincts.

of humankind are destroyed by the brutality with which men kill one another. And after the terrible debacle has been engaged in to Hell's content, what has been accomplished by it all? It decides no question; it settles no problem; it achieves no goal except destruction. The World War was said to be a "War to end war", but no one needs to be told that it utterly failed at that point, and that there has been scarcely a day since it was brought to a close that there has not been war somewhere in the world. It was said to be aimed to "make the world safe for democracy", but democracy has been anything but safe ever since and is in a more precarious situation now than ever. The side that gains the victory is in the end as badly beaten and as sorely the loser as the one that is defeated. War breeds hatred and lays the foundation for more terrible wars in the future. Nothing is so foolish as war.

And yet we are spending approximately three-fourths of our national income either paying the costs of past wars or preparing for future wars. And even now, in the midst of the terrible economic situation Congress is being urged to enter upon a gigantic naval building spree, possibly reaching two billion dollars if the present Hale bill which passed the United States senate by a better than 2-to-1 vote becomes a law. The bill is now in the naval affairs committee of the house and only the most complete inundation of that body with protests can prevent its passage. Then the people must pay the cost of their folly, as the Christian Century points out. All this to satisfy the ambitions of a coterie of militaristic minded leaders in Washington and a group of ship-builders! Despite the horrors and the folly of war, we go on making ready for war, while talking peace and disarmament!

The Spiritual the Keynote

Finally, the Christian should face Memorial Day with a feeling of responsibility, a patriotic duty, of bearing witness to the need of the world for Christ to lead it out of the melee of hate, selfish ambitions, godlessness, militarism and war. Moral and spiritual verities must be exalted to the place of first importance instead of material values. The spirit of unselfishness, love and brotherhood must be made the undergirdings of our national and international undertakings and agreements. And Christ must be recognized as the only Lord and Savior of mankind, and be sought as the inspirer of love and the Prince of all peace. We speak of our land as "God's country"; we must bring it to be God-minded and Christ-centered. That is the key to world peace.

Getting At the Cause of the Trouble

There has not been much said through the daily papers as to the real cause of the widely-advertised trouble in Hawaii, but the Christian Standard got sight of a series of articles that seems not to have stopped to skim the surface, but went right to the foot of the matter. Our contemporary says:

JUST AS WE SUSPECTED

When the trouble arose in Hawaii over the Massie-Kahahawai case, the New York Times published a series of articles from a special correspondent. He was manifestly impartial.

This special writer set forth the history of the development of the immoral and lawless conditions in the Islands. He showed that it was not so when the Americans took over the administration. The factors that have created this terrible situation revealed in the Massie trial are particularly the loose conduct of the American idle rich as manifested, for instance, in the immodest dress and the licentious conduct of these white fools upon the beaches of those beautiful isles.

The testimony in the trial of Mrs. Fortescue and Lieutenant Massie tends to corroborate that statement. So, too, do the advertisements of the various corporations interested in stimulating travel to Hawaii.

Not for one moment would we condone the conduct of the Hawaiians who attacked Mrs. Massie. But we are glad that the recent trial ended by placing blame where it belongs—upon the white race.

The white people of the world had just as well make up their minds that if they are to retain the respect of the other races it will be because they deserve that respect. When they sow lascivious movies and magazines and incontinent and immodest conduct in their places of pleasure they will reap from the colored races insults, attacks and ultimately extinction itself.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

If you seem to have been given exceptional talent along some line, don't get puffed up about it; God may have to crush you before he can use you.

We have received annual church directories from the First church of Long Beach, California from the churches at Washington, D. C. and Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

The Illiokota District Conference is to be held in the Cerro Gordo, church, Illinois, June 10 to 12. Brother Delbert Flora is the pastor of this church, and Conference Secretary and Brother Austin R. Staley is the Moderator. The program is to be found in this issue.

Brother H. W. Koontz, pastor of the church at Roanoke, Virginia, gives instructions to prospective delegates of his district as to how to reach the convention church in Roanoke. See "Announcement" department.

Brother I. D. Bowman writes of the brief meeting held in his Mt. Olivet church in Delaware, by Brother R. I. Humberd, and reported by him in a previous issue. Four accessions to the church, three by baptism and one by relation, were received. We are glad to know that Brother Bowman's health is improving. He is now engaged in revival work at Buena Vista, Virginia, where Brother Naff is pastor.

Dr. J. Allen Miller, president of the Board of Trustees of the Brethren Home of Flora, Indiana, makes request that churches having taken an offering for the support of that institution shall send in their offerings promptly to the treasurer, Brother Henry Rinehart, of Flora, Indiana. They are needing the money badly, we are informed. If you have some of their money, turn it over to the owners before it gets away.

Brother Willis E. Ronk, pastor of the church at Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, writes of a number of things this week, "here and there", but most important, he reports twenty-eight accessions to the Meyersdale church during the past year, some by letter and some by baptism. It seems to be the Meyersdale plan to have a brief meeting preceding each communion service, at which times they are usually successful in adding a number to the church, and they have a good record to witness to the worth of their plan.

President E. E. Jacobs reports a new scholarship to be made available for an Ashland College freshman coming from Ashland High School. The Rotary Club of Ashland is to be commended both for its support of Ashland College and for the contribution it is making to the education of worthy young students. The Senior class of the college is also doing a very fine thing in the building of a new brick walk across the campus connecting Founders' Hall and Detwiler Gate. Finally, he urges, do not forget Educational Day, and let every church do its best in the making of an offering.

We rejoice with the Canton, Ohio, Brethren in the fact that their pastor has been restored to his pulpit and is gradually regaining his usual health. Dr. Beal has been suffering from ill-health for several weeks, but he has had splendid help both in the pulpit and in the other duties that had rested upon his shoulders. At the fifth anniversary service of the dedication of their new church, Brother Beal was able to participate and received seven new members into the church, four by confession of faith and three by re-consecration, and one life service recruit. Since the first of the year thirty-nine confessions have been received, all but three of whom are added to the church. Two also came by letter. The Canton church will soon have two missionaries on the foreign mission field; they are Brother and Sister Paul Guiley, who are to sail in June for South America.

Memorial Day Sermon

By John F. Locke

TEXT: What Mean Ye By These Stones? Joshua 4:21.

Throughout the length and breadth of our land polished granite and lettered marble mark the last resting place of those who have completed their earthly sojourn.

Since the earliest history of man it has been thus. Further back into the mists of time than written history goes we find stones and memorials to the dead. The great pyramid covering thirteen acres at the base and the tiniest slab in any American cemetery are expressions of the same thing.

In the glorious Maytime of each year Americans have a memorial day in which the graves of the dead are decorated with appropriate or inappropriate ceremony.

What mean these stones and this ceremony? What ought they to mean? I shall attempt to answer the question in part—one one could do it completely.

I

The Stones are evidence that the dead are not Forgotten

Someone longed for the touch of the vanished hand and the sound of the voice that is stilled. Memory is the treasure-house of the mind, where the monuments are kept and preserved.

"The sweet remembrance of the just Shall flourish when he sleeps in dust."

It is the desire of everyone that he should be remembered. Each of us hopes that in some way we shall have made ourselves worthy of memory; that our influence may march on across the years.

How can we forget those we love, if we have really loved them? Can God who is love forget our loved ones and leave them in the dust? These stones remind us that he will remember. Love never faileth ... in remembrance. We have not forgotten if we honor those that are dead by our lives.

But there are those who would like to make us forget how or why some of our beloved dead have died. I was surprised and pained to find in reading memorial day addresses and literature for ideas for presentation on this subject ... that the existing idea of Memorial day is just another chance to make war speeches and glorify murder. I have no objection to remembering those who died in war, if we do it with the intention of preventing similar tragedy. Otherwise it is an insult to the memory of those who died.

II

These stones should remind us of the deeds of the dead.

1. Not simply the deeds of soldiers and sailors but those who have fought in that larger and more glorious army of the conquering King. The saints who from their labors rest. Those that have fought a good fight, kept the faith, finished the course. To these should go the more abundant honor. "Thanks be to God that such have been." Not by war but by those who lived and labored in peace time was America exalted. Let us enter into their labors.

2. Remembering the deeds of soldiers who gave their lives to obtain peace, let us choose the better way. Have we learned the lesson from war? We have not as long as war is glorified. May we answer those who died in France—

O you who sleep in Flanders Fields,
Sleep sweet to rise anew.
We caught the torch you threw
And holding high we kept the faith
With those who died.

We cherish too, the poppy red
That grows on fields where valor led.
It seems to signal to the skies
That blood of heroes never dies,
But lends a luster to the red
Of the flower that blooms above the dead—
In Flanders fields.

And now the stones and poppy red
Remind us sadly of the dead
Fear not that ye have died for naught,
We've learned the lesson you have taught,
In Flanders Fields.

Have we, indeed, learned the lesson from the war? We wonder! Let us duly reproach ourselves for keeping alive the spirit of the Civil war, remembering that sectionalism, nationalism, commercialism must give place to love, humanity, freedom, justice.

We ought to repeat again the closing words of that poem commemorating the deeds of the blue and the gray.

No more shall the war cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever
When they laurel the graves of our dead.

Under the sod and the dew
Waiting the Judgment day:
Love and tears for the blue,
Tears and love for the gray.

Do these stones mean that others must continue to die? One poet writes a searching Memorial Day poem which just appeared in print. Here it is:

MEMORIAL DAY

I heard a cry in the night from a far-flung host,
From a host that sleeps through the years the last long sleep,
By the Meuse, by the Marne, in the Argonne's shattered wood,
In a thousand rose-thranged churchyards through our land.

THOSE WHO ANSWER NOT

It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it each and all—
A song of those who answer not,
However we may call.
They throng the silence of the breast;
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the true, the brave, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more.

'Tis hard to take the burden up,
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joy of life,
They softened every frown.
But, oh, 'tis good to think of them
When we are troubled sore;
Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they're here no more!

More homelike seems the vast unknown,
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare.
They cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
Whate'er betides, Thy love abides,
Our God, for evermore.

—Rev. John W. Chadwick

Sleeps! Do they sleep! I know I heard their cry, Shrilling along the night like a trumpet blast:
 "We died," they cried, "for a dream. Have ye forgot?
 We dreamed of a world reborn whence wars had fled,
 Where swords were broken in pieces and guns were rust,
 Where the poor man dwelt in quiet, the rich in peace,
 And children played in the streets, joyous and free.
 We thought we could sleep content in a task well done;
 But the rumble of guns rolls over us, iron upon iron
 Sounds from the forge where are fashioned guns anew;

New fleets spring up in new seas, and under the wave
 Stealthy new terrors swarm, with emboweled death,
 Fresh cries of hate ring out loud from the demagogue's throat,
 While greed reaches out afresh to grasp new lands.
 Have we died in vain? Is our dream denied?
 You men who live on the earth we bought with our woe,
 Will ye stand idly by while they shape new wars,
 Or will ye rise, who are strong, to fulfill our dream,
 To silence the demagogue's voice, to crush the fools
 Who play with blood-stained toys that crowd new graves?
 We call, we call in the night, will ye hear and heed?"
 In the name of our dead will we hear? Will we grant them sleep?
 —William E. Brooks.

I do not want to dim the glory of heroic men but to point to the fact that they died needlessly. There is but one righteous warfare and that is the Christian Warfare against evil. Let these stones be a reminder that heroic blood was spilled needlessly in making this world a hell when these dead might have lived to help make it over for Christ.

III

These stones remind us of the certainty of death and the desirability of Life beyond the grave

These stones are wet on the shores of a river which all must cross. Death is inescapable. It is certain. But to those that believe in Immortality it is not extinction. If one believes in God as a Father, it is hard not to believe in Life after the grave. If there are powers and qualities of personality which are worth saving surely God will save them.

Yes the stones remind us that here we have no continuing city. These stones remind us that this life is temporal but personality is eternal. These stones remind us that time is brief and fleeting but eternity is without end.

This memorial day may we get the meaning of the stones: Unforgotten Love, Undying Deeds and Undying spirits. So may we turn our faces to him "who is alive forevermore" and who has "the keys to death and hell."

Woodstock, Virginia.

The Work of the Holy Spirit as Revealed in the Word

By Isaac D. Bowman

Through all ages no great work has ever been accomplished except through the power of the Holy Spirit.

1. No person was ever convicted of sin or converted except by the Holy Ghost.

(a) From Adam to Moses, a Dispensation without a written revelation, men were convicted and converted by faith begotten by the Holy Spirit. See Heb. 11:1-26.

(b) Moses to Pentecost in addition to the subjective law within and the law of nature (See Rom. 1:18, 19; 2:14, 15), God now adds the written law—the law, the Psalms and the prophets—and the glory of God's presence, and reveals a new name for himself (Ex. 6:3). This was all the work of the Holy Spirit. All this was an additional power to convict, to save and to keep them faithful after salvation.

(c) From Pentecost to the second coming of Christ. Between the law and the Gospel we have an overlapping of dispensations. "The law and the prophets were till John." The Holy Spirit gave special power to John. "He shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb."

Jesus Christ pre-existed from eternity, equal to the Father, without a physical form and was incarnated into a body of flesh, blood and bones and was born of a Jewish virgin.

When he was thirty he was anointed for service. His body became the Holy of holies for the indwelling of the Person of the Holy Spirit, bringing the mystical presence of the Father into Jesus Christ. The work that Christ did was not his work, but the work of the Father.

(d) The Apostles were converted, given power to preach and perform miracles by the Holy Spirit, yet he did not dwell in them in Person until after Pentecost (See John 14:17).

1. The Holy Ghost came into the world literally on Pentecost to abide until the second coming of Christ. He has been as literally here for nineteen hundred years as Jesus was here for thirty-three years upon the earth.

1. There has been a progressive unfolding of the Work of the Holy Ghost from Adam to Pentecost.

(a) The Holy Spirit convicted and converted men from Adam to Moses.

(b) From Moses to Pentecost, the Holy Spirit gave a written Revelation—Law, Psalms, and Prophets—and gave a visible sign of the invisible presence of the Holy Ghost—fiery pillar by night and a cloudy pillar by day, then he entered the Holy of Holies in the tabernacle and temple.

For 900 years the Holy Spirit dwelt with Israel and in the first ten chapters of Ezekiel we have a graphic picture of his departure. Here Israel ceased as a Kingdom until Jesus the King of the Jews was come. When he rode into Jerusalem he offered Israel the Kingdom. They rejected him and he rejected them and postponed the Kingdom until the Second Coming of Christ. In postponing the Kingdom he did not postpone Matthew's Gospel (See Matt. 28:19, 20).

Because of human creeds and the rejection of part of the first principles of the doctrine of Christ (Heb. 6:1-3) there has been much confusion about the work of the Holy Spirit in this dispensation.

We who accept the whole Gospel should have no trouble in seeing the clear teaching of God's word upon this question.

(c) From Pentecost to the second coming of Christ.

(1) Repentance from dead works, heart faith, and water baptism for the remission of sins have been a fundamental doctrine of the Brethren Church from 1708 to the present time. No man cometh to the Father except drawn by the Holy Spirit and no man can be rightly baptized except the Holy Spirit gives him faith to believe with all his heart. Hence the baptism that "saves us" (1 Peter 3:21) is the answer of a good conscience given us when we accept water baptism. THERE IS NOTHING PLAINER TAUGHT IN THE GOSPEL THAN THAT TO KNOWINGLY REJECT WATER BAPTISM IS TO REJECT THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF REPENTANCE. Therefore the design of John's baptism and water baptism as given by Christ are exactly the same, as any one can prove by looking up the references.

The doctrine that the birth of regeneration (John 3:3-5) does not include the two births of water baptism and of the spirit is contrary to the Gospel, the universal teaching of church history and all the reformers, even including the liberal John Calvin and Wesley. This teaching in some of our schools is a nineteenth century invention,—1900 years too young to be apostolic.

(2) The Gospel teaches that through heart-faith, prayer and the laying on of hands the Gift of the Holy Spirit is received.

(a) The laying on of hands is one of "the first principles of the doctrine of Christ" (Heb. 6:2). After the Samaritan brethren believed and were baptized, (some days after their baptism) Peter and John "prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen on none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then they laid their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost" (Acts 8:14-17). This needs no explanation. It is perfectly clear they received the Holy Ghost AFTER they had repented, believed and were baptized. The Lord told Paul to go up to Damascus "and it shall be told thee what thou MUST DO" (Acts 9:6). Again Paul says, "what shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do," then Ananias said, "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized and wash away thy sins." Here again we see that the Holy Spirit teaches baptism "for the remission of sins." Then Ananias laid his hands upon him and he received the Holy Ghost" (Acts 9:5, 6). Hebrews 6:2, 3 says the laying on of hands is one of the first principles of the doctrine of Christ," and this will we do if God permit." We learn from these, and other Scriptures, that by faith, prayer and the laying on of hands, the Holy Ghost is to be received before we begin to go on to perfection.

The noted evangelist, Gilchrist Lawson, who gave this subject a thorough study, says: "It is certain that in the early Christian church it was customary to lay hands on believers, and to pray for them that they might receive the 'gift of the Holy Ghost.'" John Calvin and Dr. John Owen acknowledge this in commenting on Heb. 6; Chrysostom and other early commentators teach the same.

The Gospel clearly teaches that the gift of the Holy Ghost is to be received after salvation and water baptism. It is not given to save but to give greater power after we are saved for service.

This was clearly taught for centuries after Christ, as history and all the councils of the church show. Today there is inexcusable confusion among great Bible teachers.

(3) The Filling of the Spirit.

(a) The Holy Spirit literally came into the world to abide through this age at Pentecost.

(b) Every rightly taught Christian accepts the Gift of the Holy Ghost immediately after salvation through faith, prayer and the laying on of hands once for all.

(c) Then refilling should be a daily experience in answer to prayer.

Brief Summary

1. The Holy Spirit convicted and converted men through all ages from the fall of Adam to the present time.

2. Since Christ gave the great commission (Matt. 28:19, 20), baptism belongs to salvation. Man is baptized into the Father, and into the Son, and into the Holy Ghost. Hence to baptize into the Holy Ghost, and they that have not the Spirit of Christ are none of his, does not refer to receiving the Gift of the Holy Ghost but to the work of the Holy Ghost in salvation.

3. By faith, prayer and the laying on of hands we receive the Gift of the Holy Ghost AFTER salvation and water baptism. See John 7:38, 39; 14:17; Col. 1:26, 27.

4. When we are saved we enter into the Triune God. The Holy Spirit recreates the spirit lost in Adam, and makes us a new creation.

5. When we receive the Gift of the Holy Ghost the Triune God enters into us (John 7:38, 39; 14:17, 23; Col. 1:26). When we receive the Holy Ghost he literally enters into us; and the Father and the Son mystically or in spirit, dwells in the believer. At Pentecost the body, individually and collectively became the temple of the Holy Ghost. It is forty times stated that the body is the temple of the Holy Ghost since Pentecost, never was it said before, except of the body of Jesus.

Now every Christian can receive what "eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God has prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit" (1 Cor. 2:9, 10). The Holy Spirit does "exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that worketh in us" (Eph. 3:20). He gives us love that passeth knowledge, and peace that passeth all understanding—peace of heart and mind (Phil. 4:3, 4).

6. Then after receiving the Gift of the Holy Ghost we are to pray daily for the refilling of the Spirit (a) Because we are leaky vessels and daily prayer is necessary to keep filled. (b) Because our capacity for the power of the Holy Spirit should be increased daily. This gives increased power, love, peace, joy, etc., daily as long as we live.

Leesburg, New Jersey.

How to Make the Best Use of Children's Day

By Mrs. H. W. Koontz

The observance of Children's Day has a triple benefit. It gives the children a special opportunity for expression and shows them that they are considered important in the life of the church; it provides an incentive to bring indifferent parents to the services; and it is a means of enlarging the usefulness of the Sunday school both in the matter of training and of reaching new lives.

Whether an elaborate pageant or a program of individual selections be given depends upon the talent and size of the school and the leadership available. To be successful it must be well within the abilities of those who take part. No school need be discouraged at apparent lack of material. It is often found where least expected and diligent search will bring it to light. Many times a child needs only such encouragement to develop a real talent.

The leadership is an important consideration. Experience and tact are valuable. Patience and willingness to work are requisites. But most of all, the leaders must be spiritual. Their lives must be definitely on the side of Christ in profession and action, if the program is to have the proper atmosphere and if the children are to grow spiritually from practicing it.

The amount of time necessary for practice will depend, of course, upon the type of program. It must not be hurried, but on the other hand it should not drag along, for the children may lose enthusiasm and the resulting program will not be as excellent in quality. A few practices with real interest and hard work are better than many half-hearted ones.

But most important is the choice of subject matter of the program. Descriptions of the beautiful skies and flowers and birds of June are acceptable if they honor and point out the Creator of its beauty. But too often the program is without Scriptural basis. If Children's Day is to give real meaning to parents and children alike it must be built about and caused to glorify Christ.

If it can be suitably arranged it is well for the children to show their parents what the various departments of the school have been accomplishing as one part of the program. Parents who had little interest in cooperating with their children in church school matters may thus be led to see how valuable is the training their sons and daughters are receiving and to take more interest in making it available. There are many Bible drills and Scripture memorizations that would work in well here.

The children will welcome a sermon prepared specially for them by the pastor, if it is suited to their experience and built around an object lesson, and the grown people will not find it without interest.

A follow-up program might also be used with profit. Often the attendance shoots up on Children's Day only to fall sickeningly the next Sunday. But if they were made welcome at the program and are personally invited during the week to return the next Sunday many new prospects may become new members to add to the strength, first of the Sunday school and then of the church.

Roanoke, Virginia.

CHURCHES URGED TO STUDY

Newton D. Baker, speaking to the Cleveland Federation of Churches, urged them to "leave prejudice aside and make a real study of the wet and dry question." As if the churches had not been doing just this for the past century. And they are still studying it. Their latest, but not necessarily their last, goal is the Eighteenth Amendment; their ideal is a sober nation. But the churches are ready to weigh any plan presented by Mr. Baker or anyone else for the conquest of the drink evil. National prohibition is the result of a hundred years of constructive thinking on the part of the churches. And throughout the years they have had to outthink the wets, just as they are now having to outthink the crowd which is clamoring for the modification of the Eighteenth Amendment. As for laying aside prejudice—well, the churches have mighty good authority for opposing intemperance.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

II Kings

Benjamin Franklin once said, "If the people are as bad as they are with religion, what would they be without it?" When, upon making the application to ancient Israel, one remembers how miserably nations and men have failed, then and even now, he is forced to ask, "What would they have been without Elisha's presence?" Any nation may be destroyed by its own moral leprosy—a condition which it is unwilling to admit until it is well on its toboggan-way to destruction.

Elijah and Elisha are the two prophet heroes of First and Second Kings respectively. In the midst of the gathering gloom and darkness, these men of God stood out majestically and alone. They foresaw the inevitable doom and became the prophets of Truth for their day and generation. Both were like tall lighthouses dotting the shore line in the midst of the fog. A searchlight, mariners tell us, is of little use in a fog, yet these prophets of God turned on the white light of truth and they were in no sense to blame for the eventual wrecking of the ship of state.

The translation of the noble Elijah, like the passing and burial of Moses, strikes a familiar chord in the heart of the Christian. He marvels at the scenes and remembers with Winthrop Mackworth Præd the glory attached to the undying names of those who fight aggressively for the right.

"And all that thou hast braved and borne,

The heathen's hate, the heathen's scorn,

The wasting famine, and the galling chain,

Henceforth these things to thee shall seem

The phantoms of a by-gone dream;

And rest shall be for toil, and blessedness for pain."

Elisha, doubly blessed and doubly girded for service, arrived on the scene not merely the son of Shaphat, but the son of the Most High God. He is one of the grand old prophets of the Old Testament around whose head the halo of glory continually widens and brightens. His career is replete with wondrous adventures and his miracles are of the extraordinary variety.

"Was it not Elisha once—

Who bade them lay his staff on a corpse-face?

There was no voice, no hearing: he went in,

Therefore, and shut the door upon them twain,

And prayed unto the Lord: and he went up

And lay upon the corpse, dead on the couch,

And put his mouth upon his mouth, his eyes

Upon his eyes, his hands upon his hands,

And stretched him on the flesh; the flesh waxed warm;

And he returned, walked to and fro the house,

And went up, stretched him on the flesh again

And the eyes opened. 'Tis a credible feat

With the right man and way."

So Browning writes in "The Ring and the Book." The writer does not profess to understand the great poet in many of his writings, but these words any child may grasp. What modern Shunamite mother has not thrilled with joy when she has read the fireside or bed-time story of Elisha to her son! What modern boy, who has been so fortunate as to have a devout mother, has not wished he could be another Elisha? Yes, an Elisha, but minus his weaknesses! Ah! there's the rub! But then you could not have an Elisha unless his weaknesses were in evidence and his points of strength were manifest. The Bible is an impartial and eminently fair book.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Probably Jeremiah or Ezra the Scribe.

2. When and Where Written. During the Exile.

3. To Whom Written. To Israel.

4. Object. To Preserve the History of the Kingdom of Israel and Judah.

5. Authenticity. Generally Accepted.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. Elijah's Translation. 1, 2.

2. Elisha's Miracles. 3-7.

3. Hazael and Jehu. 8-10.

4. Minor Hebrew Kings. 11-16.

5. Ten Captive Tribes. 17.

6. The Good Hezekiah. 18-20.

7. Manasseh and Josiah. 21-23.

8. The Captivity. 24, 25.

III. THE STORY OF THE BOOK

Second Kings begins with the translation of Elijah. Elisha, his chosen successor, inaugurates his ministry with the Misha episode, much doubted, until the discovery of the Moabite Stone, which includes his inscription and sundry facts. The Syrian invasion and the famine, together with the end of Ben-hadad's reign, are next recorded. The over-zealous Jehu, another century of kingships in Israel and Judah, and the Assyrian Captivity bring to an end the sad chapter of Israel's sin and punishment. Judah, under the good Hezekiah and the devout Josiah, makes progress; the wicked Manasseh spoils the picture with his wilful wickedness and sin. The Babylonian captivity brings to an end the reigns of the kings.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOKS

1. Key Words. Judah. Israel.

2. Key Verses. 2:9;22:2.

3. Key Chapters. 1, 2.

4. Key Ideas. Israel's Apostasy. Judah's Faithlessness.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The book of Second Kings confirms the observation of Solomon,

"That righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach of any people." Every separate item of this chronicle of Israel's and Judah's history seemingly proves that fact. The prophets are effective up to certain points, but powerless to avert the oncoming tempest and storm. The thrones of the kings totter, while the Jehovah of earth, sea, and sky sits enthroned more and more securely. Man may be defeated, but God never. That is one of the chiefest values of this book. His will, not man's, is finally done.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

"Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me." That text was spoken by Jesus and fulfilled in the recorded Acts of the Apostles. But how truly the word of the Savior fits the cases of Elijah and Elisha. Both become powerful when they yielded in obedience and in faith to the ever-present Spirit of God. We, as Christ's, are the salt to sweeten impure waters; we may be lepers, like Naaman, utterly unclean, and yet become "clean." It is the Christ of the Old and New Testaments who works the regenerating miracle within us. We not only think so, we know it.

VII. THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK

1. Through Miracles. Power and Character of God and Elisha.
  - (1) Healing the spring at Jericho by casting in salt (2 Kings 2:19-22).
  - (2) Supplying the allied armies of Israel, Judah, and Edom with water (2 Kings 3).
  - (3) Supplying oil to the widow for the redemption of her sons (2 Kings 4:1-7).
  - (4) Raising from the dead the son of the Shunammite (2 Kings 4:8-37).
  - (5) Removing the bitter taste from the pottage (2 Kings 4:38-41).
  - (6) Multiplying the loaves for the people (2 Kings 4:42-44).
  - (7) Healing Naaman's leprosy (2 Kings 5).
  - (8) Making the ax to swim (2 Kings 6:1-7).
  - (9) Leading the Syrians into Samaria and sending them away kindly (2 Kings 6:8-23).—Sampey.
2. Through Character. Contrast between Elijah and Elisha.

"Elijah and Elisha were quite unlike in their personal history and in the character of their work. Elijah's home was in the mountains of Gilead; Elisha's in the hot Jordan valley. Elijah seems to have owned nothing but a mantle and girdle; Elisha was the son of a man who could send twelve plows to his field. Elijah was much alone, not being magnetic and companionable; Elisha was the trusted friend and counselor of kings, and the favorite guest of both rich and poor. Elijah was the avenger and destroyer; Elisha was the quiet statesman and religious teacher, his miracles being chiefly works of mercy. The words and deeds of Elijah remind us of John the Baptist; the miracles of Elisha point to the work of Jesus.

"Still it remains true that Elijah is the greater character. He ranks with Enoch and with Moses. He was not, like John, a fore-runner; for Elisha was merely his greatest disciple."—Sampey.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

James 4:8, "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Moffatt gives this rendering: "Have patience yourselves, strengthen your hearts, for the arrival of the Lord is at hand."

A few years ago, the Eastland, a fine lake steamer loaded with Sunday school pupils taking an excursion for Benton Harbor, Michigan, sank in more than thirty feet of water just as it was leaving the harbor in Chicago. More than a thousand children with many of their mothers went down with the boat. So many on board caused the boat to list as they were waving good-bye to their friends, then the great crowd on deck rushed over to the other side of the vessel, turning her over in the water. After an investigation of the cause of the terrible loss of life, the report showed that the lake steamer was faulty in construction—that she lacked ballast. There was not enough weight below the water-line to balance the weight on deck. The lack of ballast! Who has not witnessed it, again, and again?

In the business, political, and religious world, ballast is one of the indispensable things. How often do we see a brilliant fellow flopping and floundering like that tall vessel with too much weight on the top. This great text of Scripture calls attention to the need of a "stablished heart." The young business man who permits his head to be turned because of the prospects of early promotion, gambles with his employer's money, loses; then he filches the money drawer, caught, of course; then disgraced. He lacked ballast. The politician who starts out to "kill off" all competitors in order, as he thinks, to rise, lacks ballast, and his short career is soon ended. The Christian who feels so sure of his standing that he can go into all sorts of worldly affairs without his mother's advice, and laugh at his minister's warning, soon finds himself "without standing", and his influence for God is gone. He, too, lacked ballast.

Here are two men whom the world at large honors. At one time in his political career Henry Clay was a receptive candidate for the Presidency. He was pressing a measure for passage in congress when some friends warned him that he was injuring his chances for that great office. His answer is immortal: "Gentlemen, I would rather be right than President of the U. S." I think I have known a few receptive candidates who would rather be President than "be right." The other great character was Robert E. Lee. This great soldier was penniless at the close of the Civil War. A lottery company, knowing the value of his good name, offered him ten thousand dollars a year for the use of his name in their advertising. His reply was, "Gentlemen, my name is all I have left; that is not for sale." Both of these noted men were well ballasted. Storms of temptation might beat upon their craft in life's voyage, but they could stand the test.

Every one is reminded by the old Book, that a testing time not only comes, sometimes daily, but the testing time is coming. It may be popular to go along with the crowd, but God has a crowd; perhaps it is small as worldly-wise men measure crowds. Jesus came into the world to give men ballast; to help men to go straight, if going that way does shift one with the little crowd. Paul was so concerned in the narrow way, that Timothy was admonished again and again to "hold fast his profession." He was urged "to study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Ballast was what this young preacher needed. Fixed and steadfast in the young Christian must be the New Testament fundamentals of (1) the Existence of the One God of the Old and New Testament; (2) The Divinity of Jesus Christ as Proven by his Resurrection from the Dead; (3) The Inspiration and Authority of the Scriptures as this Resurrected Christ so used and applied them. These fixed and stable souls will not be easily moved, or frustrated when speculative theologies fill the air with "their mouth speaking great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage" (Jude 16). Yes, the prow of the old ship must be held toward the harbor. There are enough derelicts floating about—just drifting—and impossible is it to reach harbor. The craze for "showings" among church leaders, when heaven and earth is moved to attract a little attention, regardless of what God has demanded, is a crying sin of this age.

A PERTINENT SUGGESTION

F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, makes this suggestive observation: "Prohibition always has been and is now a non-partisan issue." He is therefore definitely of the opinion that neither party should take a stand on it now as they "were not asked to and did not do anything as parties to help secure national prohibition." Politicians who raised a great fuss about prohibition in politics need to be reminded that the friends of prohibition never did desire it to be in politics within their meaning of that term. They are now trying to make political capital of the question. Mr. McBride says quite pertinently that "such wet resolutions that have been or may be adopted are as futile as they are insincere," seeking as they do to substitute the will of state and national party delegates, many of whom are selected by party bosses, for the decision by United States Senators and Congressmen in the matter of amending the constitution.—The Presbyterian Advance.

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.
MAGAZINE SECTION
M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

A Teacher Training Association That Is True To The Faith

By Clarence H. Benson, Secretary Evangelical Teacher Training Association

The prevailing ignorance of the Bible in America is almost unbelievable. Some years ago Professor Thwing of the Western Reserve University, at the first Bible exercise of the freshman class gave a test. He wrote out twenty-two quotations from the poems of Tennyson which contained references to the Bible. Few of the students could identify these lines, and only forty-four per cent of the answers were correct.

Quite an extensive survey was made recently in two hundred high schools of Virginia. Twenty simple Bible questions were submitted to 18,434 students. Only forty-six per cent of the questions were answered correctly. Ninety-one per cent of the boys and girls were unable to name three Old Testament prophets, while sixty-nine per cent did not know how many books there are in the Bible.

The main business of the church is to evangelize, and the result of its effort should be manifest in the growth of its membership. However, one cannot study church statistics without being impressed with the large proportion of churches that today are literally at a standstill. Three leading denominations, totaling 35,645 churches, in one year report that 11,394 of these, or thirty-two per cent, had no accessions.

In recent years this failure has been more marked than ever. In 1929 the great Methodist denomination for the first time in one hundred years, showed a decline in membership, and a still further net loss in 1930. Other large denominations also showed a decrease. Where the denominations were able to report a gain in church membership it was traced in most instances to the evangelistic effort that was put forth in the Sunday school.

The Sunday school is the great recruiting ground of the church, since more than three-fourths of its members are acquired through this agency. But in recent years the spirit of evangelism has been noticeably absent in the Sunday school. In fact, statistics indicate that not more than twenty per cent of the pupils are converted while in Sunday school. What is the explanation of this, as well as the prevailing dearth of Bible knowledge and the lamentable lack of missionary spirit?

Some may express surprise to learn that the failure of the church can be traced to its teaching, or perhaps it would be better to say its lack of teaching. The Sunday school teacher is the key not only to Bible instruction, but also to missionary fervor and personal evangelism.

But there are thousands of churches today that are providing no training whatever for their teachers. This spirit of irresponsibility is shown plainly by the fact that, whereas Protestants pay forty-seven cents out of every public dollar to give their boys and girls the best teachers in such subjects as arithmetic, geography, and history, they do not contribute more than two cents out of every church dollar that they may have competent teachers to instruct them in Bible. Are we surprised that the American people are woefully ignorant of the Bible when eighty-seven per cent of all our Sunday school teachers fall below the lowest standards accepted by the state for rural school teachers?

But even where churches have been aroused to the responsibility of providing training for their teachers, it is still possible for them to fail through selecting a course that eliminates or minimizes the very subjects that would best fit their teachers to serve their interests.

Can a teacher be expected to master the contents of the text book in a course that requires only twenty hours of Bible study?

Can a teacher secure enough missionary information to inspire a class from a training course that only offers the study of missions as an elective?

Can a teacher be expected to be an evangelist, to win every one of his pupils to Christ, when his training has been in a course that offers no instruction whatever upon this subject?

Can we possibly hope that a training course lacking these most essential subjects will ever build up the church? And yet it is just such a deleted course to which the majority of the denominations have committed themselves for the past decade. Is it any wonder that the church has failed?

The Southern Baptist Convention is an outstanding exception. It has not failed in its training, nor has it failed to make marked progress. It not only believes in teacher-training, but also in a curriculum that recognizes the knowledge of the Bible as the first essential to a teacher's qualification as well as the necessity of instruction in soul-winning. Years ago its honored president, Dr. J. B. Gambrell, declared, "The most significant of all modern improvements is the work of teacher training." This led to the adoption of the slogan "A certificate for every teacher," and all the resources of the church were concentrated upon this movement. Teacher-training has been emphasized upon every platform and in every paper, until now that denomination is thoroughly aroused to its importance. For the last several years it has been issuing more than 100,000 awards annually, and recently it conferred its millionth award.

This measure of training has been followed in like proportion by a measure of success. According to government statistics the Southern Baptist church gained 1,000,000 scholars between 1916 and 1926, a larger gain than Northern Methodists, Lutherans, Disciples, Episcopalians, and Presbyterians combined. The evangelistic effort that was put forth by their teacher-training has been manifested in the accessions to the church from the Sunday school. The progress of this denomination in recent years accounts for the Baptists now being the largest denomination of the country.

In recognition of these failures and facts the Evangelical Teacher Training Association has been launched. Twenty-one Bible institutes and orthodox colleges have joined together, not only to certify to the public their deep interest and concern for Christian education, but to provide and promote a common course in teacher training that will give adequate attention to instruction in Bible, Personal Evangelism, and Missions. The institutes sponsoring this movement are:

Atlanta Bible Institute.
Baltimore Bible Institute.
Bible Institute of Los Angeles.
Bible Institute of Pennsylvania.
Chicago Christian Junior College.
Cleveland Bible Institute.
Columbia Bible College.
Columbia Bible Training School.
Evangel Theological Seminary.
Houston Bible Institute.
Indianapolis Bible Institute.
Northwestern Bible and Missionary Training School.
Philadelphia School of the Bible.
Portland Bible Institute.
St. Paul Bible Training School.
John Brown Schools.
Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.
National Bible Institute.
Toronto Bible College.
Vancouver Bible School.
Wheaton College.

The Rev. Robert C. McQuilkin, President of Columbia Bible College, has been chosen President; Dr. Elbert L. McCreery, of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, Vice-President, and the Rev. Clarence H. Benson, of Moody Bible Institute, Secretary.

No educational institutions in the world are as well prepared to give complete instruction in the Bible, or as well equipped to train Christian workers, as our Bible institutes, and it is the cooperation of these schools that enables the Association to offer the very best training for the largest number in the shortest possible time.

In the few months of its existence hundreds of students have been enrolled in the classes of these cooperating institutions, and in one city the number runs into the thousands. An even greater number is taking the Elementary Course for community classes as well as make provision for the Standard Training Course, and under their auspices community classes may now be organized in every town and city to enable teachers to secure the benefit of this training.—The Sunday School Times.

BIBLE SALES INCREASE

During the last six months Cape Town, South Africa, has broken all its previous records in sales of Bibles.

The manager of the Cape branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society states the normal sales for the Cape Province average 4000 Bibles a month. A few days before last Christmas 900 copies were sold in a single day. "When times are bad, people turn to the Bible for inspiration and consolation," the manager says, "and it has been so for 2000 years. Today, however, it is surprising what a large proportion of young men there is among our customers. It is something new in our experience to have so many young men in our shops."

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON
at the
Family Altar
with
Thoburn C. Lyon

JOSEPH THE WORKER

(Lesson for June 5)

Lesson Text: Gen. 41:46-57; Golden Text, Prov. 22:29

Daily Readings and Comments*MONDAY*Joseph Promoted. Gen. 39:1-6

Because "the Lord was with Joseph," he prospered in all that he did. Let us see to it that all things we do are such that the Lord can also be with us, and we too shall prosper. Because of the presence of Joseph God also blessed the household of Potiphar, a picture of the way in which God still pours forth his blessings upon the whole world because of the presence therein of his church. But there is coming a time when the church shall be taken away, and the world will no longer be blessed. The Christian admonition is that we work our hardest while yet we have opportunity; and let us not forget that promotion in Christ's kingdom comes to those who serve.

TUESDAY*Joseph Exalted. Gen. 39:19-23

Joseph endured temptation, and suffered at the hands of the world because he did not yield. It is true that he became virtually a prisoner, yet even there he found a place of larger service than had previously been his. We are taught that if we would be exalted with Christ in days to come we must be willing to suffer with him now. When the disciples were seeking the chief places in the kingdom which they expected was soon to be established, he asked if they were able to drink of his cup and to be baptized with his baptism of suffering. God give us courage to be true to Jesus above everything, and we know then that we shall be greatly blessed.

WEDNESDAY*Joseph the Worker. Gen. 41:46-57

In our last lesson we studied Joseph as a youthful dreamer; we now see him as a tireless worker. A dream is worse than useless unless it spurs us on to make the dream a reality. Let us pray for strength and courage to do that which God has shown us. In the world about us today there is a great famine for the bread of life, and the church should be like Egypt, ready to provide food for the souls of men; let us pray that our own church, at least, may not be found as the other nations of that day, with no food to offer, but may we ever be ready to feed those that hunger.

THURSDAY*Working and Praying. Neh. 4:1-6

There is little, if any, mention that Joseph prayed, yet his whole outlook upon life was so devout, he was so conscious of God's guidance and care even in his troubles, that we could not believe otherwise than that he was a man of prayer, even as Nehemiah. Nehemiah illustrates the practical Christianity which James advocates: an admixture of faith and works. Let us neglect neither working nor praying, that our lives may be well-rounded and fruitful.

FRIDAY*Diligence Rewarded. Deut. 11:13-17

The promise here is conditioned upon diligence in keeping God's law. The passage reminds us of the first Psalm, where the blessings that shall come to those who delight to follow God's Word are spoken of. We are also reminded of God's promise to another: "Them that honor me I will honor." Joseph was diligent in keeping God's law, even in Egypt, and God kept his promise: just as truly will he keep his promise to us also.

SATURDAY*A Good Conscience. 1 Pet. 3:8-17

Joseph might, apparently, have avoided being cast into prison had he been willing to yield to Potiphar's wife, and according to the standards of his day it would not have been strange if he had yielded. However, Joseph knew the will of God, and prized a good conscience—and God blessed his suffering. As Peter points out, it is better to suffer for well-doing than for evil-doing. If we sanctify the Lord as God in our hearts, we shall always have a good conscience.

SUNDAY*Faithfulness Rewarded. Luke 19:11-23

This was no idle tale that Jesus told: it faithfully sets forth God's promise to reward his servants, and we may verify again and again, both in the Scriptures and in our own experiences, the fact that God does so reward faithfulness. As part of our meditation today, let us think of Joseph and some of the other outstanding examples of faithfulness in the Bible, and the way in which God rewarded them; then let us think of those times when we were most faithful, or those about us were most faithful, and recall what rewards were bestowed. This should strengthen our faith and make us faith-full!

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK  G. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio
--	--	---

Selected Plans for Committees*PLANS FOR THE SOCIAL COMMITTEE

Motto, "Every minute of every social carefully planned"

1. Plan the year's social program. Get others to assist. Put each member of the committee in charge of some special feature. Plan instructive and helpful games, not silly or noisy things. Preserve the Christian Endeavor spirit.
2. Plan special outdoor features—hikes, rafts, rides, picnics, athletic meets, etc.
3. Plan for a definite close to socials, a different way each time, but leaving the Christian Endeavor impressions and invitation to Christian Endeavor meetings. Personal invitations all the evening, too.
4. Look out for invitations. See that persons you want to reach are personally invited. Put invitation-cards in church pews.
5. Welcome strangers at Christian Endeavor meetings and socials. Look out for strangers at church services. Have a visitors' register. Plan home evenings where small groups will meet and welcome strangers and those away from home. Plan a holiday social to drak back students who have been away to school. Arrange a social hour before the Christian Endeavor meeting with a light lunch to draw students, etc.
6. Collect social literature, and urge its use. Write to other social chairmen, exchanging ideas.
7. Publicity. Serve as member of a publicity committee, and plan an advertising campaign for socials by posters, etc.
8. Specialize on community recreation—lawn-tennis court, baseball league, basketball, athletic meet, lecture-course, etc.
9. Furnish socials or entertainments for city rescue missions or neglected districts, as the Italian, Syrian, or other foreign quarters.
10. Hold an old folks' social, either bringing all the old people to the church or going to their homes with good cheer and fun.

11. Aid in promoting union sociability at union meetings, etc. Hold a union social with other societies, with clubs, Boy Scouts, etc. Entertain the young people of the church without Christian Endeavor to show how splendid it is.

PLANS FOR LOOKOUT COMMITTEE

Motto, "Every eligible person in the community accounted for"

1. Make an index of all eligible persons in the Sunday school and the community; keep it up to date.
2. Each card should be worked on personally by several, each profiting by records of former efforts. Each card should be accounted for to the society. Ask the persons to go with you, then call in person for them.
3. Have a formal reception of new members before the society. Present the new members with a copy of "The Christian Endeavor Greeting," and assign each to a committee.
4. Keep a careful record of attendance at society and church services, participation in each, and other activities, with a monthly report of the grade to each member. Honor roll on the wall.
5. Follow up absentees and delinquents personally and with a series of catchy, interesting cards.
6. Develop members; list the progressive steps a first-class Endeavorer can take, and urge each to keep advancing.
7. Build up a list of student members.
8. Emphasize the pledge by a wall chart, special talks, leaflets, etc.
9. One member of the committee should represent the Crusade-with-Christ Campaign and work for new members and new converts. Have frequent reports. Every associate member should be approached.
10. Yearly evangelistic work. Personal workers' band. Win-one band. Prayer groups, etc.

11. Boost attendance at Sunday church services. Sit in a body down front. Have a Christian Endeavor pew full of literature, surrounded by young people, where all young strangers can be seated and introduced. Invite them to meet a group at your home, next week meet another group elsewhere, etc.

12. Hold a lookout social, inviting every stranger and newcomer.

13. Have a good-literature representative to collect all helps on lookout work and urge their use.

14. Have a publicity representative to advertise the society in every way, emphasize pin-wearing, etc.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

Missions and the Present Crisis*

The history of the Church shows that new opportunity and fresh responsibility come at such times as these. The central fact in human affairs is that Christ stands in the midst of his Church, the very Word of God, identifying himself with human life and giving to men faith and hope and love. The crisis is a trumpet call to turn all eyes to God.

The missionary societies have a special contribution to bring into the response of the Church to this call of God. They represent its world-wide mission and direct its work overseas, a work beset at the moment with great problems, but attended with the most inspiring success.

To the missionary committees will fall the task of adjusting resources to needs, but the necessary adjustments can be carried through with a sympathy and an understanding that will make the work not a hateful task but a sacrament. Christian statesmanship is called for so that the adjustment of policy to the new situation may be truly constructive. Enriching cooperation is made possible as we get closer together to ensure that, while economies have to be effected, the Christian witness is not lessened but rather strengthened.

The supporters of the work—responding sacrificially, while themselves so hard hit—and the missionary committees may both acquire a keener sense of stewardship as they envisage the position of the men and women representing them on the frontiers of the Kingdom, and the hopes and fears of the young churches in non-Christian lands. The missionary work of the Church is one of the great schools where at this time we may all learn anew to bear one another's burdens. Opportunities for sacrifice will emerge, which will throw men and women back on God and draw them into closer Christian fellowship with one another. And as we realize that the situation contains the possibility of such spiritual gains for all of us we shall be stirred to ensure that nothing God requires from us shall be wanting.

The young churches in non-Christian lands must have a special place in the hearts and prayers of the home churches in this time of crisis. These churches, ranging from large communities to small isolated groups, are the sure pledge of the great world-wide Church of Christ that is to be. They are all facing heavy odds with great courage. The crisis will make big demands on them, and it is our privilege to enter into such a deeper fellowship with them, as they too make their sacrifice, as may make the crisis a blessing both to them and to us. The needs of the situation will call each member of the younger churches to more devoted personal service, and they will have much to teach us of their experience of God in Christ as they shoulder larger responsibilities and rely more entirely upon him.

Those who believe that in Christ lies the hope of the world will reckon up anew their resources in God. All the difficult roads of these days of crisis lead to God if we choose to turn our steps to him. He has much to say to his Church if we only listen. The Church was founded and its missionary work entrusted to it just for days like these.

Lift up your hearts.

We lift them up unto the Lord.

—Missionary Review of the World.

SPIRITUAL BONDAGE FOR MILLIONS

Here are the newest figures on the approximate strength of the organized religious faiths of the world:

Roman Catholics .....	310,000,000
Orthodox Catholics .....	120,000,000
Protestants .....	200,000,000

Total Christians .....	630,000,000
Confucianists, Taoists .....	350,000,000
Moslems .....	240,000,000
Hindus .....	230,000,000
Animists .....	135,000,000
Buddhists .....	130,000,000
Shintoists .....	35,000,000
Jews .....	15,000,000
Miscellaneous .....	60,000,000

Total non-Christians ... 1,195,000,000

It is estimated that there are about two billion human beings on earth, of whom nearly a billion are in Asia alone. The proportion reached by all religions is therefore not high, while Christianity in spite of its strength in numbers and its influence on civilization falls far short of being universally known. There must be millions of our fellow humans who have never heard of Christ, while many others have only a meagre and distorted picture of his life and his challenge to their best powers.

Spiritual bondage is one of the most appalling facts in what we think of as a largely civilized world.

Caste enchains millions, and the only effective forces in weakening Hinduism's hold on the Indian untouchables has been the releasing influence of Christian missionaries and Christian schools.

A hopeless pessimism pervades the religion of Buddha, which has no god and offers no hope except Nirvana, the extinction of one's personality.

Confucianism chains the living to the dead past and to superstitious fear of the spirits of the dead. Here too we have a philosophy without a deity.

One hundred and thirty-five million are enslaved to the fetiches and witch-doctors of animism, which is the dominant religion of Africa.

Let not our light be hid, for the gospel of love and redemption which has come to us from Jesus Christ is today the great need of many millions.—Carlton M. Sherwood in C. E. World.

OUR GIFTS TO BENEVOLENCES

According to the statistics compiled this year by the United Stewardship Council (of which Rev. Harry S. Myers, is Secretary) the total gifts of twenty-five leading denominations in North America, for churches with a total membership of 23,416,365, last year amounted to $507,491,165. The benevolent gift from this group amounted to $106,278,015, or about one-fifth of the total. Gifts for foreign missions are not segregated.

The highest per capita giving per annum for benevolence is found among the United Presbyterians, ($12.65 each) and the lowest is among the Southern Baptists ($2.03 each). Many of these people are extremely poor and live in small communities. The largest denominational per capita giving for congregational expenses is in the Protestant Episcopal Church ($37.25 each) which stands twelfth in benevolence giving. The lowest per capita giving for congregational expenses is from the Brethren ($7.43 each). They stand next to the Protestant Episcopal in benevolence.

The denomination spending the largest total amount annually for congregational expenses ($75,712,174) is the Methodist Episcopal, which stands also first in total gifts to benevolence ($15,848,547). They stand twelfth in per capita giving. It would be interesting, if possible, to compare the per capita personal living expenses of members of these denominations, and the amounts expended on luxuries and amusements, with their per capita giving. Each one who keeps an account can compare his or her expenses and gifts. It would be an arresting study for many Christians.—Missionary Review of the World.

CHRISTIANITY VS. NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS

Dr. Robert E. Speer, at a recent Student Volunteer Convention, spoke out strongly against the modern sentimental notions of interchange of ideas and courtesies with non-Christian religions, so alien to the genius of Christianity. He said, in part: "Jesus was as far above a pantheon as Heaven is above earth. ... The Church wants the real Gospel preached, and it is the real Gospel that the world needs." Then he added: "The fact is that the great body of our Christian people in many of our denominations distrust some of the leadership of today, because they think it would shift the missionary enterprise away from its foundations on the New Testament conception of the Gospel. Those missionary agencies and activities will best weather the present storms and move out into larger things, which satisfy their constituencies that they are holding fast to the faith of the fathers."

* A Message from the Standing Committee of the Conference of Missionary Societies in Great Britain and Ireland.

One of the things which is cutting the nerve of missionary activity and zeal today is the modernistic idea that Christianity is only one of many religions, rather than the one only true religion. We are glad that Dr. Speer, who speaks with authority on all matters of foreign missions, has taken such a firm stand on this question. Certainly there would have been no need for the Great Commission to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every Creature" if one religion were as good as another. For "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

MISSIONARY MOTIVATION

In the current issue of Far Horizons, Prof. Charles S. Braden of Northwestern University presents an interesting study of the motives which lead student volunteers to seek to become missionaries. The following are the ten motives receiving the highest rank: (1) "Because I desire to share Christ as the solution of the world's needs." (2) "Because I feel it to be God's will for me." (3) "Because I desire to share with other people the advantages and privileges I enjoy as a Christian." (4) "Obedience to the command of Christ, 'Go ye therefore.'" (5) "Because of the need of non-Christian peoples for Christ." (6) "Foreign field offers the greatest opportunity for life investment." (7) "Love for foreign peoples." (8) "Relatively greater need in foreign fields." (9) "The belief that world peace and brotherhood are to be most effectively promoted through missions." (10) "Because I feel the foreign field offers a wider field of service." Apparently men are more objective in their motives than women, giving first place to the sharing impulse, while the women put first, "Because I feel it to be God's will for me." The women ranked "obedience to Christ's command" third, while the men put it eighth.—The Congregationalist.

Xenia-Pittsburgh looking to the M.Th degree. Words are insufficient to express adequately my gratitude to the good people of Meyersdale and Summit Mills for this privilege.

Altoona, Pennsylvania

I was privileged to spend five nights with Rev. A. D. Gnagey and his good people at Altoona in March of last year. I greatly appreciated the fellowship in the home of the Gnageys and with the church, as well as the preaching of the Word.

Brother Gnagey is truly one of the veterans of the Church, and he did a splendid work for the Church in the critical days of her beginning. His work in the Publishing interests of the Church were especially useful in those formative days. There is danger, that we of the younger generation,—in the midst of our own problems,—shall forget the sacrifices of these older men.

North Manchester, Indiana

Account has already been given of the meeting in January with Brother Schutz and his good people. I believe that the North Manchester church is the most typical Brethren church of any that I know. While I had never preached in this church before, it seemed like coming home. I certainly enjoyed my stay with this people and shall always cherish memories of their faithfulness.

Our Manchester church is one of our large churches, with a Sunday school averaging over three hundred, but I believe with the addition of Sunday school rooms and equipment, she might well be one of our largest. The church has a large opportunity.

It was a pleasure to work with Brother Schutz. I had known him at long range for a number of years, and it was a pleasure to know him at close range. Brother Schutz is a man of remarkable personality, and of remarkable physical stamina. I know of no man who in any way approaches him in the amount of work accomplished. He does constantly the work of two or three men and seems to bear up well under the load. May the Lord continue to bless this pastor and people in their work together for the Lord.

A feature which made this work an additional pleasure was the fact that I spent these two weeks in the home of my own brother in the flesh, brother Albert. This gave us the opportunity of talking over many things of mutual concern,—the family mechanics, the Church and spiritual things in general.

Berne, Indiana

I enjoyed very much a visit of two weeks and a half with Brother Parr and his good people at Berne, during the month of February. I had heard much of this church but had visited the church only once before,—several years ago, for a communion service. This church is noted for its love of the Whole Gospel; but for some reason, they have not had a large ingathering of souls for several years. Perhaps the greatest reason is the limitations of the field. There seems to be very few unconverted people,—at least few not church members,—in the community.

It was a real pleasure to labor with this people, to fellowship with them, and to endeavor to bring them some new light on the Word. May the Lord bless them and their faithful pastor, is my prayer.

This article is already too long. More anon!

WILLIS E. RONK.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

In my report to the Board of Trustees, I said that a scholarship had been partially promised by the Ashland Rotary Club. This since has been voted. It is to be a Freshman scholarship, paying $100.00 to a member of the senior class of Ashland high school. It is expected to be continued from year to year.

The Senior Class is laying a brick walk to match those already down, from the Detwiler gate to Founders' Hall.

Many of our graduates have already secured places for next year.

The various members of the Faculty are making the usual number of commencement addresses.

The College will be represented at both the mid-western Conference in June and at the Southeastern.

The Glee Clubs made no trips this year through the churches, but have given many concerts near home. Both clubs have done very well. The Men's Club appeared in our church here last week and rendered a very acceptable program.

Raymond Gingrich, senior from Pennsylvania, recently pitched a no-hit game against Oberlin College, shutting them out 6 to 0. It is said to be the first no-hit game ever pitched on the Oberlin diamond.

Woooster defeated us before their Color Day crowd, 12 to 0. They will play a return game here on our Color Day, Saturday, May 28.

John A. Miller, son of Dr. and Mrs. J. Allen Miller, will take his Doctor's degree this week at Ohio State University. This is the first Doctor from my department, biology.

EDUCATIONAL DAY, Sunday, June 12. It has been brought to my attention that several dates were set in communications from this office for Educational Day. It makes no difference what Sunday is observed, but the calendar as set in the present year Church Annual, gives the second Sunday in June as Educational Day. Every church ought to observe it. The last page of the Evangelist, last issue, sets forth the facts as to our Endowment funds. If you have not read this page, please turn to it and note the statements.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

HERE AND THERE

It has been so long and so many things have happened since our last report that the writer scarcely knows where to begin. The failure to write has not been because of the lack of desire nor because of the lack of news, but only because of this busy life. We can only now give a brief resume.

Meyersdale

The work here continues to move along nicely and as well as one has a right to expect under present conditions. We have faithfully preached the Word, and carried on our program of visitation the best conditions have permitted. We have two hundred homes (Meyersdale and Summit Mills) which we try to visit twice a year. In spite of a heavy load of outside work, we have succeeded fairly well.

During Easter of 1932, we received into the Church sixteen by confession and two by letter; in the Fall three by confession and this Easter 7 by confession which makes a total of twenty-eight for one year.

School Work

We were privileged to spend one year at Juniata College, going back and forth from here, a distance of one hundred miles. I was home for every Sunday service and at such other times as the work demanded attention. This was a great strain on my physical reserve, and the work would have been impossible except for Mrs. Ronk, who so bravely kept the home fires burning.

We received the degree B. A. early in June from Juniata, and the B. D. degree the same month from Bonebrake Seminary. Since then have been continuing work at

CANTON, OHIO

The Canton Brethren are happy to report that their under-shepherd is now able to be back with them again, after a long siege of illness. While he will not be able to assume his old routine for some time, yet he and his flock are rejoicing that our Heavenly Father has spared him for a longer period of service and is strengthening him day by day.

We have been blessed in having two local elders, Rev. Eikenberry and Rev. Byers, who were able and willing to serve us during our pastor's absence, and a great many of us have had our eyes opened to the multitude of duties which have been falling on one pair of shoulders, since we have had to assume same during his illness. Prof. M. A. Stuckey, brought us two wonderful sermons one Sunday which were certainly appreciated by all who heard him.

The fifth anniversary of the dedication of our new building was observed May 8th. At the morning service Rev. Eikenberry spoke about the memories of the past; Frank Clapper talked about factors which have entered into the growth of the church, comparing the necessities of life, such as food and water, rest and exercise, rain and sunshine, and parental care (which have a part in the natural growth of the human body) to the Bible study and prayer, surrender and service, joys and sorrows and care of the under-shepherds, which have been factors in the growth of that part of the Body of Christ represented here at Canton. Dr. Beal then spoke about the Future, after which an invitation was given and four confessed Christ for the first time, three renewed their faith and joined our work here, and one dedicated their life for full-time Christian service. From January 1st to the present time we have had 39 confessions (36 of which will enter the work here); two came into the church by letter; and there have been five lives dedicated to God as Life Work Recruits.

We have had the privilege of having our Brother Paul Guiley and his wife with us to help us with our services lately. They will sail for South America in June to take up missionary work. We always consider it worthwhile to have Moody Bible Institute students with us as one can always detect in them a real surrender of life to God.

While we have possibly endured the greatest testings known to any church in these past months,—those of much sickness, death, financial losses which have been great, etc., yet we continue to see Christ crucified, buried and risen as our Lord and Savior, and whatever there is to glory in this work is due solely to the work of God through his Son and his Spirit, to Whom we render thanksgiving and for Whom we keep "looking up" ever longing for the Day of his return.

GLADYS SPICE,
Church Correspondent.

MT. OLIVET CHURCH, DELAWARE

Brother Humbert of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, gave chart lectures in Delaware for me from March 29 to April 3. It was a great delight to me to be able to be with him for four nights of this short meeting. I had to leave on Friday midnight train for my meeting in Buena Vista, Virginia. Brother Humbert kindly consented to preach for me over Sunday, April 3.

On account of sickness caused by an auto accident, I was compelled to close the meeting February 21, when it was just half over, and this week of meetings which Brother Humbert held for me supplied a great need for our work.

The meeting increased until on Sunday night he preached to a full house. His chart lectures were very practical and fundamental and highly appreciated by the Delaware people. There were four added to the church three by baptism and one by relation. This was indeed an excellent meeting considering the circumstances. I found Brother Humbert very spiritual, conscientious, and an able teacher and evangelist, and if finances improve I hope the time is not far distant when we can have him for a three weeks' revival meeting.

This report should have been made sooner, but I have been on the go since April 1, having traveled nearly two thousand miles. This is the first opportunity I have had to do any writing at home. Expect to leave again for the south in a few days. Will write up my stay with Brother Naff in Virginia in a few days.

Glad to say I am gradually improving but am not yet normal in health.

ISAAC C. BOWMAN,
Leesburg, New Jersey.

ILLIOKOTA DISTRICT CONFERENCE
CERRRO, GORDO, ILLINOIS

June 10-12, 1932

FRIDAY, JUNE 10

Evening

- 7:30 Song Service and Devotions.
C. C. Grisso
7:45 Welcoming of Delegates.
Delbert Flora, Conference Pastor
Response by Delegates.
8:15 Sermon. Geo. E. Cone.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11

Morning

- 8:30 Simultaneous Conferences.
Ministerium
Woman's Missionary Society
Sisterhood of Mary and Martha
9:30 Conference Business Session.
11:00 Devotional. Miles Taber.
11:15 Moderator's Message.
Austin R. Staley

Afternoon

- 1:30 W. M. S. Session.
Mrs. S. M. Whetstone
2:30 Sunday School Session.
S. M. Whetstone
3:30 Conference Business Session.

Evening

- 7:30 Song Service and Devotions.
7:45 Unfinished Business.
8:15 Sermon. Miles Taber.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12

Morning

- 8:30 Simultaneous Conferences.
Ministerium
Woman's Missionary Society
Sisterhood of Mary and Martha.
9:30 Sunday School. Cerro Gordo, Supt.
10:45 Devotional. Geo. E. Cone.
11:00 Sermon. S. M. Whetstone.

Afternoon

- 1:30 Song Service.
Scripture and Prayer. J. F. Garber.
1:45 Sermon. Delbert Flora.
2:20 Special Music.
2:30 Address. Kenneth M. Monroe, Ashland Theological Seminary, Ashland, Ohio.
3:30 Open Session.

Evening

- 6:30 Christian Endeavor Service.

7:30 Worship in Song and Prayer.

8:00 Sermon. C. C. Grisso.

Closing Remarks by the retiring Moderator.

Austin R. Staley, Dallas Center, Iowa, Moderator.

Delbert Flora, Cerro Gordo, Illinois, Secretary-Treasurer.

BEGIN PRODUCTION ON SERIES OF WORLD'S FAIR PICTURES

To Be Loaned Free

Astonishing progress in industry during the past one hundred years brought about through man's ingenuity and development of scientific methods will be vividly dramatized in a series of silent and talking motion pictures being produced by national industries in connection with A Century of Progress International Exposition to be held in Chicago in 1933.

The films will be loaned to schools, churches, clubs and other responsible organizations without cost.

Unusual and wonderful buildings of the Exposition will be shown, and thousands of interesting exhibits will be used to best interpret the progress of the past century. Thus in the first of the film series, a one reel picture showing advancement in the food industry, will be shown. Life in old Fort Dearborn. Chicago's early fortress, in the beginning of the nineteenth century, also will be shown.

Incidents of fort life, such as preparation of basic foods, trading with friendly Indians, and activities of the soldiers will be photographed with particular care given to reproduction of historic details as they actually existed one hundred years ago. History will repeat itself under the vigilant eye of the motion picture camera.

Then will follow the many steps in food manufacture that led to the modern and scientific methods now used. So it will be with films to follow in the series. Dramatic episodes will portray progress and achievement in numerous industries, from food to furniture.

The amazing contrast between the old and the new will be shown, vividly and colorfully, and the progress that no other century in the history of mankind has witnessed will be recorded for the benefit of the many thousand educational and civic institutions in all parts of the United States and also in other parts of the world.

Some idea of the vast amount of advance preparation and record breaking accomplishment of A Century of Progress will be given with the showing of the numerous buildings and exhibits that have been completed for more than a year previous to the official opening of the Exposition. No other exposition of modern times has been so elaborately planned in advance. A touch of the spectacular will be introduced with thrilling scenes of the fair grounds taken from the air at night, with fantastic and brilliant electrical lighting effects displayed that no other World's Fair has produced.

Production on the first film in the series is already under way and will be ready for distribution in the early summer. These films may be had by merely addressing the producers—Atlas Educational Film Co. of Oak Park, Illinois. A unique feature of this series is that films will be available in both silent and sound editions in both 16mm and 35mm sizes.

"You can rid your heart of your pent-up emotions, but your nervous system will suffer the consequences of anger always."

"The Church must capture the intellect of the modern world if it is to succeed. It must challenge the conscience of the modern world and it must satisfy the spiritual aspirations of the modern world. It is the task of the laymen to voice the moral conscience of the Church in politics, the home and other elements of life."—Hugh T. Kerr, D.D.

OUR LITTLE READERS

HOW PIERRE GOT IN THE PARADE

"There's going to be a parade, father," cried Pierre DeWitt, as he came bounding into his father's business shop one afternoon, shortly after the closing hour of school.

"But why the excitement?" questioned the man. "There's nothing so great about a parade, sonny."

"But there's something great about this parade, father," replied the boy. "It's staged in honor of the dead soldiers of our great country."

"One fine American gentleman you are, Pierre," replied the man with a smile; "you love everything about the big country I bring you to live in."

"I do that, father," responded the boy. "Of course," he added quickly, seeing the sad expression rising in his father's eyes, "I love France—love the soldiers, love the beautiful country and the people that make it a grand little nation—but America, father," he went on eagerly, "it is one big, fine country, and one place where any boy who wishes may think and dream of being a big man."

"You're right, my son," answered the man, "and just for that very reason I brought my family to America. Go on, get in the parade; carry the biggest, brightest flag you have among your collection, and sing with all your might the national anthem, if the chance arises."

"The chance will arise, all right," answered the boy, "and I shall march and sing as bravely and loudly as anybody."

But marching and singing as bravely as anybody, Pierre soon discovered, wasn't going to be as easy as it sounded. Tom Walker, president of the Rising American Club, who had had the pleasure of attending a few times, decided immediately, when a parade was suggested, that only American-born citizens should be allowed to take part in it.

"Please, Tom," begged Pierre, "let me march in the parade. I've such a lovely flag to carry, and I can sing the national anthem as loyally as anybody."

"No," answered Tom, flatly, "you are not an American-born citizen—this bars you from the parade."

"But I am a loyal citizen," argued Pierre. "and I want to march in the parade. My great-great-grandfather fought for the freedom of this country and is buried in the cemetery we are going to decorate. I shall spread one of my most treasured flags above his grave—just watch and see if I don't."

"You may do that, Pierre," replied Tom, "but, all the same, you can't march in the Rising American parade."

"I don't think that's the right spirit," interrupted the voice of Dan Waters. "Pierre is a loyal citizen and should be counted among the marchers."

"That's what I say," argued Jim Crow; "let Pierre march with us."

"And I—say no!" exclaimed Tom; "and, being president of the club, my wishes should be recognized."

"That settles the matter," chimed in Pierre, with quivering lips; "I won't march in the parade, but my heart will be in it—but—I'll be grieved instead of joyous when I see you fellows marching past the grandstand; that's all I can say."

"You'll get over that," retorted Tom, "and maybe in another year's time I'll let you march."

Suddenly the little Frenchman's face turned white and a gleam of determination appeared in his eyes.

"I won't wait another year, Tom Walker," he declared stoutly; "I'm going to march this year!"

"Not in the Rising American Club," declared Tommy, emphatically.

"There's plenty of room," laughed Pierre, "in this country for a fellow to march on Decoration Day if he feels patriotic enough, and I'm thoroughly patriotic—I'll march by myself, if necessary—but carry a flag I will—and decorate the grave of my great-great-grandfather—and I'm going to do it while the Rising Americans are decorating the graves of their ancestors, too—and I've already got the flag—hear me?"

And before the astonished Tom could make reply, Pierre had darted through the schoolroom door and disappeared around the corner of the building.

"Now, Mr. Tommy," chimed in Jimmy, "you've put your foot into trouble; these French people are always loyal to their flag and what it stands for. I think you had better follow Pierre home and apologize."

"I shall do nothing of the kind," retorted Tom, "but I am going to pay a visit to his house, and if I don't find a flag—well," he finished seriously, "I'll make things a little warm for that youngster."

Just when he would pay that promised visit. Tom didn't say, but considering Decoration Day was only forty-eight hours off, he decided he had better do it right away. But dusk was settling over the world when he appeared at the door of the DeWitt cottage.

"Yes," said Pierre's mother, when Tom inquired for the son of the house, "Pierre is home; you'll find him in his room at the head of the stairs. Go right up."

Tom didn't wait for further urging, but immediately went slipping up the narrow stairs, thankful for the opportunity of catching the boy unawares. All he would have to do was to demand the flag of which Pierre had boasted, and the joke would be on Pierre.

Imagine the surprise young Tommy experienced when he reached the top of the stairs. There in one corner of a beautifully furnished room sat Pierre, surrounded by more than a dozen American flags, and working on some sort of wire contraption.

"Hello, Tommy!" Pierre called pleasantly. "Come right in and make yourself at home—you will feel at home in my house, won't you, considering its' Americanized—at least by the country's flag?"

A lump rose in Tommy's throat, and, greatly humiliated, he crossed the floor to the French boy's side.

"I'm sorry, Pierre," he said soberly, "that I was such a cad. You are a loyal son of this great country; can you forgive me?"

"Sure I can forgive you," replied Pierre, "and maybe you are right—only American-born citizens should march in the parade commemorating the death of its valiant men."

"But for the French," returned Tom, thoughtfully, "our nation might have gone down to defeat once upon a time—I had forgotten that, Pierre, so please get your largest flag and come with me this very minute."

So it happened that Pierre DeWitt headed the parade, and, under the fire of eloquence from a forceful speaker's tongue, he spread the flag he so lovingly bore above the grave of a great Frenchman who gave his life to keep America free in 1776.—Junior Joys.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FAIR HAVEN CHURCH, WEST SALEM, OHIO

Communion service will be held in this church on Sunday evening, May 29, 1932. Neighboring Brethren are invited to share this service with us.

RAYMOND E. GINGRICH, Pastor.

SPECIAL REQUEST

Will not all the churches and other organizations, which have not done so please forward their offering for the Brethren Home at Flora to the Treasurer? Brethren have written that offerings were taken but no report of same has as yet been made. Please do not hold such offerings in local hands. It is a difficult task that the brotherhood imposes upon the officials and Boards that administer the affairs of such institutions. So we are taking this means of requesting pastors and church officials to send in their offerings now. Send to Henry Rinehart, Treasurer, Flora, Indiana. This request is made on behalf of the Board by

J. ALLEN MILLER, President.

SOUTHEASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE NOTICE

All roads lead to Roanoke June 14 to 16. The Roanoke church takes this opportunity of extending a hearty invitation to all the churches of the District to send as many delegates as possible to the Southeastern Brethren Conference.

Roanoke is easily accessible from all points of the District by good roads, two railroads (Norfolk and Western and the Virginian) and excellent through Bus service.

After arriving at Roanoke you will have very little trouble in finding the church. It is located on the corner of Otterview Avenue and Rivermont Street in the southwest part of the city called Ghent. If you come by auto, follow route 11 west from the center of the city until you come to Memorial Bridge. The church is on the hill to the left of this bridge. If you come by train or bus take a Virginia Heights bus west on the corner of Jefferson Street and Church Avenue. This bus passes the church. All trains and busses will be met Tuesday for the convenience of the delegates.

Lodging and breakfast will be free to all visiting members. Lunch and dinner will be served in the church basement at regulation rates.

Again, Roanoke church invites each church of the District to send a banner attendance. H. W. KOONTZ, Pastor.

EDUCATIONAL DAY

SUNDAY JUNE 12

This is the day designated by our National Conference to be known as Educational Day.

The Day is properly Observed when . . . .

- (1) Stress is laid upon the need of Christian education;
- (2) Ashland College and Seminary are presented as the center of both secular and religious education within our church;
- (3) An Offering is received for the common treasury of these organizations.

Many other interests of the Church depend upon the vitality of the work here,—trained Brethren Ministers and Missionaries, a trained lay leadership, and the general strengthening of our own separate organic existence by foundations deeply laid in intelligent Christian convictions.

Also our place in the North Central Association, and in many other powerful standardizing agencies, depends very largely upon gifts given through permanent church organizations, of which the Educational Board is one.

Little here could be of more vital importance than sufficient gifts on Educational Day. Let every congregation make a substantial offering.

THE EDUCATIONAL BOARD OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH

VOL. LIV
Number 23

June 4
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Keep the Flag Off the Grog Shop

By Senator William E. Borah

What can be offered, then, by those who would replace prohibition by something else? Some modificationists think they can eliminate objectionable features from the sale of intoxicants simply by putting the traffic in the hands of the government instead of the hands of the individuals. Now I am not wedded to the Eighteenth Amendment. If there is any better way on earth to control the liquor traffic I am for it. But I could never be persuaded to aid in putting the Federal Government in the liquor business. I do not want the American flag—which flies over the public school—planted above the grog shop.

Government control has not solved the liquor problem in Canada; neither did it solve the problem in the Southern states which experimented with it at the beginning of the century and which were one and all glad to escape from the corruption which it engendered by turning to absolute prohibition. Yet government control is still being advocated by certain modificationists in the United States. We have been hesitating a long time here in Washington over government control of Muscle Shoals. But how simple and incidental that would be to government manufacture, sale and distribution of liquor to 120,000,000 people! We have turned away from government operation of railroads and ship lines and shuddered at the thought of government operation of coal mines or power—and yet Muscle Shoals, the railroads, the ships, and the coal would not so search out the weak spots of our institutions as would government control, manufacture, and sale of alcohol. I question whether the processes of democracy, as we know them could survive the corruptive decay which the ordeal of regulating such a traffic would impose.

Again it has been suggested that the entire matter should be turned back to the individual states to do with as they choose. Now, I chance to live in a state that was dry before the passage of the national act. There was no way by which the people of Idaho, who had voted themselves dry, could protect their frontiers from the states which had not put a ban on the liquor traffic. The Supreme Court ruled that while liquor could not be shipped into a dry state yet it could be shipped across a dry state. We found very soon in Idaho that in shipping liquor through our state it always stopped en route! Under state control the problems of enforcement as between the wet and the dry states would not be reduced—they would be multiplied. The inconvenience of the present Federal protection of the nation's borders has frequently been pointed out; but how much more difficult a situation where the forty-eight states undertake to control four times forty-eight boundary lines!

The Bible and the Depression

When the days are dark, men need its light.
When the times are hard, men need its comfort.
When the outlook is discouraging, men need its confidence.
When despair is abroad, men need its word of hope.

There luxuries that may well be spared. There are even necessities that can be curtailed. But the Bible, indispensable at all times, is still more indispensable in times like these today.

The Bible is not a book of political maxims or of economic theories. It is not a book of maxims or theories at all. It is a book of living principles. Its spirit is the spirit of brotherliness and good will. It is a summons to helpfulness: "Bear ye one another's burdens." It is a summons also to self-respecting independence: "Let every man bear his own burden." It teaches charity, but also justice. It calls us to the giving and serving which the strong owe to the weak, and those who have to those who lack; but it also strikes straight and clear at the moral defects in individuals which are responsible for a large part of the poverty and suffering of the world; and also at the moral and economic defects in society, in business relations, and in the distribution of the common resources of the world, which are responsible for the remaining part.

Christ is the only hope of individuals and of society. And the Bible is the only book which tells his story. It alone preserves his words, which are spirit and life. It alone records his deeds by which he saved the world, and would save it now if we would obey him.

The best thing men can do is to spread the Bible and get it read and obeyed. This would be the end of hard times, of poverty, of unemployment, of injustice, or wrong, or war.

ROBERT E. SPEER.

This ringing message from Dr. Speer is even more needed now than when he wrote it more than a year ago. There is all about us a psychological depression even worse than the economic problems which beset us on every hand. To overcome it, the individual man and woman and youth must stop, take account of their inner spiritual equipment and power, and turn to the Bible for a saner outlook and a more satisfying, sustaining assurance to meet the constant demands of life. There are in the Bible peace, strength, and practical guidance in one's daily problems, and these can all be had through an intelligent, open-hearted turning to its pages.

The earnest thought and practical action, supported by prayer, of our readers is solicited in a united effort to reveal afresh to multitudes of men the eternal resources of the Bible for their needs. The Bible societies are using every measure within their power to make this effort as widespread as possible. For the alleviation of distress and for its permanent cure, a change in conditions is not needed so much as changes in persons. The Bible can, under God, help to bring about these changes if we will all give it its opportunity. Here is a group of practical measures, some of which are surely possible for every reader. Will you help?

A fresh contact of your own with the message of the Bible will very possibly enable you to meet better your own responsibilities.

Can you help members of your own family to turn more fully and rewardingly to the Bible and to prayer?

Is the family altar, with its daily reading from the Word of God, being maintained in your own home faithfully and with deep good to all who share in it? A renewal of family worship at just this time may be doubly blessed, in holding all of the group steady and strong against temptation and despair.

Perhaps some family, close to you as relatives or friends, is in deep distress, and a humble, earnest suggestion from you that they rekindle their family altar might be just the aid they need to get back into normal and hopeful living.

Is there some close friend, troubled and lonely, who could be much strengthened in his daily struggle by turning to the Bible in daily devotions? It may help if you tell him what the Bible and prayer are doing for you and your own family or your closest friends.

In your neighborhood or community there are very likely individuals or families who have no active church connections or any steady religious life. Can you not search out one or two such families, and make it your task to help them to the riches which the Bible offers, and to the strength which comes from fellowship with others waging similar battles with the resources of the Bible?—Adapted from Bible Society Record.

The Bible and Wealth

By Albert A. Hyde

It is not significant for the times that the one whom both Christendom and non-Christendom are now recognizing as the greatest prophet and teacher of all the ages had much more to say about the worries and troubles of the rich and the bad influences of wealth on human life and progress, than about the evils of poverty? While we all know that material poverty has been, and is today, the cause of untold suffering, poverty is far from being the greatest evil of the world, notwithstanding much contemporary thought and writing to the contrary. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," said Jesus. And Agur's prayer was doubtless a wise one—"Give me neither poverty nor riches."

God has given mankind this whole world to use, develop and dominate—certainly infinite riches and an endless calling. Almost his first commission to man was to "subdue" the earth, with all its stored wealth and unknown forces, for the common good. Obedience to this command has brought, and is bringing, great happiness to man, as well as untold misery through our "covetousness," which the Bible says is that old, old sin of "idolatry." The first commandment still applies to all the nations.

So rapidly is the world now moving, that more has probably been accomplished in the last hundred years toward "subduing" the earth, than in all the preceding centuries and millenniums of human existence. Behold! in every direction, riches. Earth's products in such abundance that virtually every important market of the world is glutted, and prices are depressed beyond cost or precedent.

Slowly but surely, we think, disillusionment as to the reality and true worth of possessions is coming. Material things, wealth riches, have their economic value; but their perpetual ownership and true worth have never changed, and never will. Gradually we are recognizing the truth of the statement of the beloved disciple, "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." No, we think, it is not the problems of poverty, but rather those connected with wealth, and its righteous use and distribution, which real progress has to solve. Perhaps the present cataclysm has come in order that we may learn what are the "true riches."

A few passages, from many which the Bible gives, clearly show the eternal principles governing ownership and the happy use of wealth.

Unchanging Ownership

The earth is Jehovah's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.—Psalm 24.

Our Lease

Beware lest, when * * * thy herds and thy flocks, thy silver and thy gold, are multiplied; then thy heart be lifted up, and thou forget Jehovah thy God, and say in thy heart, My power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth. But thou shalt remember Jehovah thy God, for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth.—Deuteronomy 8.

Christ's Clear Command

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth, where moth and rust consume,

(Continued on page 14)

IN THIS NUMBER

Keep the Facts in Mind About Prohibition—Editor, .....	3
Editorial Review, .....	4
Jesus Loved Him but Failed to Win Him—S. E. Christiansen, .....	5
Youth, The Church, and Prohibition—L. C. Ridenour, .....	6
The Permanent Appeal of the Bible—Edwin Lewis, .....	7
Significant News and Views, .....	7
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, .....	8
Miniature Studies in the Bible—M. A. Stuckey, .....	9
A Practical Plan for Personal Bible Study—Marion Hull, .....	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, .....	11
Plans for the Missionary Committee, .....	11
"Nights with God" in Auckland—A. S. Wilson, .....	12
News from the Field, .....	13-15
Our Little Readers, .....	16
Announcements, .....	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Keep the Facts in Mind About Prohibition

Wet propaganda is being so widely circulated through the press and the radio that there is scarcely anything that is said about the Prohibition situation that one dares believe, or at least, that he dares accept at face value. The liquor interests and a few multi-millionaires who wish to saddle their tax burden on the drinkers have deliberately set themselves to confuse and deceive the people. And the great metropolitan papers and the news distributing agencies are the willing tools of their corrupt aims. These papers print distorted and dishonest news to make wet sentiment, and suppress or slight dry news to the disadvantage of Prohibition. It is important, therefore, that the papers be read with the utmost caution, and that effort be made continually to keep the real facts in mind. Following are some statements of fact that it will do us well to ponder:

1. Prohibition has had no causal relation to the depression, though the wet propagandists are loudly making such a claim. The depression is not a distinctively American affair. It is a world-wide experience and situation. Germany has no prohibition but she has been afflicted with the depression to such an extent that she would have collapsed utterly had it not been for the help given her by dry United States in the declaring of a one-year war debts moratorium. Great Britain by no means has what Raskob calls "the damnable affliction of prohibition", but it has a depression much more severe than our country has suffered. Prohibition, instead of being a source of financial weakness, is one of strength, and Dr. Thomas N. Carver, professor of economy at Harvard University, insists that the United States under the Prohibition regime has a decided advantage over other nations operating with the liquor system. He says: "They who refuse to take this great step forward in the economy of human resources, whether they understand it or not, are definitely choosing to occupy a secondary position in the civilized world."

2. Prohibition, notwithstanding the wet claim that it costs billions of dollars for enforcement, is a source of gain to the federal government. Colonel Amos W. W. Woodcock, Director of Prohibition Enforcement, says: "Total cost of enforcement 1920 to 1931, $284,156,524; collections from fines and penalties and revenues from taxes on lawful and distilled and fermented liquors, $548,588,884. The net is a balance in favor of the government of $264,432,260." That is a fact worth remembering.

3. That annual drink bill under the old saloon system was a tremendous drain upon the people. The American Grocer, a publication of high authority in all matters pertaining to food and drink, carried in its issue of June 15, 1910, the following figures for the drink bill for the year 1909: "Whiskey, $566,913,331; beer, $879,872,542; wines, $107,219,990; total retail cost liquor 1909, $1,554,005,863." These figures are very conservative. The American Grocer took no account of the "cutting" or diluting of spirits by saloonkeepers, which was an almost universal custom. W. G. Calderwood, in his booklet "Prohibition Facts", from which we have gathered many facts and which we commend to our readers, says: "The allowance made for these items would increase the total cost to $2,000,000,000 or $2,500,000,000."

4. Prohibition does really prohibit, contrary to the inconsistent and insincere claims of the wets. They are telling us that there is more drinking now than before Prohibition. But the U. S. Census report shows a great decline in commitments to penal institutions for drunkenness. The police records of New York City, possibly the place where Prohibition is at its worst, show for the five years ending 1916 (wet) the average arrests for drunkenness were 19,314, while, for the five years ending 1930 (dry) the average was 8,583. The arrests were 123% more under saloon days. And if population were taken into consideration the difference would be even greater. The decline of drunkenness indicates a decline in drinking. Another indication is that there were 123 Keeley Institutes (where drunkards are cured), and now there are only 14. The average alcoholic deaths have dropped from 5.2 per 10,000 population for the five years preceding Prohibition to 3.8 for the last five years. The per capita consumption of beverage alcohol for the year 1911 was 22.8 gallons and in 1922 it had been reduced to about 3 gallons.

5. Statistics show that crime has decreased since Prohibition went into effect, rather than increased, as is popularly supposed to be the case. W. G. Calderwood says: "Wet propaganda has falsely advertised a great increase in crime." Dr. George Kirchwey, one of the most widely known criminologists of America, insists that crime is decreasing and uses figures from the U. S. Census Bureau to prove his contention, saying, "Let us take courage from the official record covering the eighteen years 1910 to 1927 inclusive, which shows a marked decline of from 35 to 40 per cent in the general rate of the United States, and this notwithstanding the immense number of 'new crimes', resulting from liquor, drug and traffic laws enacted since 1910. That the offences of assault, fraud, vagrancy, prostitution and larceny, the last the most common of serious offences, should all have fallen off by 50 per cent or more, and burglary by 10 per cent or more, should give pause to the Jeremiahs." For the month of May just one year ago the Associated Press reported "a decrease in all types of crime save murder and aggravated assaults in more than 1,100 cities." The World Almanac for 1932 shows a decrease in crime in New York City. "The per capita homicides were 81 per cent, other felonies 11 per cent, and intoxication 129 per cent greater during the five wet years" ending 1916 than during the five dry years closing 1930.

6. The unemployment situation would not be helped by the return of legalized liquor, but rather aggravated. The smallest number of men are employed in the liquor business for any given amount of profits produced of all other industries. The total number of men employed in all parts of the liquor business, including allied trades such as bottling, capping, etc., did not reach 500,000 in the hey day of its success, and yet the wets are now telling Congress if the traffic is legalized it will put 1,000,000 men to work. It is absurd, but some of our unemployed peoples are being deceived thereby. It had better be kept in mind that for every one to whom employment might be provided by the business, many men would be made unfit for employment by its intoxicating product. Henry Ford spoke a truth that deserves consideration when he said: "The liquor business made money for the few—took money and money making ability from the many."

7. The farmer has been hit by the depression as severely as any one, but let him remember, as most of them do, that legal liquor will not help but will hinder him. William A. Lloyd, editor of the Ohio Farmer of Cleveland, said: "Prohibition has been a great benefit to American agriculture, to the increase of dairy products and the increased standards of living of the consumer. It takes more grain to make a quart of milk than a quart of beer, and the increase of dairy products has been especially marked since Prohibition."

8. Prohibition has cut down drinking among young people, contrary to the claims of wet propagandists. In the days of license it was a very exceptional case where boys did not mingle freely with men in the saloons, contrary to the law, but now boys must sneak around to get a drink even when it is available, and only a few are enticed into the drink habit. J. W. Crabtree, secretary of the National Education Association, made a survey of conditions in high schools at the request of President Hoover's Law Observance Commission, and reported:

"Conditions in the high schools are much better than in 1920 with respect both to drinking and to general behavior. This is doubly significant in view of the fact that the high school enrollment has grown since 1920 from two million to more than five million students—an achievement unparalleled in any country in all history. . . . Unquestionably the Eighteenth Amendment has benefited the schools beyond measure." Many similar testimonies are to be had both for high school and college students. The wets would have us to believe that the young people are going to the dogs by the drink traffic route because of Prohibition. Any one

(Continued on page 15)

EDITORIAL REVIEW

One should never be ashamed to own that he has been in the wrong. Which is but saying in other words that he is wiser today than he was yesterday.

Week after next we will publish no paper. If you have announcements that need prompt publication, mail them in for next week's issue, to reach us by June 6th.

Brother D. A. C. Teeter is "feeling fine" since the operation on his eye, so Mrs. Teeter informs us, and "his eye is doing well." God hath answered prayer and wrought a miracle of grace through the knowledge and skill he has given unto men, as others in the brotherhood can testify also.

The work at Osceola, Indiana has been showing increased interest during recent months, though without a pastor. The Sunday school is carrying on in an aggressive manner, the leadership in activity being the young people's class. Sister Edna Nicholas of Elkhart has been supplying the pulpit.

Brother George E. Cone, of Milledgeville, Illinois, is the National Statistician, and he is calling upon pastors and church secretaries to get busy and fill out the statistical report blanks at an early date. He and the district statisticians are wanting a one hundred per cent report this year. That requires one hundred per cent cooperation on the part of local church officials. Is that possible? Why not?

Another correspondent from Allentown, Pennsylvania, gives a brief newsletter this week. The eighty-five per cent of church members reported in attendance at the regular service is good. The young people are a real factor in the activity of the church, the Christian Endeavorers being especially aggressive in their local missionary work. Brother S. E. Christiansen is the pastor of this church.

Members of the Ohio conference are urged by the Bryan pastor to come in large numbers to the conference to be held there on June 14 to 17. Brother Stewart gives some directions about getting there, and states that the good sisters of the Bryan church are planning to meet the depression squarely and to serve the delegates on conditions that make it so that no one need stay at home on account of the expense. Turn to the "Announcements" for further information.

Brother George E. Cone reports his work at Milledgeville, Illinois, where he is serving his seventh year of faithful leadership. The year has realized a net gain in membership, he says, though numbers are not given. He has led his people in the support of the special interests of the brotherhood, which is always an indication of loyalty. He is open to a call to another pastorate and the church will be seeking another pastor. Brother Cone's ministry there has been characterized by steady, faithful building, and a good work he has done.

Brother Henry Rinehart, treasurer of the Brethren Home Board, gives a report of receipts for the old people's home at Flora, Indiana. That these have not been adequate to meet the needs was revealed by the recent notice of the President of the Board, Dr. J. Allen Miller. If the offerings taken but not sent in, were in the hands of the treasurer, it would doubtless help considerably. That is a duty that ought to be taken care of promptly. Money taken for a special purpose ought not to be withheld from the use intended. There is danger of becoming guilty unintentionally of misappropriating funds.

Brother J. Wesley Platt, pastor of the church at Manteca, California, tells us that seven new members were received into his church following the meeting held by Dr. Yoder and reported about a year ago. As a result of the revival conducted by Brother A. L. Lynn in March, ten were added by baptism and three by reconsecration. Brother Lynn's ministry was much appreciated by these people. Brother Platt began on April 18th his twentieth year as pastor in that community, which makes his service in one field one of the two longest, according to the editor's best knowledge and recollection, of any of the present active pastors. The other pastorate of about equal length is that of the First Church of Long Beach, where Dr. L. S. Bauman has been in charge since the beginning of that work, more than nineteen years ago. We are wondering if Lathrop, about five or six miles distance may not also have been a part of his pastorate which he began nineteen years ago. In a brief report of this work he says three were recently baptized into the church, and he also conducted a well-attended communion service for them.

Brother C. A. Stewart, pastor of the church at Bryan, Ohio, who has suffered affliction since the middle of March, but is now able to be back at his work, has discovered what fine, loyal people he has to serve, because of their splendid cooperation during his illness. Dr. Charles A. Bame, who did yeoman service for this editor early in the year, stepped into the breach on this occasion also and took splendid care of the pulpit work. Two are awaiting baptism as a result of this ministry. An interesting feature of the Bryan work is the merged Sunday morning service. After trying out the program for a year these people are enthusiastically for it. The Sunday school is all in church and the church all in the Sunday school, which seems to us to be about the ideal. We are wondering why this plan would not solve the problem of the Sunday school exodus before church services in many places, if pastors were willing to operate on a short schedule. But at that, the Sunday school study period and the time for the morning sermon need scarcely be shortened more than what they really are in most cases. The plan, of course, is not new, but we are wondering if it might not be more widely used to advantage among our people.

Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs reports the May Day activities of the college, which made up a full and enjoyable day, and there were many visitors present. The crowning of the May Queen was charmingly done, and the presentation of the Greek play, "Electra," was a dramatic success. It was about the heaviest drama we have seen enacted on College Hill, and the actors did their parts well, reflecting credit upon those who had the training in charge, particularly the dramatics instructor, Miss Thelma Slack, who herself played the part of Electra. This tragedy was the production of Sophocles, who died about 400 years before Christ and who was one of the most gifted exponents of Athenian culture. But Athenian culture was pagan, and "Electra" is pagan in its characterizations and ideals. In the representations of the Fates, there were features more in keeping with popular dramatic standards than with orthodox Dunker tastes. We were not privileged to view the Senior class play, but we are glad to note that Dr. Jacobs speaks highly of it. The Evangelist commends the president of the college for expressing his anxiety that "the college sustain its record for clean, wholesome plays." He expresses an attitude that will go a long way toward maintaining the institution as indeed it has been, a light set upon a hill. Ashland College has wielded an influence that is wholesome. It has born a witness to social standards that the community needed. Last week the editor overheard a traveling salesman attempting to sell some of the latest novelties associated with cigarette smoking to one of Ashland's business institutions that enjoys a considerable trade with the college students and that fact was made the basis of the man's appeal. The manager objected: "They wouldn't be popular with these students at all. This college is conservative in its standards. It is a Dunker institution." When we heard those words we secretly thanked God for the moral strength of the Dunker heritage, and for the lingering evidences of that strength at Ashland College. May the entire faculty and student body, especially the Brethren students, cooperate with the president in maintaining those high standards that have made the school a blessing morally as well as educationally.

Jesus Loved Him but Failed to Win Him

By S. E. Christiansen

Matthew 19:16-25; Mark 10:17-27; Luke 18:18-25. These references record the instance where Jesus met the hindrance to the Gospel in riches. He had met many different kinds of hindrances up to this time and in nearly all he overcame and got a response to the Gospel Light. Here, however, was a case of wealth covered over with selfishness and greed. Where other extreme cases were met, Jesus seems to have been able to help, but here the man turned from him. There is no hindrance that works more severely against the acceptance of the Gospel than the love of money.

Jesus came in contact with the rich young ruler when he was walking in Perea beyond the Jordan. It was during a very busy ministry of Jesus, but he was never too busy to try to win a soul.

Jesus Looked on the Man

The Scripture says Jesus looked on the man and that he was young. How Jesus likes to meet persons in their youth, before the evil days come. Youth suggests ambition, strength, planning for the future. It is the blossoming time of life. It was a youth at such a period in life that Jesus met. No wonder Jesus looked at him with such interest and such appeal. Jesus likes to have a man before evil habits have formed in his life, before immorality has placed the fingers of wreckage upon him. Jesus wants men to realize in their youth that God has granted unto them grace. And youth is the best time to yield and take advantage of grace. When evil habits have hardened the heart, when the heart has become dead and the conscience has become seared so that it is unresponsive, grace is helpless.

This young man was rich. He may have got his riches by inheritance. He may have cleverly increased it. And no doubt his industrious, thrifty, economic life seemed of great worth to him. His life was really worth while, he thought, and few others in his group or vicinity were as fortunate as he. He did not know that a man who is in love with his riches is really unfortunate.

This young man was not only rich, but he was a ruler. Truly he was among those who fared well. He was young, rich and had a good position, and a government position at that. He may have gotten it through political pull; he may have inherited it; or his industrial success may have brought him into it. But no matter how he got it, he was well situated, and he loved his place.

This young man must have been one of high morals. He had kept the law from a child. He was an exemplary young man. He was honest and truthful and clean, but he felt dissatisfied with himself, and was not ashamed to confess it and to try to find the way to eternal life. The ways of his father and mother did not seem to content him. He heard of Jesus and the New Way. He went to find out for himself how to get eternal life. He had all of this world he could wish, but a discontented, troubled heart filled his bosom, and he made his way through the crowd to seek of Jesus the way out. He sought the truth. He knew the Old Testament and the traditions of the elders, but with all these there was a lack, a void, within his soul. How could it be filled?

The Jewish teachings were filled with the Messianic hope, as he well knew. And his own heart was anxious and troubled about the hope of eternal life. But, in spite of all these things, these things were not first; self was first. Everything this young man said about himself was admirable. His wealth had enamored him. He was afire with desire to get and to hold riches. Gold had tinted everything in his life, and he thought without it the world was worth but little.

The response of Jesus to a troubled heart was neither gruff nor unkind. He was exceedingly busy, but the strain of life did not change his attitude toward the lost. Nor did Jesus ever turn anyone away, but took time to speak even to the weakest of mankind. Jesus was stirred deeply in his heart as this young man asked, "What must I do?"

This young man may have inherited wealth and position, but he felt he had no place to go. He knew there was a life after this life, but he did not feel himself prepared for it. He wanted to do something to secure himself a place. He could not inherit eternal life, as he may have inherited wealth. But he thought he could do something to get it, to earn it. Jesus soon showed him that nothing in this world could help him to get eternal life, for it was not of this world. This young man would have done anything, if by fame or gain, this life could be gotten. But his mind was really on material things.

Jesus touched the tenderest spot in this young man's life, he wanted the man himself. Jesus sought this man to make him what he was not, a saint. He wanted to take away from him the idol of gold and give him a real God instead. But the man would not give up his gold. He turned down the only chance to get true riches—eternal joy and peace.

Why Did Jesus Fail to Win Him?

Jesus did not fail because he did not know the way, nor yet because he did not know how to touch him. His appeal was the right one, and also the method. The young man had to give up to get. He wanted to get and not give up. He did not want to sacrifice, nor make a surrender. He kept the law, but he would not give up that which he held dear. The hardest thing in your life or in my life is to give up that which we hold dear. Jesus cannot save any one who will retain an idol in his heart. God must be first in his child's heart. Seek him first, love him with the whole heart, trust him even in the darkest way and in the most difficult times. Put him first and he will provide all things else.

Christ and the Rich Young Ruler

Jesus says, Follow me. Can we set him first? Will we let him have his way, no matter what may come? Or will we, like the rich young ruler, let some obstacle stand in our way, let something else take first place. Jesus' love could not save the man; it could only provide and point the way. He has pointed the way for each one of us. Will we follow him? No matter what may be our family or other earthly ties, they will not last forever. We cannot take them with us. Shall we, like the young man, leave Jesus with sorrow in our heart? Will we hold to the fading things of life? Or will we leave everything and go with him? May God help us.

Youth, The Church, and Prohibition

By Lawrence C. Ridenour

My interest in Prohibition began sometime after signing a temperance pledge when I was a boy about twelve years of age. I confess however, that later I took to the follies of life. Until my conversion at twenty-one I was a so-called social indulgent in the use of intoxicating drinks. Contrary to the opinions of some that there is value in at least the tasting of sin I take no pride in this unwholesome experience of my life. However, it serves as a source of knowledge of the evils that lurk in the habit of drinking, moderately or otherwise. That is the most I can say for it. Prohibition was a growing conviction with me as being essential to a complete moral reform for society. Certainly I don't claim that the idea was original with me. I had heard it advanced by maturer minds as being counterpart to temperance. Many times I had heard even the habitual users of liquor express in seemingly certain tones that the only way to keep successfully sober was to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquor.

When I became a qualified voter I used the ballot at every opportunity according to the dictates of my conscience to put down and out a traffic that was evil and every year more and more detrimental to our home and national life. We backed our ballots with our prayers, we did. Prohibition was logical. Prohibition was just. Finally the Pro-Prohibitionists won and instead of being only logical, prohibition was actual.

Today we are confronted with a situation that is not pleasant, and somewhat perplexing. What are we going to do? Prohibition is not as much a fact as it should be, or not as much a fact as we would like to have it be. Few if any of us ever suspected during the old campaign days that people would ignore, violate or break down constitutional law as they have diabolically tried to do with the eighteenth amendment of our national constitution. We have been to some extent disappointed but we need not be disheartened. We need not give up! There is yet hope for ultimate victory. And the situation is not half as bad as the wets would make it appear.

We are passing through a critical stage in the continued process of education that began years ago. A certain element of people in the land need yet to learn and to realize the beneficent results of Prohibition as a restraining power to promote temperance. We are perhaps midway in our march toward a day when there will be a turning point and an ascendancy to that destined goal of achievement in morals. Since Prohibition went into effect a great mass of saloon patrons and habitual drinkers have been reduced by natural processes of elimination and by reformation on the part of many. And if we are not to doubt the sincerity of some who give assent to reform of a kind, the old-time saloon is taboo and we may be justified in feeling that we have gained something in that alone.

Our present problem and peril as well as our hope lies with our youth who are enticed by renegades that have been and are now encouraging practices that are supposed to be the social and popular thing though unlawful and degrading. The time is approaching provided the Lord wills that time continue, when our youth will see in their own generation, as did those of the generation preceding them, the evil results of alcoholic liquors. They will see the need of suppressing its use as a beverage and sense the majesty of the law to effect it. Then it will be that a supplementary wave of reform will be ushered in by the more advanced in spiritual culture, if not by an awakened desire for social betterment. Temperance must be the key word in all the efforts of every ardent advocate of the cause. We scarcely need to expect that law breaking will be eradicated in this age. But if we dare hope for any progress and its beneficent ends in the future we ought to have a right to believe in an improvement over our present status. Youth must be ever taught of the danger of all intoxicating drinks,—all of them we say because there is a teaching that some have a dignified preference,—that their minds may be impressed with the seriousness of their demoralizing powers.

The temperance movement from its inception was essentially Christian. It became a church project. Its association in political fields is not the most glowing commentary. Nevertheless, the virtue of temperance is as noble and beneficial as always, and is as worthy of the church's support as ever. The young people of the church need to be instructed and enlightened continuously by the older and more experienced in moral issues and spiritual values. There may be an aversion on the part of some at least, about bringing the Prohibition subject into the pulpit because of its political complexion. Perhaps it would be prudent to not do as it was once done, when the pulpit became a lecture platform for the subject. But the pastor could give it special emphasis in a few minutes aside from his regular sermons at Sunday services, and use other opportunities as well to speak on the matter. Temperance of course should be projected into the Sunday school lessons by the teachers whenever possible. It is imperative that ministers of the Gospel should speak more frequently of the evils of strong drink especially for the benefit of church members who want to uphold it for any reason. Total abstinence should ever be upheld as the first rule in temperance and for true sobriety. Every Christian ought to feel the urge of such a stand, and every church should feel sacredly obligated to continue to support the cause she was first to espouse. The young people must be led to see the ideal of a sober life and nation. They must realize and appreciate the challenge to them to conquer for a righteous cause. The argument is sometimes advanced that the automobile is as harmful as alcoholic drinks. It is true that the automobile does not possess a clean record covering its short existence in history, but let it be remembered that to allow the liquor traffic to exist again in legalized form and in all its fullness will make its record much worse. For youth to have free and open access to both would result in sad folly. But youth is gay and the thrills of automobiles and liquor will attract them, if we that are older do not administer provident leadership in their behalf. Dayton, Ohio.

The Permanent Appeal of the Bible *

By Edwin Lewis, Ph.D., D.D., in Bible Society Record

The visitor to any of the great libraries of the world is invariably impressed, if he has any imagination at all, with the illuminated manuscripts of the Bible. It brings to his mind, with perhaps something of a shock, the fact that what he now so lightly takes for granted, or may even cynically ignore,—the Bible,—was once the very center of the universe for devoted men, who gave not merely months but long years to transcribing it. They sat or stood at stone benches, in rooms with stone floors and walls, poorly lighted and as poorly ventilated, laboriously but lovingly copying what to them was a sacred text. With like care they illuminated title-pages and chapter headings. After the passing of a thousand years the colors of many of these still retain their brilliant hues.

Similarly in the world's great picture galleries, one is impressed with the number of paintings that have Biblical subjects.

It was, therefore, in keeping with the spirit of the time, that, with the invention of printing, the Bible should be one of the first books to benefit by the new art. There are men today who would give their left arm for a copy of the Gutenberg Bible. A long struggle was necessary, however, before the free production and circulation of the Scriptures was possible. The opposition to it was largely ecclesiastical and theological. The theory obtained that the right to possess and interpret the Bible belonged to the priesthood, and its promiscuous circulation was looked upon as a source of danger. But men were found who were willing to pay the price of giving the people the Bible in the vernacular, and there is not a more fascinating chapter in the story of the evolution and application of the printer's art than that which tells of "The Making of the English Bible." As early as 1380-84, John Wyclif had given the English people the first copy of the Bible in their native tongue. How deeply he was execrated for his work may be inferred from the fact that after his death his ecclesiastical enemies dug up his bones, burned them, and scattered the ashes in the river Swift. It was their punishment of one who "had made the jewel of the clergy the toy of the laity."

A century after Wyclif, the invention of printing made possible the work of William Tyndale. Building on Wyclif's work, he both translated and printed the Scriptures, but he was remorselessly persecuted, driven into exile, and finally, in 1536, was strangled and burned. Tyndale had his courageous successors, conspicuous among them being Miles Coverdale. When, in 1611, the King James or authorized version of the Bible was made, it showed the marks of Wyclif, Tyndale, and Coverdale. There was also manifest the influence of the Geneva Bible, a translation made by men of Calvinistic tendencies; of the Douai Bible, made at Douai, in Flanders, by Roman Catholic scholars late in the sixteenth century; and, to a less extent, of the German Bible of Luther. This translation, notwithstanding recent revisions and many excellent individual renderings, still retains its place, and is likely to do so, as the most widely sold, widely read, and widely loved of English Bibles. For students, however, the English Revised of 1885, and the American Standard of 1901, are almost indispensable.

The Protestant theory of the Bible accounts largely for the place it came to hold in the life of the people. The book is inseparable from the history and the literature of the English-speaking world. For generations, the family Bible was as much a part of the furnishing of the home as were table and chairs. It was often an heirloom. In it were recorded important events in the life of the family: it was the register of "births, marriages, and deaths." As the Pilgrim Fathers left on their hazardous journey, Pastor John Robinson, in his farewell sermon, reminded them that "God had yet more light to break forth out of his Holy Word." In "The Cotter's Saturday Night," Burns has left an unforgettable picture of the reading in the family circle of "the big ha' Bible" by "the priest-like father," who bears himself for the serious occasion "wi' patriarchal grace."

There is an authentic note in Lockhart's story of the dying Sir Walter Scott calling for "the book," and, being asked which book, replying, "There is but one." Matchless scenes in "Adam Bede" and in "The Scarlet Letter" have their inspiration in Scriptural teaching.

Statesmen in moments of crisis have given force to their appeals by apt Biblical quotations: Lincoln's "a house divided against itself cannot stand" is a familiar case in point. And few who know the story of "the winning of the West" will find fault with the sculptor who, in the statue of "The Pioneer Mother," represents her as carrying a Bible in her hand as she strides valiantly forward into the unknown.

Educators lament what they regard as the modern neglect of the Bible. That there is this neglect is undeniable. Even among many lovers of the Bible, considerable uneasiness has been caused by the publication of the findings of critical scholarship.

All this, however, is tending to create a new situation in which a more intelligent and sound view of the Bible may be brought about. Thousands of well-informed clergymen and teachers are today engaged in this task. Religious education programs give a large and ever larger place to the Bible. Most colleges provide Bible courses. Students of the Bible have at their disposal an almost incredible amount of collateral literature.

It was by the art of the printer that the Bible was spread throughout the world in the days when it was regarded almost as a fetish. That same art must be its potent friend still. The finest skill of the craft is not too good to carry on the tradition which reaches back to the carefully treasured rolls of the Hebrew prophets; back to the unknown scribes from whose hand came the great fourth century codices known as the Sinaiticus, Vaticanus, and Alexandrinus; back to Origen compiling his Hexapla; back to Jerome in his cave at Bethlehem making the Latin Vulgate, and, in perhaps a more specific sense, back to Gutenberg and Caxton and Elzevir.

---

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

---

YELLOW FEVER VACCINE

Medical science made another advance in its battle against yellow fever with the announcement before the American Societies for Experimental Biology of the development of a serum for the immunization of human beings against the disease. The vaccine was produced and successfully tested in the laboratories of the Rockefeller Foundation in New York by Drs. A. W. Sawyer, S. F. Kitchen, and Wray Lloyd after five deaths had occurred through research work with the yellow fever virus in other laboratories. Six workers were infected at the Rockefeller Foundation, but none died. Dr. Sawyer, in reporting the first results from the use of the vaccine, said that it had been developed primarily to immunize laboratory workers as they continued their investigations, and that it was not yet practicable for production in quantities to vaccinate entire populations in infested areas.—The Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

* From The Publishers' Weekly, November 14, 1931.

THE LINDBERGH CASE

The finding of the body of the Lindbergh baby is both a shock and a relief. Of course it brings to an end the hope of literally millions of people that the stolen child might be safely returned to his parents. But it also ends the fear that the child might never have been found, and that his parents might have to go through life haunted by the fear that he was being mistreated or brought up as a criminal. The removal of that fear must be a real relief to the sorrowing mother and father.

The whole story of the Lindbergh case makes a sorry chapter in the history of American justice. It seems incredible that such a thing could happen, and the nation apparently be powerless to bring the kidnapers and murderers to justice. The fruitless payment of two ransoms, the employment of underworld go-betweens, and the demand of a section of the press and public that the arch-criminal of the age be released in the hope that he might succeed where honest men had failed—all of these are indications of the widespread lawlessness that seems to have our country in an iron grip.

In the postwar decade there was much discussion of an actual or threatened crime wave. But today we seem to have not merely a wave but a veritable inundation of crime. And the worst feature of it is the strange apathy toward it on the part of the American public. Are we losing our sense of moral values?—The Living Church.

WHY ALCOHOL REDDENS NOSES

Why people who drink too much alcohol so often have red noses has been investigated by a nerve specialist of Vienna, Austria, Dr. B. Kauders.

The secret, he finds, is that habitual dosing with alcohol damages a small nerve center in the brain, that controls the constriction or relaxation of the smaller blood-vessels such as the small arteries and the capillaries. Writes Dr. E. E. Free, in his Week's Science (New York):

"That this brain center is affected by alcohol already was known. Its action in relaxing the blood-vessels explains the flushed face and pinkish color of the skin which so often follow a drink or two of alcohol. On the other hand, when something affects this center in the reverse direction, its orders issued through the nerves cause all the thousands of tiny muscles in the walls of the smaller blood-vessels to squeeze these vessels more tightly. Much of the blood is squeezed out of them and the skin becomes pale. Some drugs cause this. Another cause is sudden fright.

"Habitual use of alcohol, Dr. Kauders finds, seems to get this brain center so accustomed to sending out orders for relaxation of the blood-vessels that these orders may be left standing, so to speak, so that the blood-vessels stay relaxed always, especially the vessels in the skin of the nose and other parts of the face."—The Literary Digest.

SPIRIT OF MILITARISM

That Japan has been in the relentless grip of militarism was newly demonstrated by the assassination of the premier, Ki Inuki. If anything were lacking to reveal her actual helplessness under the power of the military party, surely it is supplied by the fact that Tokyo seemed to accept the affair as a matter of course and proceeded to adjust the government to the demands represented by the assassins. The army was displeased with what was termed a weak-kneed policy in relation to Manchuria and Shanghai. There has been reason all along to believe that the Japanese aggressions in Manchuria and Shanghai were the deliberate carrying out of a militaristic policy over which the Tokyo government had little or no control. And it is evident that the militarists, who call themselves nationalists, intend to brook no interference with their policy. In keeping with the military spirit and attitude, the assassination of a leader who dares to cross their path is but a patriotic act. So long as the army is practically independent of the government Japan will be a menace to the peace of the world. Naturally her hands are tied at the Disarmament Conference, for the army will never consent to a policy that does not exalt military force or that rests upon principles of good will toward other nations. Militarism knows only the "reeking tube and iron shard" as instruments of patriotism and progress.—Religious Telescope.

TAKING THE PEACE PACT SERIOUSLY

Senator Capper of Kansas has introduced a resolution declaring it the policy of the United States "not to accept the legality of any situation in fact created by the breach of the Pact of Paris, which may impair the treaty rights of the United States, or its citizens in any territory affected thereby, nor to recognize any treatment or agreement brought about by means contrary to the covenants of the Pact of Paris which would impair the obligations of that pact." The resolution would also provide that if the nations in open conference should decide that any nation has committed a breach of the pact by other than pacific means, and because of such breach should agree not to aid or abet the violator by the shipment to it of arms or other war supplies, and if the President of the United States should find that said nation has in fact committed a breach of the pact, it shall then be unlawful, unless otherwise ordered by congress, to export from this country to the violating country arms, munitions or other articles for use in war, or to assist the nation financially. There are a good many "ifs and ands" in the resolution. Nevertheless, it is in the direction of giving effectiveness to the pact, and if the latter is to be anything more than a gesture, means will have to be provided for giving it effectiveness.—The Presbyterian Advance.

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE FIRM FOR PROHIBITION

A more vigorous continuance of national prohibition was called for by the board of bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the episcopal message to the general conference at the opening of its session in Atlantic City, May 3. Substitutes and modification plans for the Eighteenth Amendment were waved aside in the message. As a rallying cry against state liquor control, the following slogan was offered:

"We can no more have a nation half drunk and half sober than in the days of Lincoln it was possible to have a nation half slave and half free."

United States Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, predicted in an address before the conference on May 4 that the battle over prohibition would be fought in the future between "the big wet cities and the small dry cities, towns and rural folks."

The conference voted unanimously to serve notice of its dry stand to the officialdom of the nation. The notice is contained in the prohibition section of the Episcopal message, which called for a "vigorous" and unmodified continuance of the Eighteenth Amendment, and which sharply criticized the repeal efforts of wealthy men and the reputed wet sentiment of the metropolitan press.

The Committee of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals recommended a widespread distribution of the dry document, and the delegates suspended rules to order the statement sent to President Hoover, all senators and representatives in Congress, and all presidential candidates and college presidents. The conference also ordered that all Methodist pastors read the prohibition pronouncement from their pulpits and supervise its circulation among youth of the church.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

John 2:24, 25:—"But Jesus did not commit himself unto them, because he knew all men. And needed not that any should testify of man: for he knew what was in man." Moffatt has this rendering, "Jesus, however would not trust himself to them; he knew all men, and required no evidence from anyone about human nature; well did he know what was in human nature." If many men do not know Jesus, Jesus knows them. That is why Jesus made his Gospel to fit mankind; he knew men. That fact is one of the outstanding evidences of the divine origin of the Bible. Could it be shown that Jesus did not understand human nature, that would leave the Son of God stand out boldly as an impostor. Centuries before the birth of "modern psychology" Christ revealed his knowledge of man's mental and moral nature. Whether in the wilds of Africa, the frozen snows of the north, in the darkness of heathenism of the Orient or amidst the blazing civilization of the Occident, it answers the longing of man's entire nature.

It recognizes and meets the needs of the physical nature of man. The gospel condemns all vices that injures his body. The drunkard, glutton, unchaste, or idler can not be saved and fitted for the kingdom as such. One of St. Paul's leading declarations was, "Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good." Purity, soberness and industry are cardinal pillars in God's great temple of piety. Man is reminded that we reap that which we sow; and "they who sow to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." Then, man has an intellectual nature. Truth has been assigned the highest place of importance, in things pertaining unto God. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Some one has said that only Christian countries can boast of a schoolhouse on every hill. The world's greatest universities, such as Oxford and Cambridge, Harvard and Yale, were founded by Christian scholars. Copernicus, who lived among the stars; Gutenberg, who revealed in the printer's art; Angelo, who traced the marvels of the pendulum, and Morse, who made the lightning carry messages, have led the van in the triumphant march of modern sciences. These were men of God. Why, in the conversion of the soul, the will is not enslaved, but set free; the reason is not blighted, but enlightened. "Think on these things," is one of the outstanding admonitions of the teaching of God.

Man is an affectionate being. And how the Bible is built around that sublime trait. It was love that brought Jesus from the skies, and no higher standard of love has ever been raised than the supreme love of Jesus. John says, "God is love." Peter says, "See that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." Yes, that commandment was written for Christians. The love akin to that of Jesus has founded the orphan asylums, and the hospitals for our unfortunates.

The Gospel builds the Christian home, and by its teachings throws a wall of protection around that divine institution. It has been said that the Christian home is a "world of love shut in, and a world of care shut out."

"Home is not four square walls
Hung with pictures nicely gilded;
Home is where affection calls,
Filled with shrines the heart has builded."

I think history has it right: "Egypt built her pyramids, Babylon her hanging gardens and palaces, Rome her temples, Greece her immortal works of art and literature, but they had no homes." Although Christ was born in a manger, he honored the home at the marriage feast in Cana of Galilee, and sanctified the home of Mary and Martha by his heavenly presence again and again. As go the homes in this country, so goes the nation. Corrupt homes means a corrupt nation. O, church of God! what will you do about it?

Then, man is a spiritual being. The soul was made for God, as the eye was made for light; as the heart was made for love, and the ear was made for sound. David said a long time ago, "As the hart panteth after the waterbrook, so my soul longeth after thee. O God!" The gospel urges a man to prayer as a means of spiritual food. It places in man's hands a sure and safe guide-book, the Bible, and assures him that it is able to make him wise unto salvation.

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

I. Chronicles

Would you like to look into the journal of a scribe of Jewish life "when the Lord carried away Judah and Jerusalem by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar?" Would you like to browse over the papers of a priestly manuscript of a "ready scribe in the law of Moses", and "a scribe to the words of the commandments of the Lord and of his statutes to Israel?" If so, you will find in the book or books of Chronicles a private review of the leading events from Saul to the Captivity.

First Chronicles, originally the first half of Second Chronicles, is a continuation of the books of the Kings. While the latter are engaged exclusively with reigns of the monarchs of Israel and Judah, the former deal with the priestly functions of the house of Zadok, in the line of Eleazer. Israel is out of the picture; Judah is portrayed in vivid and striking lines. The history centers around Jerusalem and king David, its chief personality.

Ezra, the purported author, himself a captive, is in an excellent position to be a writer of the experiences of Judah prior to and during the captivity. To preserve the illustrious history of God's divine government over men, especially that of the Jews, certainly must have been in the mind of the author. To the remotest ends of history he goes for information to build up his case of God's people. The genealogies begin with Adam and race through the centuries until Zerubbabel is reached. The captivity has been a reality, and supplementary notes such as Ezra could supply would be much in order. He is recording words breathed by the Holy Spirit and men have accepted them as such.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Ezra. So regarded by most Bible scholars.
2. When and Where Written. During the period of the Captivity.
3. To Whom Written. For the priestly group of Judah and the Jews.
4. Authenticity. Supplementary historical account stressing the place of the sacerdotal system. The Chronicles are sober history.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. Genealogy and History: General and National. 1-10.
2. Saul, David, Solomon: Specific and Local. 11-29.

III. THE CONTENTS OF THE BOOK

First Chronicles opens with the genealogies and pedigrees of sacred history from the time of Adam. The patriarchs, sons of Jacob, descendants of Simeon, the Levites, the remaining tribes, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, until the times of the kings, are given. A brief reference is made to the downfall of Saul, and David, his successor, is treated at great length. His heroes, victories and festival, temple preparation and directions, are all narrated in sequential order. Solomon, the future builder of the temple, is presented as the new king and David's decease is recorded.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. House of God. "Election." Record.
2. Key Verses. 10:13, 14; 16:4; 28:20, 21.
3. Key Chapters. 16 and 29.
4. Key Ideas. The Temple and its Blueprint.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

I Chronicles has a special message relative to David's concern for the temple. This seems to be the background passion of his life, according to our chronicler. He lives and dies for Jerusalem and her worship. This aspect of his life is magnified and his sins escape the notice of the reviewer's eyes. David only prepares the way for the building of the temple, and Solomon completes it. Therein lies the historical value of the book.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Rev. John Wilkinson in his "Israel, My Glory" (p. 82) has this splendid paragraph concerning Israel, David, and Christ: Christ Jesus "is the only Person alive now as known to be David's seed, and as possessing a right to David's throne." Surely David's throne shall some day be occupied by David's Son. "As long as the sun and moon endure" (Jer. 31:35-37) is Israel's life as a nation among the nations guaranteed. Like the "faithful witness in the sky"—the rainbow—so does the presence of the Jew witness to the highly colored reign of our Lord and Savior. Ps. 89:3, 4, 27-37.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

1. Saul. "So Saul died for his transgressions which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to enquire of it; and enquired not of the Lord: therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Jesse." I Chron. 10:13, 14.
2. David. "And he died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honor; and Solomon his son reigned in his stead." I Chron. 29:28.
3. Solomon. "And the Lord magnified Solomon exceedingly in the sight of all Israel, and bestowed upon him such royal majesty as had not been on any king before him in Israel." I Chron. 29:25.

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.
MAGAZINE SECTION
M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

A Practical Plan for Personal Bible Study

By Marion McH. Hull, M.Sc., Md.

Many years ago when I was a medical student, a young woman whose name I have forgotten, on her way to China, visited our church and gave the young people a plan of Bible study that contemplated studying each chapter seventeen times. I had been a regular reader of the Bible for a long time, but had no definite plan; so I began with this plan, giving the first half hour each morning to this devotional study. I began with the Book of Acts; then took the Epistles in their chronological order; and then other books of the Bible. It helped to develop a habit of daily Bible study that continues until today—but a half hour a day is too little now to satisfy the appetite for the Word of God that has been created; it takes at least two hours every morning now, and then I am always sorry when the time has come to go to breakfast and the day's duties! The plan has been modified somewhat now for my own needs, but the general scheme is basic.

The plan is so simple that any young person can follow it, and yet it is comprehensive enough to engage the individual attention and closest thought of the most advanced Bible student.

One must remember, however, that no mere plan is sufficient in itself. It is only a means to an end. The essentials for Bible study are prayer, repetition, system, and obedience. We knew a man who could quote pages of the Bible, but he died cursing God; he had studied the Bible only to criticize it. Prayer must precede, must be mingled with, must follow your Bible study if it is to benefit you most.

Repetition is essential. Just because the Twenty-third Psalm is familiar to you, do not neglect it; your next study of it will bring you some gem you never dreamed you could have overlooked before.

What Is the Best Time for Study?

Systematic study is far superior to sporadic study. Have a time, a place, a pencil, a notebook, as well as a plan. Probably the best time is in the early morning when your mind is fresh and the duties of the day cannot crowd this time out. Select your own time, and the time that suits you best; and then keep it inviolate; except in great emergencies let nothing interrupt that time of study and prayer.

Shut in with God in the secret place;
There in the Spirit beholding his face;
Gaining new power to run in the race—
I love to be shut in with God.

The very act of making notes impresses the truth upon one's mind; and it is helpful to look back sometimes on what you thought and to see how you have advanced in spiritual perception.

Obedience is the capstone; unless you obey God, he will not reveal another secret to you; but if you do, he will lead you farther and farther into the fields where his rich treasures lie.

As for the plan suggested above, it is as follows:

1. First Impression.—Read the chapter through carefully and write down your first impression received. The first impression received on reading Acts 1 is that power comes with the Holy Spirit. On Reading Joshua 1 it is that true success comes only through keeping God's word.

2. Name.—After reading the chapter again, write in your notebook some name for this chapter which will best convey to your mind the contents of the chapter. For example, the seventeenth of Matthew would be the "Transfiguration" chapter; the Twenty-third Psalm is the "Shepherd" Psalm; 2 Samuel 7 would be the "Davidic Covenant" chapter.

3. Date.—Determine as accurately as possible the date of writing, or the date of the events recorded; and note it in your book.

4. Author.—Determine, as best you can, the author of the chapter. It helps in understanding it to know who the writer is, that you may have his background.

5. Best Verse.—Read the chapter again carefully, and select and record in your notebook the best version, in your opinion. This will often be very difficult to decide, and will require concentration of all your mental and spiritual powers. If you are studying with a group, each one may have selected a different verse as the one which appeals most strongly as the best verse, and an interesting discussion may follow as each one gives the reasons why his or her particular verse was selected.

6. Key Verse.—Read the chapter again and select the key verse; that is, the verse which is the key to the contents of the chapter; or in other words, which when read will suggest to you the contents. For example, the eleventh verse of Acts I—"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him to enter into heaven"—suggests the ascension and the events just preceding it, and the ten days' prayer-meeting which followed; and these are the contents of that first chapter of Acts.

7. Literary Character.—Much difficulty in understanding the Scriptures has grown out of the unfortunate division, too often quite arbitrary, into chapters and verses. Suppose Gray's Elegy should be printed in prose and arbitrarily cut up into chapters and verses. To know that it is a poem consisting of a certain number of stanzas of four lines each would greatly facilitate the understanding of it. Just so, in our study of a particular chapter, to know that it is a poem, or a narrative, or a parable, or a symbol; whether it is historical or prophetic; whether it is a warm personal letter or a logically presented argument—to know its literary character will often go a long way in making its meaning clear to our minds.

Study the chapter therefore, and make a record in your notebook of its literary character.

8. Persons mentioned.—Make a list of every person mentioned in the chapter, with a brief note concerning each one. For example, most readers will put Theophilus at the head of their list in Acts I because most people are very careless readers. "I" should head the list; and that is the same person who wrote the third Gospel record. You can assume that it was Dr. Luke; but to prove it, which can be done, will require some wide and deep and long investigation. To understand the chapter you should get acquainted with the persons mentioned.

9. Places mentioned.—Similarly, to make a list of the places mentioned. In doing this it will be very helpful to have a map before you and to get a mental picture of the locations also. Briefly record some outstanding fact about the various places. For example in Acts 9 you might say of Damascus that it is the oldest city of the world today.

Noting Different Versions and Striking Facts

10. Comparison of the Authorized Version with the Revised Version.—There are not many changes, but some of them are most illuminating, because words that had a very definite meaning in 1611 have changed in more recent years. For example, in I Thessalonians 4:15 "prevent" in these days means to obstruct, but its original meaning (from pre and venire) was to go before. So the Revisers have changed it here to "precede," which better conveys the idea of the Greek word.

11. Five Striking Facts.—Record five striking facts in the chapter. For example, in the twenty-first chapter of John:

(1) That Peter and six others of the disciples were so disappointed after waiting and waiting in vain for the Lord to keep his appointment with them in Galilee that they were willing to go back to the old job of fishing.

(2) That men who had been called to take men alive were not successful at taking fish dead.

(3) That the Lord Jesus, after his resurrection, cooked breakfast for seven hungry men who had lost faith in him.

(4) That there were just 153 fish in that net, rather than 152 or 154. There is a reason.

(5) That he made Peter confess his love for him the same number of times he had recently denied him.

12. Questions and Difficulties.—In almost every chapter in the Bible you will run across something you cannot understand. Do not let that bother you; if you could understand it all, you would be as wise as God who wrote it! So when you do find something you do not understand, write it down in the form of a question, or state your difficulty. Often the very task of putting it in words will answer your question or remove the difficulty. But if not, write it down. Some day in your further study you will find something somewhere else in the Book that will clear the matter in your mind as the rising sun clears the mist of the early dawn. For example, if you were studying Acts 1:18 and read what Judas "purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling down headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out"; and then read in Matthew 27:3-10 that he threw the money down at the feet of the rulers and went out and hanged himself, you might have some difficulties. But they all clear away when you learn that the Greek word for "hanged" is not the usual word; that it occurs only here in the Bible; that it never conveys the idea of suspension but of choking; and that it is in the middle voice, not the active. It simply means "he choked." "Falling down headlong" literally is, "becoming prone." If a man had a stroke of apoplexy on the street he would breathe as though he were choking; falling down he might sustain a fractured skull, and some of the contents of his skull might ooze out. Dying, the record might be either death from apoplexy, or from fractured skull, or a layman might say he choked to death. The records are not contradictory, but complementary.

So the voice of the verb "purchased" also conveys the truth. Judas died, but there was purchased for him a field with the reward of his iniquity. He did not actually make the purchase. He threw the money on the floor; but the rulers would not accept it; it was still his money; so they acted as his real estate agents and purchased for him with his money a field in which to bury his body. Here again the records are not contradictory, but complementary.

Therefore record your questions and difficulties, and wait until you know more; and you will have your questions answered and your difficulties will disappear.

(To be continued)

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Family Altar
With
Thoburn C. Lyon

JUDAH THE TRUE BROTHER

(Lesson for June 12)

Lesson Text: Gen. 44:18-34; Golden Text: Ps. 133:1

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Judah the True Brother. Gen. 44:18-34

When Joseph was first taken by his brethren and cast into the pit, it had been their intention to kill him; however, even then Judah seems to have been a bit more tender than the rest (except Reuben), and it was he that suggested selling Joseph rather than slaying him. In the years that had since passed, he had undoubtedly been haunted many a time by the terrible deed, and by the grief of Jacob; probably he had sincerely repented of it all, and wished there was only some way it could all be made right. At any rate, he now proved himself a true brother to Benjamin, offering to give his own life instead, that he might spare his brother and his father. Let us pray that the spirit of true brotherhood may become more general in the family, in the church, in the nation, and throughout the world, for our Father's sake.

TUESDAY

Reuben Helps Joseph. Gen. 37:18-24

Just as Judah intervened in Benjamin's case, so had Reuben intervened for Joseph. Undoubtedly it was Reuben who first caused Joseph's life to be spared, and we read that it was his intention to bring him again safely to his father. In the meantime, however, Judah suggested selling Joseph, and for some reason Reuben did not object. Perhaps he feared his brethren. Let us pray that we may ever fear to do wrong more than we fear any man, and that we may never fear to help.

WEDNESDAY

Joseph the Loyal Brother. Gen. 45:1-8

If any one ever had cause to hate another, Joseph had just cause to hate his brethren, yet his forgiveness was almost Christ-like in its depth and generosity. Some would suggest it was easy for Joseph to forgive, because he had so prospered, but do not forget what he had suffered: separation from his father and home; uncertainty as to whether or not his father was even yet living; the life of a slave, even though a trusted and honored one; the years in prison; and the knowledge that apparently it made no difference to his brothers whether he lived or died. Joseph had much to forgive—much more than the petty imaginary grievances we often find hard to overlook. Let us pray for the grace of a forgiving spirit, and for more loyalty to our weaker brethren.

THURSDAY

Paul Befriends Onesimus. Philemon 1:8-20

Paul had himself been forgiven much, and he knew how to forgive and befriend those who had much to be forgiven of. He even offered to assume the responsibility for any misdeeds that Onesimus might have committed, if only Philemon would forgive him and receive him as a brother. How the Spirit of God can soften and ennoble the heart of man! Let us pray that his Spirit may so touch our hearts, and the hearts of other men, today, and that we may truly befriend those who need our help.

FRIDAY

Mutual Helpfulness. Rom. 15:1-7

Joseph had suffered much at the hands of his brethren, yet in it all he could see God's hand, not only bringing Joseph himself to a place of greater service, but also providing against the time of his brothers' need—in short, the strong bearing with the weak in mutual helpfulness. Let us make verses 5 and 6 our prayer for today.

SATURDAY

Christ our Brother. Matt. 12:46-50

Of the very household of Christ! He is our Brother, and through him we become children of our Father in heaven; what a privilege! Reuben and Judah had endeavored in some measure to save Joseph, yet they lacked either the power or the courage to do so. Our earthly brethren may fail us in time of need, but not so with Christ our Brother! His is the power and his the will to save; his be the glory also!

SUNDAY

The Lovingkindness of Jehovah. Ps. 26:1-7

The lovingkindness of God the Father in sending his Son as an offering for our sins should ever be before our eyes (John 3:16). When this is so, we cannot refrain from telling of all his wondrous works with the voice of thanksgiving (v. 7). May this be the desire of every heart in thy church throughout the earth today, that many others may know thy lovingkindness, O God!

E. M. RIDDLE,
President
Warsaw, Indiana

F. G. VANATOR,
Associate
Peru, Indiana

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK

G. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.

GLADYS M. SPICE,
General Secretary
and
Treasurer
2301 13th St., N. E.,
Canton, Ohio

Plans for the Missionary Committee

Motto: "The most interesting meetings of the year."

1. Missionary meetings. Plan the year's meetings; assign a leader to each to begin planning it and keep clippings for it. Secure special speakers and foreign-student speakers. Make all meetings different and as novel as possible. A debate, missionary-board meeting, Japanese tea-party, etc. Missionary social.

2. Introduce dramatic features. Collect costumes (home made, in a trunk) pictures, flags of all nations, and such decorations for the meeting room. Collect a box of curios. Have members in costume to read stories and essays. Have members impersonate returned missionaries, "What I Did." Present plays or demonstrations. Go from home to home some evening, each member decorated to represent a different mission land and have its life shown.

3. Push mission study. Secure a leader; plan details; organize a class; outline studies in Christian Endeavor each week.

4. Stimulate missionary interest. Reading contests, reading circles, each member of the committee responsible for development of certain ones. Secure letters from missionaries to read to the society; get members to write regularly to mission boys and girls.

5. Promote giving to missions. Enroll Tenth Legionaries by distributing literature, special meetings, month's trial, etc., to encourage general stewardship, then urge a big share for missions. Conduct an every-member canvass; use pledge-envelopes and budget system. Ask for special home and foreign projects. Keep the society informed just how money sent is used. Raise money by a play. Support an orphan or poor student. Read letters to the Christian Endeavor society.

6. Encourage prayer for missions. Have definite prayer in meetings. Request private prayer for definite objects, explaining the need; organize prayer circles, especially among Quiet Hour Comrades.

7. Spread missionary literature. Secure and spread pamphlets from denominational boards; secure subscriptions for missionary periodicals; tell the story of good books, and have them ready to lend; secure maps, charts, pictures, etc.; collect clippings and articles for use with the Christian Endeavor meetings. Missionary books in the Sunday school library. See that the society has all the latest helps and material. Borrow samples of the latest supplies on sale, and exhibit them at union events, in church and Sunday school, to neighboring societies, etc.

8. Help home missions. Send missionary boxes. Dress missionary dolls; help home missionaries at Christmas. Send souvenir cards, hymn books, and other material to mission stations. Send scrap-books. Fill mission barrels. Meet and sew while one reads a missionary book.

9. Community service. Organize or help conduct playgrounds, gospel missions, classes for foreigners, night school, and Y. M. C. A. evening classes; reach into foreign homes through little sewing or cooking classes for the small girls in your home; take one boy or girl under your personal care, especially at Christmas; help the poor at Thanksgiving. Be the village Santa Claus at Christmas; receive money and toys, etc., and find worthy cases. Be sure to tell all about homes and gratitude in the Christian Endeavor meeting the next Sunday.

10. Conduct services and do friendly work in various institutions, such as jails, hospitals, poor farms, etc., rescue missions, and old folks' homes. Get up entertainments for them. Raise money for new books, coal, etc., when needed.

Further information on missionary programs is given in a special missionary department leaflet issued by the Massachusetts Christian Endeavor Union. Copies will be sent upon request.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

"Nights With God" in Auckland

By the Rev. A. S. Wilson, Christchurch, South Island, N. Z.

Harry Dawson was an Australian business man who represented a commercial house in New Zealand. Since the pastor of the Grange Road Presbyterian church in Auckland was to be away, Mr. Dawson was asked to supply the pulpit one Sunday in January. He readily agreed to take the services for two Sundays, if the pastor wished it, and two nights a week in addition. He had done a considerable amount of evangelistic work and offered to hold a short series of mission services. January is a holiday month for New Zealanders and when the time came the church seemed unable to throw off the holiday spirit. The officers agreed to postpone the series of special services, but when the next date arrived the same state of affairs was apparent. We finally decided to start "after Easter!"

On Good Friday the workers made a house to house canvass to invite people to the meetings, and many came back telling of the exquisite joy of soul winning. A prolonged prayer meeting was held that night.

In the quiet of eventide two young fellows, appealed to in the visitation, came seeking Jesus Christ. This so delighted the young workers that they went out to look for others and held a prayer meeting on the footpath. The glow of the Spirit's power was present. About midnight nearly every one went home, but seven remained to spend the night in earnest prayer for the district of Mt. Eden, for the city of Auckland, and for the services.

Evangelistic meetings were held each night and another all night of prayer was announced. This time twenty-six attended and four were brought in from the streets. Mt. Eden is a no-license district so that these wayfarers were quite sober. Three came out for Christ that night and joined the band of praying ones. Among this group was a bright, educated young fellow, leader of the big Christian Endeavor Society at the Tabernacle built by Thomas Spurgeon (son of C. H. Spurgeon) and now ministered to by the Rev. Joseph W. Kemp. Over seventy people came to the next night of prayer and the same glow and power was present. Every night the ordinary meetings went on; in fact, they lasted for seven weeks. On Friday evening they filled the body of the church and many remained all night. On the fourth "all night" meeting one hundred and forty stayed until about 6:30 A. M., and even then it was difficult to close. People in the city began to take notice; these meetings became a topic of conversation on trams and buses. Some were awed; some treated it with scorn and ridicule. The "nights with God" each Friday continued, the numbers soaring until some 250 were present. From eight o'clock until midnight the meeting was general with one or two addresses. Among the speakers were Rev. E. R. Harries, Chairman of the Cambridge Convention; Mr. Chas. J. Rolls and the Rev. Joseph W. Kemp of the New Zealand Bible Training Institute; the Rev. John Laird, M. A., a Baptist; the Rev. R. C. Roberts, B. A., B. D., President of Auckland Ministers Association; Dr. W. H. Pettit, the Rev. F. H. Radford, Harry Dawson and the Rev. A. S. Wilson.

People came in goodly numbers. Grange Road is one of the oldest churches in Auckland, having been built by Bishop Selwyn in 1865. A quarter of a century ago it was purchased by the Baptists and has become a sacred, holy place to many. Passersby were amazed to see the old property ablaze with light at one o'clock in the morning and a score of cars standing in front. Songs of praise were led by the pipe organ and the overflow of joy was very reverent. At midnight the worshippers passed to the Social Hall singing "We're Marching to Zion." There the atmosphere became like heaven upon earth. There was earnest crying to God that he would look upon Auckland as Christ looked upon Jerusalem. Foreign lands were also remembered and God heard, not by streams of penitents, by reviving his own people and leading them to engage in personal soul winning.

As a result of months of such a weekly rendezvous there arose the Prayer and Revival Campaign which aimed to help all the churches in their work. From this center various united evangelistic campaigns have sprung up and have produced great results for the glory of God.

Dr. W. H. Pettit journeyed to Grange

Road early in the series to verify the reports of the happenings. So convinced was he that this was a work of the Holy Spirit that he addressed a meeting of "Brethren" from various parts of the city about the fruits of the meetings. They were so moved that they arranged a series of special prayer times all over the city. The wife of an Anglican clergyman declared that she had never known such ease in approaching people about the things of God. The general manager of one of the largest business houses in the city said that in all his years in Auckland no such spiritual atmosphere had been abroad. The Secretary of a large New Zealand enterprise, who had not been near a revival meeting, became acutely conscious of unhappy estrangement from God. He sought a prominent business man and yielded himself to God.

Many hear the word: "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me," and they stepped out to surrender for sanctification by faith and the fullness of the Spirit. No one criticized or wondered for everyone seemed in sympathy. Like Archbishop Leighton, they were "driven from natural independency to make Christ all their strength." As Dr. Robert Dale said of some at D. L. Moody's gatherings in Bingley Hall, they came "anxious, restless, feeling after God in the darkness" and before our eyes their faces were filled with light.

The sense of unity in these gatherings was the unity of the Spirit. A company of ministers were discussing the "all nights" sympathetically and with wonder. One of the oldest said: "What has struck me is that at four in the morning the Anglican at one end, the Plymouth Brother at the other, and all the denominations between, strike the same note." Glory to Jesus Christ, the wonderful Savior!

We are reminded of the words of Bishop Moule: "The secret of continuance is taking pains to keep up intercourse with God." The "all nights" reminds us of the intercessions of Jesus when

Cold mountains and the midnight air
Witnessed the fervour of his prayer.

—Missionary Review of the World.

"THE SIMPLE GOSPEL" OF ALBERT SCHWEITZER

Musician, theologian, author, missionary physician—but not a high-brow—such is Albert Schweitzer. Could Christianity be more simply put than in this sermon to the patients in his hospital at Lambarene in French Equatorial Africa? "Scarcely are you up in the morning and standing in front of your hut when some one whom you know to be a bad man comes and insults you. Because the Lord Jesus says that one ought to forgive, you keep silent instead of beginning a palaver. In the afternoon, when you are about to go and work in your plantation, you discover that some one has taken away your good bush-knife and left you in its place his old one. But you want to go on forgiving. Although it is a day on which you have experienced much unpleasantness, you feel as jolly as if it had been one of the happiest. Why? Because your heart is happy in having obeyed the will of the Lord Jesus. In the evening you want to go fishing. Then you discover that your boat is missing. Another man has gone fishing in it. Angriily you hide behind a tree in order to wait for him. But while you are waiting your heart begins to speak. It keeps on repeating the saying of Jesus that God cannot forgive us our sins if we do not forgive each other. Instead of going for the other fellow with your fists, when at last he returns, you tell him that the Lord Jesus compels you to forgive him, and you let him go in peace. Now you go home happy and proud that you have succeeded in making yourself forgive your enemies. But if the Lord Jesus were to come into your village and you think he would praise you for it before all the people, then would he say to you as he did to Peter, that even to forgive seven times is not enough but that you must forgive seventy times seven."—Congregationalist.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The annual celebration of May Day held last Saturday, was well attended. The new Redwood stadium was almost filled. The weather was not at all ideal but it did not rain and so the whole day's program was carried out.

Miss Mary Ann Scarborough was crowned May Queen and before her throne was presented the Greek Targedy, Sophocles' ELECTRA. It was well done, Miss Thelma Slack, under whose direction the play was given, taking the title role.

Following this event, the annual Alumni dinner was served at a down town restaurant, many alumni being present. It was a very enjoyable event. Professor Arthur DeLozier was nominated for president, Miss Kathryn Teeter of Ashland, vice president, and Miss Lulu L. Wood, librarian, was re-nominated for secretary.

At the Winona meeting, these nominations ought to be confirmed or other ones made. Let non-resident alumni take notice. Also take notice that this event should not be overlooked this year at Conference, as it almost was last year.

In the afternoon, Wooster defeated us on our own diamond, 2 to 10.

In the evening, the Seniors presented their annual class play, "Broken Dishes." I can not speak too highly of the way it was put on,—no vulgarity, no coarseness, nor any other objectionable feature. I am anxious that the College sustain its record for clean wholesome plays so that when an audience gathers, it may expect to see high class drama.

This week will see the last of the class work. Examinations the following week, with the Baccalaureate service at 3:00 P. M. on Sunday, June 5, and the Class address Wednesday following at 8:00 P. M., by State Superintendent Skinner, followed by the President's reception. These events at the Park Street church.

Thursday, June 9, at 10:00 A. M., the annual commencement will be held in the Gymnasium. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

BRYAN, OHIO

The Bryan church has proven beyond a doubt that a church does not depend upon any certain preacher to carry on their work. Since the 16th of March the pastor has not been able to look after the work of the church, but it has gone on just the same. We were fortunate to secure Dr. C. A. Bame who has carried on for us, driving from his home in Ashland each week end. Our Sunday school has held a higher average since the beginning of the year under the leadership of Mr. Joseph Kerr than it did one year ago. And the Christian Endeavor was well attended and has good programs. But in the summer months the attendance always goes down and we have not been able to overcome that. During the winter months the attendance was from 30 to 50. The W. M. S. has been very active and is striving to reach every goal possible. The church has been redecorated through the activities of this society. The Ever-Ready Class has presented the church with new carpet for the platform and aisles. We also have two very active and wide awake Sisterhood societies. Last year the seniors presented the church with choir chairs and the Juniors presented the church with a beautiful Christian flag.

Our church attendance has increased and every department of the church is working smoothly. By merging the Sunday school and morning service we solved the problem that is so perplexing to nearly every church and pastor, that of having so many leave the morning service. It has been one year since we tried this plan and it has worked so good that our people would not think of going back to the old method. We have our entire opening service before the study period. Following that period the pastor makes his announcements and preaches his sermon. While it does not give us a chance for special music, yet every one stays for the sermon, both young and old, even the primary department. We have felt for a long time that we had rather preach a twenty-five minute sermon to all than to have a long-drawn out service for just a few. It gives us the same amount of time for the study hour and for the sermon, but leaves out some of the preliminary service. We can reach more people with the Gospel in this way, for all stay to hear it, knowing that at eleven they will be out. This service has increased our attendance and offerings. Our Sunday evening services are also well attended.

On May 15th Dr. Bame conducted our Holy Communion service, and it was a beautiful service, and more people attended than at any time since I have been pastor. In the morning Brother Bame preached a wonderful preparatory sermon, and one man came forward and took his stand for Christ. He and his wife both are coming into the church as soon as we are able to baptize them. We have our trials as well as others, but through them all we feel that the church is going forward in harmony and in the spirit of God.

C. A. STEWART, Pastor.

OSCEOLA, INDIANA

The work at the "Osceola Mission" at this time is being carried on without the support of a pastor since October first. Sister Edna Nichols of Elkhart has brought us some very inspiring messages on each Sunday evening following Christian Endeavor. The Sunday school has done some very good work, since the beginning of our Sunday school contest which started December first. Our greatest success has been with the Young People's Class, aged fourteen to twenty years. At the beginning of the contest the enrollment in this class was eighteen which has been increased to forty-five. The average attendance for the past month has been thirty-one. Average attendance of the Sunday school is seventy-five. Sister Schumacher of the Young People's class has done splendid work with her class through visiting homes of the community and class socials. We feel very much in need of a pastor at the present time to assist in this work. We ask for the prayers of God's people for the success of his work at this place.

JOHN D. HUMES,
Sunday School Superintendent.

TREASURER'S REPORT FOR BRETHREN HOME

Money Received from Churches

Morrill, Kansas .....	$ 2.25
Pleasant Hill, Ohio .....	8.70
Raystown, Pa. ....	2.50
Roanoke, Ind. ....	4.50
Wichita, Kans., .....	15.00
New Lebanon, Ohio .....	9.10
Fair Haven, Ohio .....	6.55
New Paris, Ind., S. S. ....	5.00
Johnstown, Third .....	6.50
Berlin, Pa. ....	18.40
Oakville, Ind. ....	8.25
Roann, Ind. ....	8.25
Carleton W. M. S. ....	5.00
Philadelphia, First, .....	131.00
Gretna, Ohio .....	7.64
Bryan, Ohio .....	6.33
Fillmore, Calif. ....	2.25
Corinth, Ind. ....	2.50
Mansfield, Ohio .....	9.00
Calvary, N. J., .....	9.00
Waterloo, Iowa .....	9.06
Waterloo W. M. S. ....	5.00
Portis, Kans. ....	4.00
New Lebanon, Ohio .....	2.50
Buena Vista, Va. ....	3.00
Sergeantsville, N. J. ....	12.25
Muncie, Ind. ....	10.00
Ardmore, Ind. ....	5.00
St. James, Md. ....	3.25
Carleton, .....	2.55
Pleasant Grove, Iowa .....	3.18
Lanark, Ill. ....	1.00
Ypsilanti, .....	5.00
Tiosa .....	2.80
Washington, D. C., S. S. ....	12.82
Washington, D. C., Church .....	23.50
Flora .....	13.55
Falls City .....	20.70
Berne .....	15.00
Mexico .....	10.00
Fairview .....	10.00
Lathrop, Cal. ....	4.75
Vandergrift .....	4.79
Uniontown .....	5.00
Dayton, Ohio .....	75.60
Waynesboro .....	11.35
Wooster W. M. S. ....	5.00
Fillmore .....	1.00
Fremont .....	2.50
Nappanee .....	12.75
Peru .....	1.76
Smithville .....	8.12
Los Angeles, First .....	6.25
Ashland .....	9.50
Allentown .....	6.50
Trinity .....	2.05
Hagerstown .....	3.50
Individuals .....	68.90

HENRY RINEHART, Treasurer.

ALLETOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The church in Allentown is still holding forth the blessed Word of Truth under the leadership of our pastor, Brother S. E. Christiansen, who is a faithful preacher of Jesus Christ and his Word. The work is moving along with interest. The attendance record for the last quarter shows an average attendance of about 85% present at the church services, which is very good comparing with surrounding churches. The young folks are taking a great part and interest in the work, especially in Christian Endeavor work. They are surely going out in the highways and byways inviting people to attend their services and the result is sometimes a full house. The Sunday school is moving along fine under the leadership of Elder E. E. Fehnel. At the beginning of the year Superintendent Fehnel started a graded school which so far has proved to be successful. Our spring communion service was well attended. It was a service of unusual interest, a service of spiritual blessing, a service of remembrance of Christ's love and death, a service which always foreshadows unto us that blessed time when we shall eat and drink anew with Christ Jesus in his kingdom. We had with us at the communion service Brother and Sister I. D. Bowman and his son, Brother Milton Bowman. Brother I. D. Bowman was the speaker and you may well imagine the message he gave on communion. It surely was a heart-searching and uplifting message. The sentiment of the members was that it was one of the most spiritual services they have had for a long time. Our hope and prayer is that the work may continue under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, not only in Allentown, Pennsylvania, but everywhere and we would ask the Brethren people to kindly join us in prayer so that the work of the various churches may continue to grow and to be true and faithful.

WM. OSWALD.

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

The Milledgeville church has not been idle even while the pastor was in bed with the influenza. The Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and other work of the church went on under the leadership of the officers elect. Dr. W. S. Bell filled the pulpit for the pastor the Sunday night he was on the way back to Ashland from his evangelistic work on the coast. We were very thankful to him for his kindness to us.

Easter Sunday found us with the largest Sunday school gathering for many months. The church hour was used to present a very acceptable Easter program. The church was full and some were seated in the Sunday school annex.

On Mother's Day the Young People of the church had full charge of the program and presented a well planned and splendidly presented program of music and readings. A committee is now working on a Dad's Day program. We believe that fathers will have as much of a recognition this year as mothers have had for so many years. And why should it not be so? We have often heard the expression, "What is home without a mother?" and we know that she is a great factor in the home and the life of the family but we believe that father also has a rather large place in the home.

Even though this community, as every other community in the world, has been minus some things we enjoyed in the past and we had a bank failure in January also, yet we have been able to register on most of the special offerings to some extent at least.

There have been additions to the church during the year even though we did not hold a special revival meeting. We register a small net gain this year even though there have been deaths and letters granted.

The present pastor will have been the leader seven years at the close of this year. His hope is that the work shall go on and on to the glory of the Lord. This church will provide other pastoral leadership to begin with October first of this year. Their present pastor has an open ear for the call of the Lord and his church to some field of labor in the Brethren church.

Last Sunday night this church observed the ordinance of Holy Communion with 83 at the tables. Doubtless, only for the fact of much sickness among us, our number would have been much larger. We praise his holy name that he gave us this privilege of fellowship with each other and of communion with him.

Brethren, we need your prayers, that the work of the Lord may be done acceptably here and his name continuously glorified.

Your Brother in Christ,

GEO. E. CONE.

LATHROP, CALIFORNIA

I just want to report briefly for Lathrop. I had the pleasure of baptizing three souls from Lathrop recently. In every way possible the Brethren here endeavor to bear that sort of testimony to our Lord Jesus Christ that others will want to know him and be saved.

On May 6 I was invited to conduct the Love Feast at Lathrop. It was a good meeting. There was a fine group of young people present. That makes us all happy for if our Lord tarry, they will take up the work of the church and carry it forward. Many of the veterans of this work have answered the roll-call up yonder. Yet such as J. Milo and Emma Wolfe keep spending and being spent for Christ's sake. I think the Lord has a fine group of loyal Brethren at Lathrop and may Jesus Christ keep their lamp of Life burning till he comes again.

J. WESLEY PLATT.

MANTECA, CALIFORNIA

It is some time since we have reported from this field, so we do want to let you know that we are still going forward in the work of the Lord. I think it was about a year or more ago that we reported last. Following Brother Yoder's meeting with us the Lord was pleased to add seven more souls besides the ones who were received during Brother Yoder's work among us.

In March of this year we were blessed in a revival meeting of two weeks under the masterful preaching and work of Brother Archie L. Lynn of La Verne, California. He came to us on March 7 and closed March 20. The interest was very good throughout the entire meeting. The messages by Brother Lynn were of the highest order. The meeting under God's blessing was very successful. There were three came back from their back slidings and were restored to the full fellowship of the church. We were all very happy for this. I have baptized and received into the church ten others. This makes us rejoice because it convinces us that God's Holy Spirit is still at work bringing the lost to the Savior. There were seven others to make confession, but have not yet been baptized. Some of these because of parental objections, others because of other interferences have not put on Christ in baptism. We pray for them. May God bring them to a full and complete surrender.

We were so thankful for the ministry of Brother Lynn and his good wife. It was a real inspiration to fellowship with them and we know that much good seed has been sown that must bring forth a harvest. We thank the LaVerne Brethren for consenting to have their pastor help us. May God richly bless them for their unselfishness and positive desire to be of help.

We are taking advantage of every opportunity to advance his Name and to keep winning souls till Jesus comes. Pray for us. We pray for the brotherhood. I started my twentieth year in this field on April 18th. It seems almost as though I had lived here all my life. Yet God chooses to continue his blessings.

J. WESLEY PLATT.

A TELEPHONE BRIGADE

A Chicago church has made use of a publicity scheme known as the telephone brigade. The pastor telephones a message to the leader of the brigade. This leader repeats the message to five captains. Each captain telephones to his five lieutenants, who similarly relay it. The whole congregation may be reached by a personal call within a few hours; yet no one person need telephone to more than five, or perhaps ten, persons.

The message to be sent by such a plan must be brief, and the dates, hours, and other details of meetings so advertised must be made crystal-clear to each one who passes on the news. Christian Endeavor societies, Sunday school classes, choruses, choirs, and men's or women's organizations in the church may all use such a system. Shut-ins and invalids may be enrolled as members of the brigade, thus giving them a definite place in the church work.—C. E. World.

THE BIBLE AND WEALTH

(Continued from page 2)

and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also.—Matthew 6.

His Practical Illustration

The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully: and he reasoned within himself, saying * * * Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, be merry. But God said unto him, Thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee; and the things which thou hast prepared, whose shall they be? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.—Luke 12.

His Judgment Scene

Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me to drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. * * * Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me.—Matthew 25.—Bible Society Record.

THE OHIO DISTRICT CONFERENCE PROGRAM*To be held at Bryan, Ohio, June 14-17, 1932

Conference Music Will Be in Charge of Dr. C. A. Bame

TUESDAY AFTERNOON*Theme: Devotional Life and Bible Study

- 2:30 Song Service ..... In charge of Dr. Bame
 Scripture and Prayer ..... Rev. L. V. King
 2:50 Address of Welcome ..... Rev. C. A. Stewart
 3:00 This Conference in Relation to the Semi-Centennial Program ..... Rev. R. D. Barnard
 3:15 Address ..... Dr. J. C. Beal

TUESDAY EVENING*Theme: Building

- 7:30 Song Service
 Scripture and Prayer ..... Rev. Grant McDonald
 7:50 Moderator's Address ..... Prof. M. A. Stuckey
 Special Music
 8:30 Vice Moderator's Sermon ..... Rev. W. S. Crick

WEDNESDAY MORNING*Theme: Evangelism

- 8:00 Simultaneous sessions:
 W. M. S. .... Program to be supplied
 Ministerium ..... Lecture and Discussion
 9:00 Song Service
 Scripture and Prayer ..... Rev. Raymond Gingrich
 9:15 Organization of Conference and Business Session
 10:20 Evangelism in the Brethren Churches of Ohio
 Rev. A. E. Whitted
 Special Music
 11:00 Bible Lecture, "Pre-Mosaic Prophecy" .. Dr. K. M. Monroe

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON*Theme: Missions

- 1:30 Music
 Scripture and Prayer ..... Rev. Floyd Shiery
 1:45 Missions:
 The Challenge of Home Missions ... Dr. G. C. Carpenter
 Special Music
 2:30 Some Present Problems of Foreign Missions
 Dr. J. A. Miller
 3:15 United Support of Brethren Ideals and Interests
 Dr. G. S. Baer

WEDNESDAY EVENING*Theme: Christian Education

- 7:30 Song Service
 Scripture and Prayer ..... Rev. Ray Klingensmith
 7:50 Christ and Education ..... Prof. A. L. DeLozier
 Special Music
 8:30 Sermon, "What's the Matter With the World?"
 Dr. W. S. Bell

THURSDAY MORNING*Theme: Literature

- 8:00 Simultaneous Sessions:
 W. M. S. .... Program to be supplied
 Ministerium ..... Lecture and Discussion
 9:00 Song Service
 Scripture and Prayer ..... Rev. Conard Sandy
 9:15 Business Session
 10:20 Some Present Problems of Our Publishing Interests
 Dr. W. S. Bell
 Special Music
 11:00 Bible Lecture, "Mosaic Messianic Prophecy"
 Dr. K. M. Monroe

THURSDAY AFTERNOON*Theme: Stewardship

- 1:15 Woman's Missionary Program ..... Open Session
 Program to be supplied.
 2:30 C. E. Program
 Brethren Youth and Stewardship ..... Rev. E. M. Riddle

- 3:00 Sunday School Program
 Address..Rev. W. I. Duker, National Conference Moderator
 3:30 The Stewardship of Life, Substance, and Service
 Dr. W. H. Beachler

THURSDAY EVENING*Theme: Loyalty

- 7:30 Song Service
 Scripture and Prayer ..... Rev. D. R. Murray
 7:45 A Problem of Ratio and Proportion ..... Dr. R. R. Teeter
 Special Music
 8:30 The Brethren Semi-Centenary ..... Dr. Chas. A. Bame

FRIDAY MORNING*Theme: Consecration

- 8:00 Simultaneous Sessions:
 W. M. S. .... Program to be supplied
 Ministerium ..... Lecture and discussion
 9:00 Song Service
 Devotions ..... Rev. G. C. Pontius
 9:15 Business Session
 10:15 Consecrated Leadership In the Churches..Rev. Alvin Byers
 10:35 Summary of the Program of Progress..Rev. R. D. Barnard
 Special Music
 11:00 Bible Lecture. "Davidic Messianic Prophecy"
 Dr. K. M. Monroe

THE OHIO DISTRICT MINISTERIAL PROGRAM*Wednesday Morning

- 8:00-9:00 Devotions
 Lecture: "Time Element in the Atonement."
 Dr. K. M. Monroe
 Discussion

Thursday Morning

- 8:00-9:00 Devotions
 Lecture: "The Ministry of Exposition."
 Dr. K. M. Monroe
 Discussion

Friday Morning

- 8:00-9:00 Devotions
 Lecture: "What and When Should a Pastor Study?"
 Dr. K. M. Monroe
 Discussion

SISTERHOOD OF MARY AND MARTHA PROGRAM

NOTE: This program is in preparation and will be supplied later. Together with the Woman's Missionary Society this organization will have its separate sessions.

Keep the Facts in Mind About Prohibition(Continued from page 4)*

whose memory goes back to the saloon days should know better; others need to be taught better.

9. Alcohol is a poisonous, habit-forming drug. That is what the leaders of the medical profession are telling us, and they are insisting that it is "never a tonic or a stimulant"; that it is always "a narcotic interfering with the bodily functions and lessening the nerve tonic and vital energy." The physiological effects of alcohol need to be pressed home more strongly to the minds of young people so as to fortify them against the lying propaganda that indulgence in alcoholic drinks is not such a serious matter after all and should not be made the occasion of so much fuss.

10. Lastly, let it be borne in mind that the liquor traffic cannot be regulated or controlled, but that the only way to deal with it successfully is to exterminate it. Government control has been tried and found a failure, as the history of South Carolina will testify. And Canada has nothing to teach us but disappointment and growing corruption and increasing lawlessness and crime. Our method of dealing with the traffic is far ahead of any that has yet been devised, and all suggestions to the contrary are but wet propaganda against which we need to set ourselves with all possible alertness, consecration and determination.

ROBERT DOLLAR, CHRISTIAN

Captain Robert Dollar, eighty-eight year-old steamship magnate, made a practice of reading his Bible every day.

"For the past sixty years every morning before breakfast," he recently wrote the American Bible Society of which he was a vice-president, "I have read part of a chapter in the Old and New Testaments. By commencing the day with the reading of my Bible I find it gives me much valuable information and inspiration which is past my power to express. The older I become—and I am past my eighty-seventh year—the more benefit I derive from this habit of reading from chapters of the Bible each morning, not alone from a spiritual standpoint but from a commercial one as well, as I find it of great help in my business. It has meant guidance and help in my efforts to make success in this world.

"As we advance, as we accomplish more and more in the realm of science and its contributing factors, the more do we depend on the living word of God, whether we realize it or not."

There is a Bible in every room of the big fleet of Dollar Line passenger steamers, placed there by Captain Dollar. In addition to this on each of the trans-Pacific liners and round-the-world boats a supply of Chinese Bibles has been placed to meet the need of Chinese passengers, cabin boys, and waiters. These books were selected with a view to providing whichever dialect or language form would be most readily understood. Captain Dollar, who has shown his interest in the work of the American Bible Society in various ways, has himself paid the freight charges on all shipments of its Scriptures on the boats of his line to and from the Far East and from publishing centers in the Far East.

OUR LITTLE READERS

KITTEN FLUFFY TAIL

By Elizabeth Owen in "The Sunbeam"

There was a dear little kitten with very thick, soft yellow fur. He had a big, plume-like tail that he waved proudly in the air all the time. His mother, Mrs. Pussy Cat, called him Fluffy Tail.

Now, Kitten Fluffy Tail didn't like to get wet. When it rained he would stay under the barn where he lived with his mother. His mother would have to go up to the farmhouse alone and get her food. Then she would have to bring some back for Fluffy Tail so he wouldn't be hungry.

Mrs. Pussy Cat didn't like to get wet, either. But she liked even less to be hungry. So she always went, rain or shine, to get her milk and plate of scraps. On sunny days Kitten Fluffy Tail trotted happily beside her. All the people at the farmhouse loved him, and thought he was such a pretty kitten. But on rainy days he always stayed under the barn and cried till his mother came back.

Now Kitten Fluffy Tail was growing fast. He was almost as big as Mother Pussy Cat. She began to get tired of bringing him food every rainy day. She thought it was time such a big kitten should wait on himself. So one day, when the sky was all gray and rain was beginning to fall, she started out for her supper.

Kitten Fluffy Tail crawled under the barn and meowed, "Bring me some when you come back, Mother Pussy Cat." She didn't answer him as she hurried away. He didn't mind that so long as she came back later. But he waited and waited and she didn't come back. It rained harder and harder. He kept peeking out from under the barn and calling: "Mother Pussy Cat, where are you? Come and bring my supper. I'm hungry."

It was getting dark, but that didn't matter, for kittens can see in the dark. He looked and looked, and called and called, but she didn't come back. By this time Kitten Fluffy Tail was very hungry. It seemed as if he couldn't stand it; he was so very hungry. He just had to get his supper some way. Where could Mother Pussy Cat be?

He stuck his little black nose out from under the barn. Plop! A big raindrop fell on it, and he drew back in a hurry. But pretty soon he was too hungry to wait any longer. Rain or no rain, he must get his supper and find Mother Pussy Cat. So he went out into the rain. It was the very first water that had ever touched his soft, yellow fur. He ran fast, but the rain poured down on him!

Soon the people at the farmhouse heard a sad little meow at the door. "Oh, mother!" said the little girl Hilda. "There's another kitten out in the rain. Let's bring this one in, too."

She ran to the door and opened it. In walked Kitten Fluffy Tail. What a sad-looking kitten he was! The rain had wet him so that his tail was just like a piece of string.

"You poor little kitten, come right over and have something to eat!" cried Hilda. He was so wet that she didn't know who he was. So she took him over near the big kitchen stove and gave him a dish of warm milk. There under the stove, where it was warm, was Mother Pussy Cat, dry and full of supper.

Kitten Fluffy Tail looked at her, but he didn't say one word. He drank his milk and crawled in beside her. In a few minutes he was fast asleep.

When Hilda went to bed she peeked under the stove. "Mother," she cried in surprise, "It's our own Kitten Fluffy Tail! He's all dried out now."

Kitten Fluffy Tail opened one eye and looked at her. Then he closed it again and snuggled closer to Mother Pussy Cat.—Elizabeth Owen in "The Sunbeam."

Ill habits gather by unseen degrees, as brooks make rivers, rivers run to seas.—Dryden.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOTICE ABOUT STATISTICAL REPORTS

The National and District Statisticians would like very much to have a report from every church in the brotherhood. The District Statisticians have sent out blanks. If your church has not reported, it should at once. We have no way of reaching the church only through the last reported secretary or pastor. If you, Mr. Pastor, have not helped to fill out a statistical blank for this year, get busy with your secretary and see that one is filled out and mailed at once. Mr. Secretary, if you received the blanks and have not had them filled out, dig them out and get busy, please. In case you did not receive blanks your District Statistician has a supply, write him at once. THIS IS IMPORTANT.

GEORGE E. CONE, National Statistician,
Milledgeville, Illinois.

CONFERENCE AT BRYAN, OHIO

The Ohio State conference will convene in the Bryan church June 14 to 17th. It has been nearly twenty-five years since the Bryan church has had the privilege of entertaining the conference, and we are looking forward to a rich experience in having fellowship with the other churches of the state. We are all by ourselves in the northwest corner of the state, miles from any other Brethren church. Fremont is the closest Brethren church in the state and they are about ninety miles east of us. Bryan is the county seat of Williams county and on U. S. road 127 North and South and No. 6 and No. 2 coming from the East. The New York Central Railroad west from Toledo runs through Bryan, also the T. & I. traction line from Toledo runs west into Bryan and the Cincinnati and Northern comes into Bryan from the South. We have good transportation facilities, good roads in every direction and beautiful country that you will want to see, a warm welcome, a fellowship and an inspiration that you won't want to miss. We are planning to take care of all who will come, and the ladies want to make it as easy as possible so that none will have an excuse for staying away. So they have planned to give beds and breakfast free and dinner and supper 25 and 20 cents. You can't stay at home for that, so come to conference. We extend an invitation to our neighboring Indiana Brethren to come and enjoy the conference with us. The Junior and Senior Sisterhood girls and their patronesses an invitation to attend this conference. Remember the dates are June 14 to 17.

C. A. STEWART, Pastor.

1932 EDITION

Fits the vest-pocket and hand-bag; contains 30,000 words of concise, cogent, conveniently classified

PROHIBITION FACTS

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS on PROHIBITION

~Children-College Drinking-Juvenile Delinquency-Legislation-Enforcement-Labor-The Press-Crime-Canadian System-History-Other Countries-Etc. LATEST ~ COMPLETEST ~ BEST interesting as a Novel-Factual as an Encyclopedia

PRICES $7 per 100 ~ $3.75 per 50
@1.00 per doz. 10¢ each

A BIG DOLLAR'S WORTH FOR A LITTLE DIME Order NOW from

Allied Forces for Prohibition

986 15th Ave. S. E., Minneapolis, Minn.

419 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

VOL. LIV
Number 24

June 11
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

“Except . . . As Little Children”

To think that to be a child is to be of unenquiring and plastic mind is to be singularly unobservant of children and forgetful of one's own childhood. To suppose that our Lord could take a child and set him in the midst of his hearers as a type of freedom from all questioning, as a white sheet to be written on, as mere clay for authority to fashion, is only to attribute to him our own obtuseness.

Did men not forget, in the frivolously multitudinous pursuits of age, the seriousness of childhood, they could not be so blind to the shadows of mysterious ponderings in the depths of young inquiring eyes, or fail to be arrested by questions which outstrip their knowledge and even transcend their formulas. But, the memory of their own youth having been long replaced by comfortable platitudes, the child's mode of expressions becomes for them a forgotten tongue, and the child's thoughts as an undiscovered country.

Once each of them was the poor, little, perplexed soul, but, failing to obtain aid from the wisdom and experience of his elders, and not perceiving that they were as perplexed and more ignorant than himself, he attributed their impatience to their own omniscience and learned to shut up his thoughts in his own heart, in expectation of an age of wisdom to be reached by the simple process of becoming a man. Then, as he ceased to be a child, he lost life's possibilities with its perplexities.

—John Omar in Vision and Authority.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Present Outlook

The world seems to sink deeper into the slough of trouble. Living in the midst of fertile fields; surrounded by factories filled with machines; thousands of men able and willing to work—things become worse and worse. No one has the genius to originate a solution. And if there were a solution, humanly speaking, it would be hard to get it adopted and enforced.

Legislators cannot forget their own narrow sectional interests. Representative government is displaying such a paralysis that men in high places question whether it should be continued. Owen D. Young, lately mentioned as a presidential possibility, suggests a dictatorship for this country. The late Crown Prince of Germany is seriously discussed as the next head of the German government. Unless a miracle intervenes, within sixty days the firebreathing Hitler and his Nazis will control Germany, and he has promised to destroy the provisions of the Versailles treaty upon which the structure of postwar Europe rests precariously. A prominent American educator, trained in Harvard, and for years professor in a great Japanese University, declares that Japan is ready to attack the United States when a propitious moment arrives.

In the meantime thousands of war veterans march from various places to the Capital at Washington, commanding trucks and trains when needed, to demand the immediate payment of a bonus. And Congress, somewhat panicky before this approaching army, will probably either pass the bonus bill, adding over two billions more to the burdens of government, or else hastily adjourn and get out of Washington before more soldiers arrive.

The troubles of humanity are not decreasing.

THE Refuge from the Storm

As we see one by one the human props of civilization being pulled down and falling, the Christian at least should know where to find refuge from the uncertainties of temporal things. "The Name of the Lord is a strong tower; the righteous runneth into it and is safe" (Prov. 18:10). If we learn again the lesson of this truth, our troubles have not been in vain. Too many have been putting our trust in "things."

Doubtless the world needs a Dictator, but merely human dictators are worse than nothing. The Word of God promises a Dictator who some day will rule the nations "with a rod of iron." Power will be safe in his hands, as it is not safe in the hands of the Mussolinis and Hitlers and Stalins. Here is the sure Word of prophecy: "Behold, a King shall reign in righteousness. . . . And a Man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a Covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a Great Rock in a weary land" (Isa. 32:1-2).

Let us find our present refuge in him, and wait patiently for his Coming. "The Judge standeth at the door."

THROWING out the Bait

One of the magnates of Hollywood announces that his next film will deal with a Biblical theme entitled "Sign of the Cross." He says that such themes always prove to be the big money makers. For example, "The Ten Commandments," it is said still heads the list in the matter of financial returns.

Some people will tell you that this is a good sign, that people should crowd to see a religious picture. But there is another way to look at the matter. It is not that the regular film patrons prefer Christian subjects. If that were true, he would attend the church where such subjects are discussed several times. The reason why the so-called "Biblical picture" makes money is that it gives to the church member, who doesn't ordinarily attend the theater, an excuse for attending. It salves his conscience. And from this extra group of attendants the profits come. For a great many swallow the bait.

A ROMAN Catholic Speaks

At a recent meeting the heads of various colleges and universities were discussing the problem of religion on the campus. Dean Eagen of Loyola University said some interesting things about the matter, as follows:

"The obsequious surrender of theology as the queen of the sciences by the professed advocates of religious thought to the blatant boastings of pettifoggers who compensate for their scientific ineptitude by a fling at Deity" was denounced by the Dean.

"Religious tolerance," he said, "has degenerated into an abject willingness to accept any error, be it but labeled scientific. Too often religious leaders abdicate their authority and become human weathervanes as pliable to other interests as Polonius to Hamlet."

Dean Egan further pointed out that the football coach is of all men in a college the "most autocratic," yet is quite often "the most respected." "While the coach dogmatizes, the religious leader apologizes. The students have accepted them at their own valuation."

He also declared that "As a nation, in gold we trust. We have taken our trust from God and put it in the dollar and the dollar has taken wings, and now we have neither God nor gold."

THE Religion of "Iscairiotism"

To show their hate for Christianity and its Founder, the powers of Russia have started a cult in honor of Judas Iscairiot. World Dominion gives the story as follows:

"The story of Judas Iscairiot is so much admired in the eyes of Stalin that he is building a memorial to him. Judas was a traitor; he betrayed our Lord, and the idea of betraying has given fame to Judas among Bolsheviks. They are worshipping the principle of cunning, betrayal and unfaithfulness. Among many other unrighteous things, Iscairiotism, the Bolshevik religion, is given the place of honor. This is not an empty show, but a hell-planned scheme which is systematically put into practice."

This is horrible, but the Christian may take courage by remembering that such a cult brings with it the seed of its own destruction. Nothing can possibly endure which is built upon the sands of lies, treachery and deceit.

Iscairiotism is not new. In principle it is the very genius of that "Modernism" which is seeking to gain control of all the churches.

STUPENDOUS Energy in the Atom

A popular article claiming to represent the views of Dr. Millikan, says that "If the atomic energy locked up in one cubic inch of coal could be released and controlled, it would light, heat and turn the wheels of industry of New York for a year."

"With such power it would be possible to neutralize the force of gravity so that the air would be as safe or safer than the ground. The food question would be solved, since with unlimited electrical power crops could be grown as fast as desired with artificial ultra-violet light." "Travel would be as simple and inexpensive as breathing, and people could readily follow warm weather south and be self-sustaining regardless of economic conditions."

Doubtless God knows how to release and control the power of the atom, since he made it. Perhaps he will do this in the future and thus solve many of our problems during the Millennium.

The writer also says that "beams of atomic energy could be used which would be powerful enough to blast a whole continent off the face of the earth, or split the earth itself wide open."

This is a kind of scientific forecast of what Peter wrote about: "But the Day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." (2 Pet. 3:10).

WHERE your Treasure is.

A newspaper writer who occasionally acts as a dramatic critic remarks upon the strange fact that among the patrons of the theater the hardest to please and the most

(Continued on page 15)

IN THIS NUMBER

Some Challenges of the Christian Standard—Editor, . . . . .	3
Tobacco Ad in Church Paper—Editor, . . . . .	3
Religion Served by Secular Journals—Editor, . . . . .	4
Editorial Review, . . . . .	4
Influences Flowing from Christ's Advent—E. E. Jacobs, . . . . .	5
Studies in the Book of Revelation—R. I. Humbert, . . . . .	6
Faith and the Depression—Mary Pence, . . . . .	6
Significant News and Views, . . . . .	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, . . . . .	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rensch, . . . . .	9
A Practical Plan for Personal Bible Study—Marion McH. Hull, . . . . .	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, . . . . .	10
Hints for the Social Committee, . . . . .	11
West African Folk Story—Mrs. Orville D. Jobson, . . . . .	11
"Red Russia's" Red Crimes, . . . . .	12
News from the Field, . . . . .	13-15
Our little Readers, . . . . .	15
Announcements, . . . . .	15
The Tie that Binds, . . . . .	16
In the Shadow, . . . . .	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Some Challenges of the Christian Standard

PART IV.

In the issue of May 21 we concluded chapter 6 of Matthew's Gospel in our study of the Sermon on the Mount. The righteousness required in the Kingdom is emphasized. The necessity of spiritual-mindedness is pointed out and warning is given against the insidiousness and destructiveness of worldliness. In chapter 7 Jesus continues to set forth in dramatic and forceful manner the righteousness required of members of his Kingdom.

The chapter opens with the challenging warning: "Judge not, that ye be not judged." At first it seems a strange prohibition to lay upon Christian people, but after a moment's reflection it appears as the only fair and reasonable attitude to expect on the part of those who do not and cannot know the thoughts and intents of the heart. One should be charitable and considerate towards others in sin rather than severe and denunciatory, lest in his rashness he impute wrong motives and condemn on that assumption. This warning does not have reference to the forming of judicial opinions regarding another's conduct when occasion requires, but it aims at the censorious, unkindly critical spirit that bitterly denounces, and often without warrant, rather than trying to understand and to help. Such a spirit will meet with the unfavorable judgment of God, for it springs from a bad heart that is void of love for others and is unmindful of one's own faults. He who would reprove others, must seek to correct his own shortcomings, or remember that "he who lives in a glass house should not throw stones." It is no small offence for a person to condemn sin in another life while tolerating it in his own. Jesus calls such a man a hypocrite, and no characterization could be more severe, especially when it comes from the lips of our Lord. It was such men that Cowper had in mind when he wrote:

"Their own defects, invisible to them,
Seen in another, they at once condemn,
And tho' self-idolized in every case,
Hate their own likeness in a brother's face."

Let not "the kettle say to the pot, Keep off, you'll smudge me," but let the professed Christian separate himself from his sins that he may be able to see clearly to point others to the better way.

While the Christian is not to judge severely and censoriously, yet he is not to take a soft, indulgent attitude toward sin, nor treat with "good-natured indifference" the conduct of the sinner. There is metal in the Christian spirit. If men will not leave their sins, God's people must leave the sinner. Christian love must be ready to forgive as freely as sin is frankly confessed (See Luke 17:3; Matt. 18:15ff.), but there should be no wasting of effort on those who would profane sacred things. "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs," that is, to the "savage or snarling haters of truth and righteousness," as one commentator explains it; "neither cast ye your pearls before swine,"—"the impure or coarse, who are incapable of appreciating the priceless jewels of Christianity." Shakespeare expressed this sentiment in "Tempest" where Prospero felt that the jewel of kindness was thrown away on the brutish Caliban:

"Abhorred slave;
Which any print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill."

There seems to be a limit beyond which it ceases to be a virtue to strive to call some men from their sins and to a reception of Gospel truth. Some are hopelessly depraved, and further effort is futile and wasteful. As Dr. G. B. Stevens says, "Love may expend its labors in vain if it is not discriminating and wise."

Care should be taken, however, that this brief warning shall not be overemphasized in our lives. The greater danger is that we shall be too uncharitable and too ready to criticize and to deal impatiently with those who are in sin. Censoriousness is a far more common fault than casting pearls before swine.

This is a difficult program that the Lord Jesus has set before us, challenging the very best that is in us, and then when we have done our best we find that we are not able to attain unto the standard of righteousness required of members of his Kingdom. The influence of evil is strong, and human nature is weak, as Jesus very well knew, and consequently he made provision for the help that would be needed. Divine power is vouchsafed through prayer. We may have it for the asking; we may find the hitherto unnoticed provision, if we will but seek for it; we may have opened unto us the way into the very secret place of power if we will but knock at the door of prayer. Some one has passed on to us a parable related by the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, of a distressed city that was in dire need, while above it on the hill-top was a palace containing everything they could want. They were poor and wretched, sick and sad, when so near were stores of silver and gold, joy and health. But the gate was locked and Pity was in despair until he remembered that once he had possessed the key. Recovering this master key, he found by its use all the riches of the palace at his disposal—its name was prayer. Christian and Hopeful in "Pilgrim's Progress" lay helpless in the dungeon of Giant Despair until they recovered the Key of Promise—prayer. That is our secret of success, our assurance of power to rise above the selfishness and greed within and the evil world without, into that measure of righteousness that entitles one to membership in the Kingdom of God. And it matters not how weak an individual may be, he only needs to persevere in prayer and lay hold on power. As Arnot says, "Like an echo from a ruined castle, prayer is an echo from a ruined human soul of the sweet promise of God." And if one should think it strange that God should answer prayer, consider an earthly father, wicked though he be, how ready he is to give to his child the things that are necessary for the sustenance of its body, and know assuredly that the heavenly Father is infinitely more ready to give good things to those who ask him.

"Therefore," that is, now after all has been said, here is a simple rule of conduct that sums up all one's duties and relations to others. It is a rule that grows out of the essential oneness of the race and the equality of all men before God, and the obligation rests upon the spirit of love and of fellow-feeling. The rights of others are equal to our own, and as Christians we must recognize those rights in our treatment of them. Or, to use the words of Jesus, "all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." That is the conduct towards which all the law and the prophets have led, and that is the end—such fraternal relations—to which Jesus has been striving to lead us in all the instructions of this sermon. It is indeed the "Golden Rule" of conduct.

Tobacco "Ad" in Church Paper

The depression has certainly hit the publishing interests of all kinds hard (but especially the religious press). We have felt it keenly, as every other church paper in existence has. These papers are putting up a stiff battle for continued existence. Some of them are launching out upon new and untried methods of support, most of them entirely worthy and proper, however. But we were disappointed and not a little surprised to find that one of our exchanges has been driven to the running of tobacco advertisements. Large advertisements covering most of an entire page have been telling for several weeks the virtues of a certain brand of smoking tobacco, and in one display a child is represented playing with the smoke rings its father is puffing out. Just across on the opposite page is a well-edited department devoted to "Boys and Girls", calling for their attention with beautiful stories and poems of the kind that one would expect to see in a church paper. We are wondering which will get the most attention from their young readers and which will influence their plastic mind most, the attractive tobacco advertisement or the story about "being pretty inside"? But any place in a church paper is out of place for a tobacco or cigarette ad. Nicotine poison and Christian purity cannot consistently be promoted from the same pages. Christian symbols and tobacco boxes don't mix well; they just don't belong together. It's too much like trying to serve both God and mammon.

Religion Served by Secular Journals

Not a few people these days are depending on secular journals to serve them with their religious knowledge and ideals, with results not greatly to their satisfaction, nor to the credit of the secular journalists. The distinguished editor of The Churchman pointed out this fact a while ago in a snappy little editorial, which exemplifies a common weakness of secular journals as purveyors of religious truth. We quote our contemporary as follows:

Our friends tell us on occasion that the day of the religious journal is over, since the popular magazines "now cover the religious field." It might with equal pertinency be said that the tabloids cover the news field. If one wants to take one's judgment of world affairs from the tabloids one is at liberty to do so; but not all persons will agree that judgment based on such sources will be entirely adequate from the point of view of informed opinion.

At the moment we are led to an expression of these thoughts by the leading article in the March number of Harper's. No invidious comparison is intended, since we hold this monthly in high regard. The article in question, Life, Death, and the Unbeliever, by Lillian Symes, deals, as its title indicates, with fundamental religious problems. Mrs. Symes is a journalist of genuine gifts. But we cannot forbear saying that no editor of a first-rate religious journal would have accepted this article for publication. We need hardly add that its rejection would not have been on any such ground as a fear of offending subscribers, or of "disturbing" the mental processes or "faith" of readers. The best religious journals constantly carry articles more disturbing than that in question. The rejection would have been solely on the ground of lack of merit.

Mrs. Symes' chief offense lies in her failure to define her terms. What does she mean by "unbeliever"? What does she mean by "the orthodox"? We defy anyone to discover from the article defined answers to these questions. She warns her readers that they must recognize that she is dealing in generalizations, but we contend that no writer on such a theme reveals sound craftsmanship in seeking refuge in that sort of corner.

As an illustration of the kind of puerility in which this journalist indulges, note the following:

"The church has found it necessary to prove to the radical agitator, the atheistic propagandist, and the cynical skeptic its interest in social justice and peace on earth. It is not necessary to accept

(Continued on page 8)

EDITORIAL REVIEW

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK. We publish only fifty numbers of The Evangelist in a year. Consequently there are two weeks when no paper is published. Next week is the time for the dropping of the first number this year.

The Evangelist office is in receipt of an announcement from Brother and Sister R. Paul Miller of Berne, Indiana, telling of the arrival of an eight and a half pound baby boy in their home on May 30th. We bespeak the congratulations and good wishes of the Evangelist family.

Announcement is made of another "All-Brethren" day in the Miami Valley, with all the churches of that section participating. The program is to be held on June 19 at the Miami Valley Chautauqua grounds near Franklin. Rev. W. I. Duker, of Elkhart, Indiana, and moderator of National Conference, is to be the out-of-the-district speaker.

The Brethren at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, who are now under the pastoral care of Brother William Gray, have recently experienced a successful revival with their pastor doing the preaching. There were twenty-six confessions and the membership was greatly revived. The Sunday school has realized a fifty per cent increase in attendance.

The revival at Linwood, Maryland, conducted by Brother R. Paul Miller, resulted in "seventeen or eighteen" confessions, according to the report of the pastor, Brother J. L. Bowman, who says it was a great victory for that community and a real revival of the church. Brother Miller found the pastor hard-working and thoroughly efficient, and with a passion for the saving of souls. Though this is a strictly rural church, yet it has a splendid plant and the possibility of a large future, it is said.

Brother George E. Cone, national statistician reminds us again of those statistical reports that are now due. And we have a further reminder from the Indiana district, coming not from the statistician himself, who is unable to take care of his duties, but from Brother R. F. Porte of South Bend, Indiana, who is appealing in behalf of Brother Clark and is carrying on for him. The pastors of that district will no doubt give the proper response, which is due under any consideration, but more especially under the present circumstances. One district has already sent in a full report.

An interesting letter from Roann, Indiana, tells of a well attended communion service that was made very impressive, and also instructive. Another special feature was the Mother's Day program, when special recognition was given to two great-grandmothers, whose four generations are members of the Sunday school. A two-weeks' union Bible school, in which Brethren children participated in largest numbers, had an enrollment of 85. The church has added two to its membership since last report. Brother G. L. Maus is the faithful pastor of this church.

Brother E. L. Miller, secretary of the Executive Committee of General Conference, calls upon the churches to begin now to put on the "roussements" for conference attendance. This is to be a unique conference in that it is planned to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of the Brethren church. The program should be one of unusual interest and profit, and churches and pastors may well be making plans far in advance to attend and to get many others to attend also. Brother Miller does not state the date, but we think it is the last full week in August, that is, August 21 to 28. If these dates are wrong, we invite the secretary to correct us promptly.

Word has come from Miss Gladys Spice correcting the wrong impression we got from her report of two weeks ago, that the two splendid young people soon to sail for missionary work in South America are members of the Canton Brethren church. She says she referred to these young people as "ours", not in the sense that they were members of the Brethren church, but because they were so closely associated in acquaintanceship and service with the Canton Brethren church and because other members of the family do belong to our church. Brother and Sister Paul Guiley are members of another communion and they are sailing under an interdenominational board to their South American missionary activities. We gladly make this correction in the interest of accuracy and out of justice to all concerned.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us another installment of College News reporting further events of Commencement week. In the Brethren church of Ashland on Sunday were gathered 107 graduates to hear the baccalaureate sermon preached by the president of the school. That size class indicates a commendable growth in the last decade, as every one familiar with the school's history will know. The fact that it is a growing institution, added to the further facts that it is a Christian college and that it is our own Brethren owned and Brethren controlled school, make it worthy of our most thoroughgoing support. And the time is at hand for the showing of that sort of support. Old Man Depression will doubtless prevent us from doing all that our hearts would desire to do, but if we just do our best, that will be encouraging.

PRAYER REQUEST FOR THIS WEEK—

"Brother J. W. Clark is very seriously ill and has been for three weeks," writes Brother R. F. Porte of South Bend, Indiana. "On May 25 he was anointed. We have not as yet received the victory we hoped for, and wish for the prayers of the church at large." Brother Clark is one of our Indiana ministers.

Pray for the district conferences now in session, or soon to convene.

Influences Flowing from Christ's Advent

Baccalaureate Address, June 5, 1932

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

The theme for this address can be found in the truth contained in the 5th verse of the 21st chapter of the book of Revelations: "Behold I make all things new."

It is my purpose this afternoon to inquire into the question as to some of the things which Jesus brought into the world with him. This is by no means a new question but on the other hand it is a very old one, for men have tried to evaluate the influence of Jesus for the past two thousand years and he has baffled them all.

It might be well at the outset to remember that man had been on the earth a very long time before the advent of Jesus. He had set up institutions and customs relative to all the major questions which are bound to arise wherever men live together,—property, marriage, death, and religion.

Moreover, there were great civilizations in China, Japan, and elsewhere, including the splendid culture in Greece and Rome. Even in America the Incas, Toltecs, and other tribes had gone very far in architecture, agriculture and even religion. Just what did the advent of Jesus add to civilization in general?

It has been said that he was against war and I think he was and yet wars have flourished since his day probably more than before. So with slavery, intemperance and many other evils. Just how did he change these, if at all? I want to point out four influences which have flowed from his advent.

1. Jesus taught a unity of life. He saw one race made, as was later said, from one source. He saw neither male nor female. Greek, bond nor free. Nor did he see one part of nature as evil and another as good. He saw man as an undivided personality with spiritual as well as physical needs. The vicissitudes of life seem to be a part of the general nature of things and not a special visitation. The Christian, then, is subjected to much the same difficulties as beset others, but he lives above them.

It would seem, also, as if education would effect the whole personality, what we commonly call character, as well as the intellectuality, and that an educated man must bring the whole of his mental equipment to bear upon any problem presented to him.

2. His was the highest Idealism.

We hear a good deal about character education today because it is extremely important. Yet look at the situation. We have more experts, more men governing us, and more college graduates than ever before, and yet they all have had a part in bringing us to the very depths,—the most savage war of all history, the most ruthless forms of industrialism, and the worst economic depression. With this there have been the attendant unbearable class hatreds and the unwarranted usurpation of governmental power (the Kentucky coal mines, etc.) within our national history.

There is need now for a revival (if we ever had it) of Christian idealism, and urgent demand for Christian practices and I call upon the Class of 1932 to align themselves on the side of right and not on the side of wrong.

Some think that we are witnessing a dying civilization, that we are seeing the passing of the worse for the advent of the better, but I am not so sure that that is at all true. Our militarists are still belated and sometime the colleges will dismiss their drill-masters and in their stead appoint apostles of peace who will teach young men and women how to live with other nationalities and races in peace.

In sociology and economics, they will teach justice instead of praising the status quo.

In educational courses they will stress character rather than facts.

In Literature they will show that Paradise Lost may have a present day meaning and that Locksley Hall may have a prophetic fulfillment.

In science they may learn to scatter superstition, that man's soul may be free and enlightened.

History will be taught from the standpoint of our blunders instead of from the standpoint that every nation writing the history is right and every other one wrong, and thus we may become aware of our stupidities.

And all education may at last contribute to the spread of truth and beauty and righteousness to the end that life in the here and now may be better.

3. Jesus struck a correct balance between belief and conduct. Everyone whose personal conduct is good is not necessarily a Christian. There is a tendency to include such men as Gandhi, Lincoln, and

Thomas Jefferson in the list of Christians, and yet they themselves probably never regarded themselves as such. If Jesus taught any one thing, he taught that he must be accepted as the divine Son of God and then there must be added to that confession, a perfect life. Stressing the technicalities of religion on the one hand only or good works on the other only, does not meet the full requirements of Christianity.

4. Jesus gave a great Expectancy to the World.

The present order is not permanent. Everyone expects some sort of a culmination. Everybody is expecting something to happen and if this does not take one course, it takes another, for all men are expectant. Many a man expects the future to show improvement over the past. He expects his children to have a better chance than he had. He expects to see poverty and war curbed, justice more widespread, more efficiency in government, more temperance, more culture, and disease subdued. Whether these ends will be accomplished within measureable time, may be open to question, but the point is that where the spirit of Jesus has had an opportunity to show itself, men are hopeful. I dare say that a new spirit has entered into men's hearts in the so-called Christian civilizations that is not present elsewhere.

Behold, I make all things new.

In America we have a right to hope, for this country was founded upon idealism relative to the betterment of mankind and has always held out a flaming hope to the world.

Now the Class of 1932 has an unprecedented opportunity to serve. Men still need the power of a good example. They still need to be shown that Christianity "works" in daily living. They have an unequalled opportunity to set right what my generation has set wrong. The future is an uncharted sea and old shore lines are indistinct, yet there is a way, a chart, and a compass which no man need lack. And they are to be found in the life and teachings of Jesus.

To the intelligent Christian, "thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," is no futile petition but becomes, and is at once, a prayer, a prophecy, a program, and a goal.

Ashland, Ohio.

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

Study No. Three

We have seen how that peace is promised to them who take refuge in our Lord Jesus Christ, when the great tribulation breaks upon this earth. But when peace is promised, I want to know if it is sure. Statesmen of our day and modernistic preachers are promising peace but the outlook is doubtful. Who promises peace when men's hearts are failing them for fear? "From him which is and which was, and which is to come." Ah, that is enough. The Father in all of his unchangeableness assures peace.

That would be enough to quiet our heart but we have more, the Holy Spirit also assures us that he will stand behind the promise, "and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne." This does not mean that there are seven Holy Spirits but seven is God's number of completeness. Thus, the Holy Spirit in all of his fulness also promises peace.

But that is not all. "And from Jesus Christ." What a comfort. Terrible things are ahead but before a single judgment is revealed the Triune God assures his people that it will be peace for them. How we can thank God for those few words. Certainly, if God be for us, who can be against us?

Who is Christ?

"Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness and the first begotten (born) of the dead." Does this mean that Christ was the first one to rise from the dead? Did he not bring Lazarus out of the tomb and did he not raise the young man of Nain? Yes, but they came to life in their old corruptible body but Christ came out in his new incorruptible body, the first human to possess a body that will never get sick or weak or tired.

"And the prince of the kings of the earth." At the present time Satan is prince of the world (Jno. 14:30) and the nations in their organized corruption, greed and crime are the results of his efforts to rule, but soon our Lord will return and will "judge among the nations" (Isa. 2:4).

What he did for us

"Unto him that loved (loveth) us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." Not only did Christ love us but he still loveth us and always will. Some people do not like to hear about salvation by the blood of Christ but up in heaven they make much of his blood and of his character as Lamb.

"And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father." The King must have a bride to rule with him. What untried forms of happy existence await us as we lead realms as yet unknown, into the bosom of the loving God.

Second Coming

"Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him" and yet in another place we are informed that he will come as a thief. Certainly it would be a poor thief that every eye could see. But there is no contradiction here. Christ will remove his church at any moment as a thief, but some seven years later he will come in great glory to the earth.

On the Isle of Patmos

"I John . . . was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ." The writer of this book was the same John who reclined on the breast of our Lord at the last supper. He had been sent to this lonely island in the Aegean Sea not because of some crime but because of his stand for his Lord. Men have come and men have gone but the spirit of the world remains the same, "I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (John 15:9). Let a person of our day take a definite stand on the narrow way and it will lead him to a lonely Patmos experience where many of his "friends" will forsake him.

John in the Spirit

"I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Whether John's body was taken along we do not know. When Paul was caught up to the third heaven he did not know if his body went along or not (II Cor. 12). John, however, was picked up and carried forward some two thousand years into the future and saw things that are to happen in the Day of the Lord.

The form of an hand took Ezekiel by a lock of his head and took him in visions of God to Jerusalem and showed him things that had happened years before, while John was picked up and carried forward to where he could see what would happen in the future.

Martinsburg, Pennsylvania.

Faith and the Depression

By Mary Pence

There are two spheres of faith. One pertains to the affairs of this life only and is a universal possession of mankind. The other pertains to things spiritual and has been defined as a personal belief in God, and in Christ whom he hath sent. John 3:16; 6:29, 40. In both these spheres God is the author of faith, both creating the faith faculty in man and putting before him evidences to call the faith faculty to activity and development.

The sphere of faith relating to the things of this life is the basis on which the affairs of the world run whether they be social, governmental, or business. Were it not for it there could be no progress. Because of lack of confidence in, and of fear of our fellowmen and things generally the world is suffering a depression. Because of much evidence it is a common sentiment and saying, that one can't trust any person or any thing. When faith gets to so low an ebb buoyancy is gone and the affairs of the world suffer.

To be sure, there is much evidence against faith in this sphere. For instance, murders, robberies, etc. once were reported as far removed from our neck o' the woods but within the last two years and a radius of less than five miles of open country a merchant was killed in his store by robbers; a postmaster killed his wife, wounded a child, and killed himself; a bank was robbed in open daylight; and the youngest son of a widow met a tragic death. Such things, now frequent the world over, are real shocks to people and produce a lack of confidence in one's fellow-men. People are keeping closer watch over life and property. Mothers far removed from Hopewell, even poor mothers, have added anxiety for their children. The general precaution in the air mistrusts every stranger and meets him at the door with a questioning look, which door is usually kept locked. In the home, in the office, on the highway, day or night, how much of fear there is, how much of lack of confidence in men! Faith is shaken in affairs social, governmental, and business. What is left for a man who does not have faith in God? Many such are committing suicide because their faith in the affairs of this life is gone. "Men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." If this is the beginning, what will the end be like? The Church can praise God that before the ultimate fulfillment of this prophecy it will have been caught out to be with the Lord.

With the Christian it should not be so for these very conditions we now face are evidences of his near and sure return, and should cause us to lean the harder on the living, coming Lord. In these latter days Satan is to be reckoned with all the more. Believers are to "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation." Satan's special activity is against the Church and its individual members. Faith in this sphere is based on the Word of God and it grows by feeding on the Word, and by prayer appropriating its truths and promises. This very Word Satan tries to snatch from us. If Christians fail to feed their souls on the Word and do as it says,—Watch unto prayer,—they will find themselves under the depression. With all sincerity we should pray, "Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief; Lord, increase our faith." One believer came to realize how foolish and weak of faith he was to spend any of his nights listening and looking for imaginary robbers; a Christian lady confessed to great fear at nights and had her husband have a loaded gun at hand. Then she became afraid she might kill one of the family so it was from fear to fear instead of from faith to faith. It is a good example of how when we neglect Bible, God, and prayer, yes, and the house of God, Satan will lead us down to misery and mistrust of every thing. A heart full of fear is not full of faith and "Without faith it is impossible to please God." A mind diverted to this world system of things will in any age become fearful and mistrusting. To be sure there may be more than one ground for fears but we venture the assertion that the foundation cause for most fears in most Christians is the presence of sin in the life. When the soul is cleansed one lives in close touch with Christ within the circle of whose love and presence nothing can really harm, and fears depart.

The believer has a great advantage over the world in this respect. He sees conditions in the light of the Word and therefore blacker is the picture, and more hopeless, than the world can well realize. The world is looking around the wrong corner for better times and its optimism at its best is only pessimism with the wrong garb on. It is deceiving. What promise is there for the world, the unbelieving mass of humanity? Why does the Church as the Body of Christ not faint and give way to depression? Just because of that great advantage of faith in God and his Christ. We pray therefore we so not faint. If I truly believe in God for any need of mine I will go unto my Father. In a recent daily the one winning the prize for the week under "Odd Things I Have Seen" was a woman who testified that when they were in dire straits, with five children to support, the husband sickened and died. Their platter reduced to its last crust and crumb but the mother neither begged nor starved. She went unto our Father, the source of all good, and while she prayed a strange noise occurred at the front. On going to the door she found a box had fallen from a truck right into her gate. The box contained cans of condensed milk which she accepted as answer to her prayer for food as the truck was beyond recall. In times of depression God still has his ravens. A schoolmate writes that she is sick and suffering, barely able to wait upon herself, no money, no relatives to call upon. Two Christian teachers whose salaries are in arrears have been helping her. But her letter had this note of joy: "I am not discouraged for my trust is in him." Another person wrote a friend from a large city saying she was spending her last change in carfares hunting work, and she added, "I refuse to worry so long as Phil. 4:19 is in the Bible." Another illustration of how faith solves problems and brings comfort these trying days was seen in a neighbor whose son had met a tragic death. The mother's sweet calm face impressed all her neighbors. She gave a testimony like this: "When I first heard the news I thought I could not stand it but I said, 'by thy help, Lord, I'll bear it.' I am trusting it all to him, and he is helping me." Hers was "the joy that followeth through pain." She stood on the evidence of the Word of God.

God wants a faith in us he can see as Christ saw the faith of the four who carried the palsied man. On one occasion (Luke 8:25) Christ asked the disciples, Where is your faith? Seen faith is faith that acts. "Faith without works is dead being alone."

The above illustrations of living faith that can be seen are mere samples of thousands of Christians in the world today whose hope is not in this world but in God. They are the ones nevertheless who are getting the very most good out of the world, and living the most happy lives upon the earth. God rewards faith by solving temporal as well as spiritual problems. Such believers are the light of the world and the salt that preserves the earth. They dare, they go, they do, endure, and give liberally that the cause of Christ may go forward depression or not. They rejoice to make sacrifices. The steadfastness and confidence of faith does not abate. These feel the depression; they see the tragedies and know the world is set for judgment; they experience a scarcity both of money and of work. They know the whole condition of things but they obey Christ's plain command, Have faith in God. That all Brethren people might be of their company and not of those to whom Christ must say, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

Believers should not think of sleeping with guns for protection. It is as unbecoming a believer to have an attitude of heart that nobody nor thing is right as it is disgusting in the worldly minded to declare every person and thing is "just fine." True faith keeps the life balanced and trusting God to undertake in the affairs of this life which relate to us individually; it is content with what God gives and is concerned in appropriating what God is wanting to give. This is the chief exercise of faith, though faith also asks of God.

The first act of faith is to receive Jesus Christ. Then any promise becomes operative in us if we but "receive" it. Heb. 11:17 gives the interesting information that before Abraham had offered Isaac he "had received the promises."

This time of depression is the trying of faith for Christians generally and for very many of our own Brethren people, but God is giving sufficient and persuasive evidences to inspire the Church to go from faith to faith, from glory to glory. It is encouraging that in the face of so much that is naturally discouraging so great a content of faith is shown in the brotherhood; that God is blessing us in raising up leaders for such a time as this. The present depression should increase faith giving added opportunities and occasions to lean hard on God as times considered more favorable do not. Our faith as God's believing children needs to be tried. We can profit by a period of depression and trial. It is for faith to soar above depression, and God leaves us without excuse for not trusting him.

David said, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" "I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." We endure "as seeing him who is invisible." What is there to be afraid of anyway? "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord. His heart is established, he shall not be afraid." Not afraid of poverty, ill health, old age; of robbers, murderers, the enemy; of storms, earthquakes, pestilences; neither death and the grave for through Christ they have lost their sting and victory; we need not fear the present, for Christ is still "Immanuel"; nor the future, for Christ goes before the Light on our pathway. But we should fear "lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you (us) should seem to come short of it." There remaineth a rest for us, let us labor to enter into it; and fear also that we be not without spot and blemish at his coming. "What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee." "Have faith in God."

Limestone, Tennessee.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

COST OF EDUCATION IN THE UNITED STATES

Public education in the United States costs the voting population but 10 cents a day per capita, E. M. Foster, chief, division of statistics, Federal Office of Education, stated May 13 in announcing that the expenditure has reached $2,656,420,316 annually, according to latest statistics.

Approximately $3,500,000,000 was received by all types of schools, public and private, in 1930, the year for which latest composite statistics are available. Of this amount 82 percent went to publicly supported schools, he said. Total expenditures of public and private schools were $3,234,638,567. Publicly supported institutions expended 2,656,420,316 while privately supported institutions spent $578,218,251.

Of every dollar collected by colleges, the Federal Government furnished less than 1 cent, State governments furnished 17 cents, county governments 7 cents, and cities and school districts 54 cents. The remaining 21 cents were derived from tuition fees, gifts, and other nontaxed sources.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

METHODISTS ELIMINATE THREE EPISCOPAL AREAS

Three episcopal areas of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America and four abroad were eliminated May 12 by the General Conference in session in Atlantic City. After three hours of spirited debate the delegates approved the recommendation of the commission on episcopacy that the Buffalo, Indianapolis and Helena, Montana, areas be merged with surrounding Episcopal residences. Foreign areas dropped were Paris, France; Seoul, Korea; Calcutta and Pekin. The Paris area will be merged with that of Zurich, Switzerland.

The action was motivated by economy and its proponents announced it would save the church $100,000 a year. A desperate effort was made to save the Buffalo and Indianapolis areas, and it was about these two divisions of the church, each of them among the largest in the country, that the discussion centered.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

Religion Served by Secular Journals

(Continued from page 4)

the word of an unbeliever, for this fact. The sermons, the articles, the soul-searching criticism of dozens of more liberal clergymen and laymen testify to its truth. Perhaps to the unbeliever will go the credit for eventually Christianizing the Christian Church."

Does Mrs. Symes know absolutely nothing of the historic social movements in the Christian Church? Can anyone imagine Maurice and Kingsley, and their followers through the past century, being moved to their great social insights and practice merely to prove something to the radical agitator or atheist or skeptic? Can anyone picture such fear in the heart of Bishop Charles Williams of Michigan?

There is much in Mrs. Symes' article which needs to be said over and over again. We hold no brief for the Church where it has failed. But others have said it with far greater discrimination and with far more adequate knowledge of the subject. Not a little of it has been and is being said in religious journals.

This illustrates only one of the points of superiority of the religious journal over the secular journal as a disseminator of reliable religious truth. But it should be convincing to those who wish to be correct. For dependable religious information read a religious journal rather than a secular journal, and choose a religious paper that knows and clings to the Word of God, the one source of all knowledge of revealed religion.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

II Chronicles

Lord Byron, whose life on the earth is comparable in certain respects to that of the minor wicked kings of Israel during the last days of her glory, wrote a few "Hebrew Melodies" commemorating some of the events prior to the Captivity.

Certainly everyone knows that Byron is at his best when his pen is set to the portrayal of Old Testament stories. His lyrical poems fairly scintillate with movement and beauty. Note his most famous rendition of "The Destruction of Sennacherib" which took place under regal sway of the godly Hezekiah.

"The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold;
And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea,
When the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee.

Like the leaves of the forest when Summer is green,
The host with their banners at sunset are seen;
Like the leaves of the forest when Autumn hath blown,
That host on the morrow lay wither'd and strown.

For the Angel of Death spread his wings on the blast,
And breathed in the face of the foe as he pass'd:
And the eyes of the sleepers waxed deadly and chill,
And their hearts but once heav'd, and forever grew still!"

But such a supernatural deliverance was not to last long, for the intolerable Manasseh was to be the next monarch. Second Chronicles relates how all of the kings behaved—the sheep and the goats alike appear in almost regular succession. The reign of Manasseh, (not a man, but an ass, eh?), son of the good Hezekiah, witnessed an undoing of all that his father had done. He felt like another king, Louis XV, who infallibly remarked with no small tincture of cynicism on one occasion, "After us the deluge." Well, it came, and with crashing force, and the grief of the Jews may well be imagined as they remembered Zion in pagan Babylon.

"By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down
Yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion." Ps. 137:1.

Richard Crashaw, little known, but none the less a good poet, caught the tragedy of Second Chronicles when he wrote:

"On the proud banks of great Euphrates' flood,
There we sate, and there we wept:
Our harps, that now no music understood,
Nodding on the willows, slept,
While unhappy, captivated, we,
Lovely Zion, thought on thee."

If America does not quit the damnable business of substituting "America First" for "In God We Trust," as her national motto, we may some day be sitting by the pagan-controlled Mississippi with our violins, if we have any then, resting in crabapple trees. We may be eating the royal fruit thereof, too. What shall keep us from the fate of the nations? Are we now remembering Zion?

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Probably Ezra.
2. When and Where Written. During the latter part of the Captivity, probably in or near captive territory.
3. To Whom Written. To Israel and Judah.
4. Authenticity. A Chronicle of the pre and post-captivity history. Very authentic and reliable.

II. OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Exploits of Solomon. 1-9.
2. The Kings of Judah. 10-36.

III. THE CONTENTS OF THE BOOK

Second Chronicles is a direct continuation of First Chronicles. Solomon's reign, with his biography and exploits, is presented. Rehoboam, Abijah and Asa, and Jehoshaphat are mentioned in their respective order. Kings from Jeroham to Hezekiah, being Jehoram, Ahaziah, Joash, Amaziah, Uzziah, Jothan and Ahaz, and Hezekiah are given, together with brief accounts of their kingships; Manasseh and Amon, Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah follow. The book is concluded with the proclamation of Cryus and the sun arises once more, after the long night of captivity, upon a chastened Jewish people.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. House of God. 2 Chron. 6:18.
2. Key Verses. 1:1; 6:40-42.
3. Key Chapters. 6 and 32.
4. Key Ideas. The Temple Built and Abandoned.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

Second Chronicles has a warning for the day of prosperity as well as for the day of adversity. Formalism in religion and its accompanying rationalism are destructive to national life. A true rationalism and a lifelike formalism would have prevented Israel from decay. However Solomon, the sun, went down and the stars, the lesser lights, came out. And God led the sinful nation into captivity. So with us all, if we forget him.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Some day the Christ of the Ages will come anew into his rebuilt Temple. Habakkuk (2:20) reveals that day as one in which the Lord will be "in his holy temple" and the earth will "keep silence before him." Christ will be greater than Solomon or the minor Judean kings. Then the Temple will resound with peans of praise and the King shall come in.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE LESSON

1. Heredity. Hear Thomas Fuller say quaintly:

"Rehoboam begat Abiam; that is, a bad father begat a bad son. Abiam begat Asa; that is, a bad father begat a good son. Asa begat Jehoshaphat; that is, a good father a good son. Jehoshaphat begat Joram; that is, a good father a bad son. My father's piety cannot be entailed; that is bad news for me. Impiety is not always hereditary; that is good news for my son."

2. Environment. "If there is no Bible, where is your textbook of morals? There is the supreme difficulty. We must teach morals and there is no textbook or standard in the world if we take the Bible away."

When moral standards are improved, character will blossom forth in all of its beauty and strength, and society will prosper. Lower the moral standards, put your trust in the gods of steel and iron rather than in the God of Righteousness and Truth, and individuals, cities, and nations are doomed,

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

Heb. 12:25,—"See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall we not escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven." Moffatt says, "See that you do not refuse to listen to his voice. For if they failed to escape, who refused to listen to their instructor upon the earth, much less shall we, if we discard him who speaks from heaven." The lightning which played around the summit of Mt. Sinai, and the thunder which rolled down its sides, created a scene in the mind of the average Hebrew, which secured immediate attention whenever mention was made of it. For who does not know of that wonderful scene which occurred at the "giving of the Law"? And so terrible was the sight that Moses said, "I exceedingly fear and quake." Moffatt puts it thus: "Indeed, so awful was the sight that Moses said, I am terrified and aghast." It has ever been thus with God. Underneath all national strife, and all human commotion is the power of God working out his own wise designs and beneficent purposes.

It has been said that God constructs the machinery of events somewhat as we construct clocks. All the axles and pinions and pulleys and powers are packed in behind the dial. We can see the pendulum swing, and at times we may hear "tick-tock", and occasionally the striking of the bell. However we seldom think of this as the constant pulling and working of the invisible power. And so it is in the dispensation of God. The pendulum of God's providence is constantly swinging into view. The quiet ticking of divine movement has been heard at intervals between panics and great wars as the noisy nations have been hushed into silent waiting on God. And now and then, as by the coming of a new era, the gong has been heard to strike. Pentecost was an event like this. The strike was heard again when by edict of Rome, Christianity was adopted as the religion of the empire. The clock struck again as the terrible War of Secession burst upon the Nation. No wonder after recounting the scenes of Sinai, the writer of Hebrews warns humanity by saying,

"See that ye refuse not him that speaketh."

"I know the hand that is guiding me

Through the shadow to the light;

And I know that all betiding me

Is meted out aright.

I know that the thorny path I tread

Is ruled by a golden line;

And I know that the darker life's tangled thread,

The richer the design."

When "a certain rich man" of Luke 16, was finally interested in the eternal destiny of his soul sufficiently to become interested in the destiny of other souls, and requested that Lazarus be sent back to the earth on a warning expedition that his five brethren should not "come into this place of torment", the answer was, "They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them." God asks to be heard. It goes without saying, almost, that the Father is able to make himself understood. A message from God addressed to his children in such a form that it would not be understood is unthinkable. What is a revelation for but to reveal? To hear God speak through his Son, and to have the assurance that the apostles spoke as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance, (1 Pet. 1:12) gives us the assurance of his constant presence. Think of the exalted honor of being on such terms with God as not only to hold sweet communion with him, but to hold on to him when we can not see and know the end he has in view for us, and so implicitly trust him.

"See that ye refuse not him that speaketh." To be loyal to Christ and disloyal to his word is preposterous. It is simply out of the question. "To proclaim the Lordship of Jesus and to repudiate the word by which alone that Lordship can be established is a manifest absurdity." The supremacy of Jesus involves the integrity of his word. To extol the beautiful life of Jesus and sneer at what he says is the rankest kind of infidelity. There is such a thing as "poetic justice" in the providence of God, and the men who play fast and loose with the Great Son of God, may rest assured that the returns are not all in with any of us. It pays to ask, "Which side is God on?"

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.

MAGAZINE SECTION
M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

A Practical Plan for Personal Bible Study

By Marion McH. Hull, M.Sc., Md.

(Continued from last week)

Threads of Truth to Follow Further

13. Topics Suggested for Future Study.—In studying any chapter a great many things will come up which would take you too far afield if you studied them thoroughly then. Make a note of them to be taken up at some future time for further and more detailed study. For example, in Acts 1 you would like to know more about the Holy Spirit, and the Second Coming of Christ, and the subsequent history of Mathias and of the eleven; you would like to study the appearances of the Lord Jesus after his resurrection; but if you studied all of these in detail now you would get too far away from the study of the Book of Acts, which is your major interest just then. So note them, and as you study further make notes here and there, on separate pages of your notebook of passages that bear on them. Before you have finished the Book of Acts, you will have gathered a vast amount of material on the line of these topics. Your knowledge will be cumulative.

14. Condensation.—You have now read your chapter at least thirteen times; you know something of its contents. Close your Bible, and write the contents in as few words as possible. For example, Genesis 1: In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. But some catastrophe occurred through which the earth (not the heavens) became a desolation and chaotic. The chapter records how God brought order out of chaos in six "days"; the crowning act of creation being man in his own image, to whom he gave dominion over everything, and an order to replenish the earth. Then God rested from his creative work.

Here the main facts of the chapter are briefly stated in your own words. Try to avoid quotation as much as possible here.

15. Analysis.—Make an analysis of the chapter. For example, Psalm 1:

1-3—The happy man and his doings.

4-6—The ungodly man and his destiny.

16. Verse Study.—In this study of your chapter ponder prayerfully every word and phrase, and try to understand its primary meaning; then the lessons to be drawn from it. I have studied as long as two weeks on one verse. Do not hurry here. It does not matter how long you stay in one chapter; you do not have to finish the Bible in one year, or even in one lifetime! Take time; think; pray; appropriate.

Let us illustrate this by the One Hundred and Seventeenth Psalm, which is the shortest chapter in the Bible, and incidentally, the middle chapter of the Bible.

"Praise the Lord"—Hallelujah—Hallelujah, the great name of God. The Psalm begins and ends with this same doxology. Do we say and mean Hallelujah as much as we should?

"All ye nations." Why is the Psalmist, a Hebrew, calling upon all nations, the hated and looked-down-upon-heathen, to praise Jehovah? "Praise him, all ye people" is not repetition, but the poetic parallelism of the Hebrew. Paul quotes this verse in Romans 15:11 (note the variation in the translation) to prove that God's love and grace were not to be limited to the Jewish race, but are for all peoples. But what is the occasion for all nations and all the people to praise Jehovah? It is stated in the next sentence. There are two reasons:

"For his merciful kindness is great toward us"—this is the first reason: God's marvelous grace toward Israel. From Egypt until now Israel has done everything that would arouse God's anger—idolatry, apostasy, rejection of his prophets, demanding the crucifixion of his Anointed; and they will in the future accept the Antichrist as their Messiah when he is manifested! But God has never given them up. He forgave them again and again, and will even yet forgive them when they turn to him in repentance. "His merciful kindness is great toward us." "And the truth of the Lord endureth forever"—this is the second reason: he made Israel certain promises; he will keep them. His grace toward them is because of his enduring-forever-truth! He will forgive them because his word is true; because he promised them certain things. He will keep these promises, even if it requires such tremendous grace to do so!

"Hallelu-JAH." No wonder the Psalmist begins and ends with this doxology, as he thinks of God's grace and of God's faithfulness!

17. Personal Result.—Never finish your study of any chapter until you have read it over again and determined two things: first, what has it taught you about God, about

Christ, the manifestation of God? and, second, what application are you going to make to your own heart as the result of your study?

For example, take this short Psalm we have just been considering. What a marvelous God he is, the God of all grace! "The Word became flesh and tabernacled among us...full of grace and truth" (John 1:14) is the Holy Spirit's commentary on Psalm 117.

Since such grace, founded on absolute and unchanging truth, is for all people, it is also for me! Oh, thou lovely Lord Jesus, help me so to live as to make my life as well as my lips a constant, never-ending hallelujah!

Such is this simple plan of Bible Study. We have not taken a single chapter and used it here for illustration, as might have been done, but have drawn from various portions of the Word of God to show that the plan is applicable to all portions of it. Perhaps you have a better plan; then do not change it. But if you have no other plan, will you not try this one? We are sure a great blessing awaits you.—Sunday School Times.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
with
Thoburn C. Lyon

JACOB THE AGED FATHER

(Lesson for June 19)

Lesson Text: Gen. 46:1-7, 28-30; 47:7;
Golden Text: Exodus 20:12

(There being no paper published next week, we are printing two installments of the Devotional Program this week—EDITOR.)

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Providing for the Aged Father. Gen. 46:1-7

What a satisfaction it must have been to Jacob to ride along in the wagon Joseph had sent for him—his favorite son Joseph, whom he had thought dead but now found alive and tenderly caring for him! But greater even than Joseph's care for his aged father was God's care for him. What blessed assurance to know that even down in Egypt the God of his fathers would be with him and bless him. He will be with us too, wherever we may go, if we only ask it.

TUESDAY

Honoring the Aged Father. Gen. 47:7-12

Just as Joseph was glad to honor his father before Pharaoh, although the Law, commanding such honor (Ex. 20:12), had not yet been given, so does the true Christian delight to keep all the laws of God, even though he is not aware that God has laid down such a law. Jacob blessing Pharaoh brings to mind the fact that as Christians we are commanded to pray for our rulers, and for all that are in authority (1 Tim. 2:2); let us not fail in this. Our lives and liberties are more dependent upon our earthly rulers than we sometimes realize.

WEDNESDAY

A Loyal Daughter. Ruth 1:15-22

Naomi was no longer young (v. 12), and Ruth's loyalty to her has proved an inspiration through all the ages since. It cost Ruth something—the breaking away from her own land, from her own people, and from

BARGAINS

There are no bargains

In the counter sales of life.

We think so, but some unexpected way

We find our purchase

Is a worn and shoddy thing;

So, after all, in that "long last" we pay.

Experience

That comes at prices all too high,

Is packed so often in the waste of tears;

But, when unwrapped,

It will intrinsic value show;

Its worth will not diminish with the years.

There are no bargains

In the counter sales of life,

But time, alone, can teach us how to choose;

Can show us that

What seemed a loss is really gain,

And where we bought for little, we shall lose.

—NAN TERRELL REED IN NEW YORK TIMES.

her own gods. It has always seemed to me that in that last phrase of v. 16 we have the whole explanation: it was because Ruth had learned to know of the true God from her husband and from her mother-in-law that she was unwilling to fall back into the old life and to worship the old gods. Instead, she would worship Jehovah and keep his law, honoring with filial love her husband's mother. If we could teach our children the love of God, we need not fear that they will prove thankless or untrue.

THURSDAY

Heeding Parental Instruction. Prov. 1:7-19

The true parent will, of course, do all that he can to rightly instruct his child and keep him from the way of sin. There are wayward children who do not heed the teachings of their parents until after they have learned the wages of sin for themselves, but those who do honor their parents and follow their teachings find that they are not only an ornament of grace but real chains that hold them to the paths of peace and blessing. Let us pray for more earnest Christian parents and that more children may heed their instructions.

FRIDAY

Caring for Parents. 1 Tim. 5:1-8

The early church took care of its widows, yet Paul writes that if a widow had children her children were expected to take care of her. He further makes it plain that when her children do so care for her it is not as though they did some great thing; rather, it is only their reasonable service, such as even the heathen may render. Let us pray that as individuals and as a people we may not fail to provide for those of our own households.

SATURDAY

Children and Parents. Eph. 6:1-9

Perhaps it was the manifest love and favor of his father that had so endeared Jacob to Joseph. If as a boy he had experienced constant nagging and scolding he might not have felt the same love and respect. So here we find the command that we honor our parents, but the parents are enjoined to so live that their children can conscientiously honor them. Let us pray that this may be the case in every Christian home, at least.

SUNDAY

Honoring the Heavenly Father. Luke 2:41-52

The question of Jesus' mother (v. 48), plainly shows that they felt that he had not shown them proper respect; certainly most of us would have been annoyed at a three-day delay in returning home. However, our children can pay us no greater honor than to strive to honor the heavenly Father. If we would best honor our parents, let us honor our Father in heaven. Let us also teach others of him, that they may honor him also.

WHAT WE HAVE LEARNED FROM GENESIS

(Lesson for June 26)

Golden Text: Rom. 8:28

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

In the Beginning God. Gen. 1:1-5, 26-31

"In the beginning a fortuitous concourse of atoms"—no, praise God, it does not read that way! It was with deliberate purpose that God, in the beginning, created the heaven and the earth. Neither was it by afterthought that he decided to create man: the creation of the universe was but the first step in readiness for the creation of man. From the beginning he knew that he would create man, that man would sin, and that he would give his own Son for man's redemption (Rev. 13:8; Acts 2:23). The purpose of it all seems to be that he might have children, friends, to be joint heirs of creation with his only begotten Son Jesus. How we ought to love and serve him for his so great love!

TUESDAY

Abram the Servant. Gen. 12:1-9

There is but little distinction between being a servant and being faithful. God called Abram to a large task and a hard one, and Abram the servant undertook the task. With his little family he went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan he went—the determined success of a faithful servant. His service was not all of the menial sort, but everywhere he went he honored God with the service of worship. If we are faithful servants we are heirs to all these wonderful promises God gave to Abram (Gal. 4:28).

WEDNESDAY

Isaac the Peace-Lover. Gen. 26:12-25

God had given this land to Abraham; the wells had been dug by Abraham, and they were therefore rightfully his. Isaac had become very great, with many servants, and might have contended successfully with the Philistines, but he had not so learned of his father. Because he was true to the principles of his father, God brought him greater prosperity, peace, and blessing. There are likewise many things in the world today, many things in the family and in the church, which we may rightfully claim as our own; perhaps we might even be able to contend for them successfully—but we have not so learned of our Father which is in heaven. His promise to us today is still that the peace-lovers, in his own good time and way, shall yet inherit the earth.

THURSDAY

Jacob the Worshipper. Gen. 28:10-17

To Jacob, with the memory of his deceitful sin fresh in his mind, the thought that he was in the presence of God was terrifying indeed; but reverence, mingled with fear and remorse, brought him to his knees. We are told that the "fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," and with Jacob it was the beginning. With our sins forgiven, God has given us promises as rich as any he ever gave Jacob. Do we have the courage to make the vow that Jacob made in verses 20-22 of this same chapter?

FRIDAY

Joseph the Dreamer. Gen. 37:1-11

God had revealed his plan to Joseph, and when Joseph in turn revealed it to his brethren it brought him much suffering. However, in his own good time God brought about his plan according to the promise. Just so, God has revealed his will to us and has commissioned us to make known his will among our brethren. To do so may bring us suffering, but God will certainly bring his will to pass, and the loss will be ours if we have not proved faithful.

SATURDAY

Judah the Brother. Gen. 44:18-34

Judah was instrumental in saving Joseph's life, and later proved a true brother indeed to Benjamin. It was of the line of Judah that Jesus, the "Lion of the tribe of Judah," was later born, and we well know what a true Brother he has proved to all mankind. Read vs. 33-34 as though Jesus were speaking them, and see how full of meaning they become. How disappointed God will be if we fail to bring his children along home with us!

SUNDAY

Heroes of Faith. Heb. 11:4-22

There is a wonderful inspiration and challenge each time we read this chapter and the opening verses of the next. This line of heroes did not end with "Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," but has extended down through the ages, through such as those referred to in vs. 36-37, through Gribble and Allen Bennett, through Yoder and many others, to us. Shall it cease as it reaches us? Or will we accept the challenge of Hebrews 12, and cast our lot with this long line of heroes?

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK  C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio
--	---	--

Hints for the Social Committee

Motto: "Every minute of every social carefully planned."

Outline of a Year's Social Activities

September, A Get-Acquainted Social

This may take the form of a college track meet.

October, A Halloween Party

No year's program is complete without the time-honored tricks and thrills of a well-planned Halloween party.

A discovery or Columbus social may be used earlier in the month if the September social is omitted.

November, An Old Home Week Social
Old-fashioned costumes are effective. An old-fashioned spelling-bee furnishes a great deal of fun. Invite the older church people. Serve as refreshments individual pumpkin pies or gingerbread and whipped cream with hot cocoa.

December, a Christmas Party

Give a good Santa Claus party to the Junior or primary youngsters. If the party is held for the society members only, ask each one to bring a ten cent toy for the Christmas tree. After the fun is over send these toys to a children's home.

Carol singing with an old-fashioned oyster stew party afterward shows a good Christmas spirit.

January, a Calendar Social

Divide the guests into the months of the year, depending on the date of the birthday. Give the folks in each month's group an appropriate stunt to do for that month. Give each group some suitably colored crepe paper, and allow ten minutes for decorating appropriately. Thus those in May might fashion a May pole or those in June arrange a wedding, etc.

February, a Valentine Night

Christian Endeavorers love valentine parties; so plan to include all the "fixin's."

March, a Church Stunt Night

Ask each society and each class in a department above the Junior age to prepare a stunt, allowing ten minutes for each stunt. A slight admission charge may be made if desired, but make the night a grand reunion for the whole church to promote friendliness.

April, a Basket Social for Conference Delegates

Get if possible a machine which will show on the screen all snapshots or photographs.

Ask each guest to bring pictures of himself and perhaps humorous snaps of the family. Every one likes to see himself on the screen. After this fun show the regular conference slides; then auction off the baskets in the old-fashioned way.

May, a Fellowship Social

Dress up to represent different countries, and play some of the games of these countries. An airplane social always gives entertainment, visiting the countries via the air. If possible, invite some foreigners in your community to this occasion or give this social at some nearby mission. Details on an airplane social will be sent on request.

June, a Fun Hike

A fun hike to some point of interest with a ball game and races, not forgetting a lunch period, is always enjoyable in June. For money raising, a strawberry festival on the church lawn or at the home of some individual is appropriate for this time of year. —C. E. World.

"Red Russia's" Red Crimes

And in her was found the blood of ... saints. Rev. 18:24.

To write up all the crimes of the Russian regime would occupy more space than men would find time to read, but her latest is the massacre on the Dniester, where refugees have been killed constantly. Responsible correspondents say three killings a day result, lately some 1,009 victims, 41 children, 212 women, and 756 men. The river is 200 yards wide, but separates the civilization of Roumania and the barbarism of Russia. In the summer refugees who do not like Russia swim across, and in winter walk across the frozen ice. Hospitals are needed on this border for those wounded and bitten by dogs in charge of the Red soldiers. The London Daily Express vouches for these facts by its own correspondent:

Not daring to trust neighbors with their secret, they come singly or in family groups, but rarely in large parties.

During anxious days and nights they lie concealed in the woods on the Russian bank, waiting for a favorable opportunity to make a dash for it over the melting ice.

At this time of the year [winter] they pray for snow-storms, for dark nights, and rain, when the search-lights of watchful guards are blinded by mist.

The guards, specially selected veterans of the Red Army, pitiless, unscrupulous men of steel, and bloodhounds, are trained to search for hiding families.

When the hounds, which are kept hungry to make them keen, break the silence of some pitch-dark night, the Roumanian outposts grip their rifles in fear for fugitive peasants.

Soon the black figures, isolated in the glare of powerful search-lights, run out over the ice, then women and children pursued by bellowing dogs. Machine-guns rattle, and the black figures fall—some lying still, others painfully creeping with broken limbs toward the safety of the Roumanian shore.

Children fall from the arms of wounded mothers and freeze to death.

And when the machine guns are silent, lean wolves venture on the ice in search of human prey.

Visit the hospitals of Tigheina, and you will hear cruel stories of tragedy, stories to freeze your bones.

Two classes of writers and speakers tell about Russia, the one class made up of those who actually saw Russia as it is, and the other class made up of those who saw it as the Bolsheviks show it to them. Note the latter kind, according to the Evangelical Christian:

Maurice Hindus, famous interpreter of Russia through his writings, best known of which is "Humanity Uprooted," spoke to a huge audience from the pulpit of a large Baptist church in Toronto a few days ago. His address was a eulogy of youth, particularly of the youth of Russia, which he declared was "marching on." Of the religious beliefs of the nation the speaker said that "the younger generation in Russia is hilariously atheistic."

Mr. Hindus was optimistic of the future of Russia because of the attitude of youth there today. His optimism to us, however, seems to be based upon a misreading of the facts of history and God's dealings with men. A nation of atheists is a nation whose doom is already written upon the wall. It is always an amazing thing to us how much speakers in their views of the future of the

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.,
Long Beach, California

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

MISSIONS

West African Folk Stories

By Mrs. Orville D. Jobson

(Fifth of a series of African Folk Stories collected and selected by Mrs. Orville D. Jobson, missionary to French Equatorial Africa, and published at intervals in The Evangelist.—Editor.)

HONORABLE MINU

It happened one day that a poor man had to travel from his own village to Accra—one of the big towns on the coast. This man could only speak the language of his own village—which was not understood by the men of the town. As he approached Accra he met a great herd of cows. He was surprised at the number of them, and wondered to whom they could belong. Seeing a man with them he asked him, "To whom do these cows belong?" The man did not know the language of this man, so he replied, "Minu" (which means I do not understand). The traveller, however thought that Minu was the name of the man who owned the cows and exclaimed, "Mr. Minu must be very rich."

He then entered the town. Very soon he saw a fine large building, and wondered to whom it might belong. The man he asked could not understand his question, so he also answered "Minu." "Dear me!" cried the man, "What a rich fellow Mr. Minu must be!"

Coming to a still finer building with beautiful gardens round it, he again asked the owner's name. Again came the answer, "Minu." "How wealthy Mr. Minu is!" said our wondering traveler.

Next he came to the beach. There he saw a magnificent steamer being loaded in the harbor. He was surprised at the great cargo which was being put on board and inquired of a bystander, "To whom does this fine vessel belong?" "Minu," replied the man. "To the honorable Minu also! He is the richest man I ever heard of!" cried the man.

Having finished his business, the man set out for home. As he passed down one of the streets of the town he met men carrying a coffin, and followed by a long procession all dressed in black. He asked the name of the dead person and received the usual reply "Minu." "Poor Mr. Minu!" cried the man. "So he has had to leave all his wealth and beautiful houses and die just as a poor person would do! Well, well—in the future I will be content with my tiny house and little money." And the man went home quite pleased to his own hut.

REVIVAL

- R—responsibility recognized—
- are opportunity embraced—
- received blessings.
- E—very member of your corps by
- very possible means, reaching
- verybody for Christ.
- V—ision of the lost in eternity.
- alue of personal efforts.
- anity of excuses at Judgment.
- I—ntelligent cooperation.
- nterest in all means, and
- ndividual work with individuals.
- V—ariety of experiences told reveal
- irtues in our Christian faith.
- igilance, the price of success.
- A—ll of us can help if we will.
- ll the services are important.
- ll the family for Christ!
- L—eave nothing undone you can do.
- eave nothing to do the last week.
- eave all and follow Jesus now.

human race and the world in which we live completely rule God out of their reckoning as though he had no part in the present scheme of things, and even deny his existence altogether. We do not know whether Mr. Hindus belongs to this latter class or not, and it might be unjust to judge from the brief excerpt of his address given in the press. We have a suspicion, however, that in his philosophy there is little room for God as the Ruler of the universe, or for the Lord Jesus Christ. And any nation, we are just simple-minded enough to believe, that is ruled by atheism, "hilarious" or otherwise, will not stand. The fact of God and the fact of Christ are two things that must be taken cognizance of, and to neglect them is to perish.

Note the report of a Russian couple returning from Russia to Canada; this is a different version—more true to the facts:

A diminutive Russian tailor and his wife have been re-admitted to Canada, disillusioned after a long-awaited return to their native land, where they found only disappointment and lost the savings of a lifetime.

Peter Martinson worked and dreamed for 25 years. He toiled over a steam presser in Montreal. He dreamed of Russia and a happy home-going. Last fall he and his wife withdrew their money from the bank, deciding the amount was sufficient to enable them to return comfortably to their native country.

Their venture had an unhappy ending and Martinson's dream was shattered. His life's savings, changed into rubles, found their way into the Soviet treasury.

The couple spent 35 days in Russia, they said here, and found the land they had pictured was only a memory, that leisure and individuality had given way to rushing industrialism.

They found, too, they said, that Russia had become a country of lines.

"Lines, lines, lines—that's all we saw," Peter Martinson related. "Bread lines, soup lines, milk lines, fuel lines—lines of people waiting for divorces, lines of people waiting for clothes. That's all they have now—just lines."

"And things there are so terrible," Mrs. Martinson interjected. "I saw little babies in the train, crying in their mother's arms, and having black bread fed to them. Black bread—and no milk. They didn't look like little babies at all. They had faces like old people."

The Martinsons saw more of Russia than most visitors in Leningrad—relatives who, they said, live in the shadow of terror and are never sure of what the next day will bring.

"The worst things that have been written about Russia are true," Martinson declared. "We wanted to see what happened to our country. One person wrote one thing, somebody else wrote another. We saw."

The St. Andrew's Society in London became interested in the Martinsons and provided them with funds to reach their former home in Montreal, where the tailor will resume his business.

"I don't know very well the rules of the country," Martinson said. "I change my dollars into rubles, and then, when I go to leave and try to change them back, the rubles are no good. They sell me ticket as far as London for my rubles, and then me and my wife are left with all our money gone."—Christian Monitor.

the lucky ones, as first one there have a choice of the beds, in the dormitory.

After much good natured discussion we were all settled and ready for the bountiful supper served in the dining room. Such a meal as most preachers' families seldom have in the evening but now enjoyed to the utmost.

The program began at 7 o'clock, the president in charge. He brought greetings to us all, in a happy manner that made us feel that it was "good to be there." After a rousing song service the secretary of the Association brought regrets from those who could not be there. Following the devotions we listened to the sermon of the evening.

After a time spent in fellowship together we all retired to sleep and rest till the dawning of another day. One beautiful and enjoyable feature of this conference at Shipshewana each year, after the winter is gone and spring is here, is the visiting with each other. The wives, however, do not usually do much of the talking as the time is fully occupied with some preacher holding the center of attraction. Notwithstanding the old adage that, "women do all the talking."

The next morning we are up bright and early for prayer meeting before breakfast. Such a bountiful breakfast, and such a feeding of the souls on the Bread of Life.

The song service at all of these meetings was fine and at the next service we opened with some good old fashioned singing.

The times of devotion were spiritual times of Bible Study and prayer. This morning was no exception to the rule.

Several subjects of mutual benefit were discussed during the day and much benefit and enjoyment derived from the discussions.

A fine evening service with a well prepared sermon closed the conference for this year.

Some who lived near went home that evening, others stayed till morning.

The happiest time is the meeting of friends On life's uneven journey below.

And so, with new courage we take up the ends

Of the strands we are weaving so slow. We go back to our homes with assurance so true

Knowing he will not leave us to fall

But instead will go with us in all that we do

If we but just answer his call.

ROANN, INDIANA

The Roann Brethren church observed Holy Communion on the evening of May 24th. This was indeed a beautiful service and was well attended. Rev. Maus had charge of the service and was assisted by Mrs. Samuel Anderson. Mrs. Anderson brought a very thoughtful message on the ordinance of feet-washing, emphasizing the importance of the communion service, bringing out the idea of the cleansing power in foot-washing, also touching on the service that is brought about through obedience of this act by loving, living and lifting humanity and humbling ourselves that we may not be as Peter when he said, "Thou shalt never wash my feet." May we ever remember the words of the Master, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."

Our hearts are saddened when we think of the number of church members that allow something to come between them and the communion service. Why not make preparations for this service, and be there?

Mother's Day was observed in a very impressive and beautiful way. Mrs. Edith

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Commencement events have been moving forward according to schedule.

Miss Gertrude Jesson, of Ashland, gave her graduate recital in Piano. Miss Berkeiser, of Indiana, Miss Webster, of Ashland, Miss Steele of Ashland, and Miss Hopes, of Ashland, gave their graduating recitals in Public Speaking.

Miss Neff, of Ashland, gave her recital in Voice. The attendance was good and the programs excellent. The special departments are of high quality.

The Baccalaureate service was well attended. The writer of these notes spoke upon a topic, relating to some changes wrought by the advent of Jesus. Professor Haun of the department of Physics led in prayer, Professor Puterbaugh of the department of Chemistry, read the Scripture, Professor DeLozier pronounced the benediction and Professor McClain gave the invocation. I call attention to the fact that it is a bit unusual to call upon the science and language departments in an arts college to have such parts in public religious exercises.

Dr. Bixler of the Department of History, has just received his book from press, "Anglo-German Imperialism in South Africa, 1880-1900," published by Warrick and York, 181 pages. This is one of the very few books written here which were not published privately, as it is not usual for such books to be written by men from small colleges.

Dr. Caldwell of the Department of Sociology, has had several articles accepted by various publications recently, the Cleveland Plain Dealer giving more than a column to his crime study.

It is to be hoped that the College interests will be represented at all the summer district conferences for all thinking men will agree that we need whatever advantages there may be from education. And what is more, what may appeal to men and women of middle life or past, might not make any appeal to the young people of our church.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

IMPRESSIONS OF A PREACHER'S WIFE AT A MINISTERS' MEETING

By One of Them

We arrived at beautiful Shipshewana Lake one afternoon in May when everything looked as though the picture had been painted purposely for our enjoyment.

The purpose of our gathering was the annual "get together" meeting of the Indiana Brethren Ministers. Several gathered there the first evening and after the usual greetings the first thing in order was the choosing of beds. The first arrivals are usually Bottenger gave an address to the mothers and paid special recognition to the great grandmothers whose four generations are members of the Sunday school. While Mrs. George Giltner sang very softly, "Tell Mother I'll Be There," Helen Mouser and Betty Meyers marched very quietly up the aisle carrying bouquets of red carnations and presented them to the honored great grandmothers, Mrs. Frank Keim and Mrs. Rena Bush. Following this our pastor delivered a fine sermon in keeping with the Mother's Day program.

The four denominations of the town of Roann, sponsored a two weeks Bible School, which closed May 20th. Rev. Sullivan, a Christian minister, superintended the school. The enrollment was about 85. Our own Sunday school had the largest representation of pupils. Their work showed that the teachers were capable of the task that was theirs to do. Rev. Hile, pastor of the M. E. church, had charge of the Junior and Intermediate boys' work. His work with the boys was indeed worthy of much praise.

The Sunday school is progressing very well under the leadership of our faithful superintendent, Mr. George Giltner. The highest attendance in this quarter was 258. The cabinet meets once a month and at the regular monthly meeting in June a banquet will be given the officers, teachers and their families.

Since the last report from this church two more members have been added to the roll. We praise our Heavenly Father for this and pray that many more will make the great decision and take Christ as their personal Savior.

MRS. RAGER
Corresponding Secretary.

REVIVAL AT LINWOOD, MARYLAND

Upon closing the meeting at Summit Mills with Brother Willis Ronk we came direct to Linwood for our next work. Brother Bowman had gone ahead of us and had done everything that he could possibly do to put forth the meeting among those who were unsaved, to acquaint the entire community regarding it, to stir up his own people to pray for it and to in every way making a fitting preparation. He had gone so far as to make arrangements with the Radio station at Harrisburg to broadcast over their system. It was very plain that this dear man had left no stone unturned to make a right preparation for our campaign.

We found Brother Bowman to be a man of God, whose heart was ever-burdened for men who are unsaved. In all of our experiences we have never met a man without an automobile who covered as much territory and called upon so many people and was so widely acquainted as the pastor at Linwood. He is one of the most efficient pastors I have ever known. It was my first privilege to work with him and to enjoy his fellowship and it was a pleasant time indeed that I spent laboring together with him.

During our stay we made our home with the pastor and his wife and every day there was enjoyable.

Linwood is a church that stands alone in the community. No other churches to contest its field of service and there are scores of men and women who could be reached with a whole gospel if they are prayerfully and persistently sought out. I fear that the impression has been held by some that it is a closed field, overchurched, and nothing can be done. I believe that the contrary is true, that if the members of this church will arise to their opportunities in faithfulness, in Christian living, in prayer, and in seeking others for Christ that the church at Linwood will yet see its greatest day of power and of glory. It is strictly a country church with the characteristic problems found elsewhere. However, it has a beautiful building and an excellent parsonage and a commanding location, which combine to make the position of this church most favorable. I greatly enjoyed my time of service with these people.

I was disappointed as I often am with the lack of interest on the part of many, but my heart rejoiced in the blessings that many testified that they had received. May the Lord bless this people and pastor to his own glory is my prayer.

I formed acquaintance with a number of as fine people as are to be found in the Brethren Church anywhere and I hope to long cherish the memory of their fellowship. My prayers shall always be that these people shall please God in all things.

R. PAUL MILLER.

LINWOOD, MARYLAND

The Linwood revival conducted by Brother R. Paul Miller of Berne, Indiana, is now a matter of history. The first part of our meeting was very greatly hindered by a continuous downpour of rain, and so of course our crowds were not so good. By-roads were in an impassable condition. The people here in Maryland do believe in water but not by sprinkling or pouring. Finally the weather cleared and the crowds increased and interest grew. The interest was at its height when the meeting closed. Brother Miller's sermons were of a high order and of a didactic nature. As a personal worker he is bold and fearless. As a direct result of his labors among us there were seventeen or eighteen confessions. Among this number there were a few reconsecrations but mostly those who had come to renounce sin and accept Christ as their Savior.

This number may not seem so large to those who are unacquainted with the work and the people and conditions here. To those of us who know it is a great victory and a real revival. Our work is much strengthened and our people stand on a higher plane.

We are deeply grateful to those who were kind enough to remember us in their devotions. We are now getting ready for our district conference and our Daily Vacation Bible school.

J. L. BOWMAN, Pastor.

MT. PLEASANT, PENNSYLVANIA

The Mt. Pleasant church wishes to express their thankfulness for the blessings they are receiving from a resident pastor, Rev. William Gray, who came to us from Highland, Pennsylvania, Brethren church. We also desire to express our thankfulness for those who were instrumental in making it possible for us to have a resident pastor. Rev. Gray preaches one Sunday at Mt. Pleasant church and the following Sunday at Jones Mills about 8 miles from Mt. Pleasant. Our Sunday school has increased about 50% in numbers.

A very fine reception was given for Rev. Gray and his family, which was attended by the members of the church and their friends.

Two very fine addresses were given by a visiting pastor of the Church of the Brethren, Rev. D. Hoover and Rev. Gray. A fine program was rendered, with wonderful music from Prof. Gamble's Orchestra. Refreshments were served and everybody enjoyed themselves.

We finally worked into a revival conducted by Rev. William Gray, and Song Leader, Mr. Chas. Lytle and Mrs. Lytle who assisted him. They were from Masontown Brethren church. They gave us a treat of Gospel Songs, as Rev. Gray expounded Gospel truths. The Choirs played a part in Gospel Singing—the Adult and Junior Choirs. The Junior choir was composed of about 35 voices who sang nightly and certainly drew much interest from their listeners.

There were a number of delegations. Uniontown delegation and pastor, Rev. Clough from the Uniontown church visited us twice and Masontown delegation and Pastor, Rev. Seibert, also paid us a visit. It pleased the Mt. Pleasant church very much to be remembered by sister churches so far away. The result of this evangelistic meeting which was held for three weeks was wonderful; 26 conversions with many to join us later.

On the afternoon of May 29, we held our Baptismal services, after which the Church of the Brethren minister baptized his converts in our baptistry. Their church is not completed, so we very willingly gave them our church for this service.

In the evening our Love Feast and Communion was held and it was a glorious occasion. We pray God's blessing to continue with us and all people everywhere.

VIRGIL MILLER, Secretary.

DR. POLING ANNOUNCES RESULTS OF NATIONAL CAMPAIGN AND HIS RESIGNATION FROM THE CHAIRMANSHIP OF THE ALLIED FORCES FOR PROHIBITION

Hotel Pennsylvania Luncheon, 12:15 P. M., Thursday, June 2

Speaking of the campaign of the Allied Forces for Prohibition, which in the past nine months has reached more than six hundred cities, Dr. Poling said: "Every goal has been reached and the results secured surpass anything that could be foreseen. More than one and one-half millions of men and women have been enrolled by personal signature and more than one thousand local units of voters and Allied Youth have been organized. Millions of pages of free literature have been distributed.

The effect of this campaign has been shown in the primary elections. In the Fort Wayne district where Congressman Hogg was opposed by every newspaper in the city and by the personal campaigning of Col. Stayton, he was renominated by a two to one vote. The same result was secured for Congressman Cooper in Youngstown, South Dakota, wringing wet in the Digest Poll, nominates its dry ticket with a four to one vote. Congressional districts in Pennsylvania where desperate efforts were made to defeat dry representatives gave the same returns; and Ohio, widely accepted as a complete prohibition reversal, gave one hundred thousand more votes for the two dry candidates for governor than were cast for the one wet candidate. Ohio is a glaring example of the failure of dry strategy. If we had run-off primaries in the north, Ohio would be another story. Oregon wet in the recent poll is just about bone dry in the recent primaries. The recent three to one vote against beer in the U. S. Senate reflects the true feeling of the country.

"Great confusion exists in public thinking because 'resubmission' and 'referendum' are used as synonymous terms or in such a way as to confuse the American voter. Drys are accused of being unwilling to allow the opposition to express itself.

"We are opposed to the so-called national referendum. We are opposed to such a referendum because under the Constitution it is now impossible and because such a referendum is repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution. Only by amendment of Article V of the Constitution could such a referendum be made legally binding. We are opposed to the amendment of Article V on any other basis than for general application to the whole Constitution and to all matters that may arise under it. We are opposed to special privilege for liquor. This referendum question should be settled with a clear understanding that once the principle is established it will apply equally to all personal and property rights now guaranteed by the Constitution. The principle once established would substitute immediate mass action for representative government. The issue is not prohibition, but representative government.

"Re-submission' or rather submission of a repeal resolution is another matter. Whatever the opposition may think about the Eighteenth Amendment, the opposition has no case for repeal unless and until the opposition presents its alternative or alternatives. Negation is not enough. But we grant the right of our opponents to present their substitute to the states and to the people—just as the drys presented the Eighteenth Amendment—under the Constitution and within the law. We shall meet their plan, not by suppression, but on merit in the open. I believe that the country is approaching a recording of sentiment along these general lines. This is our challenge to the opposition: 'You are against the Eighteenth Amendment, what do you want? State your alternative! We shall lay no obstacle in your way to bring it constitutionally to the people. If you have the votes to win, you can—win as we won.'

"In spite of the depression, the loyalty of the friends of the Eighteenth Amendment has made possible the balancing of our budget. There is no deficit. Our complete final report will be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

"It is our hope that eventually the unity of the dry forces may be so vitalized that the National Conference or the National Board of Strategy may become our residuary legatee. I shall always work toward this end. In the meantime, continuing leadership will be provided for these local units and for these hundreds of thousands of new recruits.

"Politically, we are non-partisan; but in our constituency we represent all parties and all shades of political opinion. We shall be heard at both national conventions. Our unity is in the simple declaration—'We stand for the Eighteenth Amendment and for Liberty with Law.' The spirit in which we have gone forward to complete this intensive campaign of education, enlistment and organization was stated in our first press releases when we said, 'We want to be better Americans than prohibitionists. We believe in the Eighteenth Amendment because we believe in America on the march. Prohibition is not the only issue. On the Eighteenth Amendment we recognize a deep-seated, honest difference of opinion. To the leadership of the opposition we grant the same moral integrity that we claim for for ourselves.'

"On this platform a new fighting morale has been developed; prohibition defense has tightened; the wet trend has been stopped and we are on the march!"

"As of my statement made to the Executive Committee of the National Temperance Conference on May 20th, 1931 and released to the press on that day, I shall resign as Chairman of the Allied Forces for Prohibition on Monday, June 6th, immediately following the close of the present speaking campaign. I shall continue as a member of the Executive Committee and shall give to the whole program my utmost support. My regular activities, which have of necessity been neglected for ten months, must now engage my primary attention. I believe that an outstanding business man will succeed me."

A TRUE FRIEND

*Have you a friend who'd run a mile
To hear your call or see you smile?
Have you a friend who'd stand by you,
No matter what you'd say or do?
Have you a friend who'd gladly go
With you through fields of ice and snow?
I have a friend who'd die for me
At any time—on land or sea;
He'd run for me or fight or swim—
My dog—my friend—I'm proud of him.
—Our Dumb Animals.*

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

(Continued from page 2)

critical are the people who get their seats for nothing.

Churches have known this peculiar fact for a long time, namely, that the worst kickers are the people who give little or nothing. The people who spread lies and hearsay about a bank are not as a rule those who have their money invested there. Those who invest in a project, material or spiritual, are anxious to see it succeed. They may offer constructive criticism, but are careful not to spread recklessly every evil report. Those who have made no investment do not care; they have nothing to lose.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE POTATO CHILD

You have seen china dolls, rag dolls, unbreakable dolls, celluloid dolls and clothespin dolls. I guess some of you have even seen dolls made from young ears of corn. This story taken from Kindergarten Gems is the story of a little girl and her "potato child."

There was once a poor woman, who did all her own work. She swept the rooms, cooked the breakfast, washed dishes, made the beds, and had so much to do that she had to work from early in the morning until late at night. She had one little daughter, who loved her mother very dearly, and used often to wish she could help her mother with the work. This good little girl's name was Maggie.

One day Maggie's mamma was peeling potatoes for dinner, and as she peeled them she threw the peelings into a little dish. Maggie was too small to help her mamma peel the potatoes, but she tried to help by throwing the peelings out of the dish into a large wooden bucket. Maggie would watch carefully, and just as soon as her mother filled the dish with potato skins, Maggie would empty it into the wooden bucket. Soon the mother had peeled all the potatoes in the basket, then she said: "Maggie, run to the cellar and bring me two or three potatoes in your apron."

Maggie knew the way to the cellar, so she ran quickly down the steps, picking up her apron in her hands, and holding it tightly so it would be ready to hold the potatoes. Maggie's mamma waited and waited, but Maggie did not come with the potatoes. Then the mamma thought, "Perhaps, my poor little girl has fallen down the steps." She ran quickly to the cellar, and what do you think she saw? There was Maggie, sitting quietly in the corner of the cellar on the heap of potatoes. She had something in her arms, which she had wrapped up in her apron, and she was singing softly, as she rocked it to and fro. The mother looked to see what it was the little girl was nursing so tenderly, and she saw that it was a potato that looked something like a baby.

"Sh! sh! Mamma," whispered Maggie, "you will wake up my potato child."

Then the mamma knew why Maggie had stayed so long in the cellar—she was putting the potato child to sleep. She told Maggie she must bring the potato child upstairs, and she and Maggie found some old pieces of white cotton and made the potato child a dress. When night came, Maggie wanted to take the potato child to bed with her, but Mamma said, "No, no, Maggie, you might roll over on it and break its head," so she took some straw and made the potato child a bed of its own, and covered it with an apron. Then little Maggie knelt down and said her prayers, kissed her potato baby, kissed her dear mother, and jumped into her own little bed and was soon fast asleep.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

STATISTICS

One district has sent in a full report. Which district will be the next with a full statistical report? It will depend on pastors and church secretaries. DO IT NOW, PLEASE.

GEORGE E. CONE,
National Statistician.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT AND CHURCH AID

A widespread movement is being started to aid many thousands of churches throughout the country by the distribution of beautiful, sparking "KEEP AND ENFORCE PROHIBITION" metal autotopes for cars.

For complete details address Sandy's, Tribune Building, New York City.

FREMONT, OHIO

Regular spring Communion services Sunday evening, June 19, 1932, at 7:30. A cordial invitation is extended all of like faith.

WM. S. CRICK, Pastor.

NOTICE TO INDIANA PASTORS

On account of the serious illness of Brother Clark, State Statistician, will not every Brethren minister in the state see that their statistical report is sent to Brother Clarke's address, 207 E. Broadway, South Bend, Indiana. It will be impossible for Brother Clark to take care of this work. I am carrying on for him and am calling upon our pastors to help put our state statistical report across. Send it at once, please.

R. F. PORTE, 1214 S. Mich St.,
South Bend, Indiana.

ALL-BRETHREN DAY IN MIAMI VALLEY

Plans have been completed for the Second Annual All-Brethren Day to be held June 19th at the Miami Valley Chautauqua Grounds near Franklin, Ohio. Eight churches in the Valley are cooperating. These include Clayton, Camden, Dayton, Miamisburg, New Lebanon, Pleasant Hill, Washington C. H. and West Alexandria.

Rev. W. I. Duker, pastor of the Brethren church at Elkhart, Indiana and President of the National Sunday School Association, will be one of the speakers of the day. The pastors of the different churches will also have parts in the program. Mr. George Kem of Dayton, Ohio, will be in charge of the program.

The forenoon session will be given over completely to the Sunday school. The teachers are chosen from the various churches. The morning session begins at 9:45. The closing session begins in the afternoon at 2:15. This will be a worship service. There will also be a meeting for the children at the same hour.

There will be an abundance of special music. The Junior Choir of the Dayton church, consisting of seventy voices, will sing. Orchestra, Choirs and special musical numbers will also be given.

A very cordial invitation to all Brethren is given. We hope that there may be many from other parts of the State or from out the state who may be able to help make this day one long to be remembered by Brethren people. Letters or other messages of greetings will be appreciated and recognition of same will be made during the afternoon session. GEORGE C. PONTIUS, Secretary, Miami Valley Brethren Cooperative Committee.

GENERAL CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENT

It is not too early to commence putting on the rouements for our annual conference. Conference this year should find an extra large number of our folks on hand in that it is a special affair. It is to be known as The Semi-Centenary Conference. Fifty years of history are ours and we intend celebrating the event properly. Each day there will be three special addresses by leading men of the church. These addresses are concerning our historical and doctrinal place as a church. It is the expectation of the executive committee that these addresses will be in writing as the speakers have been advised to have them, so that they may be properly compiled and set forth in book form. Maybe in this way we can preserve to posterity things that might otherwise be forgotten, lost or neglected. Owing to the nature of the program there are some necessary shifts to be made in the usual schedule and those in charge of departmental work have been notified to that effect. If there is any misunderstanding write the secretary at once, for the program is now taking shape and will be in the hands of the committee by the middle of June and in the printer's hands a little later. Let us make this a conference long to be remembered. It will be well worth the time and expense for any of our folks to hear the leading addresses of this conference. Many of our young folks should be present so that when the next fifty years have passed there will be some who can relate the events of the semi-centenary. What a difference in the fifty years and what a difference the next fifty will make!

E. L. MILLER,
Secretary Executive Committee,
Maurertown, Virginia.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

MERRICK-GILBERT—On the evening of May 17th at the First Brethren church of Washington, D. C., the writer united in marriage Mr. Robert Lee Merrick and Miss Edna Blanche Gilbert, both of Washington. These young people have for many years been active members of the Brethren church of this city. They will continue to make Washington their home. The groom is the president of the church C. E. society, while the bride is active in C. E. Sunday school and S. M. M. work. A host of friends and admirers join in wishing this happy couple their best wishes for a prosperous and happy life together.

HOMER A. KENT, Pastor.

STONER-EDDY—On March 1, 1932, in the First Brethren church of Manteca, California, Melchior Stoner of Manteca and Myrtle Eddy of Manteca were joined in marriage by the pastor. Mr. Stoner is the efficient and faithful superintendent of the Manteca Brethren Sunday school. The bride is an active member of the church also. The vows were exchanged in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives in a public wedding.

The happy couple have made their home in Manteca. The best wishes for a happy wedded life go with these two from a host of appreciative friends. Mrs. Guss Schmidt presided at the piano.

CALLANDER-STETLER—On Sunday morning, May 15, 1932, George Callander of Manteca and Eva Stetler, also of Manteca, exchanged their nuptial vows in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends in the First Brethren church at 4 o'clock. The marriage was performed by the pastor of the Brethren church. The bride was attended by Miss Fayette Brown, bridesmaid, and Miss Dorothy Stetler, sister of the bride as a maid of honor. The groom was attended by his brother, Harry Callander. The father of the bride gave her away in the ceremony. Mr. Callander is a member of the Methodist church. Mrs. Charles Larson, aunt of the groom played the wedding march. Miss Olive Gribham sang "My Yoke and Burden."

The young people migrated to Wisconsin and will make their home in Sturgeon where the groom is employed. Best wishes from a throng of friends go with them.

J. WESLEY PLATT, Pastor.

IN THE SHADOW

HORNER—Ellas L. Horner, son of Eli and Katherine Mohler Horner was born near Dawson, Fayette Co., Pa., May 26, 1848 and died at Brighton, Ind., May 24, 1932, aged 83 years, 11 months and 24 days.

In the fall of 1896 he came to LaGrange Co., Ind., where he resided until his death.

On March 17th, 1878 he was united in marriage to Sarah Ellen Keaga of Owen Co., Ind. To this union were born four children: Min, John, Harry and Cordia. He enjoyed the friendly associations of four grandchildren, also four brothers: Milton, Irvin, Merton and Charles. Two sisters and five brothers preceded him to the great beyond.

He was an active member of the Brethren church, in fact, he was one of the charter members of that congregation for fifty-five years. He always trusted his Heavenly Father and believed that he was able to keep that which he had committed unto him.

Mourning their loss are the loving companion, the children, the grandchildren, the brothers and a host of friends.

With thee, my Lord, with thee I do not fear
To cross the threshold of the mystic door;
I shall not falter if I find thee near,
For thou hast passed the portals before.
Let me but feel thy hand, thy features see
I shall emerge in happiness with thee.

Funeral services at the Brighton church, May 29th, 1932, by the pastor. C. D. WHITMIR.

GARBER—Mary Etta, wife of Elder A. L. Garber, of the Ashland congregation, passed to be with her Master on April 20, 1932, the day following her seventy-second birthday. Sister Garber was the daughter of Hannah and Henry K. Myers, and had spent her entire life since her seventh year in the city of Ashland. Mrs. Garber was a charter member of the Ashland church, and for many years served as president of the local W. M. S., and retained her interest and devotion to its work until the last. For two years she has been a quiet sufferer, unable to attend the services of her beloved church, but always interested in and inquiring about the progress of the work as the pastor and friends called upon her.

Mary Etta Myers and A. L. Garber were married on May 5, 1887, and for forty-five years she has been a wife and companion to Brother Garber in the vicissitudes of life. To this union five children were born, two of whom died in infancy. She is survived by her husband, Elder A. L. Garber, one son, Ora M., two daughters, Mrs. Ruth B. Lums, at home, and Mrs. Miriam Zercher, six grandchildren and one sister, Mrs. R. Beck, of Long Beach, California.

The funeral services were held at the family home on Tuesday afternoon, May 3. The sermon of the occasion was delivered by her pastor from I Thess. 4:13, 14, while words of appreciation of the life and character of the deceased were brought by Dr. J. Allen Miller who has known the family for many years. The applicability of Dr. Miller's declaration, "He cannot most heartily desire that highest of economies: 'She was a good woman'"—was echoed by the large concourse that met at the home to pay respect to her memory, and by the profusion and beauty of the floral tributes which banked her casket on every side. Burial was made in the Ashland Cemetery beside the graves of her children, there to await the coming of the Lord whom she loved and served. She has left to posterity the example of a life of quiet faithfulness as mother, wife, and church-woman, which they and who knew her soul will emulate. Peace to the ashes and God rest the soul.

DYOLL BELOTE.

LOGAN—Saturday evening, May 7th, at 7:30, Brother Lee Alexander Logan died suddenly at his home at Harrisonburg. In his passing the Brethren church and the community sustained a very real loss.

He was to be characterized as a real friend. He was a man in whom dwelt many noble qualities and virtues. He was a lover of beauty in nature and in the beauties of skill. As a husband and father, none could surpass him in love and devotion. Whenever he was not engaged in his work as contractor and plasterer he was to be found at home where he was a real "pa" to his children, remaining young with the heart of a child. Brother Logan was a kind, genial, and was ever showing kindness with cheerfulness. He loved friendship and delighted in good humor.

He was one who led an active and useful life. He was a member of the official body of the Brethren church, a trustee for 15 years and the Superintendent of the Sunday school for 17 years. To the work of the church he was a very generous giver in time and substance. His wife and his family of eight talented children are members of the church. Brother Logan loved his home, was a man with a heart attack after eating supper and walked into an adjoining room to rest. He died within a few minutes. He had been ill with rheumatism since last December but appeared to be on the road to recovery when stricken with the heart attack.

He was the youngest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Logan, being born and reared near Harrisonburg. Had he lived until June 11th, he would have observed his 60th birthday.

For a number of years, Mr. Logan had been one of the leading local plastering contractors. His eldest son, Dan, was associated with him in the business.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. John A. Logan (Mrs. Lister); eight children—John, of Alexandria; Mrs. P. G. Wenzel and Mrs. Alvin P. Myers, of near Harrisonburg; and Dan, Kathleen, Margaret, Martha Rose, and James at home; and one sister, Mrs. D. E. Hanan, of Dayton, Va.

Funeral services were conducted from the home. The high esteem in which Brother Logan was held was indicated by the great company of people who gathered for the services and by the abundance of floral tributes. The services were conducted by the Rev. J. W. Miller, of the Maurertown Brethren church. The Bridgewater College Male Quartet sang several of Brother Logan's favorite hymns. Interment was made in the Dayton cemetery.

JOHN F. LOCKE.

IN MEMORY OF MISS ANNA LAUGHLIN

In his infinite wisdom our Heavenly Father called from us on March 7, 1932, our beloved teacher, Miss Anna Laughlin. We submit to his will knowing that what he does is best. Miss Laughlin's life was one of unselfish devotion to her Master. In her profession she touched the lives of many who suffered physically and to all such she was a blessing. The Great Teacher was her inspiration and we the members of the Philathea Bible Class are thankful for her teaching. May her noble example inspire us to go forward in his service.

Resolved, That we inscribe upon our minutes this tribute to her memory and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family with the assurance of our deepest sympathy.

Philathea Bible Class.

Committee:
MRS. D. C. SPIELEY, Chairman.
MRS. H. T. SHIBAHRE.
EMMA M. ANDREOSE.

DUNN—Montville E. Dunn was born in Kentucky on September 22, 1858 and departed this life in Fort Scott, Kansas, on May 24, 1932, at the age of 73 years, 8 months and 3 days.

He had resided in this vicinity since the Civil War. He was married to Henriette Ink at Sacramento, Calif., in 1910. The wife is deceased. He is survived by one brother, J. W. Dunn, of Rich Hill, Mo., who has been ill for some time with his nephew, H. J. Davis of Fort Scott, Kan.

Mr. Dunn was of a kindly, retiring disposition and leaves a host of friends to mourn their loss.

Funeral by the Brethren church of God, in Fort Scott, and burial was made in the family lot of the Lath Branch cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

CARLON—The Manteca Brethren church sustained a real loss in the homing of Emma C. Carlon, who was one of the charter members. She was a member of the Lathrop Brethren church prior to the establishment of the Manteca work. She was a rare soul of faithfulness and loyalty to the church which she loved and which held her in high esteem.

Through her generosity with others the Manteca Brethren church had its first financial aid. A widow for many years, Mother Carlon, as she was affectionately known, was survived by an adopted son, Adolph Carlon, a grandson, Maude Carlon, a great-granddaughter, Dorothy Carlon. Her aged sister who has been a very close companion for many years, Nancy J. Salmon, now past 90 years of age is the sole survivor of the large family of 32 persons who flourished in a section of California. Sister Carlon was the eighth child in a family of sixteen children. She was loved and respected by the entire membership of the church. The sympathies of the entire community go out to the bereaved and we commend them to God. Funeral by the pastor. Interment in historic old East Union Cemetery.

J. WESLEY PLATT.

VOL. LIV
Number 25

June 25
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Shipshewana Tabernacle

The Shipshewana Young People's Camp July 17-24, 1932

AMONG THE FACULTY MEMBERS WILL BE

Prof. Alva J. McClain, Bible Expositor.

Dr. Kenneth M. Monroe, Bible Lecturer.

Rev. Sylvester M. Whetstone, Stereopticon Lecturer.

What Prohibition Has Accomplished

1. The Eighteenth Amendment de-legalized the liquor traffic in the United States and destroyed the power of its prestige under Government sanction.

2. The Eighteenth Amendment closed 200,000 saloons with all their wide open doors flaunting allurements to millions of passers-by. Many a saloon of the old days did more business than a hundred speak-easies today.

Liquor Advertising Gone

3. The Eighteenth Amendment abolished liquor advertising in the public press, streets, highways and the mail. The benefit of ending all this high pressure salesmanship is beyond computation. Imagine what liquor advertising would become today with all the added resources of radio, movies and intensive publicity possibilities available.

4. The Eighteenth Amendment afforded all legitimate business and industry a tremendous boon by removing from the field their most unscrupulous and continuous competitor, the licensed and law-protected retail liquor shop.

Liquor Consumption Down 65%

5. The Eighteenth Amendment has reduced drink consumption. Government investigation shows that there has been a drop of 65 per cent in the consumption of liquor since 1920. Most of the money that once went for this great flood of liquor is going into wholesome luxuries, necessities, and savings.

Further evidence as to the drop in liquor consumption is shown in the striking decline in deaths from alcoholism.

Deaths from Alcoholism

Between 1910 and 1919, deaths from alcoholism averaged 4.6 per 100,000 population annually and from 1920 to 1929 the average was 3.1 per 100,000. On this basis, as compared with pre-prohibition years, there was a saving of at least 15,000 lives. Although there was an increase in the rate of such deaths from 1924 to 1927, it was still noticeably below the average for pre-prohibition years, and in 1929 another decline set in.

In this connection it is especially noticeable that between the years 1910 and 1914, which was the most flourishing period of the legalized liquor traffic in the history of America, the average annual alcoholic death rate for those five years reached the high point of 5.32 per 100,000 population. In other words, during these five years, when drinking was legalized under full government protection and regulation, there were no less than 27,270 deaths from alcoholism, which was a more than 58 per cent larger death rate than during the first ten years of the National Prohibition Law.

Auto Deaths Less

The contrast in the frequency of liquor fatalities in auto accidents in America as compared with England, is another significant fact.

In the United States, according to the latest figures, there is one automobile accident fatality for every 917 motor vehicles. In England, Scotland and Wales, there is one fatality for every 365 motor vehicles!

Vital Benefit in Depression

6. The Eighteenth Amendment has proved a cushion and shock absorber of no mean proportions throughout the past twenty-four months of world-wide depression, so far as the United States is concerned. Figure the result if, during the past two years, wide open legalized saloons had been open everywhere as previous to Prohibition. It has saved society from disorder, helped millions in the midst of unemployment and prevented diversion of huge sums that, spent for liquor, would only have added to destitution misery and home demoralization.

Economic Advance Since 1920

7. Facts show that under the Eighteenth Amendment, the economic drag of the once protected liquor evil, . . . the direct and indirect cost of which before 1920 exceeded $5,000,000,000 annually, . . . has been to a very large extent wiped out, national efficiency has marvelously increased, savings have multiplied, and practically every phase of constructive American life benefited.

8. Prohibition has benefited the masses by a direct saving from drink totaling between $15,000,000,000 and $20,000,000,000.

In the first twelve years since 1920, in which Prohibition has been a vital factor:

9. Efficiency of labor has registered a $45,000,000,000 (forty-five billions) increase over the similar period of years just preceding Federal Prohibition.

10. Industry has recorded a gain of more than $200,000,000,000 (two hundred billions) in value of products as compared with the similar period preceding the license era, while

11. American producers have received from industry upwards of $150,000,000,000 (150 billions) more than was their accorded share of the nation's income in the twelve years preceding the Eighteenth Amendment.

Education's Advance

12. In the same way, official facts show that more has been expended for education in the twelve years under National Prohibition than for forty years preceding the adoption of "The Great Protective Amendment."

Enforcement Costs Little

13. Further, official figures reveal that, instead of costing the people of America any such extravagant sum as the "wets" claim, Federal prohibition enforcement, even without considering fines, assessments, etc., which should be credited to the legitimate Government income under the Eighteenth Amendment, has cost the people of the United States less than one half of one cent per capita per month since the Eighteenth Amendment was enacted.

THE PARABLE OF TOBACCO

Rev. W. W. Wilkne, New Goshen, Indiana

Then shall all the kingdom of Satan be likened to a grain of tobacco seed, which, though exceedingly small, being cast into the ground, grew and became a great plant and spread its leaves, rank and broad, so that huge and vile worms formed a habitation thereon. And it came to pass, in the course of time that the sons of men looked upon it, and thought it beautiful to look upon, and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly. So they put forth their hands and did chew thereof.

And it came to pass that those who chewed it became weak and unmanly, and said, "We are enslaved and cannot cease from chewing." And the mouths of all that were enslaved became foul, and they were siezed with a violent spitting, and they did spit even in ladies' parlors, and in the house of the Lord of Hosts, and the saints were greatly plagued thereby. And in the course of time it came also to pass that others snuffed it; and they were taken with fits, and they did sneeze with a great and mighty sneeze, inasmuch that their eyes were filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly.

And yet others cunningly wrought the leaves thereof into rolls, and did set fire to one end thereof, and did suck violently at the other end thereof and did look very grave and calf-like and the smoke of their torment ascended up forever and ever. And the cultivation of this great plant became a great and mighty business on the earth, and the merchantmen waxed rich by the commerce thereof. And it came to pass that the saints defiled themselves therewith. Even the poor, who could not buy shoes, nor bread, nor books for their little ones, spent their money for it. And the Lord was greatly displeased, and said: "Wherefore this waste?" Why do these little ones lack bread, shoes and books? Turn now your fields into corn and wheat, and put this evil far from you, and be separate, and defile not yourselves any more, and I will bless you and cause my face to shine upon you. But with one accord they all exclaimed: "We cannot cease from chewing, snuffing, and puffing. We are slaves."—The Christian Conservator.

The best and sweetest flowers of paradise God gives to his people when they are upon their knees. Prayer is the gate of heaven.—Thomas Brooks.

DEEP SEA FISHING

Peter's readiness to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as the new Captain of his fishing fleet might well suggest to us the importance of a full surrender to his will. You cannot catch deep sea fish by throwing a line from the shore, therefore the command "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draft."

It requires a deep sea experience to catch deep sea fish.

Peter acted in obedience to the Word of the Lord and what a haul of fishes he made. Three thousand on the day of Pentecost when he cast the net for the first time into the deep.

Many of us are like the two drunken men who got into a row boat and rowed all night trying to get to their home across the lake, only to find out in the morning that they had forgotten to cut the rope.—Selected.

IN THIS NUMBER

United Support of Our Denominational Ideals and Interests—Editor, ..	3
The Next War a "Massacre from the Air"—Editor, ..	4
Editorial Review, ..	4
The Attractions of the Rural Pastorate—C. D. Whitmer, ..	5
Invisible Forces of the Material World—Thomas Gibson, ..	7
Significant News and Views, ..	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, ..	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, ..	9
A Big Bible Class Built on the Bible—Julia C. Underwood, ..	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, ..	11
Kindling New Interest in World Missions, ..	12
News from the Field, ..	13, 14
Our Little Readers, ..	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

United Support of Our Denominational Ideals and Interests

Maybe you are not interested in our denominational ideals and interests. If so, that is all the more reason why some one should say what we are about to say. But if you are interested, you will at once recognize the propriety, and possibly the importance, of a discussion of a topic such as is here given. The editor discussed this topic at the recent Ohio Conference, and it was suggested by some who heard us, that we ought to say it again through the pages of The Evangelist. That accounts in part for this transformation of a conference address into an editorial. Of course, a further consideration is our personal belief that there is a real need that something should be said, and said repeatedly, along this line.

There may be plenty of room for disagreement as we go along, but we surely can begin with an acknowledgment of a common interest in the future of our church, and with an agreement that things are not what they ought to be denominationally, and not what we would like to have them be. And we have reference not to unsatisfactory conditions brought on by the ubiquitous depression, but by a lack of denominational strength and vigor, loyalty and aggressiveness in that which is distinctive carried over from times of normalcy. It is in this way that we need improvement, and it is in this way that hope lies. If we are to have a really worth while place in the world, we must win it by a more vigorous promotion of that which is distinctive in our denominational life.

Importance of Denominational Convictions

That leads naturally to the consideration at the outset of the importance of denominational convictions. Conviction—strong conviction—stands at the very forefront of denominational growth. It is no easy task to build new churches and to extend the growth and influence of the denomination these days. And this is so not merely because times are hard, but also because the temper of the age is against denominationalism. Denominationalism is out of cast. Church union is the popular thing. Church union is in the air. Big programs for uniting churches are being proposed, and not a little success has already been achieved. And let it be frankly said that there is need of church union in many quarters, particularly among those denominational groups which are characterized by similar ideals and forms and are closely related in their history. At this point there is to be seen large reason for the uniting of the Dunker groups, and many are praying that God will speed the day when the spiritual descendants of Alexander Mack shall have found their way into the will of God to such an extent that they will be reunited in life and in service.

While we believe in church union to that extent, we do not believe that it is right or reasonable to expect organic union among churches which are swayed by a great conviction that they have a heaven-born responsibility for making a distinctive contribution to the kingdom of God and to the world. Churches which believe they have a distinctive work to do, or a unique contribution to make in the conservation of religious truth, have a right to a separate existence. The Brethren church has such a conviction, at least, it has had it, and has come down through two hundred years of history with it.

It has believed that it was commissioned to do a unique and very much worth while thing, that it was called upon to bear witness to the importance and the necessity of an unwavering faith in the whole Gospel of Christ and to an implicit obedience to all the teachings and practices therein set forth. It has held through the years to the conviction that the Bible alone is the church's creed, its only proper creed, and it has tolerated no abridgement or enlargement to that statement of faith. It has stood for the whole Word, both theoretically and practically. And may God give us the clarity of vision to see the worth of such a plea, and the strength of conviction to stand like a rock for it, present tendencies to the contrary notwithstanding. Let us cherish our religious heritage, and cling to our belief in the Bible alone as an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice, and not throw open the doors either to the rationalism of the so-called modernists or to the accommodating faith of those who proudly but inconsistently call themselves fundamentalists,—they inconsistently claim loyalty who reject portions of the Word.

We must continue to champion both active faith in a full Gospel and full obedience to that Gospel. Whole-hearted loyalty to all the teachings and practices of apostolic Christianity must continue to be our outstanding and distinguishing message. And we must depend on the Word of God to itemize those teachings and to guide us in our faith, and not on any man-written statement, and take that guidance seriously, if we are to do a really unique work in the world. The Bible only is our creed, our rule of faith and practice. We must accept it without reservation or equivocation. We must believe in it and endeavor to practice it, the whole of it from the Sermon on the Mount to the Revelation of St. John.

That is our message, and the reason for our denominational existence. It is reason enough to be proud of, and is worth holding to with all the strength and perseverance of which our faith is capable. It is worth making sacrifices for, that we may enjoy its blessings and continue in its fellowship. In the light of such values one church is not just as good as another. If allegiance to the Whole Gospel is our clear and deep-bedded conviction, then there is no place for us but in the Brethren church, and there should be a large place in our hearts for loyalty to that church. Therein lies the importance of conviction. If we can give to our people and maintain in their minds a clear conception of our peculiar mission as a church and can cause them to be strongly convinced of its great worth to the world and to the Kingdom of God, there is hope for the future of our denomination.

Importance of Propagating our Faith

Having built up strong conviction of the worth of our church, we must bear in mind, in the second place, the importance of propagating our faith. We must set ourselves with all possible zeal and perseverance and wisdom to the impartation of that faith to others. We must not hold it in secret nor cherish it in silence. We must tell it, if the world is to be profited by it,—we must tell it repeatedly and convincingly. There is all too prevalent a tendency to keep quiet about our distinctive teachings, or to be apologetic about their pronouncement. Sometimes we seem to display the timidity of a child when it comes to speaking in behalf of our distinctive doctrines. In many other ways we are bold enough, but when we are faced with the duty or opportunity of presenting some such doctrine as Feet Washing, we seem to be overcome with embarrassment. Ministry and laity alike, we are all too reticent about our distinctive Brethren doctrines. If we showed half the freedom and aggressiveness in speaking our mind about such vital matters as we do in discussing politics or the depression, we would gain a lot more adherents to our faith. But our voice is halting and our mind uncertain and wavering. We lack that positive note and that aggressive spirit that are necessary to win converts to our cause.

Our leaders of the past generation contended earnestly and vigorously for their faith, by speech and by the printed word. We can well afford to take counsel from their example. And that is biblical. The Epistle of Jude admonishes us to "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." Of course, to "contend for the faith" does not mean to be contentious about it, as has all too often been the interpretation, judging by the bad spirit we not infrequently see manifested. But it does mean to stand up for its purity, to defend it, to uphold it, to promote it, to seek to exemplify it. In the pulpit, in the press and in personal contacts, we need more active and vigorous defense of Christian truth, particularly those portions that are commonly neglected or rejected. The pulpit should speak out more boldly and frequently its instruction, in the regular services and in special meetings held for that purpose. More attention should be given to these truths in the Sunday school and in special instruction classes. More pamphlets should be printed and widely distributed, and more instruction booklets placed in the hands of our own people. Our membership should be encouraged to be ready always to give a reason for the faith that is in them, and to regard jealously every opportunity to bear testimony among their neighbors and friends to the blessing of full obedience to a whole Gospel.

(To be continued next week)

The Next War "A Massacre from the Air"

It would seem, in the midst of such a world-wide depression, when hardship and actual suffering everywhere abound and when governments as well as individuals are bankrupt or near to being so, that there would be some real consideration given to economizing at an important place, where economy could be done with the least personal inconvenience and with no public danger, namely, in our war-making departments. The great navy building program is a real waste, yet we go on building and spending to appease the wrath of the god of war and to satisfy the greed of ship builders and armament makers. Let the people suffer and sacrifice in their poverty and lay upon them still heavier burdens of taxation, but we must continue to strengthen and equip the mailed-fist, like a champion prize fighter, in preparation to meet all comers and to defend our claim to superiority.

We have not awakened to our folly. We are still deceiving ourselves with the supposed power and effectiveness of great armaments in time of war. Men of experience are telling us that in the event of another world war, great armies and navies will not count for so much as we anticipate for ultimate victory. There will be little of the citizenry left to take over a victory at the close of the war. It will be a massacre of the people from the air. A consideration of this phase of war ought to make us realize the folly of putting our trust in armaments, even if the economic argument does not affect us.

In a recent issue of Die Eiche, a German quarterly, so we are informed by The Evangelical-Messenger, who quotes from the British Weekly, an ex-officer of the German army, whose duty on the Western front was concerned with defense against gas attacks, wrote a striking article on the question, "Can the Civil Population Be Protected Against Attack from the Air?" and declared that there was no hope of effective protection. Gas masks could not be supplied to every man, woman and child, and they would do no good anyway without a knowledge of how to use them, and a popular knowledge of their use would be practically impossible. Besides, "the mental and moral strain would be so terrible in the event of a gas attack on any great center of population that few people would have coolness to meet the situation." Underground shelters would be impossible because of the enormous expense, and would be ineffective also because a real gas attack would come without warning, and would be accompanied by incendiary bombs and many other weapons of destruction. This German officer believes fifty per cent of the bombing aircraft would reach their goal, and the only hope would be in a war of reprisal, which would mean the wiping out of civilization over the areas involved. Herr Nestler pleads for a "refusal of service" on the part of scientists and chemical experts whose skill is being exploited for the destruction of mankind. Then he adds, "And let those especially beware who are hoping to earn war profits! The next war will certainly leave behind no profiteers."

These are the words of no amateur, but of one who spent four years in the regions of hell. If a man of his understanding bears such testimony to the futility, hopelessness and ravage of war, how great must be the stupidity of those who go on planning for, and putting their confidence in war!

A man, who is fully convinced that a certain course is right, must follow that course no matter what it may cost him.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Prof. and Mrs. Alva J. McClain were in attendance at the South-eastern District Conference which met at Roanoke, Virginia, where Prof. McClain served as special Bible lecturer for the conference. He has not returned as we are going to press, and so his department on page two is supplied with other material.

We are glad to give large space to pictures of Shipshewana Brethren Retreat, the cuts being provided through the kindness of Prof. M. A. Stuckey, educational superintendent of the National Sunday School Association, which is cooperating with the Indiana District Conference in promoting the Young People's Training Camp and Bible Conference. The splendid faculty announced, together with the customary high class of work done and the spirit of "good times" that prevails at the "camp," make it worth while for any of our young people who may find it possible to take advantage of this opportunity.

The church at Buena Vista, Virginia recently enjoyed a successful evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Dr. I. D. Bowman. Brother P. M. Naff is the faithful and aggressive pastor, and is much encouraged over the outlook of this church. A total of twenty-one were added to the membership, eighteen by baptism and three by letter. There were also twenty-two reconsecrations among the members, which will doubtless mean much for increased activity. A total of sixty took a stand for Christ during the meetings, some of which went to other churches. The attendance and interest were throughout the campaign. As Brother Bowman remarks, this church has made a splendid contribution to the leadership of our brotherhood.

We have a report and a picture of a Sunday school class of unusual size and interest for a rural church. The congregation at Brighton, Indiana, has a history of splendid loyalty and activity among its young people, and it is maintaining its record under the faithful ministry of Brother C. D. Whitmer and his capable wife. The teacher of the class is Myron L. Long, and much credit is given him for building up the class from a small unit to fifty in number. We congratulate the class, teacher and pastor on the good work being done, and it is evident that the pastor is not at all discouraged about the future of the country church, as is shown in his excellent article in this issue. It is fitting that these—article and newsletter together with pictures, should appear in the same issue.

Dr. Kenneth M. Monroe was the special Bible lecturer at the recent Ohio District Conference, which met at Bryan, and his service was greatly enjoyed. Plans were made for the observance of the passing of a half century since the organization of the Brethren church at Dayton, Ohio, in 1833. Next year's conference will be held in Dayton, and Dr. Charles A. Bame was elected moderator. Other members of his official family are Rev. C. A. Stewart, vice moderator; Rev. George C. Pontius, secretary-treasurer; and Rev. R. D. Barnard, pastor of the entertaining church. These men will formulate the program that will be in the nature of a Semi-Centennial Celebration. This should be of special interest to the brotherhood because Ohio is the birthplace of the Brethrenism as a separate institution.

President E. E. Jacobs writes of the completion of commencement events and the opening of summer school. It was a successful college year, but financial problems are nevertheless matters of large concern. Notwithstanding the depression, prices for materials and services of which a college stands in need have not come down, and are not likely to do so, but in some instances, as Dr. Jacobs says, they have risen. That means that college support must be continued and adds to the importance of a generous Educational Day offering. And may we suggest, that every church that has not already done so, shall give their people the opportunity to give what they are able to this worthy cause. Summer school had registered an enrollment of 331, the second to the largest in the history of the school, and the outlook for the coming college year is bright.

The Attractions of the Rural Pastorate

By C. D. Whitmer

Our Indian neighbors, down along the river, have a strange custom. They will gather for the "wake" long before the soul of their tribesman has really left his house of clay.

Some of our city neighbors are afflicted with a similar strange inclination. They mourn the decay of the country church when such sorrow is out of season. Certain writers, actually acclaimed as typical for representing American literature, have made it their duty to belittle country and small-town life. According to their authority the small town, the country newspaper, the cross-roads store, together with the little white church are preparing for an early demise. There is no need to mention here the innovations which are credited with sufficient force to kill off rural institutions. Their fears and prophesies are unfounded.

You remember what Jesus did when he entered the house where Jarius' daughter was lying sick unto death? There were many weeping and wailing greatly, but Jesus put them out. The weepers and wailers over the country church cannot be dealt with literally as Jesus did, but figuratively speaking we are looking around for as effective a means to accomplish the same end. As with a corpse, nothing attractive is left when life is gone, so with the current description of the country church. Apparently there is little left to attract the up-and-coming minister of the gospel to spend his talents upon a supposedly passing institution.

What country pastor has not heard some time or other, from within or without, the whisper, "you are burying your talents where you are"? Too often it is thought that the worthwhileness of work in the more densely populated portions of our country is more in keeping with the intelligence a pastor is supposed to possess. It is strange, ministers may be born and reared in the country, yet when it comes to appraising the pastoral work among the active farmers these same men will often give it a rating second to the city or larger town. Much light which has been shed upon country work has been so unfavorable and given with such a patronizing air that the rural church all over the country, without much discrimination, is pitifully referred to as a "problem."

Properly speaking, there is no such thing as a rural church problem. Do you speak about a city church problem in the collective sense? Yet, every church, if it has a right to exist at all, has its problems, no matter whether it has been wedged into a city canyon or is located no end of miles from Prairie Center out in the open country, surrounded by fields and cow pastures. Problems are a part of the life of a church; the location is incidental. Because a pastor preaches every other Sunday in an old dug-out for a church does not mean that the work done under such primitive conditions is less important than when I serve in front of an altar. It is all in the point of view. The designation of a church as being rural is legitimate for administrative and descriptive purposes, but its use is demoralizing when referred to as the church's "Orphan Annie."

As long as a church will stress "the one thing needful" it will prosper, other things being equal, no matter where located. It is when the country pastors assume added responsibilities which properly belong to the county agent, 4-H clubs, the P. T. A. or the Farmer's Union, that decay sets in and the "PROBLEM" arises.

There is no more reason for the rural pastor to be expected to bud into farming as for the city preacher to teach his merchant-parishioners how to sell his goods with the greatest profit. In either case a great deal of embarrassment might be the consequence. However, to peel out of this confusion of thought on the rural pastorate its dignity as one of its attractions it is necessary that one looks for a moment at the objective of the church no matter where located, and it will be found that the attractiveness of the rural work does not suffer from the absence of high motives.

What is the object of the church anywhere? "The Preaching of God's Word." A spiritual message must be brought to the community which hopes for man's regeneration, and the transformation and development of the people's life and character. Connected with preaching is divine worship, public as well as private. Where is the fundamental difference between preaching in country or in city? There is none.

The city may be able to draw upon greater numbers in a smaller territory, but effective teaching can be done only within a group limited to a given number of scholars. The large church creates small groups for the pupils' and teacher's benefit. In respect to teaching material the publication houses have nothing better

Brother C. D. Whitmer is pastor of the Brighton church, one of our wide-awake rural churches of Indiana.

A COUNTRY CHURCH

*I think God seeks this house, sercnely white,
Upon this hushed, elm-bordered street,
as one
With many mansions seeks, in calm delight,
A boyhood cottage intimate with sun.*

*I think God feels himself the Owner here,
Not just rich host to some self-seeking throng,
But Friend of village folk who want him near
And offer him simplicity and song.*

*No stained-glass windows hide the world from view,
And it is well. The world is lovely there,
Beyond clear panes, where branch-scrolled skies look through,
And fields and hills, in morning hours of prayer.*

*God spent his youth with field and hill and tree,
And Christ grew up in rural Galilee.
—Selected.*

for cathedrals than the school of HAYTOWN.

As far as community service is concerned, not covered by any other legitimate agency, there are many opportunities in the country for the pastor to prove himself a leader in bringing about better conditions of living. The man who is interested in social case work may find more opportunity to exercise his talents than in the larger places where such activities are precluded by special agencies.

The fallacy to place bigness above intrinsic value is classically illustrated by Philip's answer to Nathaniel's question, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" We know the answer, "Come and see." In like vein, one might ask, how large had Bethlehem be to attract the wise men from the East? The real worth of a community does not depend upon its size, but the value of the men and women composing it.

Crowds and edifices are no certain indicators of the effectiveness of a man's ministry. The greatness of a pastor's work is circumscribed not by the size of his field, but by his attitude toward the task at hand. There may be physical limitations to a man's movements, but there are no boundaries to one's idealism and aspirations for God's cause other than those which a preacher imposes upon himself.

Among God's men there are a few who by their unfailing and unabating influence upon generations of rural folk

CHRIST AND NAPOLEON

When Napoleon was on St. Helena, it is said, he once said to Count Montholon, "Can you tell me who Jesus Christ was?" And when the Count declined to answer, he said, "Well, then, I will tell you. Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne and I have founded great empires; but upon what did these creations depend? Upon force. Jesus has founded his empire upon love, and to this very day millions would die for him.

"I think I understand something of human nature and I tell you all these were men and I am a man. No one else is like him. Jesus Christ was more than a man. . . . I have inspired multitudes with such devotion that they would have died for me, . . . but to do this it was necessary that I should be visibly present with the electric influence of my looks or my words of my voice. When I saw men and spoke to them I lighted up the flames of self-devotion in their hearts.

" . . . Christ alone has succeeded in raising the mind of man toward the unseen that it becomes insensible to the barriers of time and space. Across a chasm of eighteen hundred years Jesus Christ makes a demand which is, above all others, difficult to satisfy. He asks for that which a philosopher may often seek in vain at the hands of his friends, or a father of his children, or a bride of her spouse, or a man of his brother. He asks for the human heart. He will have it entirely to himself. He demands it unconditionally, and forthwith his demand is granted. Wonderful! In defiance of time and space the soul of man with all its powers becomes an annexation to the empire of Christ. All who sincerely believe in him experience that remarkable supernatural love towards him. This phenomenon is unaccountable; it is altogether beyond the scope of man's creative power. Time, the great destroyer, is powerless to extinguish the sacred flame; time can neither exhaust its strength nor put a limit to its range. This it is which strikes me most. I have often thought of it. This it is which proves to me the divinity of Jesus Christ."—Anon.

have become a kind of patron saint to the country pastor. Let us call the roll and watch what a stamp of dignity their appearance places upon the rural pastorate.

Charles Kingsley, in the little country parish of Eversley. At the time when he began his work in that place few could read or write. Hardly any one cared for the church. The church yard was used for a pasture lot. How could a genius be content with a forsaken place when London was anxious to welcome him? Why should he? His heart was in Eversley and never did he find life there either dull or monotonous.

Then there is Frederick Oberlin, a Doctor of Philosophy, but one who in more than one sense removed the stones which had kept a forgotten people in misery. He came from a highly cultured and intellectual family. Urged to accept the call from a much desired city congregation, he answered, "I do not wish to labor in some comfortable pastoral charge. The question is, where can I be most useful?" Today, Oberlin's influence is still felt.

Look at the dignity of country life from still another viewpoint. Where did such lines come from as "The Lord is my Shepherd," or "The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork," if not from one who knew life in the open spaces?

We are all benefited by such hymns as, "Sun of my soul, thou Savior dear, it is not night if thou art near." Its author, John Keble, was a man of highest scholarly attainments and a true poet, the author of other hymns and well known books, yet, he chose a quiet, country charge to join the ranks of the immortals in Christian literature. "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide," did not originate in the midst of the city's noise.

Francis Lyte, walking once more through the fields near his church and parsonage shortly before his death, witnessing the sunset in red and gold gave us that hymn. Where did "Silent Night, Holy Night" come from? Yes, out of a village parsonage. Yet, the story of the rural pastorate does not end with these types of Christian hymnody.

These great characters that I have mentioned show how the obscurity of a rural pastorate does neither lower the dignity of the office, nor does it limit the field of service, but rather offer an opportunity to cultivate man's dormant talents.

Look at it from any angle you want, and the dignity of the rural pastorate as an attraction for ministerial work cannot be denied. And then, do not forget what St. Paul writes to the Romans (8, 9) "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the spirit of God dwelleth in you. But if any has not the spirit of Christ . . ." well, he may just as well close up shop, as he is out of place wherever his ministry may be.

To be reasonably rewarded in the building of the country church, there must be willingness to give up ambition for the achievements of mere externals to display talents, exhibit remarkable statistics or in other ways to try and climb upon pedestals which are not essential in the service of the Master. That, takes courage.

To the men who can emulate the courageous, the average country charge presents challenges worthy of the best in God's Kingdom. These challenges are not only of a personal nature, but involve congregational, interdenominational, national, social, and economic aspects, not to mention the political implications which a pastor is supposed to sun.

Take that which is nearest you first, the personal aspect. The most apparent difficulty, though not the most worthy, is the question of a lower formal salary. Let us suppose there are two openings before you, one in the city with seemingly adequate remuneration, the other in the country with less; all other matters nearly being equal, which one are you inclined to take? Self-denial, courage, the spirit of service, and of sacrifice are demanded to make the choice for the latter.

It is a strange situation. The farmer knows how to get full service out of a team of horses; they must be treated with kindness, and he must care for them well. Our farmers mean well, but too many of them, in company with denominational officials, are not broad enough to see that efficiency in the rural ministry demands consideration and a guarantee to keep free from worldly anxiety. This is the challenge, to stake one's time and talents with little assurance of securing a competence.

The next challenge comes from the pew. Somewhere I read the advice of a certain professor in Homiletics who said to his students, "When you go to preach in a city church, take your best coat along; when you go to the country church, take your best sermon." Why? When the average farmer goes to church he has an approach to the service all of his own. Successful country pastors have been those who were in thorough sympathy with them, so as to connect their lives with Biblical truth. How can this be done through the pulpit? It is not so easy as some may think.

Another personal challenge is to one's willingness to speak with joy before small crowds. This may be the case in some city churches for that matter, but the rural preacher can never hope to exceed the limits of numbers which the countryside naturally imposes upon him. The presence or absence of the crowd does not determine the reach of your work. Spiritual force is not measured by the number of people who come to your service.

Then again men of the fields do not have the social coherence of the city population. Ask any farmer why things are against him as a class, and he will tell you that the farmers do not stick together. It is up to the country pastor to raise the estimate of the invisible church of Christ to such heights that, without the sacrifice of historical essentials, they may unitedly worship as one in spirit. The challenge of the rural pastorate is not only a matter of personal, congregational, or interdenominational importance, but it involves a problem concerning the very life of the American nation.

South Bend, Indiana.

Invisible Forces of the Material World

By Thomas Gibson

"For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made" (Rom. 1:20). "That which may be known of God is manifest." There are many invisible forces in the material world. Science has discovered and brought to light many invisible forces in the universe. Some of them are quite simple in their workings. And we are made to wonder why they were not discovered long ago. The Creator reveals and brings to light his mighty forces in his own good time. The Creator endows certain men above their fellows, with power and ability to discover a thing just when it is needed in this world of his. "All things were made by him, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible or invisible; and he (Jesus) is before all things, and by him all things consist" (Col. 1:16, 17).

Magnetism is one of the mighty invisible forces of the material world. The magnet attracts magnetic substances to itself, such as steel and iron. But it repels non-magnetic substances. How like the Spirit of God, who attracts and draws to himself all the virtues and graces of the Lord Jesus who is the author of virtue! And the Spirit repels, drives away all the vices of Satan, who is the inventor and generator of vice. The wind is a mighty, powerful, invisible force of the material world. No one has ever seen the wind, but we do see its destructive effects, in these hurricanes which visit different parts of the world, destroying much life and property. The Lord Jesus said, "The wind bloweth where it pleaseth, and thou hearest the sound thereof but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is everyone that is born of the Spirit" (John 3:8). The act of regeneration of man's heart by the Holy Spirit is an invisible act. But the effects are quickly seen and felt. As it is an inward work of grace, it works out, manifesting itself in a multitude of ways. Soon the experience of Paul is felt in the soul: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature" (a new creation), "having put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."

Wireless telegraphy is another invisible force of the material world, by means of which a message can be sent through the air to the uttermost part of the earth in a few moments. If man, with his finite mind, his puny intellect, is able to send a wireless message all over this world, which belongs to God, why should we deem it a thing incredible that he who created man can communicate with his children by wireless telegraphy? He who is infinite in power and fills all space, which is limitless. How did man acquire the power he possesses? Where did he get intelligence, life, reasoning faculties above all the other creation? Man is God's handiwork, part of his very substance. The wonderful things that man is discovering these days always existed. God created them in the beginning. There is nothing new to the Creator. These things always existed in his infinite mid. "Known to God are all his works from the beginning." God transmits his wireless message to his children, through the medium of his Holy Spirit, in the "still, small voice," acquainting the conscience with the things that "are true, the things that are honest, the things that are just, the things that are lovely, the things that are of good report" (Phil. 4:8). God has revealed himself in many ways—in thunders, in lightnings, in earthquakes, in volcanoes, in hurricanes, in "the still, small voice." And greatest of all, he has revealed himself in the person of his Son, our Savior. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." "God was manifest in the flesh, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, and received up into glory, where he was with the Father before the world was." The Lord said to Philip, "Believe thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in me? Philip, he that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Here is a mystery of the oneness of the Godhead. The Lord Jesus, when upon earth, declared he was at the same time "in the bosom of the Father." The divine, eternal substance, omnipresent—present everywhere. Christ at his baptism and in Gethsemane, heard the Father speak in an audible voice. Saul of Tarsus had a message from Christ, direct from heaven, in an audible voice. The voice and the message were heard as clearly and as distinctly as though nearby. Yes, if God who made man and endowed him with ability to send a message by wireless telegraphy to the uttermost part of the world, why should we deem it a thing incredible that the Creator of the universe could send a wireless message from heaven to earth in a moment of time?

"Angels, who are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation" (Heb. 1: 14). "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them" (Psalm 34:7). Angels are not always invisible. The Lord made the angel Gabriel to fly swiftly and touch Daniel, "about the time of the evening oblation." He had a message direct from God, informing him that he was "greatly beloved." At the beginning of the supplications, the commandment came forth. God being infinite in wisdom and fore-knowledge, omnipotent and omnipresent, fills all space, which has no limit. He does not have to convey himself from one place to another to get there, for he is there already.

But such wisdom is too deep for the finite mind. Perhaps we shall understand it "When the mists have rolled away."

South Berkeley, California.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

METHODISTS MERGE ADVOCATES

It is not surprising. Two of the "Advocate" editors recently told us it was coming. Now the Methodist-Protestant-Recorder reports it:

Four of the eight "Christian Advocates" published in various parts of the country as official organs of the Methodist Episcopal church were discontinued by action of the General Conference. The Advocate editions to be abandoned are those published in Pittsburgh, Chicago, Portland, Oregon, and Athens, Tennessee. The circulation of the eliminated editions is to be absorbed by the remaining editions published in New York, Kansas City, Cincinnati and San Francisco. The Methodists are surely on an economy rampage.

READ IT AND KEEP IT GOING

To all who want access to the facts of the entire prohibition situation we commend a reading of Upton Sinclair's piece of fiction, "The Wet Parade." Nothing else so devastating has come from the press in many years.

Mr. Sinclair's story is especially valuable for use with those who never knew what the situation was in the old saloon days. It would be difficult to imagine any manner in which he or any one else could have better set forth the real cause of our present outrageous situation.

Don't let any one escape by mere attendance upon the moving picture of the same title. It can not possibly present the matter with the force of the book.

The irony with which Mr. Sinclair presents and surrounds the arguments of the liquor crowd makes it unnecessary to answer them.

The book is being purchased in great numbers, but every public-spirited citizen ought to buy a copy, read it and then keep it in circulation for the simple reason that it exposes a rotten spot in our present social structure that, if not cut out, will destroy the entire nation.

America is in grave danger of being crucified between two thieves, the Republican and Democratic organizations.—Christian Standard.

OATH TO CROWN ABOLISHED BY THE IRISH DAIL

De Valera has kept his word. He promised the Irish voters that if they would elect him and his followers to the Irish Dail he would put through the Irish Parliament a measure removing from the constitution the oath to the British sovereign. A sufficient number of his followers were elected to Parliament to make De Valera president and he has finally succeeded in getting through the lower House the measure abolishing the oath. He claims that the oblation of the oath in no way violates the Treaty of 1921 in which the Irish Free State was created. The bill passed its final reading the night of May 19 with a final vote of seventy-seven to sixty-nine. The Conservatives under former President Cosgrave, pressed several amendments, the chief of which would have placed the Anglo-Irish Treaty above the power of the Dail to change. But all of its amendments were defeated. The measure still faces two difficulties. First, will the Irish Senate veto the bill? It is possible that it may, or it may delay the matter for an eighteen months' period. If this last method is adopted the Dail may again pass the bill, and if the Senate a second time fails to act within sixty days, the measure will then become effective. But should it pass the Irish Senate, what will the British Parliament reply? Premier MacDonald recently gave notice in a radio address to the Irish people that Britain would not stand for a severance of Ireland from the empire. Are the days of contest between Ireland and England not over! The world breathed easily upon the announcement of the Anglo-Irish Treaty. If Ireland breaks that treaty, what will the issue be? With world opinion against her, how far will Ireland succeed?—Religious Telescope.

PROHIBITIONISTS TOO COMPLACENT

Why is it that we are so slow to learn that a law written on a statute book is as nothing save as it represents a law written on the heart? It is only the living conviction in the hearts of men which actually achieves progress in the moral sphere. Suppose our young people have no such conviction concerning the benefits of prohibition? Some 25,000,000 children have become of voting age since the law was enacted. They never actually experienced any conditions but those found under the existence of such a law. They see bad conditions under prohibition. Of course, they do, for conditions are bad. Dwelling on this fact, the anti-prohibitionists do all in their power to make inexperienced persons believe that these bad conditions are caused by prohibition. But the truth is that conditions were infinitely worse before prohibition. It can be easily proved to anyone who will face the facts. Show youth the facts.—Presbyterian Advance.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Titus 2:14.—"Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Moffatt reads, "Who gave himself up for us to redeem us from all iniquity and secure himself a clean people with a zest for good works." This text introduced us to the great doctrine of Redemption. Like all other New Testament doctrines, it is of God, and therefore, can not be dismissed as a mere whim of man's thinking. The books tell us that the word "redeem" means to buy back again. Growing out of the thought is that something has been sold. "Christ gave himself for us that he might redeem us." Mankind, then, is not under its original ownership. Who was the first owner? Who sold the race? Who bought it, and what price was paid? If redeemed, who is the redeemer? What price did this redeemer pay? And what is the race's relation to the Father after this redemption? Neither history nor science attempts to answer such questions. The Author, who raised the question of our redemption, and no one else, seems to understand the significance of these questions. His answer is in his Book, the Holy Bible. I am concerned because my interests for time and eternity are involved.

Who was the first owner? The answer is, God. The significant story of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden reveals a lot about that ownership. The fruit of one tree must not be eaten. This restriction had back of it a righteous and holy motive. It was to test their willingness to remain in loyal and loving obedience to their Creator. "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die", was the solemn warning. They disregarded the law of God, destroying that beautiful harmony without which a garden is but a wilderness. There can be no heaven for man until that harmony with the Father is restored.

Who sold the race? God's Book explains it. Read its first few chapters. The serpent entered the garden, and proposed to credulous and curious Eve that if the fruit from that forbidden tree were eaten, they would come in possession of great wisdom. The offer was too tempting to be resisted, and the otherwise happy pair left God and turned to their new leader, Satan; and the consequences of that one deal has stopped every heart from beating at death, has opened every grave, and has peopled the earth over with "silent cities of the dead." For hundreds of years the race struggled on under this cloud, occasioned by this sale. A rift in the sky of that disobedience came in the assurance of St. Paul, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22). I think I should say that while accepting Satan's offer has brought in its wake disease and death, it is here that the fallacy of hereditary sin has had its root. It has been reasoned that because Adam's sin made men die, it made them sinners—even in infancy. Many of the older creeds teach that babes are lost if they have not received the application of a few drops of water, called baptism. But this is making too much of baptism. No repentance. no faith, no confession of sin, is possible for the child beyond the age of accountability, and a few drops of water without God's promise back of it, is making too much of "believers' baptism. But did you ever know any creed that did not go too far with something? But then, let the doctors patch up where the Lord failed to suit them in his revelation to man. It is no affair of mine.

Who is the Redeemer, and what price did he pay? It was the inspired apostle who answers this question. "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; But with the precious blood of Christ, as a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Pet. 1:18, 19). "And without shedding of blood is no remission" (Heb. 9:22). Of course, Satan did not yield his advantage gained in Eden without a great struggle. The agony on the cross, as has been revealed, depicts some of that struggle. The price—who can know? "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me"? Satan's forces beaten back to the very edge of the grave! Here the keys are wrested from the devil and the resurrection door is thrown open to every son and daughter of Adam's race.

"Hallelujah 'tis done,
I believe on the Son;
I'm saved by the blood
Of the crucified One."

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Ezra

No serious student of the Scriptures will ever comprehend the full meaning of the book of Ezra until he reads two prophetic utterances of the gloomy prophet Jeremiah. He gave expression to two great prophecies which were fulfilled shortly after they escaped his lips. If the reader will turn to Jeremiah 25:11-14, he will envision the situation as did the seer:

"This whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans; and I will make it desolate forever. And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations. For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them, even of them; and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their hands."

Nor was that all. The great prophet did not cease his admonitions with lines depicting impending doom, but he also promised the return of a day when the sun would shine again following the storm and tempest. Hear him say for instance, in the twenty-ninth chapter, verses ten to fourteen.

"Thus saith the Lord, After seventy years be accomplished for Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word towards you, in causing you to return to this place. For I know the thoughts that I think towards you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you hope in your latter end. And ye shall call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you. And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. And I will be found of you, saith the Lord, and I will turn again your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whether I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again unto the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive."

Surely, if ever prophecies were fulfilled, and many have been, are, and will continue to be fulfilled, these two were, and with striking literalness. Israel did serve the king of Babylon and "After seventy years" the Lord did deliver and remember the captive Jews. The book of Ezra relates part of the story. It is continued and concluded in the remaining books of the Old Testament which are known as the pre and post-exile writings. Nehemiah and Esther are two of the books thusly labeled.

Ezra, the famous priest and scribe, was descended from the high priest Hilkiah in the reign of Josiah. The present work and a few chapters in Nehemiah (8 and 12) record all of the known facts concerning him. He was a priest of great piety and learning. The Jews regarded him as the institutor of the Great Synagogue, the restorer of the Sacred Canon and editor and corrector thereof, the author of Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, probably Esther, and, finally, the builder of myriads of synagogues in Palestinian territory.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Ezra.
2. To Whom Written. To Israel.
3. When and Where Written. 500-450 B. C., in Palestine.
4. Occasion. The Return of the Captives.
5. Authenticity. Undoubtedly reliable history: an accurate narrative, as secular history attests.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Return and Reorganization Under Zerubbabel. 1-6.
2. The Return and Reformation Under Ezra. 7-10.

III. THE CONTENTS OF THE BOOK (in outline).

1. The Proclamation of Cyrus (1) Reconciliation.
2. The Returning Exiles (2) Return.
3. The Resumption of Worship. (3) Rejoicing.
4. The Opposition of the Enemy. (4) Reproof.
5. The Building Renewal. (5) Renewal.
6. The Edict of Darius. (6) Restoration.
7. The Request of Ezra. (7) Recognition.
8. The Expedition of Ezra. (8) Re-establishment.
9. The Condition of Jerusalem. (9) Revival.
10. The Reformation of Jerusalem. (10) Reformation.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Return and Restoration.
2. Key Verses. 1:5; 7:10; 9:6, 15.
3. Key Chapters. 6 and 9.
4. Key Ideas. Return, Revival, Reform.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The true value of the book of Ezra is discovered in its revelation of the activity existing between the Divine and the human governments. The Potter breaks his vessel and mends it again. He says to Israel, "I am the Potter, thou art the clay." When Israel was disciplined and suffered sufficiently, they recognized the chief position of Jehovah, and sang on their homeward journey, "Thou art the Potter, and I am the clay."

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

It is recorded that the children of Israel "built the altar of God of Israel, to offer burnt offerings thereon, as it is written in the law of Moses, the man of God, and they kept the feast of tabernacles." Herein is revealed the Christ of the ages and his atoning work. The burnt offerings and the restored people point forward to a day when our High Priest shall become the Leader of all priests and be infinitely greater than the priests of all centuries. In that day he will restore a wayward but repentant Israel—an Israel which now has been scattered to the four corners of the earth. Some day the Jews will seek Jerusalem as the center of the greatest religious activity our world has ever seen.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK (in poetry).

1. God uses all types and conditions of men as his servants, viz., Cyrus, Darius, Artaxerxes, Zerubbabel and Ezra.
2. God qualifies his workers for service, dispels gloom through the years, and establishes himself in the hearts of the people.
3. God's minority becomes a majority in any company.
4. God's greatest losses turn out to be his greatest permanent gains. It is true that if life be bespoiled, he will make it beautiful again.

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.
MAGAZINE SECTION
M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

A Big Bible Class Built on the Bible

By Julia C. Underwood

When a Sunday school in midsummer notes an increase in practically every department, there is a reason to pause and wonder why. It is the old Westminster Presbyterian church in St. Louis, at the crowded corner of Delmar Boulevard and Clara Avenue, which made this statement in one of its bulletins of last August. Yes, this church has a bulletin in midsummer. It these rare outings he seems relieved when he comes back.

Outstanding in this prospering Westminster Presbyterian Sunday school, and typical, is the men's Bible class, called the Caravan Class, whose attendance on its worst days is always well above a hundred. It is a class zealous in direct study of the Bible and outright in defense of the faith.

day last year the Caravan Class announced that Dr. Crowe, "having prepared himself to meet the challenge to citizenship that is being so insidiously propagated by certain elements under the guise of intellectualism," would preach a sermon in two sections, "first to three hundred men in the Caravan Class, then to four hundred and fifty men at the eleven o'clock service." Both predictions were fulfilled. The talk was purely on the lines of Christian duty, as Dr. Crowe believes that ministers are "wasting their time proclaiming a so-called social gospel. Their business is with the essential needs of men, not the accidental disturbances that ruffle the surface of things. Ministers are appointed of God, not to make their message conform to our generation, but rather to make the generation conform to the revelation that is given to us."

So, knowing definitely that they will not hear any flattering talks on economics or politics or the latest book or the current theatrical play, hundreds of men nevertheless come in to this class, and they bring others as did the early disciples. An executive of a shoe factory has brought Sunday by Sunday, thirty-five different men to the class, most of them becoming members. The head of an automobile agency has persuaded a similar number to come in. Fathers and sons come together. A man advanced in years became active in the class because his sister in another city wrote him that she had heard of the Caravan Class and wished he would attend.

Westminster church is in a fine residence part of the city, and in the Caravan Class are eight or ten men, any one of whom is worth half a million or so. They are men of consecration, who will come forward without a word sometimes, when some case of need develops. Otherwise no one thinks of their wealth.

But it is fortunate that the class has no need to have financial "drives." There is not even a regular collection, the thought being, as one of the older members expressed it, that "some of the members are young fellows taking their first jobs, and they might be embarrassed by being asked to contribute to some fund."

But the "young fellows" and all the class do give generously. For nine years a taxicab company has been on the pay-list of the Caravan Class, to bring a certain blind woman from a Blind Girls' Home, to the eleven o'clock church service, and take her home again; during those nine years one particular member of this class has been a cava-

A Recent Shishewana Faculty

does not suspend its bulletin, or its Sunday night service, or any other activity, because of summer. The pastor, William Crowe, D.D., happens to be a minister who says he does not mind the heat. But neither does he seem to mind the cold. It is always a task, his congregation will tell anyone, to get Dr. Crowe to take a vacation, and after

"No side frills are used to attract the men," says a leading class member. The class began with Dr. Crowe's pastorate, which is now about ten years old, and Dr. Crowe has steadily taught it. It is as vigorous a part of his ministry as are his two sermons of the same day.

When Washington's Birthday fell on Sun-

A Recent Shishewana Student Body

lier to meet this aged woman, giving her his arm up the church steps to her pew, and back again when the service is ended. The class, too, sends forty or more Christmas baskets to known poor families, on a truck provided each year by the automobile executive to whom reference has already been named. The School of the Ozarks is a pet benevolence of the men of the Caravan Class, students being supported in its training courses through winter and summer. The men also send considerable sums to a leper institution.

Since the class is named "Caravan," an interesting device of "feeding the camel" is a penalty for absences. Five cents a Sunday up to three consecutive Sundays absent is paid with some amusing ceremony. As the members are active business men mostly, trips to other cities will sometimes prevent attendance, but there is a remarkable spirit of responsibility that follows them. Messages come from where they are, back to the class. On last May 24, Caravan's homecoming day, the request was made of every member that he "promise himself he will either be present, or else send Dr. Crowe a telegram stating that his thoughts are directed to this service during the hour.

"It is like your golf score," that appeal continued. "It is your own record—not loyalty to Dr. Crowe, nor to Caravan—but to old John W. Self."

One member had a way of asking new men to meet him at a certain drug store across the street, surmising that perhaps they might not have courage to come to the stately church, the first time they came. Others followed this member's example. A good many have been won that way, and the druggist himself became interested. A man from Dallas came in, saying that the Caravan Class was worth attending. Another from Maryville, Missouri, made inquiry at the Mayfair Hotel, and a bell boy told him about the Caravan.

Yet the class does very little "advertising," so-called. The nearest to this that it makes use of is its four-page blue leaflet, issued weekly, "The Tent Pole." Eight men of the class edit this, and oh, the personal news that is in it! Absent members subscribe for it, a dollar to pay postage; those in town receive it gratis. It is radiant with goodwill, it tells of all who are sick, or going to get married, or embarking on a journey, or bereaved or in trouble, or blessed with a new baby. New members are introduced through "The Tent Pole" as many as fifteen or sixteen in some weeks.

The spirit of fellowship expands socially at the class' annual dinner in January, and at picnic outings in the summer. When the class president, Will Docter, entertained at his swimming pool on his home grounds a few weeks ago, the class was so large that he gave two evenings to the party. The average attendance each Sunday through 1930 was 147, and in 1931 it is still growing. A partition was taken out in the church basement last summer, so that the Caravan Class room could be enlarged.

Of course the Caravan Class helps the whole Sunday school. Its dominant thought in the early fall was to promote Sunday school Rally Day on October 4.

The narrative comes back to the point from which it started.—Dr. Crowe. Recently the Caravan Council of the Caravan Class "took stock" in a business way of its steady growth. It looked into the reasons for its gradual and substantial progress and its avoidance of the hazards that have destroyed so many organizations of similar type,—such things as have had to do with sensational or cheap methods of raising a crowd. This is what the Caravan Council decided to place in its minutes for permanent preservation:

"Resolved, that we reassure our teacher, William Crowe, that we have learned through his teaching that if permanency is to be obtained in a religious organization, such an end can only be attained when the cross of Calvary is the center and the whole Bible as the inspired Word of God is the Circumference. On this foundation we accept the challenge of the future, determined to carry on and to accomplish great things for Christ."—The Sunday School Times.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar

With
Thoburn C. Lyon

CHILDHOOD AND EDUCATION OF MOSES

(Lesson for July 3)

Lesson Text, Ex. 2:1-10; Acts 7:20-22;
Golden Text, Prov. 22:6

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

The Childhood of Moses. Ex. 2:1-10

Greatness has a way of springing up in the most unexpected places, but very often it may easily be accounted for. It may in this case: Moses' parents were both of the priestly house of Levi, were thoroughly versed in the scriptures, and loved their baby enough to defy Pharaoh's edict rather than kill it. His mother, knowing that Moses was to spend his later life at the court of Pharaoh, undoubtedly taught him well in the things of God. If we had more parents like that there would be more sons like Moses. God help us to be true parents!

TUESDAY

The Education of Moses. Acts 7:17-22

"And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians." We cannot too strongly emphasize the value of a good education, especially in the world of today; on the other hand, it has been frequently pointed out that a Christless education is extremely dangerous, and may prove worse than no education at all. Moses was mighty in words and in deeds, not merely because of his Egyptian education, but because that education was tempered by his knowledge of Jehovah, taught him in his early years by his godly mother. One of the leading university professors of today has stated that he values the Bible more highly than a college education, if one must choose between them; if at all possible, however, we should have BOTH. Let us pray for more education that is truly CHRISTIAN; let us pray especially for Ashland College.

WEDNESDAY

Grace Abounding. Ps. 139:1-12

A large part of the secret of Moses' success as a leader was due to his realization that God was ever present, ever near. He had learned to seek him and to commune with him. There were times when discouragement was on every hand and the way seemed dark, but even then he could say: "Even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee. May we ever be conscious of his near presence in our times of darkness."

THURSDAY

A Child of Faith. Heb. 11:23-29

At every stage of Moses' life he was called upon to exercise faith as few others have been. Think what faith in the reality of God and his promises it must have taken to induce Moses to give up his position at Pharaoh's court and make a none-too-promising attempt to lead out a company of slaves! The foundation for Moses' faith was found in the faith of his parents (v. 23). Lord, increase our faith!

FRIDAY

Religious Instruction. Prov. 4:1-13

Instruction in the things of God is life itself (v. 13). Recently I have heard many testify that their present knowledge of the scriptures was largely obtained around the family altar in their childhood. A large part of the "youth problem" of today is due to the lack of fatherly instruction (v. 1), to the banishing, in large measure, of prayer and the Bible from the home, leaving great numbers of young people to grow up with only the most superficial knowledge of the Bible and of the things of God. Let us pray that this condition may be corrected, at least in every professedly Christian home.

SATURDAY

The Worth of a Child. Luke 2:25-32

The child Jesus was the little child that should lead all mankind into a better understanding of real values in life. We know how he lifted womankind and how he blessed little children. How he must have grieved when the Egyptians ordered the male children of the Hebrews to be put to death! We see a new justice in the death of the first-born of the Egyptians at the time of the Passover. Let us pray for a more general realization of the worth of every child, and of their right to develop under Christian influences.

SUNDAY

The Child and the Bible. Ps. 119:9-16

It is the word hid in the heart of a child that shall keep him all through life and cleanse his ways. Let us dedicate ourselves anew to the task of implanting the word in the hearts of children, and let us pray God's blessing upon all teaching of his word this day.

THE DIRTY DOZEN

"They say—
"I heard—
"Everybody says—
"Have you heard—
"Did you hear—
"Isn't it awful—
"People say—
"Did you ever—
"Somebody said—
"Would you think—
"Don't say I told you—
"Oh, I think it is perfectly terrible—

Sometime ago a few believers gathered and resolved that they would "speak evil of no man." They kept this resolution and a revival broke out in that place. May we be enabled to "Prepare the way of the Lord," so that we may witness the greatest outpouring of the Holy Spirit since Pentecost."—Sel.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
 Financial Secretary Foreign Board
 1925 East 5th St.,
 Long Beach, California

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
 Home Missionary Secretary
 Berne, Indiana

MISSIONS

Kindling New Interest in World Missions

THE FLORIDA CHAIN

During the past winter a Chain of Missionary Assemblies was stretched across Florida. One who attended them called these assemblies the most remarkable series of meetings he had ever known. Dr. Robert E. Speer suggests that the plan might well be followed in other states. We have therefore asked Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, the Advisory Chairman, to describe how the Assemblies were planned for and promoted, in order that others may carry out similar plans elsewhere.

The Florida Chain of Missionary Assemblies was suggested by the fact that two Schools of Missions were meeting in the state, one having been started in DeLand seventeen years ago and another in St. Petersburg twelve years ago. It seemed a pity not to extend the blessing of such schools throughout the state and the nation, since people from thirty or forty states were registered at the two schools. Speakers from the north and from the mission fields who came to bring the great missionary message were easily persuaded to extend their services to other centers.

Florida, with winter visitors from every section of the country, offers a great field for this experiment, but many have inquired whether it might not be tried in other sections. In Florida, local committees are organized in eight centers, and visitors with leisure welcome relief from idleness and sports and register for the popular Assemblies.

It seemed important to reach out to the uninformed and those who might be prejudiced against foreign missions. A great majority readily acknowledge the need and value of home missions, and this branch of the work has not been neglected in the Assemblies. Strong presentations have been made of the work in the mountains and among our American Indians, through vital speakers.

It was especially important to find someone who could undertake the planning and direction of these Assemblies; also an Advisory Committee on which would be outstanding missionary leaders. A State Chairman was secured to carry on the lines of work essential to efficient organization of local centers; the rapid tour from city to city; the careful attention to finances; the program and publicity. Florida was fortunate in having exactly the right leader for this in Miss B. Louise Woodford, of St. Petersburg, Florida.

From the first session the Assemblies have been a success; all expenses were met; exceptional programs were presented with lectures on the study books for the year. The program also included Bible study, prayer services, and, this year, a "spiritual clinic." Great missionary addresses have reached over 150,000 people. The registration card admitted to all sessions; evening and Sunday sessions were free and offerings were taken. The small registration of fifty cents and a dollar, according to the length of the Assembly (from two to six days) covered expenses. No appeals were made for funds. The general appeal was to build up the work of Christ through the great mission boards, which are suffering in these days of depression.

It was difficult to find churches large enough to accommodate the crowds. It was said that the working of the Holy Spirit was plainly manifest "on the Florida Road" during these days of intensive prayer and study. In several of the places it was suggested that if the team could remain for another week the evangelistic fires would begin to burn as of old. The objectives of the Assemblies reveal their reliance upon the Source of Power. These may be stated briefly:

1. To set against gross materialism and paganism in this land the simplicity and spirituality of the message of our Lord Jesus Christ.
2. To strengthen the church for a fresh start on the old road heavenward "according to the Scriptures."
3. To present the international program called "Foreign Missions" which originated in the heart of God, for all nations which are "without God and without hope."
4. To declare again his full message and to show results which prove the truth and power of the Cross of Christ today; to change the hearts and desires of men.

In addition to the general Assemblies there were also missionary addresses at the high schools, colleges, out-of-door forums, men's clubs of various kinds, women's clubs, Chambers of Commerce and other groups that do not often listen to addresses on such subjects.

The local daily papers gave remarkable attention to the Assemblies, often featuring announcements, addresses and pictures on the front page.

An idea of the character and worth of the programs may be gained by a mention of a few of the program features. Dr. Robert E. Speer, who had never before visited Florida, was welcomed in every center by great audiences eager to hear his marvellous message. Mrs. F. I. Johnson taught the book on China with an effectiveness born of her recent trip around the world. Missionaries who brought vivid pictures from their fields at home and abroad reached the hearts of their hearers through their own experiences in proof of the power of the Gospel.

Great groups of young people gathered in every center to listen to these speakers. Luncheons were given; homes were opened; men on the street and in the press spoke of the value of this international Christian demonstration.

Not least in spiritual potentialities were the "spiritual clinics" held each day in connection with the Assemblies, which brought together for prayer and discussion larger groups than were found at the morning prayer services. Here all took part in prayer and discussion concerning the maladies which affect the work of the Church today:—pernicious anemia that can be cured only by blood transfusion; contagious diseases of youth contracted through dangerous germs in literature and moving pictures; heart failures, sleeping sickness and partial blindness.

The question was often asked in the Assemblies, "Why cannot this be done in other states?" While Florida, with its large group of winter visitors, offers a maximum opportunity, we believe a great work might be accomplished in groups of states organized along similar lines. For instance, a call has come from Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee, which might extend to West Virginia, Virginia and Georgia. If the boards will send their best missionary speakers, as they have done for Florida, to make a comprehensive world program, there will be a demonstration of "the Church on the March" which will go far toward solving the perplexing problems of the world today.—Missionary Review of the World.

THE MISSIONARY MESSAGE OF THE CROSS

The word "cross" in the Scriptures never occurs in the plural. To Christ the cross meant one thing, and nothing less: His sacrifice of himself to save others. That is what it must mean to every disciple—self-abnegation. To take up the cross and bear it after Christ is to undertake, like the Master, a life of self-crucifixion for the saving of others. It is to lose the self-life for his sake. It is to be willing to die, if need be, that others may live. When our Lord hung upon the cross his enemies tauntingly said: "He saved others; himself he cannot save." No sinner ever hid a truth so sublime. In the Christian life, saving self and saving others are utterly incompatible; and the one great difficulty with the whole body of professed disciples is that most of them are trying to save themselves, and yet be saved. And so it comes to pass that whole thousands go to church, come to the Lord's Table, utter prayers and bear the name of Christ, they live a life essentially worldly, and are engaged in no truly soul-saving work. They spend many times as much on self-indulgence as they give to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, or even give the Living Bread to dying souls.

Consider what would be the result if every professed child of God could burn with Paul's passion for souls, could know the continual heart burden for the unsaved, that made it possible for him even to wish himself accursed that they might be saved.

That was cross-bearing. The Apostle Paul died daily; he was "crucified with Christ," he bore branded in his body the very marks of the Lord Jesus. Could ten thousand of the millions of professed believers burn with such a Christ-like passion for souls, for one year, the Gospel would be carried round the globe within that year. Arguments and appeals are vain while you argue and appeal to the spiritual dead. Before the Church can "convert the world," the members of the Church must be converted. The real difficulty is not unsanctified purses or unsanctified cradles, it is deeper—in sanctified hearts. "By their fruits ye shall know them." If you bear no witness for Christ, have you anything to witness?

A light that does not shine, a spring that does not flow, a germ that does not grow, is not more a contradiction than a life in Christ which does not bear witness to Christ. If there be a spring within, there will flow a stream without. If there be no stream, is there any spring? If there is no ray, is there any light? If there is no witness, is there any experience? "He that believeth on me," as the Scripture hath said, "out of his innermost being shall flow rivers of living water." He who has no passion to convert, needs conversion. The saved man is not content to have unsaved men go unwarned, or the saving power of God to go unwitnessed.

It may well be doubted whether one who bears no part in testimony to Christ has any part in his salvation. Would that every one might feel the full force of this paradox of missions:

"Christ alone can save this world,
But Christ cannot save this world alone."
—Arthur T. Pierson, in the "Missionary Review of the World."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Commencement events are over and the Summer school will have been under way about two weeks when this issue of the Evangelist reaches its readers. While the year has been very successful, the future must still be regarded with great anxiety for finances are hard at colleges as well as elsewhere. While prices have shown a slight decline in the country, (not half as much as some would make us believe,) what the College has to buy has not declined at all,—postage, books and paper, draying, printing, athletic supplies, chemicals and scientific apparatus, traveling expense, dues and charges to associations, gas, electricity, plumbing, coal, etc. These things have not only not decreased but in some cases have shown a positive increase. Meanwhile, it is EXCEEDINGLY DIFFICULT to get those owing us to pay their bills, but those whom we owe think they must be paid and paid at once, or else our credit is not good. Hence, the need of a good offering on Educational Day.

The school authorities of this state could do nothing more useful than to attempt to exercise some sort of control over the great textbook publishers.

The class day exercises were particularly brilliant. The Gymnasium is the only building in town, except the high school gymnasium, where such exercises could be held. One hundred thirty on the platform, five hundred seated on the main floor and as many or more in the galleries.

The academic procession was impressive. As the last one crossed the north goal line in the football field, the first pair were entering the gymnasium,—that's how long the procession was. It was brilliant with the colors of Clark, Michigan, Ohio State, Wisconsin, Northwestern, Chicago, Lehigh, Vanderbilt, and Ashland. To be added were the gold for science, crimson for divinity, blue for education, pink for music, and white for art.

Thus closed our most successful year. Educational Day was observed last Sunday in the local church, Dr. Teeter, secretary of the Board of Trustees, representing that body, and the writer of these notes speaking for the College.

After rereading some early history of the church, I have again been reminded that interest in education is not at all new in our church. Contrary to a general notion, the whole fraternity has always had a very keen interest in education,—of the right sort.

(The following additional items were written a week later, and after the Summer School had opened.)

It will be a matter of great interest to the Trustees of the College as well as to other friends, to know that the present summer enrollment is the second highest in our history and larger than for the past two years.

More than this, the enrollment has shifted away from the Two-year education towards the arts college. This is especially encouraging. So, viewed from this angle, the summer school is our best; also from the standpoint of income.

Then, too, this summer enrollment might indicate that the enrollment for the fall will be up to normal. However, it is uncertain and the friends of the school ought to be alert to send students this way.

The enrollment now is 331.

It is not too late to take the Educational Day offering. Some churches have sent theirs in. This is much appreciated.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

BUENA VISTA, VIRGINIA

I want to report the evangelistic services in the First Brethren church, Buena Vista, Virginia, April 3rd, to 24th, 1932.

"Oh, that men would praise Jehovah for his lovingkindness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." Psalm 107:8.

Our series of meetings started with the morning service of Sunday, April 3rd, with somewhat more than the average attendance. Interest grew from the first and the increasing attendance began to tax the seating capacity of the church. We borrowed thirty chairs from the Church of the Brethren and five or six from homes near the church. We opened the two Sunday school rooms back of the pulpit, the gallery was filled also, and even then at some of the meetings there were many standing. After the first few days of the revival the interest, which throughout the meeting was well sustained as seen in the good attendance, began to be manifested also in the form of conversions and reconsecrations. God used in a powerful way the messages brought by the evangelist, Dr. I. D. Bowman. These messages were both spiritually and doctrinally exceptional and were highly appreciated by not only the pastor and people of this church but also by the many others who came to hear the Gospel proclaimed. Responses to the invitations were few until the last of the series of meetings. Many invitations were seemingly unheeded. Every night of the meeting a group of earnest Christians met in one of the Sunday school rooms and sought with earnest prayers the working of infinite power in the hearts of the lost. These prayers were abundantly answered the last night of the series. That night brought a wonderful experience of the outpouring of God's power. There was a wonderful gathering at the front of the church of those who made professions of faith and those who reconsecrated their lives to the Lord. They filled the front bench and still they came. We began to borrow chairs for them from the aisles and still the tide flowed. We borrowed the chairs used by the choir and filled the space between the front bench and the pulpit. We put chairs on the pulpit for them and when finally the tide ceased rolling in there were forty-two there. A wonderful testimony to the power of the Gospel and an event full of glory to God. The total number of those who responded to the invitations given during the entire series of services was sixty. Of these we received by baptism on profession of faith, 13; by letter and baptism, 5; by letter alone, 3; total, 21.

The reconsecrations to the Lord in our church numbered 22. The rest of the sixty went to other churches, some as converts, some by letter, others were members of the other churches who made reconsecration of their lives to the Master.

We thank and praise the Lord for his loving kindness and his wonderful works to the children of men.

REV. P. M. NAFF, Pastor.

REVIVAL AT BUENA VISTA, VIRGINIA

We held an evangelistic service at Buena Vista, Virginia, from April 3, to the 24th. I held two revival meetings here some years ago. This church has had somewhat of a checkered experience. But while it has had its ups and downs, it has produced six preachers, some of the most successful ones of our church. Brother Lynn of La Verne, California, and N. W. Jennings of Turlock, California, were two of this number.

Now they have a splendid building, which holds twice as many as the former one built on the same lot. It has two small rooms and a gallery, besides the auditorium. We also used 35 extra chairs and it was well filled nearly every night.

Some 12 or 14 years ago we had a battle with the Pentecostal Tongues people. This time we had a battle with the Seventh Day Adventists. Both of these experiences resulted in an advantage to our church.

I greatly enjoyed working with Brother Naff, the successful pastor. He is a young man of talent and spirituality. He had the field well worked, but in a splendid condition for a successful revival. He is universally loved, and if he will remain there for a few years, he will build up one of the best churches in Virginia. He also has a noble helpmeet. Her father I baptized many years ago at Mt. Olive church, Pineville, Virginia. Brother Koontz of Roanoke was at the meeting one night with a delegation of twenty-five from his church. My youngest brother, Rev. J. S. Bowman of Jordan Mines, Virginia, with his son Frank and family, were present one night.

The Lord seemed to stir the whole town. The last night of the meeting was one I shall never forget, forty-two made a confession the last night.

My son, J. Walter Bowman, who was with me during the entire meeting, led the music and with a splendid choir had much to do in making the meeting a success. No doubt Brother Naff will give the number of additions and confessions. After being at home a few days I have returned to Virginia and am holding a short meeting near Jordan Mines for my brother. My wife, son Walter, and his little daughter, are here with me. Will report that meeting later.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN,
Leesburg, New Jersey.

BIBLE CLASS AT BRIGHTON, INDIANA

You have heard of the Brighton church in a little village in Northern Indiana and a rural community, six miles from a railroad.

This picture is of the Young People's Class of our Sunday school. There are forty-six in number.

We are very proud of them, and the best part of it is, most of them are members of the church. That means they will be the future leaders of the church, and will be ready to carry on the work.

Brother Myron L. Long (at the extreme left of the picture) is their teacher. By his untiring, earnest work, and his kind and loving spirit and fellowship, he has built his AMENDMENT DAYS. Every indication points to the attendance of a vast throng of people. On Saturday both Clinton N. Howard, known as "The Little Giant" and F. Scott McBride, the fearless leader of the Anti-Saloon League will speak and then on Sunday afternoon the vast Billy Sunday Tabernacle, with a seating capacity of 8,000, will scarcely hold the people who will want to hear General Smedley D. Butler on the burning issue of the day. On Saturday night the Dramatic Trial entitled "Protection," with a cast of more than twenty characters will take place.

Other speakers for the ten days' Bible Conference will be Robert Spear, of New York, Charles J. Rolls of New Zealand, Robert G. Lee of Memphis, Bishop Adna Wright Leonard of Buffalo, J. C. Massee of Atlanta, President Oliver J. Buswell, Jr., of Wheaton College, Mark A. Matthews of Seattle, George McNeely of Newark. Alva J. McClain of Ashland Theological Semi-that come about? Well, it is very simple. Here is a summary of the situation:

1. Each week hundreds of extra copies must be printed to care for copies lost or mis-sent in the mail, and extra copies must be printed to send in exchange for other publications and as sample copies where requested. For all these the company receives not a cent.

2. A large number of subscriptions are received through local representatives who earn a commission. To some church worker or church organization seeking to earn money, "The Advance" allows a commission of one dollar for each new subscription; hence for each subscription the company receives only $1.50 each. To regular field agents who visit churches and take subscriptions, thereby making their living, there is allowed a commission of 50 per cent; hence for all such subscriptions the company receives only $1.25 each—less, for sometimes people fail to pay for papers sent "on time." When friends order papers sent to missionaries or others as gifts, "The Advance" charges only $2.00 a year, which is approximately the mere mechanical cost of producing one extra paper for one year, the service even of clerks in the office being contributed. Because of these facts, the actual average received for each paper printed in 1930-31 was only $1.69, which is well below the mere mechanical cost.

Now, leaving out the salaries of editors and sums paid to reporters and special writers, what does it actually cost to send out a copy of "The Advance" for a year after all of the material has been prepared? In other words, what does the subscriber get for $2.50, even when editors are paid nothing? Here are the figures: He gets—51 cents worth of white paper. 79 cents worth of printing and binding. 37 cents worth of composition—machine type-setting.

3 cents worth of correct mail list. 20 cents worth of postage. 2 cents worth of stationery—receipts, letters, etc. 2 cents worth of "cuts"—pictures made. 6 cents worth of the cost of office rent. 43 cents worth of "office force"—business office only.

That is, it actually costs $2.43 for each paper produced and sent out for 52 weeks (sometimes there are 53) without counting even a crust for editors and other writers. And for $2.45 thus spent the Advance Company receives $1.69!

How, then, are editors and writers paid? Well, they are not paid very much. Indeed, "The Advance" would have folded its tent long ago had it not been for the generous cooperation of many friends who write for its columns and—we fear—sometimes pay even their own postage! However, there are two other sources of income besides subscriptions. Let them be mentioned frankly.

Each publication also receives some income from paid advertising. This subject should have a page to make it clear to those without experience, but only a bare outline can be given. Some publications—with no limit to the kind of people to whom they may appeal—can build up such large circulations that it makes little difference whether they receive anything from subscriptions, because their income from advertising enables them practically to give away their publication. A denominational paper, however, is almost wholly limited to members of its own denomination—and to the most class to the fifty mark. We read, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in Heaven." May God give Brother Long strength and grace to carry on the good work he has so nobly begun.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BIBLE CLASS OF THE BRIGHTON SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Myron L. Long, (extreme left) is the teacher. The pastor's picture appears in connection with his splendid article on page 5 of this issue.

We must also give credit to our pastor, Brother Whitmer and his good wife, because I believe that it is their wonderful spirit and fine cooperation, that have inspired the young folks to faithful and loyal service of their church. Our pastor and his wife are loved by us all. By their leadership, all departments of the church are in a flourishing condition. The crowds at the regular services of the church are better now than they have ever been in the four years of their pastorate.

May the Lord richly bless us all and give us courage to do even greater things for him than ever before.

MRS. BESSIE GROVE.

GENERAL SMEDLEY D. BUTLER AT THE WINONA LAKE BIBLE CONFERENCE

Since many Brethren people are in the habit of attending the Winona Lake Bible Conference, we are glad to give the following notice concerning it:

The dates for the Conference are August 12 through August 21. Great preparations are being made for two special days, Saturday and Sunday, August 13 and 14. These will be known as THE EIGHTEENTH nary, Paul Rader of Chicago, Sam Higginbottom of India, William C. Terrill of Africa, George Redden, Pastor of the Pines, William B. Hogg of Chicago, L. E. York of Indianapolis, Philip Sidersky of Los Angeles, Jacob Peltz of Chicago, William M. Danner of New York, Miss Grace Saxe of Chicago, the Mission Boys with George Trotter leading. Dr. William Edward Biedewolf is Director of the Conference. It looks like the greatest crowds in Winona's History in spite of the Depression.

It will be noted that our own Prof. McClain is among the speakers, and that will add to its interest for our people this year.

GEORGE S. BAER.

WHY RELIGIOUS JOURNALS REMAIN POOR

By James E. Clarke, Editor of Presbyterian Advance

What does the subscriber spend for the paper? Normally it is $2.50 a year, though some good friends who understand the situation better than most subscribers always send $3.00, which was The Continent subscription price. And what does the paper get for each annual subscription? Naturally the answer would be that the paper gets just what the subscriber spends—namely $2.50 for each paper printed. But that is far from the case. Indeed, the records show that the paper received an average of only $1.69 for each paper printed. How does active and interested members at that—and so it simply cannot secure sufficient circulation to secure a large income from advertising. Nevertheless, in the experience of "The Advance" the amount received from advertising in normal times is just about enough to make good what is lost on subscriptions—though still no provision is made for editors and writers.

In this connection it should be noted that the subscription price of "The Advance" is very low as compared with weeklies of its class and size. For instance, "The Advance" furnishes its subscribers each week more reading matter than is furnished by Time, a weekly journal of practically the same size; yet the subscription rate of Time is $5.00 a year. The Living Church, an Episcopal weekly of about the same size as "The Advance," charges $3.50 a year; The Churchman charges $4.00. Yet both of these journals lose much more money annually than does "The Advance."

But to return. What other source of income is there from which editors may be paid? The answer is, None, except what someone may be able to raise. In the case of "The Advance" it has been the editor who had to find the extra money—for he has always been both president of the company and general manager of the whole enterprise as well as editor. During twenty years he raised over $100,000 in the effort to keep a paper serving the church. Most of it was spent on annual deficits. About a quarter of it was set aside as a Reserve Fund, but the past two years of exceptionally small receipts from advertising now threaten serious inroads into that "Reserve." It was set aside "for a rainy day." The "rain" came—and rain has a tendency to sweep even "Reserves."

(In substance these statements are true of all religious journals, says the Editor of the Pacific Christian Advocate, who has previously republished Dr. Clarke's statement, and the Editor of The Evangelist also well knows it to be true.)

JUST AS I AM, WITHOUT ONE PLEA

This hymn, as others from the pen of Charlotte Elliott, was learned in suffering—a hymn of compensation for her suffering. Hers was physical suffering, but how many have found relief from spiritual anguish through the words of this hymn! It may be the voice in the soul of the penitent crying out, or it may be a definite call for more light and conquest. Charlotte Elliott was born at Brighton, England, on March 17, 1789, and lived a full and influential life until September 22, 1871. As far as our knowledge goes, she was more or less an invalid from early life. A severe illness was experienced in 1821, from which she had no permanent recovery. Though it is not known just when she began the writing of hymns, yet in a collection of hymns by her brother in 1835, there are a number from the pen of Charlotte. It is generally conceded that Dr. Caesar Malan, a pastor from Geneva, exerted great influence over Miss Elliott from 1822 on. Though she came from a religious family and had uncles and a brother in the ministry, yet she came into a deep religious experience through the leadership of Doctor Malan. Her spirit yearned to do something worth while for her church and Christ, but her affliction proved too great a handicap. This caused her deep anxiety and she contrasted her own life, apparently worthless, with that of the busy lives of the people about her. She lived fifty years of invalidism, which, after all, were years of patience and wide service. The historian of hymns has found it difficult to determine the date of writing and publication of many of her hymns. There is no manuscript in existence, so far as is known, of this hymn. Different stories have been related as the occasion for its composition. One, widely circulated, is that it was connected with her conversion. It is said that Doctor Malan approached Miss Elliott concerning her spiritual welfare. The pastor urged her to come to Christ. She replied, "How can I come?" To which he answered, "Come just as you are," and she responded "Just as I am, without one plea." For the truth of this story there is no evidence. Bishop Moule, a nephew by marriage, denied the above story, but says that ill health caused her the particular pain of a seeming uselessness in life. It is said that while others were preparing for a bazaar she was greatly disturbed at her own inactivity and was kept awake that night by the disturbing thoughts of her apparent uselessness. During this spiritual conflict she questioned the reality of her whole spiritual life. This conflict continued during the next day, during which time she got a definite assurance of her salvation, through the grace of God. Whether the hymn was born in her conversion experience or in an hour of spiritual conflict, it matters not. It was born as an expression of relief from suffering, and has remained a light, securely guiding both physical and spiritual sufferers. Many have been the testimonies concerning the influence and power of this hymn. Said Bishop Stevens, "That hymn is the metrical compendium of the gospel," and Bishop McIlvaine said, "That hymn contains my religion, my theology, and my life." In the early hymn book it appeared with the passage, "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out." Many, both saint and sinner, could testify as to the powerful influence of this hymn.

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bidd'st me come to thee,
O Lamb of God, I come!

"Just as I am, and waiting not
To rid my soul of one dark blot,
To thee whose blood can cleanse each spot,
O Lamb of God, I come!

"Just as I am, though tossed about
With many a conflict, many a doubt,
Fightings within, and fears without,
O Lamb of God, I come!

"Just as I am, poor, wretched, blind,
Sight, riches, healing of the mind,
Yea, all I need, in thee to find,
O Lamb of God, I come!

"Just as I am, thou wilt receive,
Wilt welcome, pardon, cleanse, relieve;
Because thy promise I believe,
O Lamb of God, I come!

"Just as I am, thy love unknown
Hath broken every barrier down;
Now, to be thine, yea, thine alone,
O Lamb of God, I come!"
—Religious Telescope.

PRINCIPLES OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

1. The following principles should be recognized by the Christian who would relate himself intelligently to property, income, wages and wealth:

- (1) God is the Owner of all things.
- (2) God invites men to subdue the earth and possess it.
- (3) Under grace, man is a steward to hold and administer his possessions as a sacred trust.
- (4) God's ownership ought to be acknowledged.

(5) Biblical history records and extraordinary history recognize the setting apart of the tenths of the income as that acknowledgment; there is indicated a divine sanction for the practice and the amount.

(6) God's ownership and man's stewardship are best evidenced by the systematic application of this portion of income to the advancement of the Kingdom and by the faithful use of the balance of income not set aside.

2. The following methods should be pursued by the Christian who would administer wisely his stewardship of material possessions:

(1) Actual or constructive separation of the proportion of income which complies with the foregoing principles.

(2) A written pledge in advance for the regular work of the church (local budget and benevolence budget).

(3) A weekly payment of the amounts prescribed; offered as an act of worship at a public service, if this is possible; otherwise held until offering may be made.

(4) Payments from time to time, out of the portion set aside but not previously pledged, to special causes.

(5) Careful, intelligent, personal and prayerful consideration of the uses to be made of the whole of income and wealth; this will require study of the local, national and world-wide-program of the Church and of the full stewardship of life itself.

(6) Freewill offerings, thank-offerings and gifts.—Missionary Review of the World.

FROZEN PROFITS

"It seems to me," observed Old Deacon, "that more people are discussing economics today than ever before. That being the case, I suppose there can be no harm caused by an old fellow like me saying something. See this pile of high-brow magazines that have recently reached me for reading?"

The Old Deacon indicated a stack of publications on a table in the corner.

"There's not one of them that doesn't contain at least one article exposing some real or fancied fallacy in our economic philosophy. I have read all of them. They talk about capital, labor, production, distribution, consumption, organization, management, and what not. But they neglect to deal with one subject that ought to be,—and I think must be,—one of the foundation stones of every useful system of economics.

"You may think I talk like an old fogy when I say it, but I am afraid our economic system is likely to hobble along like a spavined horse until we realize that giving is as necessary to our economic welfare as capital, labor, organization, management, or profits.

"And to illustrate my point, let me relate a fable. The hero of my fable is Mr. Manyman, the typical successful, cold-blooded go-getter American business executive. Mr. Manyman is a magnate. Let's say he is the collar button king of the world. You might say he is an automobile king, or bath tub king, or a hay rake king, or any other kind of an industrial emperor—but collar buttons will serve the purposes of my tale as well as any other commodity. Certainly no male citizen will deny them an essential place among his daily comforts.

"Mr. Manyaman enlarged his business; and merged it, and quantity-produced it, until people everywhere talked about his magnificent business genius. Almost everything he said was quoted in the newspapers. It was a poor weekly periodical that missed publishing an article about him at least once in four weeks. When he expressed an opinion on anything, from religion to toothpicks, thousands of people stopped trying to think for themselves and contented themselves with merely quoting him.

Business Is Lord

"One day, a Plain Individual managed to edge his way through Mr. Manyaman's bodyguard of secretaries, butlers, valets, doorkeepers, press agents and private detectives, and addressed the magnate.

"Do you realize how many millions of children there are in this country who never receive any religious instruction?" the Plain Individual asked Mr. Manyaman.

"Do you realize no business counts for anything unless it yields a profit?" Mr. Manyaman retorted. "And my business counts a lot."

"Splendid!" cried the Plain Individual. "That makes it possible for you to become a financial benefactor of mankind!"

"But I am already a public benefactor!" Mr. Manyaman insisted. "Every time I sell a hundred collar buttons, I apply the sale price of ninety-nine collar buttons to wages, raw materials, overhead, depreciation, interest on investment, salaries,—including a nice one for myself,—and so on, and I keep the sale price of the remaining collar button as a profit. I'm no visionary. I'm a cold-blooded business man, and mighty proud of it."

"It's about your profits that I want to talk with you," the Plain Individual ventured diffidently. "What do you plan on doing with the profits accrued in your business?"

"Why, first of all, I am going to invest them in labor-saving machinery, so I can make a collar button at a lower wage cost. Then, I'm going to double the size of my plant."

"I have a better plan than that," the Plain Individual announced.

"What is it?" asked Mr. Manyaman.

"Since ninety-nine per cent of the sale price of your output pays all the cost of the operation of your business, including wear and tear, depreciation and obsolescence, your business doesn't need that remaining one per cent. Why not invest it unselfishly in the well-being of your fellowmen, without regard to race, color, geographical location, or previous condition of servitude? We need men of your wisdom to stimulate human betterment."

"But that was the end of the interview. Mr. Manyaman had no time to waste on cranks.

The Market Glutted

"A year or two later, Mr. Manyaman's chief yes-man came in with bad news.

"Your warehouses are stuffed to the roofs with finished collar buttons, and the market is glutted," the chief yes-man announced. "People are not buying collar buttons because each man in the world now wears two, and has two more stored away in his top bureau drawer."

"Shut down the plant! Lay off the men!

Order my press bureau to notify the world that I say everything is fundamentally sound!"

"And Mr. Manyaman slammed shut the drawers of his desk and put on his hat. On his way out, he stopped at the cashier's cage to collect his daily stipend. To his astonishment, the cashier, instead of counting out to him a stack of crisp currency, measured out to him a bushel of collar buttons.

"What's the matter with you?" shouted the outraged Mr. Manyaman. "I said money!"

"But you have no money, any more," explained the patient cashier. "Your money has gone into the labor-saving machinery that has stopped running, and into the enlarged plant that you have shut down, and into the surplus finished product that is cracking the walls of your warehouses."

"Well, this won't do!" protested Mr. Manyaman. "Here, take this bushel of collar buttons out and sell them to ultimate consumers!"

"I tried that, too, but the speculators no longer have shirts!"

Pocketed

"Mr. Manyaman gasped and felt dizzy. He threw up the sash of the nearest window and leaned out to get the air. As he did so, he caught sight of the Plain Individual walking down the street.

"Come here, please!" Mr. Manyaman begged. "Tell me what to do about my profits. They're all frozen up!"

"They get that way when a cold-blooded business man stuffs them down deep into his vest pocket, and buttons his coat over them," the Plain Individual answered.

"On the first page of the first textbook of economics I ever read was a striking statement," the Old Deacon concluded. "It was like this: 'The science of economics is not concerned with moral values.' I have half a notion to try writing a book on economics myself, since everyone else seems to be doing it these days. And on the first page of my book, I think I ought to say, 'There are many sound investments for income in the form of wages, rents and interest. But the only safe and sound investments for clear financial profits are in spiritual values.'"—George L. Rinkliff in "The Lutheran."

OUR LITTLE READERS

RIBBONS

By Mrs. A. B. Brown

Ribbons are of many varieties and types and as you read the heading at the top of this column you perhaps wonder what kind of ribbons I propose to discuss. Your mind starts off in its own questioning way, and before I know it mine does, too.

There are ribbons that little girls wear on their hair. I wore them when I was a little girl and nothing gave me quite the joy that a new hair ribbon did. For many years the little girls did not wear ribbons and I felt sorry for them, but now we see many pretty, bright bows bobbing along in a group of girls. . . . But that isn't the kind of ribbon I have in mind.

I attended a wedding a few days ago and the decorator had used great lengths of soft, satin ribbon among the flowers. Beautiful bows were tied to the flower baskets and looped in graceful design to the next basket. Tiny little ribbons hung from the brides' bouquets in a perfect shower of loveliness. . . . But that isn't the right kind of ribbon.

Have you ever seen a boy or girl proudly wearing a piece of ribbon, maybe red or blue with gold letters, which said, "First Award"? If you haven't it is because you have not been near such a person, for if you had you would have been sure to see it. Any chest that wears a winner-ribbon will be thrust so well forward that every one near will see it, for the ribbon speaks a silent word of tribute to one who has been honored. . . . But that isn't the kind of ribbon, either.

A dear lady in our church brought me a book this morning and in it is a beautiful piece of ribbon, cut in points at the end, and made into a book-mark. Your grandmother's Bible perhaps has in it a lovely ribbon book-mark, maybe a little faded, but marking well the place to be read next. She prizes the book-mark highly for little John, who is now the president of his bank, gave it to her on her birthday, and he bought it with the very first money he ever made himself. . . . But that isn't the kind of ribbon!

At Christmas time sister goes off into her room, shuts the door and locks it, and small brother, standing in the hallway outside, hears only the rustle of paper and the snap of scissors. Mother hurries all morning, working with red paper and ribbons, to finish tying her packages. And then, when the door is opened on Christmas morning, the many pretty bows seem to beam their pleasure as everyone shouts, "Merry Christmas." How fast the little fingers fly, untangling the knots, eager to explore the contents of the package. . . . But that isn't the ribbon!

Is there another kind? Yes, there are many other kinds, but for just a moment, get up here in the car beside me and look ahead as I drive. We are making our way through a tree bordered street at the edge of a little village and as we turn this corner out into the open country. . . . look! see that ribbon before us? . . . On and on it stretches and as the car goes faster and faster it seems that we are winding that great length of ribbon on to a big spool and exploring it as we go. Doesn't it look like some person in the store had unwound it and let it fall, looping and twisting on the counter?

Is this ribbon-road any less beautiful than the little girl's bow, or the bride's shower, or the first award, or the book-mark or the Christmas ribbons? I think not. . . . For there is a challenge in this ribbon-road. It beckons on and on into the unexplored regions just beyond. It takes one up into the heights and spreads out a landscape that would be the envy of any old master. It dips into the valley and beseeches the traveler to drink deep of the cool odors from the fern bank. It turns and follows a mountain stream that laughs and sings on its way, bidding the whole world forget its sorrows and be likewise gay. And who could be other than glad when a little bird darts across singing "Cheerup, cheerup!"

On and on goes this ribbon-road through the deep ravine, and the great cliffs on either side draw the eyes to the heights above and the heart to the heart of God. Less beautiful? No! but more so, for when the psalmist said that "The heavens declare the glory of God" he also added, "the firmament sheweth his handywork" and these ribbon-roads take us through much of the handywork of God.—The Christian Index.

VOL. LIV
Number 26

July 2
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

The Road Leading to Lake Shishewana

SHISHEWANA

By Dr. Florence Newberry Gribble

Shishewana, place of meeting,
Of his loved ones with himself,
Place of rest and place of refuge—
Where we seek and find his health.

I have rested, Shishewana
In thy fresh air's cool embrace,
Listened to God's precious message,
With thee sought and seen his face.

I have heard thy words of comfort,
Heard thy platform's earnest plea,

I have listened to his called ones
As they prayed his power to see.

Shishewana, recreation,
Pure and sweet and unalloyed
May be found on thy lake's bosom;
Tired ones there be overjoyed.

From thy platform, Shishewana,
May the truth thus e'er resound,
May thy tabernacle's message
To Christ's name alone redound.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

TO Roanoke, Virginia

An invitation to speak at our Southeastern Conference recently gave us an opportunity to see something of the southern states. Starting from Ashland we drove south through Dayton, Cincinnati, Lexington and Middlesboro to the Great Smoky Mountains; then to Asheville, North Carolina, and northeast to Roanoke where several days of fellowship were enjoyed with the brethren in conference.

The Conference was unusually well attended, I was told. It was a pleasure to renew association with old friends among the ministers, and also to meet several of our newer recruits to the ministry. The people seemed enthusiastic for the work of the Church, the speakers I heard were loyal to the Word, and the business of the Conference was transacted with interest and dispatch. Mrs. McClain and I enjoyed the gracious hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Brumbaugh, whose home is known to more than one of our ministers. I have especial reason to remember their kindness because the heat plus a slight cold laid me up for several days after the Conference closed. There are always compensations. The extra stay gave us an opportunity to worship with the Roanoke people and hear two fine sermons by the pastor, Brother Koontz, a dear friend and former student of mine, who with his good wife is greatly beloved by the congregation.

THE Roanoke Church

Our short stay was sufficient to convince me that here we have a fine opportunity for the Brethren Church. In a city of about 75,000, a splendid building has been erected in one of the most beautiful and commanding sites I have ever seen, overlooking almost the entire city. The group of Brethren is not large and they have necessarily assumed heavy obligations in building with such vision, but I met none discouraged. If the Lord tarries, this church is going to become an outstanding work in the Brethren denomination. The city is quite remarkable in one respect; in a locality where you expect to see very old towns and cities, Roanoke has the appearance of a new western city. I was told that it has been built virtually in the last fifty years.

May the Lord richly bless this church and pastor.

ON the Way Home

From Roanoke we went to Washington and had a brief visit with Brother and Sister Kent. It is quite astonishing how God's providence intertwines the lives of his people. Brother Kent was one member of a boys' class which I taught in the early days of the Long Beach church. I recall distinctly what a restless bunch they were, and I often wondered whether my time was not largely wasted, not knowing that I had before me the future pastor of the First church of our capital city. I am sure that I wasn't much of a teacher, but I was ambitious, so I taught them the Book of Daniel! And they enjoyed asking questions that I could not answer. We met Mrs. Kent first when she was Alice Wogoman and a member of the Clayton church near Dayton of which I was the pastor during my Seminary days. Brother and Sister Kent met while students at Ashland. Their first conversation was not about the weather, they relate, but about their mutual friends, the McClains. How interesting it will be, when we reach the Father's House and have plenty of time, to trace out the intricate designs which were woven by the now inscrutable workings of Divine Providence.

OTHER Friends

At Washington, on account of the intense heat and humidity, our trip to Philadelphia was cancelled, a great disappointment to both of us as we had looked forward much to meeting friends there in the Church and Philadelphia School of the Bible. "What thanksgiving can we render again unto God for you." It seemed best to turn toward home and higher ground, a decision which was fully justified as my indisposition from the heat wholly disappeared a few hours after reaching the mountains.

We stopped in Winchester to have a look at the Brethren church and greet the pastor, Brother Rohart, but found him away from home. This is another fine city for a Brethren church. A business man from Dayton, Ohio, who had been touring the east told me that the first factory he heard running was in Winchester. By evening we were on the top of Five Mile Mountain where we were treated to a glorious sunset, ate supper at the Table Rock Inn, parked the Nash on the edge of the cliff which they say is over 3,000 feet high, and slept under blankets with the wind whistling up through the trees. The ascent from the eastern heat to the cool of the mountains on Route 50 reminded me of the ascent from the edge of the Painted Desert up to Flagstaff at the foot of the San Francisco Peak in Arizona.

Wishing to stay in the mountains for a couple of days, we turned north and stopped at Terra Alta to greet Brother Leslie Lindower, pastor there and at Grafton. We found him away, as we learned with a shock, on account of the death of his mother at Canton. The church at Canton will miss her keenly. But "to loose away upward and be with Christ is better." How strikingly beautiful the mountains are around Terra Alta.

Passing through Johnstown, we stopped at the "Ashman Ranch," on the edge of the city. I use the word "ranch" deliberately, for Brother Ashman has everything from Bing cherries to a cow. And one is always welcome at the Ashman home, day or night.

Wishing to take a new road home without passing through Pittsburgh, we blundered on the Benjamin Franklin Highway which runs through Indiana, Kittanning and Butler. This is the last word when it comes to a perfect highway, and very few people seemed to have discovered it yet. If you are driving east, be sure and try it. You can reach it by continuing east from Salem, Ohio, and crossing the river at Beaver Falls. And don't fail to stop at Zelenople (I cannot pronounce it) for dinner at Reed's Coffee Shop. It is in a private home. With respect to food and low prices, you will get the surprise of your life.

In Kittanning we stopped for a few minutes' visit with Brother Robert Crees, Brethren pastor at this place and Brush Valley. And what a view from his front porch overlooking the Allegheny River! Such a location, if in Hollywood, would be almost priceless. No preacher could afford to live on it! Brother Crees grew up in the First church of Philadelphia where, he reminded me, I had the privilege of baptizing him and encouraging him to prepare for the ministry.

A GREAT Testimony

When I began to write I did not intend to use all my space giving an account of the trip to and from Roanoke. But I cannot close without saying that of all the pastors I talked to on the trip, I found not one discouraged. They had their problems just as everywhere today, sometimes almost insurmountable, but every one without a single exception was facing the future with enthusiasm for the work of the Lord's Church, believing that his promises cannot fail, and knowing that however deep the falling shadows, the Coming of our Blessed Lord draweth near.

A WORD for the Present Hour

The times in which we live are difficult, but the Grace of God is using the present stress for our good. We are learning the utter futility of mere human promises, however well they are meant. We are finding that the trail of the temporal is written large over the things which are seen. One by one the human props of society and civilization are being removed, teaching us to lean more completely upon him who is the Rock of Ages. In such times his Word becomes infinitely precious to the believer. If you are needing strength for the day, turn to Psalm 68:19-20 and read the passage as rendered in the American Revised Version.

Blessed be the Lord, who daily beareth our burden,

Even the God who is our Salvation.
(Selah)

God is unto us a God of deliverances;

And unto Jehovah the Lord belongeth escape from death.

A man is of little account to the world who spends all his time counting dollars and cents.

IN THIS NUMBER

United Support of Our Denominational Ideals and Interests—Editor, . . .	3
Thomas Paine Answered on Bible Bigotry—Editor, . . .	4
Editorial Review, . . .	4
Independence—L. R. Bradfield, . . .	5
Are the Days of Revivals Past?—H. M. Lintz, . . .	6
"God is Not Dead, But is Living"—Toyohiko, Kagawa, . . .	6
Significant News and Views, . . .	7
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, . . .	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, . . .	9
Tribute to "Vision-of-a-Lion" by the Shores of Shipshewana, . . .	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, . . .	11
Selected Christian Endeavor Plans, . . .	12
Answers to Prayer on the Mission Field—Florence N. Gribble, . . .	12
News from the Field, . . .	13, 14
Our Little Readers, . . .	16
Announcements, . . .	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

United Support of Our Denominational Ideals and Interests

Second Part

This topic was not made so dreadfully long by accident, but because those who formulated and assigned it as a subject for a conference address had certain definite problems in mind they wished discussed. We attempted to do just what the topic called for, and last week we reported about half of that effort. We asserted that the future of our church depends very largely upon the stressing of that which is distinctively denominational, and believing that to be true, we pointed out the importance of building up strong denominational convictions and an urge to propagate our faith. But this discussion calls for other considerations which are vital to a larger and more stable denominational life, and the words, "United Support", are significant of some of those other considerations.

More United and Cooperative Efforts

Continuing from where we left off last week, we wish to point out in the third place the need of more united and cooperative effort at extending and strengthening our denominational faith and life. We need to learn better how to work together. We are inclined to be too greatly individualistic and independent for the best good of our brotherhood interests. To illustrate: here is one church that goes one place for its Sunday school literature, another church goes another place for its literature, and still another church goes elsewhere, each one led by persons who choose what pleases their own individual tastes or fancies, without regard to the wishes of other groups or the best interests of all. It seldom occurs to such individuals that they could best serve their own local interests as well as the common welfare of the brotherhood by uniting and co-operating in the making and using of their own denominational publications, which are loyal to the ideals of the church. There is a lack of a sense of solidarity, of oneness, of mutual obligation. We have not learned, in all too many instances, what real cooperation and concerted effort means. We are still clinging to some of the weaknesses carried over from the days of ultra-congregationalism.

We would not be misunderstood as being opposed to the noble spirit of New Testament congregationalism and freedom of congregational action. We believe in democracy in the church as well as in the state, and we would stand ready to oppose any effort that might be made toward further centralization of power. Not only does intelligent human nature prefer but the New Testament favors the rule of the people, such as the Brethren church makes provision for, and we believe that such a policy is not incompatible with the most vigorous life and most aggressive expansion. But let us bear in mind that the freedom and power of the people become all the more secure and effective when they learn to cooperate and work together and in harmony for the accomplishment of common ends. Such unity and cooperation on the part of the rank and file constitute the best guarantee against dictatorship and point the way to power and blessing. The unity of the church at Jerusalem in prayer and doctrine and in the practice of the ordinances gave power that made possible a mighty witness for the risen Christ in that city. The unity of the church at Antioch in prayer and teaching and program made possible the launching of the greatest foreign missionary undertaking that the world has ever witnessed. Our church needs to take counsel of these examples of cooperative effort and unity of spirit and purpose. Whenever the church in council and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit plans the various phases of our common task, the examples of New Testament Christianity require that all the members shall cooperate and strive for harmony of thought and activity. And more than that, the Scriptures definitely enjoin it.

Let us note a few references. In Romans 12:5 we read: "So we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." There we have Scriptural warrant for united, harmonious and cooperative activity among Christian people—they are one in Christ. In Phil. 2:1 are these words: "If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind." Again turn to Romans 15:5, 6, and read: "Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded one toward another according to Christ Jesus, that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." We will take time for just one more of the many references that might be recalled; emphasizing the importance of oneness of spirit and organized and united activity among those who are members of the body of Christ: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers or foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone; in whom all the building fitly framed together growth unto an holy temple in the Lord" (Eph. 2:19-21).

It is a sublime and wonderful unity that we share together in Christ Jesus, when we are really united in his will. It is a unity both of thought and of activity, of faith and of practice, a unity that involves both harmony of spirit and organization of effort, a unity that is secured not by force or compulsion, but by response to common ideals and forms of worship, and that is directed toward common aims and purposes. Real Christian unity is not that of the crowd, but that of the army, not that of a bundle of boards but that of the barrel, not that of a pile of lumber but that of the house. It is unity that is organized and bound together by mutual love and devotion to common ends. That is the unity that we need to make possible real success in extending our denominational ideals and enlarging our achievements.

An All-Inclusive Loyalty

Lastly, will you permit me to point out just one more vital consideration? It is the need of an all-inclusive loyalty, a loyalty that includes every department of our church life and activity. We need to build up among our people such intelligence and devotion as will give support to the whole scope of our church interests. A balanced, comprehensive loyalty is a need of the first magnitude at this hour among Brethren. We are giving too much interest to the departmentalizing of our work. The separateness of the different phases of our work is being emphasized rather than the oneness of our work as represented by the different phases of our activity. The different brotherhood interests and undertakings merely represent different parts of the whole task of the church, and the doing of that whole task of the church ought to be kept before the people, and their cooperation in that whole task urged. The wholeness of our task, and the responsibility of every one to do his part of the whole cannot be too strongly emphasized. It ought to be kept before the people constantly. We ought to lay upon them the responsibility of home missions as well as foreign. We ought to stress education as well as evangelism. We ought to support our publications as well as our missionary activities. We ought to provide for the superannuated ministers as well as the young men preparing for the ministry. We ought to stress Prohibition and Peace and separation from the world, as well as the preaching of doctrine and the carrying of the Gospel to the ends of the earth. We ought to seek to build up a balanced interest and loyalty. The emphasizing of one at the expense of the other makes for a lop-sided loyalty. The encouragement of the people to mortgage their whole year's gift for the support of one interest, be it foreign missions or home missions or college support, is certain to result in a denial to the other interests of their rightful support. Such a bias for some special interest is not wholesome, and the giving of all to one and the neglect of the others is a short-sighted benevolence, and the pastor who encourages it is not wise.

Eventually the very strength of the church in that particular will become its weakness and threat to its future power. A balanced, comprehensive, all-inclusive loyalty is the only kind that is safe to promote. And we are serving our church's future best when we seek to build that sort of loyalty.

Let this be our four-fold prayer for the welfare of our church: God give us a great and burning conviction that the acceptance and practice of the Whole Gospel of Christ is supremely important and that the church that espouses such a cause is worthy of our unflinching allegiance and service; give us to realize that our high-

(Continued on page 8)

Thomas Paine Answered on Bible Bigotry

The term "Bible Bigotry" is not a term unheard of nowadays, nor are the Thomas Paines all dead. There are still to be found not a few who ridicule the Bible and scorn those who believe its sacred pages. Of course, most of the unbelief of our day is more subtle and insinuating, and not so bold and positive in its declarations against Bible truth, but still there are those who are vicious and openly defiant in their attitude toward the Bible and Bible standards, particularly when among people who know very little about, and make very little use of, the Bible. But among people who know and intensely love their Bible and devoutly follow its teachings, such opponents never get very far. The lives of the Bible lovers constitute an argument to which they can offer no effective reply. It was such "Bible bigotry" that silenced the renowned Thomas Paine, and it is as effective against carping critics today as then.

The following interesting testimony was printed in the Christian Age: The one who recorded the incident was present in a boarding house where Paine was belaboring in the presence of a little group of friends the story of Joshua commanding the sun and moon to stand still; and was denouncing the Bible as the worst of books, and as having occasioned more mischief and bloodshed than any other book ever printed, saying it was believed only by fools and knaves. Here he paused; and while he was replenishing his tumbler with his favorite brandy and water, a person asked Mr. Paine if he ever was in Scotland. The answer was, "Yes." "So have I," continued the speaker; "and the Scotch are the greatest bigots about the Bible I ever met. It is their school book; their houses and churches are furnished with Bibles, and if they travel but a few miles away from home, their Bible is always their companion; yet in no other country where I have traveled have I seen the people so comfortable and happy. Their poor are not in such abject poverty as I have seen in other countries. By their bigoted custom of going to church on Sundays they save the wages which they earn through the week, which in other countries that I have visited are generally spent by mechanics and other young men in taverns and frolics on Sundays; and of all the foreigners who land on our shores, none are so much sought after for servants, and to fill places where trust is reposed, as the Scotch. You rarely find them in taverns, the watchhouse, almshouse, bridewell, or prison. Now, if the Bible is so bad a book, those who use it most would be the worst of people; but the reverse is the case." This was a sort of argument Paine was not prepared to answer, and an historical fact which could not be denied; so, without saying a word, he lifted a candle from the table and walked upstairs. His disciples slipped out one by one, and left the speaker and myself to enjoy the scene.

---

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

The National Statistician, Brother George E. Cone, is prodding us again for our church statistics. So is your district statistician wanting them. Have you sent in yours? The report cannot be one hundred per cent if you fail.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble gives us another installment of remarkable answers to prayer, the reading of which should be an inspiration to all and a challenge to those who are wont to hesitate in their prayers, lest they should ask too great a thing of God, or perchance ask beyond his willingness. If there is one thing more than another that Christian people need, it is a really active and trusting faith in God's goodness and power.

Our correspondent from the church at Limestone, Tennessee, writes an interesting letter this week, and from it we learn that the work there is moving forward in knowledge of the Word of God and in devotion to the church. They rejoice in the leadership of their pastor and his faithful helpmeet, both of whom have shown themselves capable and consecrated servants of the Lord. They are Brother and Sister Hill Maconaghy. The latter is showing herself a capable worker with children and young people, and the pastor is making full proof of his teaching ministry.

The hearts of many have been saddened and many others will be when they learn of the sudden death by automobile accident of Mrs. Ephraim Culp of Goshen, Indiana, on June 16th. Brother and Sister Ephraim Culp had visited the Ohio conference in session at Bryan and on their way home their machine collided with another at a road crossing, resulting in the instant death of Sister Culp and the serious injury of Brother Culp. We extend sincere sympathy to Brother Culp in his sorrow and hope for his recovery. Brother and Sister Culp were both prominent members of the Goshen church and of the Indiana conference.

Prof. Alva J. McClain's department this week takes on the nature of a report of his trip to Roanoke, Virginia, and his return home and visitation of some churches on the way. He says the future of the Roanoke church is bright, in its new location, with its splendid plant and under the leadership of its consecrated pastor. The National Mission Board's backing of this church has added much to the morale of its heavily burdened membership. Another significant feature of Brother McClain's report is his testimony to the courage of the pastors he met. It takes faith to "face the future with enthusiasm for the work of Christ's church" in times like these. But, why not? "Faith is the victory that overcomes the world."

Brother H. F. Stuckman of Goshen, Indiana, is secretary of the Shipshewana Program Committee, and in that capacity he makes announcement this week of the Bible Conference and Young People's Camp to be held July 17 to 24. The service of a strong faculty has been enlisted, the names of some of which we mentioned in last week's Evangelist, but in addition we learn that Prof. and Mrs. M. A. Stuckey are to be among the number, besides, of course, the Indiana pastors who have places on the program. Brother Stuckman says they are planning for bigger crowds and making bigger plans this year than ever before. And we are assured that as usual, people from outside the Indiana district are expected to attend. It is a splendid opportunity.

Clay City, Indiana, has enjoyed a successful revival under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller, evangelist and Home Mission Secretary. Brother Bertram King is the splendid young pastor, who, though just recently come to this field, has won the hearts of the people and has done much to prepare the field for the good harvest just reaped. Fifteen souls are said to have responded to the invitation to accept Christ as their Savior, and two have re-consecrated themselves to his service. Twelve of these are reported baptized and received into the church and two await the rite. Brother pastor and evangelist report new possibilities to have opened up for the church and that its prospect is bright. That fact is perhaps as big a part of the victory as the number added to the church. It means a lot to a church to get a new and enlarged vision of its field.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling, who recently announced his resignation from the chairmanship of the Allied Forces for Prohibition, has been urged and has consented to reconsider his action and to continue his leadership of these forces until after the November election. The Allied Forces have covered the entire country in a speaking and organizing campaign in behalf of Prohibition, and much has been accomplished in the way of awakening the dry forces, and much needs yet to be done, if the Christian and moral sentiment is to be aroused sufficiently to prevent a reversal getting under way this fall. No bigger single task faces the forces of righteousness as a whole than the maintenance of a public sentiment favorable to Prohibition sufficiently strong to fortify against repeal and to make enforcement reasonably effective. Never was a moral issue more confused and misrepresented by the wet press subsidized by the rich wets. It is a time for clear thinking and courageous speaking.

Independence

By Landis R. Bradfield

Independence—a magic word so potent in meaning that its concept has stirred nation to war against nation; has shattered the unity of tribal life; has changed the religious patterns of myriads of people; has altered the principles and policies of governments; and has swept aside customs and traditions centuries in founding.

It was found among primitive peoples. The Genesis account reveals that Adam and Eve sought respite from the divine command, "Thou Shalt Not." Thus it has ever been and still continues to be. Man desires to be free from restraints, from the, "Thou shalt nots," and the "Thou shalts," saying he prefers to order his life according to the dictates of his own conscience,—“heart,” or possibly his own fancies.

Ethnologically there have been and still are fundamental reasons why certain peoples should achieve autonomy. However ethnological independence almost always involves other factors, such as, religious differences, customs, traditions, political and economic.

The Hebrews desired to be free from bondage in Egypt because of racial differences, religious and physical oppression and economic subservency. The Egyptians desired to keep the Hebrews in bondage because of their strict adherence to racial purity, high fecundity, economic productivity and lack of national political unity. The details of the Exodus need not be recounted here. But note that ere long the Hebrews secured their freedom from Egypt, they waged conquest on the Tribal peoples inhabiting Palestine, destroying some, subjugating others, and driving others out of the desired area. Then after national unity had been established we find individuals within the group seeking independence from group restraint, so that they became a menace to the welfare of the group.

The brevity of this paper necessitates that we omit enumeration of other cases among early and medieval peoples, where subjugated groups strove for freedom, which when realized, served as an impetus toward making them the oppressor of others. History is replete with such incidents and the end is not yet.

At the present time we still find nations “lording” it over others. To witness; England controls India; the United States the Philippines; Japan, Korea and Manchuria. Political “lordship” today is probably a secondary factor in the cases just mentioned, the first being the desire to maintain control of the economic resources of the subject peoples, so that greater prestige may be secured by the controlling nations among the nations of the world.

Neither does economic aggrandizement restrict itself to nation against nation. It also is in evidence within nations. The immense trust and industrial organization tightens its grip upon the agencies of production. It changes prices, and output; shifts wages to below the subsistence level; says in substance by its acts and policies, that able bodied, intelligent employees have not the right to feed themselves and their families. On the other hand, employees to a limited extent are banding together to insure for themselves and their dependents such portion of economic goods as will enable them to maintain a decent standard of living, or at least a fair subsistence.

Independence is sought by both groups,—employers and employees. But which is independent? Which if either can be completely independent? Is England, Japan, or the United States more definitely insuring for themselves political and economic independence by subordination of other peoples? Is the Five Year plan in Russia more likely to succeed under harsh and brutal methods of the ruling minority? What is to be the goal of society in its group relationships? Can it be that the philosophy upon which one group operates to seek control over another is insidious and destructive of human individuality and personality? Is independence or cooperation the way out of our present world disorder? Cooperation implies more of the spirit of the commandment, “Love thy neighbor as thyself;” less attention to profits and more attention to human worth; less attention to getting and more attention to serving.

The Declaration of Independence drafted and signed by the fathers of our nation a little more than one and a half centuries ago, cannot by any stretch of the imagination be interpreted as consigning us to a life of national isolation. More and more the need is being felt for our participation in the League of Nations, World Court, and Reparations Conference.

Strict partyism will not find a way out. The industrial Shylocks will not help found a more wholesome social order. Only men of positive idealism, with courage to put their ideals into operation can help build a national, social and political order that will abate the present injustices and secure cooperation and service and recognize human worth. The present constitutes a challenge. How will we meet it?

Cleveland, Ohio.

PATRIOTISM

He serves his country best

Who lives pure life and doeth righteous deed,
And walks straight paths however others stray,
And leaves his sons, as uttermost bequest.
A stainless record which all men may read;
This is the better way.

No drop but serves the slowly lifting tide;
No dew but has an errand to some flower;
No smallest star but sheds some helpful ray,
And man by man, each helping all the rest,
Make the firm bulwark of the country's power;
There is no better way.

—Susan Coolidge.

Are the Days of Revivals Past?

By Harry McCormick Lintz

Not infrequently we hear Christian leaders say "The days of revivals are past." Is this true? In the light of experience and observation as an evangelist, I am constrained to question, yea, to deny, the statement, and contend that the days of revivals are not over. It is as possible to have a revival today as when Paul preached on Mars Hill, provided God's people are willing to pay the price.

The Christian Business Men's revival at Chicago, furnishes the most recent and best illustration of God's willingness and ability to send a revival even to so wicked a city.

In April, 1930 a group of Chicago's Christian Business men met in the Capitol Building to pray for a revival. They gathered together regularly for nine months. Then met at a luncheon to discuss the possibility of a revival, the probability of a revival in Chicago, and the advisability of starting the work in the heart of Chicago's business activity, the Loop.

After earnest prayer and careful discussion they felt led to rent a theatre in the Loop and begin noon-day meetings for the up and out as well as for the down and out. They had opposition to encounter, and criticism to endure but God had spoken, and, like Abraham of old, they moved forward. On Tuesday (noon), January 6, 1931, the first service was held in the Garrick Theatre. From the outset the blessing and power of God have rested upon the movement. The attendance and interest have continuously increased. The meetings have been carried on every day in the week (Saturday and Sunday excepted) for the past seventeen months. The attendance has been from 500 to 1100. I have been there when as many as 300 were turned away. The average attendance is about 700.

These noon-day meetings, now being held in the Adelphi Theatre, are broadcast over Station W-M-B-I. It is estimated that the audience in radio land numbers 100,000 daily.

Pastors and evangelists from various states in the Union and Canada have been asked by the Committee to do the preaching. It was the privilege and joy of the writer to be the speaker in January and March of this year. How I thank God for the opportunity to know and fellowship with these consecrated business men.

Thousands have been won to Christ in these services. Hundreds have been restored to fellowship with God and hundreds of thousands blessed and drawn closer to the Lord because of the meetings. Moreover other such meetings have sprung up in different cities due to the faith and work of these earnest Christian business men.

It has cost $25,000 to carry on these noon-day meetings in the Loop for the past seventeen months. Not one offering has been taken in the theatre. The collection plates are never passed there. This amount has been given by God's people.

Chicago has never seen nor experienced anything like this since the days of D. L. Moody. To me this is indisputable evidence of God's willingness and ability to revive his people and own and bless his word with the salvation of the lost.

Yes, I firmly believe that it is just as possible to have a revival now as when Paul preached on Mars Hill, provided we are willing to pay the price as set forth in II Chronicles 7:14: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." The Lord is the same yesterday, today and forever, therefore the days of revivals are not over.

We are told that the gates are closed to this field of service. They ARE shut to sensationalism, dogmatism, vulgarism, stereotypeism and formalism; but they are wide open to scriptural evangelism. "The church must evangelize or fossilize," and she is fast realizing this fact. Pastors who have minimized evangelism and criticized evangelists, are now crying for a "Revival." If some of the pastors who have opposed evangelism should discard all members who were converted in revival meetings, they would not have enough left to stir soup for the Ladies' Aid. Evangelism is calling for men and women, Spirit-filled and Spirit-led; men free from sordid greed for gold; men fully surrendered to the task, and definitely endued by the Holy Spirit for the accomplishment of that task; men who have a real passion for the salvation of the lost, and a sublime faith in the power of Jesus Christ to save. God, make of us such men.

We have stressed organization, stewardship and Christian education long enough. Let us stress evangelism, seek first the lost, and all these things shall be added unto us. Let us pay the price and then pray for and expect a God-honoring, Christ-exalting, Bible-reading, family-praying, brother-loving, heart-cleansing, soul-saving revival from heaven. Let us cry out

"Revive thy Work, O Lord,

Thy mighty arm make bare,

Speak with the voice that wakes the dead,

And make thy people hear.

Revive thy Work, O Lord,

Disturb this sleep of death,

Quicken the smoldering embers now

By thine almighty breath.

Revive, thy Work, O Lord,

And give refreshing showers

The glory shall be all thine own

The blessing shall be ours."

Greenville, Tennessee.

"God is Not Dead, But is Living"

By Toyohiko Kagawa

From an Address at the World Y. M. C. A. Conference

I want to give my personal testimony to the living God and his loving kindness through Christ. When I was about ten years old I was sent to a Buddhist temple to study the teaching of Confucius. Every time I came across the passage concerning purity and holiness I said to myself that it was not possible for me to live a pure and holy life. I thought that I was destined to live such a loose life, like those of my father and my elder brother. For after my father died my elder brother had become the heir and the head of our family. He kept many concubines and lived such a licentious life that I could then understand what a prodigal life meant. When I was about fifteen years old my brother lost all his property through his loose living and died in Korea. I was then sent to my uncle's house to live. There I lived like an orphan, a very lonesome life. My life has never been so dark nor my environment so terrible as in those days.

However, about that time I was miraculously led to the Bible class of an American missionary, where I went to learn English. But the more I studied the English Bible, the more real and beautiful the life of Jesus Christ became to me. Before that time I had learned something about the theory of evolution and I concluded that there was no God. I thought that there was no hope, no salvation when once a man had gotten into wicked ways. I thought that that was the end of him. But when that beautiful passage of Jesus Christ came to my ears, ringing like a Christmas bell, new life came into my soul. I was completely changed. Jesus said: Consider the lilies how they grow, they toil not neither do they spin, and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. That gave me an altogether new conception of life. As you know, we have many beautiful flowers in Japan, but until that time I had never considered why flowers were so beautiful. But when I was sick and poor, and left like an orphan in the wilderness of life, the thought of God's handiwork manifested in the beautiful flowers like lilies was an entirely new revelation to me. That led me further to the thought of the real power of the universe, the living God. Then I knew that if God cares even for the humble flowers in the field, even more does he care for man. So I determined to live a simple life like the lilies of the field, trusting God to the uttermost. After that I went to the slums of Kobe. That was about twenty-four years ago. When I recall his most wonderful ways—how he has led me through many dangers and crises all these years, and enabled me to help others who have been in trouble more than I could do in my own power—I cannot but believe that God is not dead but is living.

Now let me tell you what God has done for our nation. A short time ago an American asked me whether we needed Christianity in Japan or not. He told me that Japan already has good religions like Buddhism and Shintoism; why seek for another? Up to the time Protestant Christianity reached Japan seventy-two years ago, we had only a vague idea of what life is. Buddhism taught us that life is but an illusion, that there is only hope beyond our present world. Neither had Shintoism any definite idea of the living God. But when we were taught through the teaching of Christ that the Creator of the universe is our Father and that we are the sons of God, our view of life has completely changed. So, too, with respect to women and children. Up to that time women were looked down upon and forbidden to visit many sacred places; children had no place in home life. But through the coming of Christianity the conception of purity in the home, and loving kindness among neighbors, and movement for peace and temperance became commonplace in Japan.

Many pieces of social welfare and philanthropic work have also been started largely by leading Christians. Polygamy has been almost abolished; licensed quarters for prostitutes are now gradually being done away with. These programs of social reform came into existence only after Christianity came to Japan. For Christ showed us the reality of life, respect for labor, purity of heart, brotherly kindness between men, and peace among nations.

However, after the Great War things began to change. The young men of Japan today are greatly influenced by dialectic materialism. This came to Japan not only as a thought movement, but as a program for action. And social conditions in Japan today are such as to make Marxian theories seem very reasonable. We have centralization of wealth, accumulation of property in a few hands, the profit motive in commerce and industry and the reality of the class struggle. The whole of Japan is influenced by ideas of materialistic and economic determinism. Christian churches are weak and impotent in the face of this great social and industrial chaos. And I feel the same thing is true throughout the whole world.

The present church organizations of the world are facing a crisis. Why? Because we are not bearing the fruit of what Christ has taught us. Our faith has been too individualistic. We go to church simply because our fathers did. Our faith and our daily life have drifted far apart. But believing in the living God means to bring our lives up to God's standard. We must live in God at every moment, and present our bodies and souls acceptable unto him. It is because we have thought that there is no connection between our daily life and our faith that we have been led into this present collapse. We must ask God to capture

As Chief Shipshewana looked on the Banks of the Lake
(See page 10 for Descriptive Article of Shipshewana's Young People's Camp)

our whole being, and to cleanse and purify us. God is merciful and chastens us with his whip. When the Christian Church degenerated into idolatry God raised up Mohammed to show us the form of pure worship. When Christianity became individualistic, as it is today, God chastens us with the threat of Communism. Therefore this is the time for us to repent—to turn from an individualistic Christianity to a Christianity of love. Christ manifested God in his physical body. He lived the life of God. So it must be with us. We need the power to cope with our present problems of unemployment, financial panic, competition, and useless wars among nations. Christ is the only hope of our salvation. Christ was crucified and died for others. This means two things: first, we must kill our selfishness, and secondly, we must die for others' sake because we are all brothers and have the same father in heaven. There should not be two gospels—individualistic and socialistic. If a man lives up to the Cross of Jesus Christ, God is manifested in his own life. The reason why we do not feel the reality of the living God is because we do not love others. "Whoever loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love." When we repent of our selfishness and seek to live up to the standard of the Cross of Jesus, then we shall realize the living God in our own soul.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

PAGE MR. HAYES (AGAIN!)

Having turned out a lot of cheap pictures lately—due to economic necessity—the producers plan to recoup lost prestige by giving more of their stars the air, in a radio sense. So you can expect to get more of "IT" over the ether, not to mention the footlights. Meanwhile movie advertising has gone bad again. Nearly-nude women in lewd poses are all the rage in lithographs and posters. It used to be called "The World, the Flesh and the Devil" but today the second member of the firm seems to have become the ruling voice in Screen ballyhoo.—Pathfinder.

NARCOTICS IN MEDICINE

Narcotic addiction is the focus of a great deal of attention, says the Journal of the American Medical Association. Educational, medical, and social agencies are making studies of it, and are suggesting various measures to eradicate it. The League of Nations has found that the medical use of narcotics in the United States surpasses that of any other nation. This has been explained by some as due to a greater sensitivity of the nervous system of the Americans, as a result of the prevailing high speed of our living. Others ascribe it to the unscrupulousness of physicians in prescribing drugs indiscriminately because of recklessness or personal gain. Welfare and correction authorities in this country, who are familiar with the life-stories of many drug addicts, have stated that a large number of these claim to have taken drugs first on a physician's prescription, the appetite continuing after the need for narcotics had passed.—Christian Endeavor World.

DIVORCES FALLING OFF DURING THE DEPRESSION

Divorces in the United States have declined during the depression years 1930 and 1931 from the total of 201,468 granted in 1929, according to a "Statistical Analysis of American Divorce," by Dr. Alfred Cahen, just published by the Columbia University Press. At the 1929 rate, a divorce was granted every two minutes in this country. The decline in 1930 was 10,000 cases, while complete figures are not available for 1931.

About eighteen per cent of all marriages in this country, or more than one in every six, end in divorces directly affecting more than 500,000 men, women and children every year, says Dr. Cahen. The United States, while the population grew approximately 300 has had it virtually since Colonial days, he adds.

From 1867 to 1929, divorces increased about 2,000 per cent in the United States while the population grew approximately 300 per cent and marriages 400 per cent. At its present rate of compounding, about three per cent annually, Dr. Cahen estimated that by 1965 fifty-one per cent of American marriages will be ending in divorce.

The Pacific Coast states are shown to have three times the divorce rate of the Atlantic Seaboard.

"Children preserve the home," continues Dr. Cahen, "since only eight per cent of American married couples possessing children end in the divorce courts, while seventy-one per cent of the childless marriages terminates in divorce."—New York Times.

PEASANTS KILLED WHILE AT PRAYER

Shot down by machine gun and rifle fire as they knelt praying on the banks on the Russian side of the Dneister river, while church bells tolled in the orthodox Ascension day service on the Rumanian side, 100 peasants were killed and scores were wounded by soviet guards, according to stories in the Bucharest press wired to the Chicago Tribune.

Most of the victims were Moldavians whose relatives live on the Rumanian side of the Dneister, which separates Russia from Rumania. Hundreds of persons have been killed in the last few months by Russian patrols while trying to escape over the frozen river into Rumania, but the latest killings were especially tragic. The Dneister is no longer frozen and the peasants were not trying to escape from Russia. Their mistake was in praying.—The Baptist.

United Support of Our Denominational Ideals and Interests

(Continued from page 4)

est privilege and most bounden duty is to seek continually and by every legitimate means to propagate our faith; give us the spirit of unity and of cooperation in doing the work of the church, both because it is our Christian duty and because it is the secret to power and blessedness; and finally give us the vision to see the whole task of the church and the devotion to do our part in that whole task. Hear our prayer, O Lord, as we challenge our own hearts with the slogan: THE WHOLE CHURCH AT ITS WHOLE TASK WITH ITS WHOLE MIGHT.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

1 Pet. 2:21—"for even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." Moffatt reads thus: "It is your vocation; for when Christ suffered for you, he left you an example, and you must follow his footsteps." And the following verses from Moffatt are so rich with meaning that I include them. "He committed no sin, no guile was ever found upon his lips; he was reviled and made no retort, he suffered and never threatened, but left everything to him who judges justly." In John 13, Jesus says, "For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you."

I was attending school in my old county-seat home at the time the new court house was building. A huge statue of an Indian was being carved out of a great granite rock, which was placed on the south side over the main entrance. The workman had a small model of his figure near him, and I watched him evening after evening as he would measure some portion, and then with mallet and chisel would cut away at the stone—some ten feet high. He was working by model. It is like that with man; in every age, in every field he works by model. A sincere and devout worshiper necessarily becomes like the object of his worship. If his god is cruel, he will be cruel. If his god be loving, he will manifest more and more that trait. The great God of heaven and earth has placed before his children a perfect model; "he left you an example, and you must follow his footsteps." No one is ever led astray by following the Christian Model. God has not only given us a model Savior, but one who taxes our greatest energies as we chisel away at these crude lives of ours, shaping them for time and eternity.

"There is so much bad in the best of us,
And so much good in the worst of us,
That it scarcely behooves any of us,
To speak ill of the rest of us."

Then, some of us believe that God has given us a model church. The story in the Acts of the Apostles as woven around the Jerusalem church would lead to the conclusion that that church was as near a model as Divine Authority could make out of imperfect human beings. Some of us can not see THE CHURCH for the churches, however. God has given us model Christians to work by—perhaps, I should say—to work up to. Paul in 1 Thess. 1:6, 7—has this to say, "And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction with joy of the Holy Ghost: So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia." Oh, yes; a model Savior, a model church, model Christians; all held before rough and crude men by Gods' MODEL

BOOK. If that is not enough to satisfy on this point read Phil. 4:9—"Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you." At least, that is some long road to travel before we reach a standard like that.

All things equal, his work is best whose model is best. Mohammed has millions of followers; but no Mohammedan has ever approached Christianity in its loftiness of spirit. His model is wrong. Is your model Christ, or human creeds? Believe me, there is some difference; and I know "Whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." Not what, but "WHOM". Then, his what.

Then, he copies best who keeps his model closest to him. Men have tried following him a long way off. If I know anything about the indifference, the lack of fire and zeal in the church of today it can be traced to wrangles about things permitted to come between the Christian and his Christ. The fog has become too heavy, and Christ has been shut out. He is not permitted to speak, neither can he shine. "If any man open the door, I will come in to him," is the method of Jesus.

It goes without saying, therefore, that he succeeds best who continues to copy. Characters must be shaped. This is the age—the dispensation—allotted for that very purpose. "The night cometh when no man can work." If you turn back, then what? If your health gives way, then what? If you linger on a sick-bed, then what? The funeral and the grave, then what? Eternity has dawned, and there is no night there, then what? But one thing; continue to copy the divine model.

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Nehemiah

Nehemiah, the son of Hachaliah and the brother of Hanani, is the last of the great characters of the Old Testament narrative around whose career the last fragments of Jewish history are enfolded. The book is largely autobiographical and is a striking revelation of the character whose name it bears.

The first appearance of the Nehemiah of this writing—there are others—is at Shushan, the Persian winter palace. There he is a trusted foreign servant—a cup bearer to King Artaxerxes Longimanus. Though comfortably located there, in the midst of luxurious surroundings and more than desirable circumstances, yet his heart was ceaselessly living in the home of his fathers which had suffered almost complete devastation. With a heavy spirit, disinterestedly patriotic, he sought the advice of the king in behalf of kinsmen.

"I have wept, I have fasted, and prayed
To the great and terrible God,
For this city of mine that in ruin is laid,
And my brethren who smart by his rod.

"And now I beseech thee, O king!
If favor I find in thy sight,
That I may revisit my home, where the wing
Of destruction is spread like the night."

In the midst of a depression that was really depressing, the valiant Nehemiah, after much prayer and counsel, boldly ventured forth toward the land of the setting sun to organize his countrymen within the former walls of Zion. This he accomplished in a marvelous way, dealing prudently with his enemies and correcting the abuses, I presume, of his friends. He walked in continual prayerfulness as the book concerning him attests. It begins and opens with prayer. At the very end the great humility of Nehemiah shines forth like the evening star in the worthy prayer which reads in part: "Remember me, O my God, for good." That prayer was answered. The centuries remember that he had no blot on his escutcheon.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Nehemiah.
2. When and Where Written. Near 430 B. C. In Palestine.
3. To Whom Written. To the returning captives.

4. Occasion. The rebuilding of Jerusalem.

5. Authenticity. Nehemiah collected the materials of this book and added his own auto-biography.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Rebuilding of the Walls. 1-7.
2. The Reading of the Law. 8-10.
3. The Re-establishment of the Cities. 11-13.

III. THE CONTENTS OF THE BOOK

The book of Nehemiah relates how the famous cup-bearer of the Shushan palace was called and commissioned of God to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. His mission is shrouded in the atmosphere of prayer. The work progresses in the midst of hindrances—external and internal—until the building is completed. Then internal regulations were set up in the city. A new genealogical record was secured for the purification of the temple priestly and Levitical line; a spiritual revival was staged; precautionary and protective measures were set up; and a moral house-cleaning was inaugurated.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Restoration. Consolidation.
2. Key Verses. 1:11; 2:20; 4:6; 9:19-29.
3. Key Chapters. 1, 8, 13.
4. Key Ideas. Pray and Work. Work and Pray.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The writing evinces the conditions existing at the end of the period of the captivity of the Jews. The moral order of the day is disclosed by the prophet Malachi in addition to the revelations contained in our present study. Upon the pure Word of God a revival of real religion is based and permanent reforms are introduced. Faith and fearlessness are the chief characteristics of the aggressive Nehemiah. Continued prayer and increased power are everywhere in evidence. The work accomplished is a mighty vindication of the righteousness of Jehovah.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

The remarkable work of Nehemiah in rebuilding Jerusalem and preserving a remnant of God's people, is splendidly predictive of the day when Christ, a greater than Ezra or Zerubbabel, shall restore Jerusalem anew and become for his remnant a greater "Consolation of Jehovah." Nehemiah was a cup-bearer in the Shushan palace; we are cup-bearers in the temple of the earth; but Christ is the only true Cup-Bearer of the race.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

(Ezra and Nehemiah were contemporary reformers—both books, bearing their respective names, are really one writing.)

1. The Character and Work of Ezra.

The secret of the beauty of Ezra's character is found in the fact that he "prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments." (7-10). He was profoundly conscientious and well-balanced in his judgment of conditions existing in his own day. He never failed to acknowledge divine favor, "according to the good hand of God upon him."

His work includes the important duties of a scribe, reformer, teacher, and founder of the synagogue system of worship. He brought the Law of Moses to the attention of all the people and repudiated intermarriage with heathen wives.

2. The Character and Work of Nehemiah.

Nehemiah was a man marked by the archers, yet they never even wounded him. His character is almost stainless. His was a lofty patriotism, remarkable in its sacrifices and unselfishness, going to the limit of sharing burdens and sorrows he never would have needed to bear. But he knew no we-are-we-spirit and they-are-they psychology, and consequently, he became a spiritual benefactor to all mankind. He was honorable, just, humble, high-minded, and hospitable. Furthermore, he was a man who sorrowed for others, who prayed for others who denied himself for others; who worked himself and inspired others to work for others; who suffered persecution for others; who remained undisturbed and serene in the presence of his enemies and others; who gave God credit for what ever wisdom he manifested under God in behalf of others. Men followed him day and night because he was a man of the people who led them out of their distresses and hopeless condition. His reforms endured because he began with a revival of Mosaic religion—a permanent basis of reform in Israel—and he concluded his efforts in the midst of a halo of glory which has not faded until this day.

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.

MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

Tribute to "Vision-of-a-Lion" by the Shores of Shipshewana

(Adapted from the Shipshewana Handbook)

When poor old homesick Chief Shipshewana was permitted, in company with a few members of his tribe, in 1839 to return from the Kansas reservation to which all the tribe had been escorted by government troops the year before, he assuredly had no thought that some 92 years later—in 1931—the pale face successors on his pristine hunting ground would erect a tribute in everlasting granite to the love he bore his native haunts.

But the monument has been placed, and on Memorial Day, 1931 the dedicatory exercises attracted the largest crowd that ever assembled at Shipshewana Lake, 22 miles east of Elkhart. LaGrange, Middlebury and other communities in that region arranged their annual memorial observances so as not to interfere with attendance at the unveiling of the monument.

The Shipshewana Chamber of Commerce, which took the initiative in the movement, launched some years ago, to erect the testimonial, had general charge of the arrangements. The Modoc tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men of Elkhart, conducted the actual ceremony of unveiling, and provided as speaker one of the state officers of the order, who was accompanied to the lake by other leaders of the state organization.

The dedication day program was opened with a May pole dance by young girls of the community, under the direction of Miss Edna Barkholder, of Berne, Indiana, who had previously taught in the Shipshewana school. R. L. Case made a short address on local Indian history; the Rev. William Sonney, of Algonac, Michigan, a Potawatomi minister to a congregation of Potawatomis, talked on "The Attitude and Gratitude of the Indian of Today," followed by music by a cornet band of Middlebury-Shipshewana musicians under the direction of Joseph Artley of Elkhart.

Indians Were There

Additional attractions were the presence on the grounds of between fifteen and twenty Potawatomi men, women and children from the reservation at Athens, Michigan, all in Indian costume—possibly the same tribe of basket-weavers that added glamor to Elkhart's centennial celebration eight years ago—and the display of the $2 000 collection of Indian relics owned by R. E. Dalby, of South Bend. The Rev. Mr. Sonney preached a sermon in the Brethren tabernacle, not far from the monument, on the Sunday following the unveiling.

The giant boulder of gray granite stands nine feet high above the concrete base in which it is imbedded about one foot, and is three feet, eight inches wide and approximately the same depth. It weighs between eight and nine tons, and it took Contractor Mel Weaver of Scott and his house-moving outfit three days to bring it from the Deeter farm, four miles east of Brighton, Indiana, the twenty-three miles to its present site. Regular as it is shaped on three of its sides, it is a fact that not a chisel has touched it except to drill the holes by which the bronze plaque is attached to it. In this respect alone it is a most unusual geologic specimen. It was erected just as it was left by the glacier that slowly through the ages bore it unnumbered miles in its crystal bosom, and in succeeding ages as slowly it melted away and left it in the terrain that in still later ages was to become a Hoosier farm. Farmer Deeter, having no use for it, offered it without price to a number of organizations and individuals, including a Goshen resident who had expressed a wish for it to mark his family burial lot. But all considered the task and cost of removing it too great—until the Shipshewana Chamber of Commerce learned of it. The setting of the stone on its concrete base was done, gratuitously, by Jonathan Farver.

Church Donates Site

It stands on an artificial, grass-covered mound 60 feet in diameter and five feet high, in the fork of the roads at the foot of the hill at the entrance to the Brethren camp grounds. The triangular site was donated by the church association. At the foot of the mound, in front of the plaque, is an eight-foot circular pool from the center of which pours a constant stream from an artesian well. Stepping stones are installed to enable visitors to drink at the fountain.

On the plaque, under the medallion of an Indian chieftain's head, is the following inscription:

In the memory of
CHIEF SHIPSHEWANA
and his band of

Pottawattamie Indians removed from this reservation
September 4, 1838, and escorted to Kansas by a company of soldiers.

One year later the heartbroken chief was allowed to return to his old camping grounds on the banks of BEAUTIFUL

SHIPSHEWANA LAKE

Where he died in 1841

SHUP-SHE-WAH-NO

in Indian language means

"VISION OF A LION"

It was after much correspondence by H. J. Bontrager that the local committee learned the real spelling and meaning of the name borne by the revered chieftain. This correspondence led through Indiana University to Columbia University and thence to the Smithsonian Institute and from there to J. P. Dunn's interesting book, "True Indian Stories." In this book Mr. Bontrager found:

"... Most curious of all is the name Shipshewana given to a lake and its outlet stream in La Grange county. Wah-wee-assee (Full Moon, literally the Round One), a grandson and namesake of the old chief for whom Lake Wawasee was named, more commonly known as Thomas Topash—his mother, old Wawasee's daughter, having married a Miami man named Topash (sweating like a pitcher of cold water on a warm day)—says this is properly Shup-she-wah-no, and means 'Vision of a Lion.'

Insists He Saw It

"Whatever a Potawatomi sees in a vision after feasting is called 'wah-no' and this Indian saw a lion. To my suggestion that lions were not found in this country and that his name must have been given long before a Potawatomi ever saw a lion, he replied: 'That is nothing: the Indians see everything in their vision. They saw the whites long before they came to this country. They have seen all the animals at the bottom of the sea, that nobody ever saw. This man saw a fierce wild beast with a big head and mane, and afterward when the Indian saw a lion they knew it was a shup-she.'

Little if anything is of record concerning Chief Shipshewana so far as local delvers in history are aware. But older residents of the Shipshewana district, including Jonathan Farver, remember some of the things concerning his life as they heard them from the lips of Johnny Thorp, who died about 36 years ago when more than 80 years old. Thorp, a white, had joined Shipshewana's band when quite young, being an unattached pioneer. He went with the tribe to Kansas and was a member of the small entourage that accompanied their chief back to Indiana, and after the death of the chief Thorp settled on a small place a few miles east of Shipshewana. He testified to the loyal friendship the old chief always manifested to the whites who were steadily assuming control of the land of his fathers. What is recalled of Thorp's reminiscences seems to be about all there is of available history of old "Vision of a Lion."

The Scene of the Vesper Worship

Chief's Burial Ground?

It is confidently believed that Shipshewana's bones repose in a spot not far from the lake—probably on the high ground just south of the Brethren resort. For much of the site of the resort is supposed to have been under water 90 years ago. To this high ground, not long ago R. E. Dalby, the South Bend collector of relics, led a group of Shipshewana men in the belief that he might find where Indian wigwams stood, on this, his first visit to the lake. After a brief exploration, he began to call attention to half-covered rocks which bore indisputable evidence of having been heated by artificial fire, even after the lapse of decades. Then he scratched around in the earth near these stones and brought up bits of Indian pottery. The stones, he explained, had been repeatedly heated in campfires, to be dropped into bowls hewn from logs to heat water for domestic purposes. Wherever these stones were found, he said, there were likely to be fragments of pottery or other aboriginal utensils or trappings. The Potawatomis were not skilled in making pottery of great thermal resistance, hence their use of the wooden bowl, and the heated stone.

Following Mr. Dolby's suggestion, people of the neighborhood frequently hunt for relics about the lake, and often are rewarded by additions to their collections.

(Editorial Note: The above material has been taken from the Elkhart Truth dated April 29, 1931. It contains an adequate description of Indian backgrounds and tradition circulating in the vicinity of Lake Shipshewana. It is incorporated in this book as an aid to the initial reader of the historic facts concerning our Brethren Retreat. I have investigated personally the historic features of the above lines and have found them to be correct.—M. A. S.)

Do not look on your work as a dull duty. If you choose you can make it interesting. Throw your heart into it, master its meaning, trace out the causes and precious history, consider it in all its bearings, think how many even the humblest labor may benefit, and there is scarcely one of our duties which we may not look to with enthusiasm. You will get to love your work, and if you do it with delight you will do it with ease. Even if at first you find this impossible, if for a time it seems mere drudgery, this may be just what you require; it may be good like mountain air to brace up your character.—Lord Avebury.

Monument in Memory of Chief Shipshewana

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the

Family Altar

with

Thoburn C. Lyon

THE CALL OF MOSES

(Lesson for July 10)

Lesson Text: Exodus 3:10-15; 4:10-12; Golden Text: Exodus 3:12

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

God Cares. Exodus 2:23-25

Perhaps the Israelites in Egypt had not been overly careful of their service and devotion to Jehovah until at last the oppression became severe. Frequently we forget to call upon God until faced by some great need; but when we do need him (and what time is there when we do not need him!) what comfort to know that he hears, and cares! God remembered his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and he will not forget his covenant with us. He has promised: "Before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." Let us praise—the God who hears—CARES!

TUESDAY

The Burning Bush. Exodus 3:1-9

The bush was not actually burning, or it would have been consumed. It was simply an ordinary bush, glorified with the brightness of the presence of the Lord. Used of God in this manner, it yet had some part in the calling of one of God's greatest leaders. In much the same way, we may be the most ordinary of mortals, yet if we give ourselves over fully to the service of the Lord and allow him to fill our lives with the glory of his presence, he may use us largely in calling others to his service. Let us bow before his glorious presence and yield ourselves to him who clothe himself with light as with a garment!

WEDNESDAY

The Call of Moses. Exodus 3:10-15

God called Moses for one of his greatest tasks, but before he accepted there were two questions to which he sought a definite answer. First, v. 11, "Who am I?" and second, v. 13, Who is God? What a difference it would make in the world today if each one would only pause long enough to answer these same two questions for himself! Once a man comes into definite knowledge of God and of his own relation to God, no task for him is too great. Let us pray that we and others may have a right understanding in this matter.

THURSDAY

Objections Answered. Exodus 4:1-9

Moses, apparently, was not greatly different from us, and was a bit slow in yielding to the service of God. However, God displayed something of his power, and promised to be with him in his work and to use his mighty power in his behalf. And strong in the knowledge of the presence of the Lord, Moses went forth. Today God does not often give us a special sign such as he gave Moses, but we have known his power through its workings in the world for many centuries and through having felt it in our own lives. If we do his bidding he has also promised to be with us and to strengthen us (Mt. 28:19, 20). Shall we not go forth into all the world, in the strength of his might, to do his bidding?

FRIDAY

God's Spokesman. Exodus 4:10-17

In the arrangement by which Aaron was to be "mouth" for Moses we have an illustration of the New Testament figure by which we are all members in particular of the body of Christ: some hands, some feet, some mouth, each in their respective place of service, but all members of one body. It may be unimportant what part of his body we constitute, but it is important that we do not cripple the body of Christ. Whether spokesman or servant, let us serve.

SATURDAY

The Call of Jeremiah. Jer. 1:14-19

The call to Jeremiah was not greatly different from God's call to Moses, or from his call to us. A great danger was again threatening his people, and God called him to warn them and to try to save them from their approaching doom. He warned Jeremiah that his task would not be easy, and would not be appreciated; surely the task of Moses was never appreciated by those for whom he labored. Neither may we expect our own efforts to be appreciated, but we must be true to the call of God, and if so we are assured of his supporting presence and blessing.

SUNDAY

The Call of Isaiah. Isa. 6:1-8

When Isaiah saw God he realized his own need; being cleansed with fire from God's altar, he then offered himself to God's service. Let us pray today that the church of Jesus Christ may be purged and cleansed and made ready for service—and do not forget to pray that this may be true of our own selves!

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana	 CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio
F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. Duball Ave., South Bend, Ind.

Selected Christian Endeavor Plans

A HOME MISSION EVENING

By Robert C. Schaele

A missionary committee planned a home mission evening by sending the following ticket to every society member:

C. E. Railroad
Good for One Continuous Passage via

Help-Ye-One-Another Division
Train leaves

.....Station

Tuesday evening, April 22, at eight o'clock

The group assembled in an upper room of the church, and the "make-believe" program was announced. The conductor (chairman of the committee) called "All aboard; train leaves on lower level." The entire group descended to the room below, where the chairs were arranged to represent a station. While awaiting the train, hymns were sung from memory. During the singing one committee member presented some pictures of a mission school in Kentucky. These were passed around, while a description of the mission was given. Another mentioned the hospital unit, and a third told of meeting a graduate from the mission high school and what the school meant to the youth of that region. Prayer (the power to move ahead) followed. All boarded the now waiting train (chairs arranged on the platform to represent the train), fares were collected (offering), and the train was off. As all would disembark at various stations, it was decided to sing a parting hymn.—C. E. World.

Flushing, New York.

STARTING A CAMPAIGN

For Lookout Committees

The following letter, written by John Denis, is such a fine example of an appeal for an increase campaign that we are glad to pass it on to the societies and unions.

"The first time you ever came to a Christian Endeavor meeting did you come by yourself or were you invited? It's about ten to one you were invited.

"Ever since the reorganization of our society it has improved steadily both in attendance and activity. Today we are rated as one of the finest and most active in the Bay District. We have a good meeting place, a prominent church to sponsor us, a society paper, the county union song leader, a former State union officer, the State oratorical contest winner, a big group of active workers, and a good reputation. There's one thing, however, that we can't say we've had, and that brings us back to the first paragraph: We've never had a visitors' day and invited all of the fellows and girls in this district who should be here, and probably would, except that they haven't been invited.

"The only thing you will have to do is write the name and address of every person that you think should be a member of our society on the back of this letter and bring it with you Sunday."

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.,
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

Answers to Prayer in the Mission Field

By Dr. Florence Newberry Gribble

(Continuation of Article Published May 21, 1932)

But not alone is God faithful in confirming the Word by signs following, in our going forth to his service, in caring for us in illness, in giving us conversions; but he is faithful in provision for our daily needs.

There was a time in South Africa when two missionaries were penniless. The Lord had graciously provided a place for them in Idutywa, a room with kitchen adjoining. Food was the only problem. Even the wood had been supplied. But there ensued twenty-three days when the missionaries were penniless in a strange land, when war conditions aggravated the situation, when no one knew of the intensity of their need. Twenty-three days of the basket system, twenty-three days of the wondrous manifestation of the faithfulness of God, as his eye and his alone looked down upon the need of his children and prompted the hearts of his servants, one by one, each on a particular day, to supply the need. At the end of the twenty-three days, a clock struck in heaven, money came in the mails, and the baskets ceased!

And then how marvellously he has been with us in protection! In the days of the uprising in 1928 at Yaloke, when a missionary, cut off from her station detained at a military camp, learned of the governor's plan to evacuate the station, prayer was made without ceasing unto God. The lieutenant departed from Yaloke for the military camp with full intentions of carrying out the governor's orders for evacuation, only to find that the Captain from another district, fearing Yaloke might need protection, had preceded him, and ignorant of the governor's orders, had established military occupation without requiring the missionaries to leave. And so in answer to prayer God had brought about the impossible and the humanly inevitable in protecting his own.

Some time previous to Yaloke's surrender on Christmas Day, 1929, there was a feeling in the hearts of the loyal group of missionaries at Yaloke, of the need of vindication. What could they do but lean upon him who had so graciously promised to bring forth their righteousness as the sun and their judgment as the noon-day? Was it not in answer to believing prayer that Yaloke's surrender was made possible through the direct intervention of the missionaries themselves? And so he is with us in vindication.

Again he is with us in renewal. Alone, ill, a missionary lay sweltering in a Donala Hotel. The end of a term of suffering, the exhaustion and depletion were intense. There was not even strength to take the approaching boat. And yet—the last details were arranged, an escort to the boat was provided, a cabin assigned, the last on the boat, and the very best for one suffering from insolation, strength was renewed, and Europe was reached in a comparative degree of health. Oh, the renewals of body and mind continually vouchsafed to the missionary! How they do exemplify the faithfulness of God!

Again he is with us in service.

We look back now with infinite thankful-

A PERSONAL CONTEST

For Intermediates

A New York society tried the following contest, with splendid results. It was not a contest between sides, but an individual affair.

Five points were given for each of the following items:

Daily prayer throughout the week, daily Bible-reading throughout the week, attendance at the meeting, attendance on time, prayer at the meeting, reading Scripture in the meeting, and talk in the meeting.

One point was given for each chapter of the Bible read through the week, ten points for bringing a new member, twenty points for leading a meeting, and the leader of the best meeting was awarded fifty points.

Several members read more than one hundred chapters of the Bible each week, and averaged 145 points a week. All of them read passages from Scripture at each meeting and gave talks. There was no difficulty about finding leaders.

Mr. Clinton Davidson, Jr., of New Haven, Connecticut, who furnishes the above information, says that one must take care that the items are perfectly clear and unambiguous, and that the rules are strictly observed.—C. E. World.

ness on our early experiences as a missionary physician. There was Kihika, with tubercular bones and fractured femur, how wonderfully God healed him from both in spite of our lack of skill! An anaesthetic by an untrained anaesthetist, a reduction of the fracture and application of splints, anti-tubercular treatment, and prayer! God did not despise nor disown the means, but far beyond their possibility he graciously answered prayer!

But more than the joy of answered prayer on earth will be the mighty joy of answered prayer in heaven!

When my daughter, aged six, was lost in Long Beach, she prayed that God would direct her to the right house to obtain help. She felt she was directed. Going to the house, she rang the door bell, and asked the gentleman who answered the door:

"Will you please take me home?"

"Nothing would give me greater pleasure," responded he, "but I don't know where you live."

"Oh, I always carry my address in my pocket," she replied, carefully unpinning it, and handing it to him.

And so it came to pass that only a few minutes later than she should have normally arrived, the little girl was lifted out of an automobile and returned to the dear friends then caring for her, and to her mother, who had arrived almost simultaneously from a preaching tour.

Later, remonstrating with my child. I said: "You must never again try to come home alone from kindergarten. Always come with the little girls who are coming this way."

"Mamma," she said soberly. "I want you to promise me one thing." "Promise you, my child?" I said, "is it not for you to promise mother?"

But with the unswerving determination of childhood, she replied, "Promise me, mother, that you won't wo-w-y" (worry). "But how can a mother help worrying when her child is lost?"

"But, mother," (triumphantly), don't you know that if I should get lost, or even stolen, we'd meet ourselves in heaven?"

"Yes, we shall. 'meet ourselves' in heaven in answer to the prayer of faith. There may be our sons and daughters, for whose salvation we have prayed while they were carelessly straying from the pathway of his discipline.

There shall be many other loved ones whose salvation we have been enabled to claim with the prayer of faith.

There, too, shall be many ransomed ones from the heathen tribes among whom we have labored. With James Gribble let us even now exclaim:

"I shall be content with the lowest seat in heaven if only there I may sit and see the redeemed of the Lord come in from those tribes where I have been privileged to be a pioneer missionary, and if I should be given a crown, so unworthy would I deem myself to possess it that I should only cast it at my Master's feet."

Sunnyside Washington.

ture and one for Bible reading. A number won Testaments for having committed to memory a certain number of Bible quotations. Also, each Sunday the Superintendent, Brother Ralph Armentrout, has been drilling the school on Bible verses and the books of the Bible. The books were learned by groups, the books of law, books of history, books of poetry and books of prophecy.

Our W. M. S. is not largely attended, but we have never missed a devotional meeting since our organization a number of years ago and we do raise a very nice sum of money for a small society. We never resort to suppers or anything of that nature to raise our money. We believe that God is pleased more with the free-will offerings of his children.

At our prayer meeting some time ago, we completed a course in soul-winning. The course was taught by the pastor whose chief desire seems to be to lead souls to the Lord Jesus Christ. A course of this nature is certainly of great value to anyone who desires to be used of God to save souls, and this should be the desire of all God's children. Type-written copies of the course were given to all those who attended prayer meeting. This meant quite a lot of work for Sister Maconaghy, but she is very much at home with the typewriter, and seemed not to mind the task.

As a new feature of the work here, three months ago, Brother Maconaghy organized a community Bible class to be conducted at the parsonage. In this course, regular Bible school subjects are taken up. During the past quarter, the subject of "Inspiration" has been studied. The attendance has been good for a class of this kind and has been regular, and those who have attended feel that the course has been very instructive and of such a nature as to strengthen faith in God. It is worth much to know and realize that every word, jot, and tittle of the Bible are God-breathed. Two examinations were given during the course which served to clinch the facts already learned.

On Saturday evening before Easter, we had our regular spring communion service which was very solemn and impressive.

Please pray for us that the work of the Lord may be done acceptably here, and his Name continuously glorified.

LELIA ARNOLD,
Corresponding Secretary.

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

Jesus Saves! Jesus Saves! Right here in Clay City, Indiana, the Lord has his mighty works to perform. We are rejoicing here in the demonstration of his power. Rev. R. Paul Miller, our evangelist, who labored with us for three weeks proved as usual to be the mighty force and untiring worker that he always is. No effort was too great for him, no task was left untried. Nor were his efforts in vain.

Praise the Lord, results were obtained! This is always true when God's people are really sincere and consecrated to the Lord. The harvest of souls consists of four splendid boys between 10 and 12 years old; two sweet little girls about 9 years old; three lovely young ladies and three fine young men; one mother (the mother of one of the boys baptized); two grandparents, the grandparents, the grandfather and grandmother of one of the young ladies baptized. Then there were two reconsecrations, one fine elderly lady and a splendid young chap.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

It has been some time since a general report has been given from the work here; not due, however, to the fact that there was nothing to report, but, it seems that time passes so quickly that a number of months can slip by before we scarcely realize it.

Since the last general report was given we have had a change in pastors, due to the fact that our former pastor, Brother M. D. Early, was called to another field of labor. Just two or three days prior to brother and Sister Early's departure, Brother and Sister Hill Maconaghy, a young couple from the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, arrived to take charge of the work. These young people have proved themselves to be faithful students of the Word, both having graduated from the Philadelphia School of the Bible. We appreciate very much Brother Maconaghy's knowledge of the Bible, and his faithfulness in declaring the same.

The work in general is moving along very nicely. Our services are as follows: Wednesday evening prayer service, Saturday evening Bible class, and on Sunday morning Sunday school and the regular church services, and on Sunday evening Christian Endeavor. Our W. M. S. meets once a month. The regular services of the church are fairly well attended considering the fact that we are a country congregation, with some members living quite a distance from the church and having no means of conveyance except horses and buggies. Also at this season of the year the country people have quite a hard physical strain to undergo.

In our Bible class some time ago Brother Maconaghy finished the book of Daniel, which proved to be a very deep and interesting study and very timely for the age in which we live, since it seems as if we are on the verge of the second advent of Christ. At the present time, we are studying the Messianic Psalms. Our pastor studies very hard to bring out the rich truths contained in these Psalms. Anything pertaining to our Lord and Savior should be of much interest to all of us who are God's children.

Our Christian Endeavor is divided into two departments, the Senior and Intermediate societies. The two departments have their meetings separate. Sister Maconaghy has charge of the Intermediate Christian Endeavor and she is certainly a hard and willing worker, not only in Christian Endeavor but in every department of church work. The Seniors will have to admit that Mrs. Maconaghy is getting ahead with her young people. The attendance has been quite good recently and we know that with such efficient leadership, the lives of these young people will be developed for Christian service. Sister Maconaghy has charge, also, of the beginners' department in Sunday school.

In our Sunday school an effort has been put forth to encourage Bible reading and Scripture memorizing. There have been two contests, one for the memorizing of Scrip-

What a glorious ingathering this is! What a thrill it was for the pastor to have the privilege of baptising one after the other in that sacred ordinance! What an inspiring spectacle it was to behold—when with the church nearly full, on a beautiful Sunday afternoon, following a wonderful sermon on the "Blessed Hope"—sons, daughters, mothers, grandchildren, and grandparents, all followed the example and the command of Christ by picturing in baptism the death of the old sinful self and the resurrection of the new creation!

Twelve in all were baptised that glorious Sunday afternoon. Two more await baptism. Surely the Lord has visited us and been gracious to us. The Lord has used Brother Miller to work a great revival among us. For not only have we had twelve additions and two reconsecrations but the way has been opened for future work. Many churchless people have been brought to light and we feel that with cultivation we shall reap a further harvest in the not too far distant future.

Furthermore, the faithful members themselves have felt an awakening within their hearts and have been drawn closer to their Master, so that now they are in better condition to go forward in the work.

Needless to say, all problems have not been solved here, there is much to be done yet, changes to be made and old things to be made new. But we are on our way to a good start and with the Lord's help and the prayers of the brotherhood the church of Clay City shall go forward upholding the Cross of Christ in these days of apostasy.

W. B. KING, Pastor,
Clay City, Indiana.

THE REVIVAL AT CLAY CITY, INDIANA

One year ago we began the work which finally led up to this meeting. At that time we endeavored to help this Clay City church to a pastor. They had been without a leader for some time and the circumstances surrounding their work and conditions in general had a rather discouraging effect upon these good people. However, during this past year developments came about which finally made it possible for this church to call Rev. Bertram King, just graduated from the Louisville Baptist Seminary, as pastor.

Brother King was a member of the First church of Philadelphia during the six years of my pastorate there and it was a pleasure indeed to be able to see him installed as pastor of Clay City church. He is well equipped by training for the work that is before him and he is also a very capable young man and is already loved of his people.

There is a real future for this work in Clay City largely through young people, and the pastor and his most excellent and capable wife are already bringing about splendid results in the gathering together of young folks in active work in the church. The Clay City church has as great a field as any church. There are scores of homes that are untouched by any Christian work whatever at the present time. These constitute a very real challenge to those people and I believe that they are going to accept the challenge and seek to win others far and wide.

The splendid spirit which was displayed on the part of the people during these three weeks of meetings, their efforts to bring others to Christ were most commendable and the most favorable element in it all was that they were generally determined that this work of soul winning in which they have been so active for the last three weeks shall continue throughout the future. This spirit will mean great things for their future. There are some of God's best folks in Clay City and it is a real pleasure to be with them and enjoy their fellowship and hospitality.

It was through the kindness of these folks and especially Brother and Sister C. C. Roush, with whom I made my home while there, that it was made possible for me to have my daughter Martha with me for one week during the meetings. I will have been home just one week from Christmas to the 10th of July. Therefore, many will understand the real pleasure and privilege that was mine in having one of my children with me for a few days.

The homes and the hearts of these people were open and they were all willing to do anything asked of them to help bring others to Christ. A few of the victories won in this meeting will long be remembered by myself as simply the gaining of trophies by the grace of God.

I feel confident that God's blessing will abide upon both the pastor and the people to the accomplishment of a great work for himself in Clay City. Though the church here has been established for many years, yet the field has never been in any real sense reached for Christ.

R. PAUL MILLER.

"CLIMACTERIC PRAYER"

We are looking all around the religious world for suggestions that will help get the church out of the slough of despond and discouragement, and, in many cases, out of indifference. Perhaps we will find at our very door-yard the treasure that we have been seeking, and which will give us the power to do the big work the church is set to do and before which it has seemed helpless. It is not some new method, or new leadership, or new message; it is a new connection with Almighty Power that it needs, and that it can find within its own portals and within the homes of its membership. What it needs is prayer, more earnest and persistent prayer.

But we had not intended writing an editorial on this subject at this time, but merely to call attention to and introduce some splendid thoughts on this subject by a fellow-editor, the captain of the good ship, "Christian Advocate" (Nashville). He strikes a vital note in the following editorial:

Certain atmospheric conditions invariably produce rain. In like manner proper conditions inevitably result in spiritual awakening. These conditions will arise wherever prayer is properly employed. Private prayer, faithfully prolonged, will produce an exalted state in him who prays. Prayers fervently and unweariedly offered by believers, few or many, gathered in groups, will change the spiritual state of those present. If people would assemble, stay together, pray and talk together, through extended periods, the fires would burn hot within them. An awakening would be at hand. It could not be confined to a secret place, but would immediately extend its power into the community. Testimony and example would scatter flame and light torches from heart to heart in the highways and in the homes.

But while prayer is so essential, it is pathetically neglected. Almost nowhere are prayer meetings largely attended. In many places they are entirely removed from the plans of the congregation. Not much time is given to prayer in any of our regular services. Even when protracted meetings are held only a few prayers are offered at any one of the services. Sometimes cottage prayer meetings are relied upon to supply the spiritual energy of the general meeting. Whereas, if the large assembly could be brought under the spell of prayer, the power of it could not be calculated. But this irresistible influence almost universally is given a second place.

If the whole Church is to be revived, we must bring the whole Church within the circle of prayer. If we are to make advances upon the world, our attack must be made upon our knees. Power must come from on high. No mortal man can produce conviction of sin. Such an influence is reserved for the Holy Spirit. But when believers become charged with the power of God, flashes of that power break like lightning across the multitudes who are bound in sin.

The hardest of all prices to pay for spiritual improvement is importunate prayer. This is the reason, perhaps, that everything else is tried before prayer is undertaken. Prayer is exacting. Its demands are explicit and all-comprehending. Those who pray must be clean in heart and be in love with their neighbors. They must be just, forgiving, and devout. Prayer requires time. The soul does not become absorbed in its aims nor aflame with eagerness except by a progressive understanding of the things which are needed. Haste dissipates the mind. Restlessness prevents concentration. The old-fashioned way of saying that the world must be shut out in order that heaven might come in is altogether true. Prolonged prayer meetings have the same effect upon the soul as that of the summer sun upon the fields. The heavy and testing demands of prayer explain why circuitous routes are traveled rather than undertake the steep and difficult incline of a prayerful approach to God. But by no other method can great spiritual results be obtained. Everything else than earnest supplication becomes entirely futile.

Is it possible that church people will refuse to give up their personal complacency, their spiritual ease, their delightful irresponsibility? Do they not see the inestimable need of the world for a visitation of God? Are they not aware that the kingdom of righteousness cannot prevail except through their faith and sacrifice? A revival truly would mean a great change in the hearts of the people and, let it be admitted, also in the content of many sermons. This would liquidate vast frozen assets held in the power of the men and women who constitute the membership of the Churches. It would open wide the gates of liberality. It would produce a mighty stir.

Every encouragement is given God's people to lay siege upon the sources of power through encompassing prayer. The result would be satisfying and glorious.

DR. POLING CONTINUES LEADERSHIP OF ALLIED FORCES

Dr. Daniel A. Poling will retain his post as chairman of the Allied Forces until December 1, 1932, according to a statement made by him at the closing conferences of the nation-wide campaign in Atlantic City. His resignation, which was to have taken effect June 6, caused a misunderstanding in some circles and was received with genuine regret throughout the country by friends of the Eighteenth Amendment.

In a recent interview, Dr. Poling gave out the following statement: "My resignation as chairman of the Allied Forces was agreed upon one year ago to take effect at this time. But my announcement has created a misunderstanding I will not tolerate. This cause is first and above any man's personal interest.

"I withdraw my resignation and resubmit it to take effect December 1, 1932. I shall continue as chairman through the present campaign, giving my maximum support to the fight for the Eighteenth Amendment and for the integrity of the Constitution."

He returns by popular demand and with a full realization of the need for continued strenuous work on the part of all friends of prohibition during this critical year. All feel that now, more than ever before, his active leadership is needed.

Under his continued chairmanship, the intensive opening field campaign of the Allied Forces gives way to a continuing program of education, enrollment and organization. Following the closing of the three-day national convention of the Allied Campaigners in Atlantic City, in an inspiring session of recommitment to the task, the fight to maintain prohibition and the integrity of the Constitution goes forward with renewed activity.

Ten months of travel and campaigning that carried the national Allied Campaigners into practically 600 cities in every state of the Union led up to the enthusiastically and well attended meetings at Atlantic City. At Haddon Hall, on the Boardwalk, and in the new civic auditorium, representatives from scores of leading cities in 23 states and the District of Columbia gathered to summarize the campaign to date, to exchange ideas as to the best methods of work, and to set the objectives for the future. All realized that the struggle against lawlessness and the proposed return of legalized liquor selling has but begun. All realized that the pooling of dry and local strength in behalf of the Eighteenth Amendment, which the Allied Forces campaign of education and enlistment made possible, has been one of the most decisive moves toward redeeming American idealism and patriotic zeal.

Conferences, mass meetings, a radio broadcast, luncheon and dinner meetings gave opportunity for the campaign leaders to share their enthusiasm with the delegates representing Allied Youth councils and the local units of Allied Citizens. Leaders who have been especially helpful in the local work were called to share their experiences and to accept new responsibilities in the continuing national program.

In the executive sessions, officers for the year were elected and definite programs organized. These are: Chairman, Dr. Daniel A. Poling, New York City; Vice-Chairman, Dr. John R. Mott, New York City; Chairman, Legislative Department, Col. Raymond Robins, Brooksville, Florida; Chairman, Allied Business Men, Arthur T. Morey; Chairman, Allied Women, Mrs. Rushmore Patterson; Chairman, Allied Youth, Fred Stripp, Jr.; Director of Field Activities, W. Roy Breg, New York City; Director, Allied Women, Mrs. Mabel K. Alt, St. Louis, Missouri; Director, Allied Youth, Harold Singer, Kansas City, Missouri.

JUDGE JOHNSON SAYS RICH DRINKERS ARE BAD

The nation's socially prominent were held responsible by United States Judge Albert W. Johnson for the government's failure to achieve strict observance of the prohibition law. Speaking extemporaneously in federal criminal court, Judge Johnson declared that the elite are proving a bad example for the country's youth and that many of the rich should be jailed for their acts.

"Young people are going astray violating the law, getting into trouble," the senior jurist of the Middle Pennsylvania District said, "because prominent people are getting drunk at parties. Some of them should be put in jail. I mean those society folks who knowingly and wilfully violate the law. Younger people say, 'If they can do it, we can.'"

"We would have put this law (prohibition) over in twelve years had the prominent people of the country obeyed the law and set an example for the rest. The worst trouble we have is the misconduct of society people. We have them going out and getting drunk at parties, and then we expect everybody else to observe the law. It cannot be done that way.

"I hold," he said, "that the rich and socially elevated have no more right to use liquor—drink it, or possess it—in their clubs than the poor have. The prohibition law was meant for everyone. Not only for the man who works, but for the man who does not have to labor, too.—The Wayne Independent.

HOW FIRM A FOUNDATION

On a holiday night, of last year, at one of the local theaters vast crowds of youth and beauty, old age and manhood, assembled to witness a film which interprets the last days of the Romanoffs at their worst. Arriving late, it was necessary to sit through advertisements, the announcements, and so on, until the picture came on at 8:30. At intervals the master at the organ played and sang a number of popular songs in which the people joined. But the more serious looked and listened and wondered if we were in the last days of this republic, and, in the midst of this reverie, the master played:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word!
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
To you who to Jesus for refuge have fled?"

A hush fell on the vast audience and there must have been borne into many hearts that night a sense of personal security under the spell of:

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
I will not, I will not, desert to its foes;
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no, never, no, never forsake!"

It is the promise of God. The change in the social order of one's time, nor the change in one's personal fortunes does not change the promise of God. Thus a sense of victory came over the trembling hearts who had witnessed the last few scenes in the land of Czars. Though conditions in America are bad, it is for us to act upon the side of our hopes, not our fears and misgivings. The religion of Jesus Christ is inward and is superior to secular affairs. No one knows the strength of the reserve army of the Captain of our Salvation. It is indestructible and undefeatable. This sense of security may be enjoyed by our nation when it walks again in the path of our fathers.—The Christian Index.

RAISING OUR STANDARDS

These times call loudly for greater devotion and power on the part of the Church of Christ to overcome the evil influences that appear to be gaining strength all around us. We must not be found lacking in the duty of preserving, upholding, and defending truth, purity and all righteousness in accordance with the moral and civil law. This demands a greater devotion and sacrifice of time and means to God and to the up-building of his Kingdom through the Church of Jesus Christ.

We have the promise of our Lord that the gates of hell shall not prevail against his Church, but God needs good soldiers of the Cross to help fulfill this promise. Are we among them? What constitutes the Kingdom of God or his Church militant on the earth? Surely every individual who is a member thereof. Can we honestly say that we are doing our part? Do we attend every meeting of our church and Sunday school—and bring our children with us every Sunday except when sickness prevents? Do we strive to gather new members to Christ and the Church by kindly acts and persuasion? Do we as men and women give any time and encouragement to the work of the boys and girls in their societies, both by precept and example? Do we adequately support the work of the Church at home and abroad? Do we pray daily for the coming of the Kingdom of Christ and for grace to do our part to hasten its coming? Brethren, let us work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work.—W. H. D. in Reformed Church Messenger.

Thinking right comes before doing right. . . . Thoughts are stronger than cannon, because thoughts operate cannon. . . . Readers are thinkers. Readers and thinkers become world actors. . . . The civilization of tomorrow will be a product of today's reading.—Rev. William E. Purcell.

High hearts are never long without hearing some new call, some distant clarion of God, even in their dreams; and soon they are observed to break up the camp of ease and start on some fresh march of faithful service.—James Martineau.

If a person were so foolish as to throw away a valuable piece of money into a pit, or in the sea, he would not literally throw away anything but the metal; but virtually he would throw away whatever best thing it would have purchased, as bread clothing, refreshments, medicine for the sick, instructive books, etc. Even so, a person wasting time throws away, not the time itself only, but the opportunities and the privileges which that time presents.—John Foster.

MR. ROCKEFELLER'S MOB

The ringing wet Cincinnati Post itself uses the term in a headline: "The wet stampede." Some of us have been observing for some time the strategy of the wets; namely, to direct no appeal to intelligence, but to appeal entirely to emotions. The wet campaign is offering no substitute for prohibition; that would be an appeal to intelligence; that would require criticism and study. The campaign is entirely an appeal to the general dissatisfaction—and even the ardent drys are dissatisfied. The whole enterprise has been skillfully handled (even to the garbling of news) to appeal to mob psychology; that's what the referendum cry means.

Now comes Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., endorsing Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler and actually finding virtue in the fact that the move contemplates doing away with what we have without waiting for the development of something to take its place! See these two staid plutocrats marching down the highway at the head of a mob, proudly singing "We don't know where we're going, but we're on our way." That it is a mob Mr. Rockefeller leads can be proved by the fact that he can't deal with it on any basis of intelligent planning; if he stopped to discuss a plan it would go to pieces. As long as he promises the mob beer at the end of the march they will cheer for him whom they yesterday vilified and cartooned as a blue-nose snooper in a high hat, a frock coat and green spectacles and carrying a clumsy umbrella.

We are not wedded to prohibition. We are for any system that will stamp out the liquor traffic and we prefer a system that will label it for the criminal thing it is. But we cordially despise the mind that works as Mr. Rockefeller's mind seems to be working now; that is, will give up the plan it has before knowing to what it is to go. Mr. Butler never knew any better but Mr. Rockefeller has known that he dare not write blank checks for the lawless wets.

If, moreover, the wealthy have any concern for the safety of their possessions, they had better be wary of leading mobs.—Christian Standard.

OUR LITTLE READERS

DENNY'S FLAG

By Frances McKinnon Morton

Denny came in with shining eyes. The postman had brought a package for him. It was a long black box and the postman had said, "Here's something all for you, young man."

It made Denny feel quite grown up the way the man called him "young man." Then it made him feel all excited and interested to know what was in the long package. He carried it at once to his mother's room.

"May I open it all myself, mother?" he asked.

"Certainly, dear," she said.

Denny had a rather hard time getting the string untied, so he asked his mother to help him. He didn't want to cut the string because it looked like such a nice top string. It didn't take the two of them very long to get the box open and fold back the soft tissue paper that lay on top.

Then out came the prettiest soft red, white and blue flag Denny had ever seen. Its stripes were so red, its field was so blue, and its stars were so white.

There was a card inside. Mother read it aloud. It said the flag was from Aunt Josie and was to be his very own to hang outside on the Fourth of July, and other nice holidays when we use the flag to show that we love our country.

While Denny was touching it and loving it mother was looking starry-eyed and far away like she sometimes did when she was thinking of things.

"The way to really love a flag," she said, "is to earn it yourself."

"Why," said Denny, "Aunt Josie gave it to me for my very own."

"Still," said mother, "if you will let me put it away until you earn it yourself, you will love it more."

"All right," said Denny, "what can I do to earn it?"

"Well," said mother thoughtfully, "how much of the United States is your very own?"

"Just our yard and garden and house," said Denny.

"I keep the house nice," said mother, "father keeps the garden nice—"

"Oh," interrupted Denny, "and I can keep the yard nice. I'll keep it so nice that my new flag will be proud to fly over it."

"That's the idea," said mother as she carefully folded up the pretty flag and put it in Denny's room.

It was a whole month till the Fourth of July, and not a single day of all those thirty days that make a month did Denny fail to do something to make his yard look nice. He learned to run the lawn mower himself, to pull the weeds out of the flower beds, to trim the edges of the grass nicely and never to leave a bit of paper or trash lying around to make the yard look untidy. He found he could play and have just as much fun in his yard when it was clean and tidy. Besides that, it made him feel glad and proud to see how nice it looked. When he thought that it was his part of the United States and he was keeping it nice it made him feel like he was a good citizen.

When the Fourth of July came around there was not a happier boy in America than Denny was when he hung out his very own flag.

"It was nice to have it given to me," he told his mother, "but earning it was bigger and better than just taking it. It makes you feel like it is your flag, your town, and your country and you want to keep it nice."—Selected.

SEVEN WAYS OF GIVING

(1) The careless way.—To give something to every cause that is presented, without inquiring into its merits; (2) The impulsive way.—To give from impulse, as much and as often as pity or sensibility prompts; (3) The industrious way.—To make a special effort to earn money for Christian or benevolent objects by trading, etc.; (4) The self-denying way.—To save the cost of luxuries and apply them to purposes which in our judgment are worthy of support; (5) The systematic way.—To lay aside each week, or whenever anything is received, as an offering to God, a definite portion, one-tenth, one-fifth, one-third, or one-half. This is adapted to all, whether rich or poor; and gifts would be largely increased if it were generally practiced; (6) The equal way.—To give to God, and the needy, just as much as we spend on ourselves, balancing our personal expenditure by our gifts; (7) The heroic way.—To limit our expenses to a certain sum, and give away all the rest of our income. This was John Wesley's way.—Wonderful Word.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FIRST CALL FOR SHIPSEWANA

July the 17th to 24th, are the dates—The place Shipsewana Lake—The People concerned—All good Brethren folks in this community, and some others who are not so closely associated with us. The McClains, the Stuckeys, the Monroes, with the regular crew of pastors and interested laymen will make up the group to take the lead. Vanator in charge of the singing—Whetstone with pictures and all the rest with vim and determination to be and do. More young people are planning to attend the school than ever before. More older ones are coming to be in the cottages than formerly, and all in all it looks as though we were in for a big time. Why not plan to be with us this year? Write to any Northern Indiana pastor and he will help you rent a cottage, come and remain through the entire meeting, for the inspiration and education you will receive. We have never before planned so largely for you, neither has the opportunity been so great for so many to come. The expense will be small, and the returns large.

H. F. STUCKMAN,

Secretary Conference Committee.

STATISTICS

Pastors and church leaders, are you doing your duty that this coming Semi-Centenary Conference shall show our real strength? TWO districts have reported in FULL. Two other districts have reported, but lack some churches of a FULL report. Our ideal this year is "some kind of report" from every church in the brotherhood. If a church has been closed, report it so. If you have even one member, make a report. WE WANT A FULL REPORT.

The districts having reported in full are Illiokota and Northern California. Mid-West is in, lacking two churches. Southeastern is in, with the lack of a few churches that have previously reported. We shall wait a few days until the District Statisticians have opportunity to check lacking churches, then we shall call for the report definitely by the church names by districts. Let us make this a new starting point in statistics. If it is worth having a Semi-Centenary Conference, it is worth having a Semi-Centenary report from each church in the brotherhood.

We hope the Indiana churches read Brother R. F. Porte's appeal. It is fine of Brother Porte to step in and help you this way in your district. He can do it, if you will respond. He did excellent work along this line in Pennsylvania.

GEORGE E. CONE,
National Statistician.

VOL. LIV
Number 27

July 9
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Once to Every Man

By James Russel Lowell

Once to every man and nation
Comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth and Falsehood
For the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah
Offers each the bloom or blight,
And the choice goes by forever,
'Twixt the darkness and the light.

Then to side with Truth is noble,
When we share her wretched crust,
Ere her cause brings fame and profit,
And 'tis prosperous to be just;
Then it is the brave man chooses,
While the cowards stand aside,
Till the multitude makes virtue
Of the faith they had denied.

Though the cause of evil prosper
Yet 'tis Truth alone is strong;
Though her portion be the scaffold
And upon the throne be Wrong;
Yet the scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown,
Standeth One within the shadow
Keeping guard above his own.

—The Ohio Messenger.

---

The present day moral situation is a challenge to every Christian

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Gospel at Washington's Tomb

If you visit Mt. Vernon, beautiful estate and home of George Washington, you will meet two rather extraordinary things: First, smoking is forbidden everywhere on the grounds; and second, the Gospel is preached to all who view the tomb of Washington.

It is not easy to find a place today free from tobacco fumes. Mt. Vernon comes close to being such a place. However, some visitors sneak off into the hidden paths, not being able to deny themselves during the few minutes of their visit. Doubtless, the rule would surprise Washington almost as much as it surprises some of the modern visiting public. In his day guests could both smoke and drink. We make progress in spots. Even if the Democrats win the coming election and succeed in making the country as wet as Al Smith would have it, the former home of Washington will probably retain its present inviolability.

If you pause at the Tomb, you read chiseled in the rock the following words: "I AM THE RESURRECTION AND THE LIFE; HE THAT BELIEVETH IN ME, THOUGH HE BE DEAD, YET SHALL HE LIVE: AND WHOSOEVER LIVETH AND BELIEVETH IN ME SHALL NEVER DIE." And just in front of the Tomb, on a monument erected to the memory of Bushrod Washington, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, are these remarkable words: "RESTING HIS HOPE OF ETERNAL HAPPINESS ALONE ON THE RIGHT-BOUSNESS OF JESUS CHRIST."

It is a good thing, if you die before the Lord returns, to use your tombstone to preach the Gospel. That is about the only justification for spending money for one. But it is better to preach the Gospel by word of mouth before you die.

THEOLOGY in the Lincoln Memorial

It is impossible for one to describe adequately the startling and majestic beauty of this monument to the Great Emancipator. But even its simple splendor is not greater than the words which are inscribed within: on the one side the Gettysburg Speech, and on the other side the Second Inaugural Address. Even if you have read them, read them again in the shadow of the marble figure of their author.

If the Lincoln Memorial should be destroyed, we could find architects and artisans able to reproduce it. But where in our present political world can you find a statesman able to deliver himself of a Gettysburg Address? It contains but 270 words. It is not how much we say, but what we say that really matters. It is well known that Lincoln acquired his matchless but simple diction from the Authorized Version of the English Bible. If preachers spent more time reading, memorizing and saturating themselves with the Bible, their sermons would be clearer and more effective.

If you have wrestled with the apparent contradiction between Divine Sovereignty and Human Responsibility, than which there is no more knotty theological problem, study Lincoln's Second Inaugural Address, next to the last paragraph, where he lays them side by side and recognizes both as facts. Slavery, according to Lincoln, was one of the offenses which must come in the Providence of God, but the same God brings judgment on those by whom it came.

THE Use of Commentaries

I am sometimes asked to what extent one should employ commentaries in the study of the Word. In this matter there are two extreme positions. The one is afraid to teach anything which is not found in the commentaries. The other regards all commentaries as wholly of the devil. The thoughtful student should avoid both extremes.

No amount of discussion could improve upon the counsel of Bishop Ryle as given in the Preface to Volume III of his Expository Thoughts on St. John. He says: "The conclusion I arrive at, after a diligent examination of many Commentators, is always one and the same. I trust none of them unreservedly, and I expect nowhere to find perfection. All must be read with caution. They are good helps, but they are not infallible. They are useful assistants, but they are not the pillar of cloud and fire. I advise my younger readers to remember that. Use your own judgment prayerfully and diligently. Use commentaries; but be a slave to none. Call no man master."

Bishop Ryle followed his own advice. In preparing his work on John alone he read over seventy commentaries, some in Latin and Greek, but he was "a slave to none." Every student of the Word will find great profit in Ryle's work on the Gospels. The seven volumes can be picked up occasionally in second hand book stores.

WEeping for Joy

According to the morning papers, when Mrs. Chas. H. Sabin heard that the Democratic Convention had adopted a plank demanding the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, she wept for joy.

Mrs. Sabin is known as the Joan of Arc of the wet crusade, having organized the Woman's Organization for National Prohibition Reform which claims to have a million members.

In the book of Ezekiel, chapter eight, verses 14-15, you will find these words: "Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord's House which was toward the north; and behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz. Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these."

When women are seen weeping for joy over the prospective repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, greater abominations than these may be expected. Optimistic opinions of human nature used to lead men to believe that once the women were enfranchised, they would vote solidly against the liquor traffic.

Tammuz, mentioned by Ezekiel, was a Phoenician god worshipped especially by women with such licentious orgies that the cult was finally suppressed by Constantine the Great. A fitting symbol of the great god Boozee.

How the Eskimos Swear

According to a writer in World Dominion, the Alaskan Eskimo cannot swear in his own language. The strongest word he has is "ominakfa" which means "how hateful." But those who have tasted the "benefits" of civilization have learned to swear nevertheless, doing it in the "King's English." There are plenty of oaths in our tongue, enough to supply the backward races of the earth and to spare.

When the more primitive peoples lose their tempers they act. When the more civilized man gets mad, he swears. Thus, it would seem, civilization has substituted swearing for action as an emotional outlet. Christianity brings the best solution—"The fruit of the Spirit is . . . self-control." (Gal. 5:23 ARV).

Dr. Spring, reviewing his long ministerial career, gives the following testimony, which is instructive and full of warning:

"I have seen Universalists and infidels die: and, during a ministry of fifty-five years, I have not found a single instance of peace and joy in their views of eternity. No, nothing but an accusing conscience and the terrors of apprehension. I have seen men die who were men of mercurial temperament, men of pleasure and fun, men of taste and literature, lovers of opera and the theater rather than the house of God; and I never saw an instance in which such persons died in peace. They died as they lived. Life was a blank, and death the king of terrors; a wasted life an undone eternity."—Sel.

A radical sweetness in the temper of the mind—that spreads itself into a man's words and actions; and this is not merely natural, a gentle, kind disposition (which is indeed a natural advantage that some have), but this is spiritual, a new nature descended from heaven, and so in its origin and kind far excelling the other. It supplies it where it is not in nature and doth not only increase it where it is, but elevates it above itself, renews it, and sets a more excellent stamp upon it.—Robert Leighton.

IN THIS NUMBER

The Missionary Opportunity of the Far West—Editor, . . . . .	3
Use Wisdom in Congregational Economy—Editor, . . . . .	4
Editorial Review, . . . . .	4
Some Present Problems of Our Publishing Interests—W. S. Bell, . .	5
Traitors to Humanity—Herman Hoyt, Significant News and Views, . . . .	7
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, . . . . .	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, . . . . .	9
Standard of Excellence, . . . . .	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, . . . . .	11
Building a Worship Program—Tephia Folsom, . . . . .	11
Shall Egypt Have Religious Liberty? The Adventure of a Ram—A. D. Helser, . . . . .	13
News from the Field, . . . . .	13
The Menace of Mammonism—F. G. Sayers, . . . . .	14
Our Little Readers, . . . . .	16
The Tie that Binds, . . . . .	16
In the Shadow, . . . . .	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

The Missionary Opportunity of the Far West

Every state and section of the country holds opportunities for the expansion of the Gospel and for the building of new churches, if we only have the vision to see them and the energy to seize them, but some sections present more challenging opportunities and more glaring needs than others. It has been a growing conviction with us for some time that the far west country is more than ordinarily ripe with opportunity and that we ought to be planning and giving in a manner so as to make possible, a really aggressive campaign of church expansion in the great northwest and the whole length of the Pacific Coast. We have in mind some reasons why the West offers superior opportunities for missionary work than the East, and in an effort to test out these opinions, we have canvassed the opinions of some of our church leaders who have had experience in church work in the far west, and their testimony has confirmed us in our belief.

In the first place, there are more unchurched people in the west in proportion to the population. We have interesting confirmation of this statement from the editor of The Lutheran, who, in reporting a recent trip to the far west, said: "Among the questions we have addressed to the people met on the Pacific Coast is this one: 'What percentage of the people in this section of the Western Continent do not belong to any church?' The answer in the rough has been seventy-five per cent. In one town of over five thousand, a religious census was taken, and it was found that a few over 1,200 had a congregational enrollment. A recent extensive survey was reported to us and the figures thus reached were seventeen per cent enrolled; eighty-three per cent unattached. This ratio covered California, Oregon, Washington and the southern portion of British Columbia. It seems reasonably probable that the western area is considerably below the average for the United States and Canada."

This does not mean that the moral, intellectual and economic conditions of this section are below the average for the country, rather, it may even be that the very opposite is true, because of the greater newness and vigor of the country. Dr. Nathan R. Melhorn, the esteemed editor of the paper above referred to, says, that in the rather extensive travels he made, he "saw no exhibitions of gross immorality, . . . no drunkenness, no 'slum' districts and no lack of cordial courtesy on the part of the business men. The educational provisions are so ample and modern as to rate these western commonwealths higher in the list of public school facilities than their eastern and older sister states. As to civic and economic morale, they seem equal to other sections of our nation." But the development of the religious life of the people of the west has not gone forward with that of other lines, and especially is it behind that of the east. And that fact makes for a larger missionary challenge and opportunity.

Not only are there more people unattached to churches, but there are more communities unchurched or inadequately churched than in the east. It is difficult to find a town or city in the east that has not all the churches or more than it can support, but in the country west of the Mississippi there are said to be thousands of towns with no established church, and even with no regular religious services. In these open spaces is a great need. It was in behalf of this vast empire with its multitude of communities of spiritually destitute that our lamented Sister Vianna Detwiler wrote "The Clarion Call of the Northwest" and gave her life in missionary endeavor. The star of a new and bright opportunity has appeared to guide us westward to the realization of our hopes for a greater and more glorious service for Christ.

There are reasons for this greater spiritual lack in the west than in the east, but the principal one is the materialistic motive that has almost invariably led to settlement of the far west, as against the more spiritual motives that led to the establishment of colonies on the Atlantic Coast. The Lutheran says, "The pioneers who crossed the Rocky Mountains and established the western commonwealths were less impelled by religious motives than were the founders of the early eastern communities. While the economic ideals of the New England Puritans and Southern Cavaliers were sufficiently broad to countenance some very dubious ways of taking title to land and of achieving fortunes, they none the less brought with them a very vivid sense of spiritual obligations. It is also a fact that much of the immigration from Europe by which the "back territory" of the colonies was settled had fled from ecclesiastical persecutions in Europe. Either these early settlers brought pastors with them, or they sought their coming. . . . But among the settlers of the far west no such spiritual motivation was a prominent factor." Vianna Detwiler in her "Clarion Call" gives this testimony: "In our first revival service (at Spokane), the leader called for a show of hands of those who moved west for any other purpose than that of making money, with a result of less than one out of a hundred." When people went west, they left their religion at home, if they had any, and became absorbed in the hunt for gold. That largely explains why even to this day, only one-fourth of the people west of the Mississippi are churched, while the proportion is one-half for the country over. That also constitutes a challenge to the church to mortal combat with the spirit of materialism, not only in the far west, but throughout the land. And that challenge becomes an appeal in view of the growing restlessness and increasing soul-hunger of the people.

The cosmopolitan character of the population makes for a churchless, godless spirit among the people. Not only are there many immigrants from every country adjoining the Pacific, but its citizenship is composed of Americans from every section of the country, gathered there with many different religious backgrounds and wide diversities of belief. Almost every conceivable kind of religion is to be found represented in the centers of population, and consequently almost every religious fad that it is possible to devise gets a hearing there. Many observers tell us that this western country has had "an unusually high percentage of erratic enthusiasts, whose interpretations of Christianity are caricatures of the teachings of the Gospel." While this confused religious state has been looked upon as a liability, from another point of view it may be considered an asset to the missionary enterprise, for the people are ready to be led. This spirit is in contrast to that of many a staid eastern community where the people are pretty generally set in their ways of thinking, and are slow to give response to new truth. The most readily responsive fields for missionary endeavor, generally speaking, are to be found in the newer western sections where no fixed community bias has yet been formed but where the people are open-minded. Religious fads thrive there more readily, but so also does the whole Gospel.

Again, we believe there is among the western people an aggressiveness, a spirit of daring and of venturesomeness that is not to be found in the same degree among eastern people. The very fact that they took their lives and their possessions in their hands, left their eastern communities (and most of these western people are transplanted easterners, if not, the sons and daughter of such), and risked their all in a great western venture, sets them off from their eastern brethren as greater in aggressiveness and courage. The west is made up, in the main, of that kind of people, people who are ambitious and are go-getters. They are men and women of faith and courage, ready to launch out into untried fields, and to risk their fortunes in a new venture. They are a select and a chosen people, in this particular, made so by their bold and venturesome faith. This is not to imply, of course, that such a spirit does not exist in the east, but it is to say that we believe such a spirit is more widely prevalent in the west than in the east. And if that is the case, then the west is the place pre-eminent for the launching of missionary enterprises, for such a spirit, consecrated to God, lends itself readily to ventures of faith for the building up of the church of Christ.

Let us be awake to the home missionary opportunities in every district and section of our country, but most especially should we press the task of church extension in the far west.

Use Wisdom in Congregational Economy

Economy must be exercised on the part of all churches this year, and in some instances very drastic measures must be taken. When people are out of employment they cannot pay, and the unemployment situation in some communities is very serious. Those who are earning wages or receiving incomes, will be required to make real sacrifices to do what they can to keep the work of the Lord going as strongly as possible. But with the best that can be done, severe slashes in salaries seem to be necessary in many cases. But a word of warning needs to be said, lest some churches shall thoughtlessly undertake economy measures that will prove harmful to the congregations and result in suffering and unfairness to the pastors concerned. And in this statement we are simply quoting, in the main, the warning issued by the recent Anderson Conference of the Church of the Brethren and published in The Gospel Messenger:

"Inasmuch as many of our congregations are adopting policies of retrenchment in this time of economic crisis; and, since there seems to be a tendency to curtail and even discontinue pastoral service in the churches which have been supporting pastors; and, since this policy, if adopted by any considerable number of churches, will inevitably work hardship, and even distress, upon many consecrated ministers and their families and will seriously handicap the work of the church in a time when religious service is so urgently needed; and since the dismissal of pastors in times of financial strain has in it an element of injustice and tends to discourage young men now in preparation for the ministry and will possibly divert many of them into other callings and thus create serious future consequences for the church:

"Therefore this Conference makes the following urgent request of congregations and ministers throughout the brotherhood:

"First; That congregations which are now being served by supported pastors do not interrupt their pastoral programs to the detriment of the work. Curtailment can usually be made at other points with less serious consequences to the congregation.

"Third; That the ministers of the church who are serving as pastors, in spite of the sacrificial service which they are and have been making, adjust themselves as fully as possible to the stress and strain under which our churches now find themselves."

If churches should decide to go without any pastor in order to relieve themselves during these hard times, they will cause many pastors to suffer, besides hampering the work of the congregations and seriously effecting the future of the denomination. Keep your pastor, or some pastor, at whatever salary you are able to pay. He will be glad to share with you in the hardships of these times. But he and his family must live. Use wisdom in your economy measures.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Broth Leo Polman, pastor of the church at South Gate, California, informs us through his church calendar that two new members, a husband and wife, were received by baptism on Sunday evening, June 19th.

Brother H. F. Stuckman, secretary of the Shipshewana program committee, provides us with a copy of their Bible Conference program to be held at Lake Shipshewana, July 17 to 24. The speakers, as previously announced, are Prof. A. J. McClain, Dr. K. M. Monroe, Rev. S. M. Whetstone, and Prof. M. A. Stuckey. The two Sundays are to be special days when the churches north and the churches south of a certain point are expected to attend in bodies.

General Conference is not far off, and it is time to plan your church delegation. The time is the last full week in August, or from the 22nd to the 28th. It is expected to be a most significant conference in that it is to be a celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of the Brethren church, and the program is to be replete with discussions of Brethren history and doctrine by leaders of the church. Judging by what the Executive Committee promises us, it will be a conference eminently worth any one's attendance.

It is no absolute guarantee of the approval of God upon a man's preaching ministry, that he has his church thronged to the doors. A prize fight or a popular movie show will always pull a larger crowd than a prayer meeting. That does not mean, of course, that a preacher should not covet nor seek to get the ears of many people with his message, if he has a real message from God. But it does mean that it is possible to be a successful actor in the pulpit and not be a messenger of the Lord.

Prof. A. L. DeLozier and family left last week for points in Pennsylvania for a brief visit with relatives and then on to Penn State where Prof. DeLozier will spend most of the summer doing special research work in the French Institute. Prof. DeLozier is the very capable head of the department of modern languages in Ashland College and is rapidly gaining recognition as an authority in French. His address for the next six weeks or more will be Penn State, Pennsylvania.

Brother J. Milo Wolfe, a prominent lay leader of the Lathrop church in California sent in a list of subscribers to The Evangelist and appended this note to his letter to the Business Manager: "The publications are all first class. Don't know how a better job could be done on the Evangelist, Angelus, Sunday school quarterlies and Teacher. But as a church at the last district conference we recommended that the 'Missionary' and the paper put out by the Secretary of the Home Mission Board be combined with the Evangelist. This would be a move for economy, also efficiency."

Self-mastery is the biggest, most difficult job any man has to do, and few are so dumb as not to know it. But How to achieve, is the question. Men have conquered the world and yet were not able to conquer self. Others have brought self into subjection but never ruled an inch of territory. The latter were the greatest conquerors. And how did they do it? There is just one way, and that is by the impartation of divine grace. Jesus said, "My grace is sufficient for thee; my strength is made perfect in weakness." He can bestow self-mastery, and there is no other way.

On Saturday morning of last week the editor was in receipt of the following announcement: "Mr. Henry Walker announces the marriage of his daughter Fannie to Mr. William Spencer Bell, D.D., on Wednesday, June the twenty-ninth, nineteen hundred and thirty-two, Milledgeville, Illinois." And then the statement: "At home after July twenty-seventh, at Milledgeville, Illinois." The Evangelist family joins in one big, hearty expression of congratulation to both Dr. and Mrs. Bell and best wishes for many years of happiness and service together. It turns out to be unusually fitting that we should already have planned the publication of Dr. Bell's article and picture in this paper. The cut may not be from his latest picture, but of course we would not now expect him to appear any older than when this picture was taken. Brother Bell is one of the most popular and widely known ministers of the Brethren church, having recently covered the entire brotherhood in the college endowment campaign. Again we say, Congratulations, Dr. and Mrs. Bell.

Many Brethren people are moving into new communities in search of work, or new opportunities for entering into business or the professions. Why not seek out those communities where a Brethren church is already established? The church ought to be taken into consideration as well as the school privileges, or the trading advantages, or transportation facilities. We ought to be just as reluctant to move into a community where there is no church of our choice as into a community where there is no adequate public school system, or no public library, or other cultural advantages. If we really value our church, if we sincerely believe in the things for which it stands, if there is no other church just as good for us as the Brethren church, then we ought to seek a community, when moving becomes a necessity, where a Brethren church is accessible. And if such a locality is not to be found, then we ought to seek a place where there is a Brethren group or colony, with a view to fellowshiping with them and cooperating in the establishing of a Brethren church. Such a spirit, if it widely existed among our people, would go a long way toward stopping the leakage in membership.

Some Present Problems of Our Publishing Interests

By Dr. W. S. Bell, Member Publication Board

(Address at Ohio Conference at Bryan, requested by Conference to be published in "The Evangelist.")

It is not necessary for me to emphasize that our publication house is not of secondary importance to the future of our church, but is vital and deserving of first consideration if we as a people are to maintain our identity and make growth.

What is the relationship of our publications to the Church?

First—To communicate the activities of the Church to its members.

Second—To be a medium to propagate our faith—To establish the membership in the doctrines and to interest them in the different departments of the work of the Church.

Third—To unify the Church as a whole, in doctrine, practice and the support of all general interests—to correlate the Missions, (Home and Foreign) with the publications, benevolences and the educational work of the denomination.

Among other things we should consider our numerical status. We are a small body of not over 30,000 followers.

It must be evident to all, we are not justified and should not endeavor to support the same amount of organization and overhead machinery, that a body of 500,000 or a 1,000,000 followers maintain. Such a course will only lead to a consumption of funds, that should be used for other purposes and in the end will lead to disaster.

It must be apparent to all concerned under the present economic conditions, every effort should be made to eliminate expenses that can be saved without injuring or interfering with the work. We should do everything we can to simplify our work and merge when it is possible.

The things which I have mentioned should be considered with what I have to say.

My subject deals with our publications and I am speaking from the viewpoint of a member of the Publication Board. I have been very close to the struggles and the problems of the Board over a period of nearly 30 years. It has been a struggle to continue on and still is.

The Church publications have never brought in sufficient income to pay operating expenses. If it had not been for job work and rentals on the building we now occupy (which was bought on faith), we would long ago have been on the financial rocks. I have already referred to our numerical strength, which gives a very limited sale to our publications. It is the first cost, including editorial work, setting up type, proof reading, etc., that is the main cost. These things cost just as much for 5,000 as it would for 500,000 copies. When you can only realize a sale of a few thousands an issue, the profit end is minus.

During the past year, mainly due to the economic conditions, there has been a decrease in our income—and a falling off on most of our publications. Rentals have been hard to collect on the building and business conditions have affected job printing. The business manager has spent sleepless nights trying to figure out ways of meeting the pay roll and current bills. If we are to continue on and maintain the publishing house, there must be the loyal support of the churches and members. Our Sunday school literature should be used in all our schools, for it is Brethren and merits deserving patronage. Every dollar sent to other publishing houses for supplies, is taking it from your own.

The subscription list to the Evangelist has been diminishing noticeably the past two years, ever since our high peak during the Bi-Centenary program when we reached 5,000 subscriptions. We are now down to about 3,000. There are reasons for this. The most common given is the pinch for money. But another is that we are taking other papers of the church.

This leads me to express my own conviction, that the Church has too many publications. At the present time we have four church publications outside of our Sunday school literature — "The Evangelist," a weekly publication; "The Brethren Missionary," our foreign missions magazine; "The Brethren Witness," The home mission magazine; "The Outlook," "The Woman's Missionary Magazine. The last three mentioned are monthly publications. The Publishing house is indirectly benefited by these, as all of them we print, with the exception of one.

I cannot help but feel that a Church no larger than we are, could merge all of these, with the exception, perhaps of "The Outlook," which is distinctly the women's work, carrying their program. But personally I think the satisfactory merger of this also could be arranged. When the cream of our Foreign Mission and Home Mission Activities with the W. M. S. is carried in separate covers, it leaves "The Evangelist" destitute of the most interesting news to the Church, and the news it may carry in the fields above mentioned often becomes only a rehash of what has already been published. To me, this is at least one factor why the Evangelist does not have a larger circulation. Also The Evangelist is a subscription paper, while the other magazines are furnished to their membership.

I know that I am discussing a debatable question, with which many will take issue. However, denominations many times larger than we are have done already, what I am advocating. The Church of the Brethren, more than a year ago merged their publications with "The Gospel Messenger," and the arrangement has been highly satis-

Dr. W. S. Bell

PAPER MERGER FAVORED

Following the splendid address by Dr. Bell and herewith published by request of the Ohio Conference, an open forum on the merger proposition resulted in much favorable discussion and a motion that passed without a dissenting vote, stating that it was the sense of the conference that the several church interests conducting departmental publications should consider the merger proposition offered by the Publication Board.

factory. The Congregational Church and the Christian Church (New Lights) have also taken the same steps.

I might say the Publication Board as a whole is satisfied that this is the best course for us as a people. At the last National Conference a committee from the Publication Board was appointed to meet with representatives from the Home, Foreign and W. M. S. Boards to consider the merging of all our publications under one cover. The W. M. S. felt that their work was so distinctive and in order to carry on their program effectively "The Outlook" was indispensable and told us not to consider their merging at the present time. The Home and Foreign Boards were receptive and have the matter under consideration.

I cannot see how the proposed merger would work to the disadvantage of the interests of any of the Boards I have referred to, and at the same time would be a considerable saving of money.

The Evangelist practically enters the same homes that the other magazines do and some homes they do not reach. Instead of their news reaching the members monthly as at present, through the Evangelist they could communicate weekly. The Board proposes to give them the same amount of printed space in the Evangelist during the year, that they use in their magazines. Their news and articles can all be arranged under their departmental heads. The material for publication can be arranged and edited as they see best and put in form for publication. I am not advocating hasty action, or trying to interfere with the course of any Board, but believe there is merit in this proposal. We sooner or later will be brought face to face with some serious financial problems in connection with our Publication House, in the direction we are going.

If the merger appeals to the Church and membership, I believe articles, whether for or against should be sent to the Evangelist for publication, that we may know the thought and wish of our people. It might be a good thing at this conference to present the same for discussion. I have had many of our lay members express themselves to me, that they would prefer to have a good, strong and newsy paper of the Church, carrying all the work of the Church, than to have it divided up in four publications.

Dayton, Ohio.

Traitors to Humanity

By Herman Hoyt

(Valedictory Oration at the Recent Commencement Exercises)

Dr. Jacobs, Faculty, Classmates, Parents and Friends:

Behind us lie the dim ages of the past; before us stretches a vague but certain future. The question we face, as we climb that steep ascent that leads at last to that pinnacled height, from which the world should appear "like one vast plain, and one boundless reach of sky," is not the question of Hamlet, "To be or not to be." It is not the question of our achievement. It is not the question of a waiting world.

Too long, we as college graduates, have been characterized the saviors of the world, the chosen generation, the royal prodigies. Too long, we have been loaded with compliments, and flattered with undeserved praise. On this commencement day, we face the bitter accusation of a world writhing in anguish and pain. We shrink from this vituperative thrust, but we must face it,—TRAITORS TO HUMANITY. We must face the question, "Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood from our hands?" Will the blood stains make the "multitudinous seas incarnadine?"

On the battle field of Saratoga, stands a towering obelisk, commemorative of that decisive struggle of the Revolution. About its base are four deep niches, and in these are the bronze figures of the generals who commanded there. In the first stands Horatio Gates; in the second Schuyler; and in the third Morgan. But the fourth alas, stands empty. The soldier who won that niche of fame has forfeited his right to be remembered. But below this empty niche, cut in the stone, there is a solitary name. And as the eye falls upon it, a vision rises. I see a young colonial officer leading his troops one wintry morning against the battlements of Quebec. Again I see him charging the British lines at Saratoga. And yet again, I see him crouching at the midnight hour by the murmuring Hudson, bartering his soul to Satan. The scene changes. I see a lonely room in London, and an old man dying—friendless, homeless, Godless.—Benedict Arnold, Hero, Patriot, Traitor. But what Benedict Arnold did for a nation, what every man does, who betrays a principle, what every class does that ignores justice and squanders liberties, the educated and cultured class have done for all humanity. The empty niche on the altar of memory, the vacant page on the scroll of history, has inscribed below it,—TRAITORS TO HUMANITY.

After milleniums of time, after years of ceaseless struggle, after centuries of boasted progress, 127,000,000's of our people are plunged into bewildered chaos. Hopeful advancement has been turned into wild retreat. The peaceful atmosphere of industry has become a mad stampede for existence. Christian ideals have been superceded by mud philosophies. Moral equilibrium has become an inordinate frenzy. St. Paul, almost 1900 years ago, with the voice of a prophet, and the vision of the spirit of God, characterized the times we now live in, as "Perilous" times.

As we wait today, for the degree, which is the suggested guarantee that we are partially prepared to meet the future, we at the same time, face the tremendous indictment which falls upon the heads of those who have gone before us, and which falls upon us, by virtue of our position. That the educated and cultured class of people have failed to live up to their opportunities has been well said. Thus they have become traitors to humanity. They have climbed the ladder of achievement at the expenses of the hungering multitude, and having reached the top, look down, and despise the ladder by which they climbed. Bequeathed an heritage of opportunity, of privilege, of knowledge, they have used opportunity as a means of selfish satisfaction; they have transformed privilege into a fortress of position; they have drawn knowledge into the fray as a cudgel of power.

The centuries have passed, and with their passing, the ceaseless struggle of humanity has gone slowly and tediously on. From the state of barbarism to the present time, man has toiled doggedly on in search of methods by which he could perform his tasks more easily, and provide himself with comfort and luxury. His path has wended its weary way through the darkness of untold centuries, through the superstition of the middle ages, through the gradual growing light of the approaching dawn.

From the time the knowledge of God was suddenly snatched from man in the beginning, men have been groping blindly after God if haply they might find him. The long search has led through the miasmal swamps of heathenism; through the cold, uninviting regions of Greek philosophic thought; over the arid hills of Judea, to the manger of Bethlehem. With the milling multitudes of men, soul hungry, starving for a glimpse of God, the time for his appearance was at hand.

Twenty centuries ago, men recorded their thoughts on broken pieces of pottery and bits of papyrus. Literature was a thing unknown to the masses of men. The long centuries dragged on, with tradition and custom preserved through the process of verbal transmission from father to son. But the timely invention of printing, and the arduous application of devoted men of letters, has broadened the horizon, and put printed matter within the reach of all.

The time was, when there was no money and men traded and bartered. Finally there came a time when systems of money came into use. The complexity of trade relationships increased. From the home, it shifted to the village store. From the village store to the large department store. From the home, to the factory, to the corporation, to the trust. Trade which was once local, became state wide, nation-wide, and international. Where the home was once self-sufficient, the state self-sufficient, the nation self-sufficient, now there is an absolute inescapable interdependence.

Politically, the struggle masses have gone through sacrifice and suffering, in the effort to possess that ever-elusive blessing of democracy.

But just as the world was waiting breathlessly for the sun to rise, and flood the world with its golden glory, the clouds of universal disaster gathered black on the far horizon, hurried across the sky, and submerged the world in the raging torrents of disorder, confusion, and chaos. Thus—instead of prosperity, science has brought us poverty; instead of light, religion has brought us darkness; instead of nourishment, literature has brought us trash; instead of order, economics has brought us confusion; instead of democracy, politics has brought us industrial feudalism.

The twentieth century has been marked by a phenomenal growth in education. Its advocates declare it to be the only hope of the world. The educational authorities have suggested that "in a dynamic society like ours, the major responsibility of education, is to prepare the individual to adjust himself to social change." But with that incentive in mind, men and women have been going to college with the purpose in mind not to serve, but to preserve. The motive has been selfish. This present depression is the accumulation of an era of educated, cultural selfishness. As one educator has said, "In my judgment this is a confession of complete moral and spiritual bankruptcy." The average college student may be able to contemplate the universe, and find that all is vanity. But nothing really stirs him, unless it be that the bath water is cold, the toast is burnt, or the elevator is not running; or that perchance he has missed the first section of a revolving door. Graduates and undergraduates are stirred by no great faiths; they are touched by no strong passions; they are driven by no impelling ideals. They can view a world order rushing madly toward the brink, over which it will plunge to certain destruction, without a tremor, or even a sigh of regret. The task which faced our forefathers they have evaded. The educated classes have refused to suffer and sacrifice for a cause. They have rejected the opportunity for diligence and devotion. They have spurned the privilege to give and surrender. Thus they have become traitors to humanity.

It matters not why we are here. It is enough to say that we are here. However, we must face the grim realities of the present chaotic state of affairs. We must answer to ourselves, and to God,—Shall we go out from this place to serve humanity or to serve ourselves? As strange as the paradox may seem, it is nevertheless, universal, immutable law, that "He that shall save his life shall lose it; and he that shall lose his life shall save it," for giving is living.

The college graduate must meet the challenge of the day. He must supplement and answer the sacrifices of the ages. He must fulfill the hopes of the millions who have gone before. He must rise to the unprecedented possibilities of this golden hour of opportunity. No longer dare the college graduate lapse into ignoble ease. No longer dare he allow himself to become a lolling lounge lizard. No longer dare he observe dispassionately the crucial need of humanity. The agonizing cry of humanity calls us to instant action, to untiring service, to limitless sacrifice—so that "The midnight darkness

May deepen into gray,
And men of thought, and men of action
Clear the way."

Ladies and Gentlemen: For four years we have traveled a broad way, strewn with flowers, and bathed in sunshine. Tomorrow we must face the bitter realities of life. In behalf of the class of 1932, I take this opportunity to express the gratitude we bear, for the effort which has placed us in possession of the opportunities, the privileges, and the instruments, which have armed us for the battle and girded us for service. It is our sincerest hope that in a greater measure we may express our appreciation in terms of deeds done.

---

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

---

CHRISTIANIZING HAWAIIAN JAPANESE

There are now in the Hawaiian Islands thirty Japanese Christian churches, with more than 3,000 members and thirty-two ordained pastors. Originally the Japanese language was used in the services and Japanese customs observed, but gradually the English language is being used and customs are being modified to meet the needs of the Hawaiian-born youth of Japanese parents. It is quite likely that the trend in this direction will be yet more decided on account of the considerable number of children in the Sunday schools. The Christianizing has had its periods of prosperity and depression since the arrival of the first Japanese contract laborers in Hawaii in 1885. When the Hongwanji Buddhist mission was established in the islands in 1898 many Japanese were drawn from the Christian church. However in recent years, especially among the children, the trend has been to the church. As they adopt the ideas of American citizenship, they also adopt the religion of America.—The Christian-Evangelist.

THE DIFFERING VIEWPOINTS OF INDIA AND ENGLAND

"One of the difficulties of the problem of Indian constitutional reform through the ages has been the difference in the angle of those who are equally interested in its solution. Like the Gaelic nations, the Indians tend to argue from the general to the particular. They set great store on declarations of rights, on the enunciation of abstract principles, and on constitutional and legal devices which depend more upon logical perfection and the forensic skill of their authors than the capacity of the human material which has to work them out in practice. The British mentality, on the contrary, is inclined to be obsessed by practical details. It is distrustful of generalities and tends to regard any constitutional proposals, not so much from the standpoint of inherent merits, as solely by the popular estimate of their chances of delivering the goods. In short, we in this country sometimes seem to consider the means as, perhaps, of greater interest and importance than the end, whereas Indian nationalism has fixed its eyes so firmly upon the goal that any discussion of ways and means strikes its supporters as relatively unimportant."—From The Near East and India.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC SERIOUS MENACE IN CANADA

Rev. Dr. A. J. Irwin, of the Canadian Temperance Federation, on June 6 told the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in session at London, Ont., that Government sale of liquor had failed in Canada. Consumption of spirits increased tremendously, more distilleries and breweries were opened and crime increased. Dominion Government statistics, he said, showed indictable crimes increased 80 per cent under Government sale. The depression was not hitting the liquor business to the same extent as other industries, said Dr. Irwin. In the year 1929-30 a total of $193,000,000 was spent in Government stores in Canada, and in 1930-31, $173,000,000. This was a decrease of 10½ per cent, but during the same period chain store revenues fell 16 per cent, the radio industry 23 per cent, furniture 26 per cent and hardware 28 per cent.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

WE AGREE WITH ROGERS

It was an apt remark of Will Rogers some days ago which ran thus: "There is but one reason that prohibition won't be repealed, and it's not numbers either. It's because the wrong people want it repealed." That is saying in concise form what multitudes have always known. While there are some respectable folks in the repeal crowd, somehow they always seem fearfully out of place. The most spiritual-minded people, those of keenest moral convictions, are not found in that crowd. But we have never known a person too low in the moral scale, too destitute of moral convictions and sentiments, to be numbered with the repealists. In fact, the lower one is morally the better at home he feels there and the more he seems to be in his place. Suppose we would collect all the spiritually-minded, far-seeing folks into one crowd, and all those who pitch their lives upon the lower moral plane into another—separating the two crowds as the shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. Which crowd, think you, would include the repealists? Correct. You guessed it the first time.—Religious Telescope.

HARD TIMES INCREASING CHURCH ATTENDANCE

Reports from many sources indicate that church services have been better attended the past season than they have for several years. Also the Sunday schools are showing gains. The superintendent of the Sunday school of St. James church, which works among the Negro population of Harlem, reports: "The psychological effect of depressed times has quickened religious interest on the part of thousands of adults in our neighborhood. It has had a corresponding effect upon boys and girls. Our church school closed the year March 31, 1932, with the largest enrollment in its history." It is also significant that Union seminary at the commencement exercises this week graduated the largest class in its history. A like report also is received from the Lutheran church in this city, which is ordaining the largest number of young men it has ever ordained in the 200 years of the history of the denomination here.—Christian Century.

ANTI-SECRECY CHURCHES

According to the National Christian Association, members of secret societies are denied membership in the following churches:

Free Will Baptists; Seventh-Day Baptists; Primitive Baptists; Church of Brethren; Plymouth Brethren; United Brethren (Radical); Mennonites; Free Methodists; Wesleyan Methodists; Nazarene; Associate Presbyterian; Reformed Presbyterian; Christian Reformed; Church of God in Christ (Negro); Missouri Synod-Lutheran; American Lutheran Synod.

It is understood that this list is incomplete.—Free Methodist.

A TESTIMONY FROM LIBERAL SCHOLARSHIP

Prof. Otto Proksch, professor of theology at Erlangen University, has recently published a commentary on the Book of Isaiah, which is to be included in the Sellin series of commentaries on the Old Testament. Prof. Proksch is a noted Old Testament scholar and by no means a conservative. Yet he does not allow the word alma, "a virgin," of Isaiah 7:14, to be translated "a young married woman," as many of the Modernists would have it. It is "virgin," and so it remains. Dr. Proksch also stands strongly for the Messianic prophecy of Isaiah 9:1-6, saying of it: "This vision of the future glory of the Davidic kingdom belongs to the greatest predictive prophecies of the Bible." Then surely he takes the same position with regard to Isaiah 53.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

Study No. 1

Rom. 4:18,—"Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, so shall thy seed be." Moffatt translates: "For Abraham, when hope was gone, hoped on in faith, and thus became the father of many nations—even as he was told, so numberless shall your offspring be." And the following verses are in the same strain: "His faith never quailed even when he noted the utter impotence of his own body (for he was about a hundred years old) or the impotence of Sara's womb; no unbelief made him waver about God's promise; his faith won strength as he gave glory to God and felt convinced that he was able to do what he had promised." Men have often been twitted about believing without facts; but here the Holy Spirit is exalting a great man FOR BELIEVING AGAINST HOPE. In the realm of religion, even, this is simply wonderful; and yet, how beautiful! How much can you believe of the things of God? The basis of the Christian religion is faith and not facts. The basis of the science of chemistry is the acceptance of the theory of the atom; likewise many of the sciences start with the belief of a simple statement, like two times three are six. "This is 'a'", we say, and the child says "a." He has to believe it or stop right there.

The distinguishing difference between Abraham and those around him was that he believed some things beyond his reason when others did not. Others could have believed but did not. I haven't as much sympathy with the so-called honest doubter when it comes to the Christian religion as I once had. The trouble with that "honest doubter" is, that he is not honest with himself. He does not want to give up his pet sins. Some men can not only believe against apparent facts, but like Abraham, against hope. It was most incredible at his age to believe that he was to be the father of many nations. There was only one thing in his favor; and that was, God said he would. Paul calls this "Believing against hope."

One of our great pioneer preachers has set forth this great Bible teaching by declaring that there are three degrees in the highest test of faith illustrated in the Bible with great clearness. The first is to believe God when he issues his commands to men (1) when one CAN NOT SEE that the thing commanded can do any good in itself, and yet believe; (2) to believe God when one CAN SEE QUITE CLEARLY that the thing commanded can not do any good in itself; and (3) to believe, when one can see that the thing commanded is clearly wrong in itself. The first, to believe when one can not see that the thing commanded can do any good in itself, is well illustrated in the tragedy of the last of the ten plagues. The incident is narrated in the 12th of Exodus. A lamb was to be slain, and the blood sprinkled on the door-post of the houses in which the Israelites were dwelling while yet in Egypt. The promise was that when the destroying angel passed through, where the blood was found the first-born should be left alive; but where the blood was not found there the first-born should be stricken with death. Now, there was no connection between the thing commanded by the Lord, and the end in view—the death of the first-born. Unbelief could have stumbled over many questions. "Why the need of all this outward ceremony?" "Why blood?" Does not the Lord see where the children of Israel dwell? Neither Moses nor Aaron could see what good the blood would do. But they did not indulge in any rebellious talk as TO WHAT GOOD IT WOULD DO. The Lord had spoken! They believed God. They might have sneered,

"What good will that do"? But how sublime the faith which proceeds just because God has spoken. A child of the most High who will quibble because he does not understand the why of the great God of heaven and earth will find, too, nothing but death, spiritual death, in the pathway of the destroying Angel. As then, precisely as far as obedience went life was preserved; where the will of man was set up against the plain command of God, death was found.

The second test of faith is, to obey when ONE CAN SEE that the thing commanded can not do any good in itself. The second chapter of Joshua is one of the many incidents. Jericho was to be captured. There was the program of the Lord. March around the city each day for seven days. The seventh the circuit was to be made seven times. Then the rams' horns should be blown; and then a shout of Joshua's men. What good would that do? Outside of the mighty hand of God, why, nothing could come from it. With God it worked.

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Esther

It was during the lifetime of Nehemiah and Ezra that the events narrated in the book of Esther took place. These two men, the former a scribe and the other a Tirsahathaite, "though neither of them ever wore a crown, commanded an army, conquered any country, or were famed for philosophy or oratory, yet both of them, being pious praying men, and very serviceable in their day to the church of God and the interests of religion, were really greater men, and more honorable, not only than any of the Roman consuls or dictators, but than Xenophon, or Demosthenes, or Plato himself, who lived at the same time, the bright ornaments of Greece." To this excellent tribute of the superior-commentator, Matthew Henry, we heartily subscribe.

The scene of this superb Biblical drama, historical throughout—was laid in the mighty empire of Persia. Cyrus and Darius I had left the scenes of earthly conflict, and Ahasuerus, the son of the royal succession, identified by some as the famous Xerxes, and by others as the Darius Hystaspes, was seated on the royal throne. Moorehead is kind to him when he says: "But withal he was a man of utmost vanity, blindest prejudice, and capable of the deadliest enmity; a time-serving, selfish, implacable, swaggering bully, a man whose mind was covered over at the top so as to shut out all lofty aspirations, and closed at the sides so as to shut out all kindness, and open only at the bottom for the incoming of base passions, pride, haughtiness and hate." Remember, gentle reader, Dr. Moorehead was not a Jew, but a scholarly, pious, and level-headed American when he wrote the above lines.

The reign of this king who is mentioned in Ezra 4:6, extended over a period of twenty-one years. (486-465 B. C.). It was in the third year of Xerxes' reign that the events of the book Esther transpired, right in the midst of the interval of time between the first and second expedition of the Jews to Jerusalem. To be scrupulously exact, these events occurred between the completion of the Temple and the restoration of the Passover mentioned in Ezra chapter six and the expedition of Ezra mentioned in chapter seven.

The mass of Jews who would not go to Jerusalem because they preferred the lucrative position and high state of secular civilization under Xerxes, were caught in the maelstrom of events under the administration of Haman. They were the less spiritually minded Jews and figured greatly in the providential leadings and manifestations thereof of the present scripture.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Probably Mordecai.
2. When and Where Written. Around 425 B. C., possibly in Persia.
3. To Whom Addressed. Israel.
4. Occasion. The decree of the king to exterminate the Jews and their remarkable deliverance.
5. Authenticity. Sober history. See Josephus' Writings.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Fall of Vashti. 1:1-22.
2. The Queenship of Esther. 2:1-23.

3. The Conspiracy of Haman. 3:1-15.
4. The Intervention of Esther. 4:1-7:10.
5. The Judgment of Haman. 8:1-9:19.
6. The Feast of Purim. 9:20-32.
7. The Exaltation of Mordecai. 10:1-3.

III. THE CONTENTS OF THE BOOK

The book of Esther opens with the feast of Ahasuerus and the episode between the king and his noble queen, Vashti. She refuses to dance ignominiously before the drunken brawlers and is, as a consequence, deposed. The beautiful Esther is selected as the new queen. Mordecai, a cousin of the queen, is introduced as a righteous man who will not do obedience to the treacherous Haman. He plots not only to get rid of Mordecai, but also all of the Jews, including Esther. The blow falls; the Jews are to be exterminated at the request of Haman and the royal, unchangeable command of Persian law. In the meanwhile, Esther fasts, together with the Jews, and plans to reveal the real Haman to the King. Because Mordecai saves the king's life, and Esther intervenes, Haman is hanged on his self-built gallows. The victory is complete; the Jews celebrate widely; and Mordecai is exalted higher than the former rascalous Haman.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Providence. Deliverance.
2. Key Verses. 4:14; 2:17, 21; 5:13; 7:9; 10; 10:3.
3. Key Chapters. 2, 6, 9.
4. Key Ideas. Twilight and Dawn: Doom and Deliverance.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The chief value of the book of Esther lies in the fact that, although the name of God is not mentioned, Providence or God's foresight is in evidence in the major and minor aspects of the lives of all the characters involved. Though God's ways are secret, and he hides amid the shadows, yet his finger traces out the revealing lines which determine the destiny of men. The whole narrative confirms the testimony of the Psalmist: "The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth. The Lord shall laugh at him, he sees that his day is coming." Ps. 27:12, 13.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

"Esther, to say the least, is a striking illustration of Christ and his work. She, like Christ, from the court of the king, volunteers and condescends to jeopardize her honour, riches, and life and becomes mediator between the unchangeable law and her doomed people and triumphantly brings to them a glorious redemption. To her and through her, to them the golden scepter of favour is extended. 'This Book is the rose window in the cathedral structure of the Old Testament. If the light it transmits be dim it reveals exquisite tracery and symbolic design.'"—Robinson.

"As to the typical bearing of the book. Ahasuerus would represent the supreme Gentile authority, and Vashti, beauty, the professing church failing to show her beauty; she is then superseded by the Jewish bride, Esther, star, (Ps. xlv.); while the wicked Haman, planning the destruction of Israel, and in the midst of his murderous purposes signally cut off, would as surely figure in the conspiracy of the latter-day enemies of restored Israel (Ps. lxxxiii.); Mordecai would set forth our Lord head of his exalted people in the millennial future."—Scott.

VII. THE LESSON OF THE BOOK (in poetry)

In a striking way James Russell Lowell has caught the meaning of God in his universe, when he avers:

"Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record
One death-grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the word;

Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne—
Yet that scaffold sways the future and, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

"We see dimly in the present what is small and what is great,
Slow of faith how weak an arm may turn the iron helm of fate,
But the soul is still oracular; amid the market's din,
List the ominous stern whisper from the Delphic cave within—'They enslave their children's children who make compromise with sin.'"

And again, remember the saintly Cowper's admonition:

"Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.

MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

Standard of Excellence for Brethren Sunday Schools

I. HOME EXTENSION

1. An Active Cradle Roll. To associate the child from birth to the Sunday school; to interest his parents in his spiritual nurture and to prepare the child for class membership in the school. The department will be in charge of an alert supervisor who will keep an enrollment of the children; make known their names to the school; visit occasionally their parents, sharing suggestions and literature with reference to the religious nurture of the child.

2. A Working Home Department. To enlist persons denied the privilege of Sunday school attendance; to assist them in Bible study at home; to win them for and to build them up in Christ. The department will be in charge of a capable supervisor, assisted by such visitors as necessary, who will keep a record of those enrolled; distribute literature for study and seek to have Home Department members present for the regular school session on special days.

II. ORGANIZED CLASSES

1. One or more organized classes in Young People's Division.

2. One or more organized classes in Adult Division.

To relieve the teacher of sole responsibility; to distribute labor and to fix responsibility among the pupils; and to become identified with the larger fellowship of the organized movement. The class will elect a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and create devotional, membership, social, and such other committees as desired. This organization, including the class name, age and sex of the pupils will be certified to the National Association by the divisional or general superintendent and receive a certificate.

III. LEADERSHIP TRAINING

1. A training class registered with the National Sunday School Association and using any approved text. To provide informed and skilled leaders for the school; to extend and complete the religious training of the pupils; to co-operate in securing more and better workers for kingdom building. This training may be carried on in connection with the Sunday school or community institute or both. Texts approved for the following courses, outlined in the new Handbook, will be recognized. They are as follows: (1) Certificate Courses. (2) The Shorter Course for Sunday School workers. (3) The Larger Course for Advanced Christian Workers. (4) The International Standard Course. Suitable certificates and diplomas are awarded at the completion of each of the above-mentioned courses. These are issued by the National Association which also provides questions for examinations or makes satisfactory arrangements with the teacher in charge relative to the procedure which shall be followed in the administration of teacher training work. Consult the Handbook for further information.

2. Twenty-five percent of the teachers graduates in some approved course. To recognize those persons who have already completed some training course, and to encourage the school to use trained teachers. This point includes those who have graduated from the earlier courses.

IV. GRADATION

1. Graded school organization with annual promotion. To enroll pupils according to recognized age grouping; to provide classes for all ages and to encourage application for the purpose of making progress. This contemplates a division for children, young people, and adults with as many classes in each division as the pupils require. Each division should be supervised by an appointed, capable person. Where possible and feasible the divisions may have separate worship programs.

2. Graded lesson instruction in at least one department. To supply lesson material suited to the interests, capacities, and needs of the pupils; to assist them in the cultivation of fruitful knowledge, right attitudes, and necessary skills. The graded lessons published by The Standard Publication Company, Cincinnati, Ohio are the most Biblical of all the graded series now before the public. They are the most beneficial, therefore, for our denomination. They are pedagogically sound and seek to provide "milk for the babes and meat for the adults." No graded series will be found wholly satisfactory to Brethren people; extra Biblical and doctrinal teaching must be added by Brethren pastors and Brethren Sunday school teachers.

V. MISSIONS

1. Systematic missionary instruction. To make missionary instruction a normal and integral part of Christian education; to generate the missionary passion in the whole church. Such instruction may be given as a part of the regular lesson, supplemented with monthly presentation before the entire school or a division thereof. Mission study classes may be added. Dr. Yoder's recent book on the South American field is recommended. Dr. Gribble will have a book ready on our African work at an early date.

2. An annual White Gift Offering. To encourage Christian giving; to extend the fellowship of service, to support worthy objects. This offering is taken at Christmas, the proceeds of which go to the Ashland Seminary, Kentucky Missions, Foreign Missions, the Shipshewana Young People's Training School, Sunday school institute work, and other miscellaneous items.

VI. CITIZENSHIP

1. Systematic Citizenship Training. To foster Christian attitudes with reference to civic and state obligations; to make the pupils conscious of a growing world citizenship; This too may be done in regular class study and through monthly instruction with the entire school. Christian citizenship may be made a particular study of young people or adults for a period. Obedience to and responsibility for law should be stressed.

2. Participation in some form of benevolence. To unite mind and heart and hand in Christian good-will and helpfulness. The assistance given to temperance causes, such as, prohibition, anti-tobacco and anti-drug movements, etc., is an example. Persons in need in the local community may be aided also. A contribution to the benevolences of the church will count.

VII. DECISIONS

1. Decision Day observed annually. To lead the pupils into personal fellowship with Christ as Savior and Lord; to enlist them for membership in the church. Palm Sunday is the most appropriate time for such a decision, preparing the way for entrance into church membership on Easter Sunday. Decisions, however, may be encouraged any time through the year, and these will result from good teaching as well as from special appeal.

2. Life Work decisions emphasized regularly. To help the pupils to become workers in the Kingdom; to recruit for the ministry, missionary service, and kindred activities of the church. Such decisions will result from regular teaching if properly done. But opportunity should be given for public enlistment. This may be done in connection with the White Gift Offering.

VIII. CONFERENCES

1. Workers' Conferences held regularly, ten recommended, six required. To bring together those workers engaged in common tasks; to enable them to view together co-operative achievements and possibilities; to promote leadership morale and esprit de corps. Such a conference should be held early in the month. If planned for by a wide-awake program committee the meeting will be more attractive and helpful. Suggestions and helps are given, periodically, on the Sunday school page in the Brethren Evangelist.

2. Delegates to some convention, denominational and inter-denominational. To acquaint the school with forward-looking plans and to unite it with a larger fellowship. City, County, and State Conferences or Conventions, which feature Sunday school work, or Brethren Institutes, State Conferences and the Winona National Conference are usually informing and inspiring. Enrollment in the Shipshewana Young People's Training School will count also.

IX. DENOMINATIONAL

1. Records accurately kept and statistics sent promptly to the general secretary. To enable the school to be intelligently informed of its own personnel and to assist the denomination in checking up upon its own strength and progress. The individual membership record card kept on file alphabetically supplements the class membership book. Quarterly reports as to enrollment, attendance, offering, and services rendered make it easy for the secretary to fill out the statistical blank sent by the general secretary.

2. Use of Brethren Publications. To foster denominational loyalty and to make possible improvement of said publications with general support. Where these publications meet the need of the local school they should be given preference. Graded lessons may be obtained through the Brethren Publishing Company.

X. LIBRARY

1. At least one book chosen from any seven of the ten divisions suggested. To equip the worker with tools and to provide helpful reading for the whole school. The book list given in the Hand Book, published by the National Association, offer a varied selection. Schools are asked to select at least one book from any seven of the ten divisions. A copy of the Hand Book or further information concerning these books may be had on request from the Educational secretary. Books purchased through the Ashland office will mean a saving of postage to the buyer and a slight percent of profit to our National Sunday School Association. Kindly favor us by buying through our office.

AWARDS GIVEN EACH YEAR AT NATIONAL CONFERENCE

1. Schools attaining 100 points will be recognized as Front Line schools and will be awarded a book priced at $1.00.
2. Schools attaining 85 points will be recognized as Banner Schools and will be awarded a 60c book.
3. Schools attaining 70 points will receive public mention in the recognition service.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
with
Thoburn C. Lyon

THE PASSOVER

(Lesson for July 17)

Lesson Text: Exodus 12:21-27; Golden Text: 1 Cor. 5:7

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

The Passover Outlined. Exodus 12:3-14

These ordinances of old were shadows of things to come. Christ was the lamb slain from the foundation of the world; it is his blood, sprinkled upon our hearts, that saves us from death. The meal was to be eaten in haste, for the success of their flight from Egypt rested in great measure upon their haste; likewise, today is the day of salvation and we are enjoined to work while 'tis called today, for the forces of death may overtake us before we reach the place of safety. This series of lessons should prove most helpful in giving new meaning to New Testament truths.

TUESDAY

The Passover Observed. Exodus 12:21-28

God had given the pattern for the Passover, and the people carefully obeyed his commands, knowing that their safety, and the safety of their loved ones, depended upon it. Let us not forget to apply this lesson to ourselves today. However, aside from any selfish motives, it appears that at this time the people were sincere in their obedience, for when Moses ceased speaking "The people bowed the head and worshipped." How different some of the later pages of Israelite history might have been if they had maintained the same devout spirit! Note too, that the observance of the ordinance was to serve as an object lesson to the children: the Family Altar gives us just such an opportunity today.

WEDNESDAY

Keeping the Passover. Num. 9:1-8

The command had originally been that they were to keep the Passover when they came to the Promised Land. They were now in the Wilderness, but even there God ordained that they should keep his ordinances. The men who were unclean (vs. 7, 8), were also instructed to keep the Passover. In short, the thought is that we have a duty which we owe our God and ourselves, and there is nothing which may excuse us from the performance of that duty. Let us keep this lesson in mind as difficulties arise in our own lives from day to day.

THURSDAY

Christ Keeping the Passover. Luke 22:7-16

As Brethren, we feel that we have many scriptural reasons for believing that this "Last Supper" which Jesus ate with his disciples was not the Passover, but a part of the preparation for it. That Jesus had faithfully observed the Feast in former years we cannot doubt, but this year he himself was crucified at the hour the Paschal lamb should have been slain. Let us faithfully keep the ordinances he established that night, till he comes!

FRIDAY

Christ our Passover. 1 Cor. 5:1-8

Christ was the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world for the sins of men. Paul's thought here is that in view of the great sacrifice of God's Son we dare not live in sin, as though he had not died for us, but we are to purge out every evil thought and deed, keeping ourselves daily clean even as the Jews thoroughly cleansed themselves and their dwellings just before the Passover. God give us strength and grace to keep this feast in the spirit in which he ordained it!

SATURDAY

Redeemed by Christ. 1 Pet. 1:13-23

Redeemed, bought again, not with corruptible things, but with the gracious blood of the Son of God! How we ought to love and reverence him! As one has sung: "I would work like any slave for love of God's dear Son!" If we call on the Father (v. 17), we might well be afraid to do anything which is not according to his will. Let us pray that he may keep us ever mindful of the great price with which we have been bought, and that he may help us to proclaim it: by word and deed, to those about us.

SUNDAY

Thirsting for God. Ps. 63:1-7

The object of the Passover was to save God's chosen people from death. Needless to say, the object of the sufferings of Christ our Passover was to save his people from a greater death, and to lead them back to God. How could we help praising him, even as David did! Truly we may sing with him: "Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice." Let us not forget, too, to carry the cup of cold water to those about us who are thirsting for God today.

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK 	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E. Canton, Ohio
C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.

Building a Worship Program

By Tephia Folsom

Recently several have asked for information concerning worship programs. Here is a suggestion or two.

First, consider the aims of worship in each prayer meeting. Worship should help the group feel and know God. It should emphasize some Christian ideal or virtue, and last, it should teach how to lead worship services.

The program should be built around the subject of the lesson.

In preparing a worship program the order should be varied from time to time. The committee should take precaution that the order does not become a mere form.

The Bible-readings for the week give an idea for the service.

A spirit of reverence is desired in all worship programs. This is generally helped by a quiet atmosphere. Thoughtful, prayerful preparation is necessary.

The elements found in a worshipful program are prayer, Bible-reading, music, and the central theme.

Prayers may be individual, silent, in song, or by the group. The individual prayers should be short, even just sentences, and seldom a long prayer.

Bible-reading for worship may be either in unison or responsive. A passage of Scripture for the beginning of the service gives a devotional atmosphere.

Music, either a prayerful song or an instrumental number, will give to the service a worshipful attitude. A prayer song to begin the service may be the old favorite, "Into My Heart." A violin solo will give an air of quietness, which is akin to reverence.

The central theme may be discussed by the group with the careful guidance of the leader, or by the leader himself. A poem, a story, or a well-prepared dramatization will establish the main idea in the minds of the group.

Finally, the program that helps the individual to know God, feel his presence, and determine to make his life count for Christian activity, according to the highest principles he knows, is one that has attained its ideals.—Selected.

LOOKOUT COMMITTEE WORK IN SUMMER TIME

During the summer months the lookout committee can do much to help in making the summer activities interesting so that none will think of disbanding.

Invite the college students who are at home for the summer. Many of them will be glad to share their new ideas to make the meetings different.

Strive to meet any who may be spending their vacations in your community, and have them join in your activities.

At this season, when outdoor events are so attractive, ask the social committee to co-operate and plan a "lookout picnic," or other social affair, to which you should invite all prospective members and guests.

If some neighboring society is also meeting during the summer, ask them to visit your group for some meeting, inviting them to have a part in planning the program. If your neighboring society has discontinued for the vacation period, invite any of their members who are remaining at home to share in the activities of your group.

When societies have no publicity committee, such work may be done by the lookout committee. It is particularly true that announcements in your own church are not sufficient for advertising your summer time activities. Use newspaper notices, send written announcements by mail to individuals, and use posters.—Wilma Thompson in C. E. World.

Steuensburg, Ohio.

The face ultimately tells the story of the life. Beauty of soul will finally reveal itself in beauty of expression.—Selected.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
 Financial Secretary Foreign Board
 1925 East 5th St.,
 Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
 Home Missionary Secretary
 Berne, Indiana

Shall Egypt Have Religious Liberty?

Yousef Abd El Samad, an eighteen-year-old student in the American University in Cairo, asked his teacher to give him a Bible, saying that he was impressed with the character of Christians, and wished to study their book. Later on, having asked to be directed to someone who would give him Christian instruction, he was told of the Bible lectures given in Cairo by Rev. Erian Butros, and under his teaching Yousef became a Christian and was baptized.

His father, not knowing this, but knowing that Yousef came to the lectures, gave him a number of severe beatings, threatened to take his life, and ordered him to observe the annual Mohammedan fast, Ramadan.

Several times Yousef was obliged to flee from his father's house on account of persecution, and on one occasion, having received word that if he returned again his father would surely kill him, he was brought to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Butros in Maadi, a suburb of Cairo. Though knowing of the fanaticism of his father, and his high government influence, they advised Yousef to return to his home and throw himself on the mercy of his father. Yousef, having on this advice written a letter to his father, was on his way to post it accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Butros, when suddenly, they were confronted by two policemen, a detective, and Yousef's cousin, and were all taken to the police headquarters in Maadi.

Yousef's father arrived shortly afterwards, and immediately on seeing Yousef, attacked him violently, and after being led away, rushed back at him twice, breathing threatenings and promising him death. Then turning on Mrs. Butros, in the most vile and abusive language, he threatened her life, even though it might take years to accomplish it. Toward Mr. Butros he was even more abusive and violent, rushing upon him with a big stick. All this occurred in police headquarters, with several witnesses present.

There in the presence of all, Yousef stated quietly that he was a Christian, and wished only to be free to follow his convictions. He refused positively to return to his father's house for fear of his life.

The day following, an Egyptian officer assured Mrs. Butros that Yousef's arrest could not have been accomplished without his father having falsified his age. That he being eighteen years old was free to change his religious convictions, and also free to leave his father's house. He declared that all Yousef had to do was to appear before the Governor and testify there in the presence of a Sheikh.

Yousef was then summoned to appear, the police in charge of him declaring at the time that they had the boy about ready to recant.

The next day, Yousef, haggard and pale, appeared with all the others, and to our surprise, after what we had been told, declared firmly that he was a Christian. Yousef was magnificent in his Christian stand. The officer, Fraser Bey, then ordered that Yousef make his declaration before the Governor in the presence of a Sheikh. On going upstairs, while in the waiting-room adjoining the Sub-Governor's office, Yousef was knocked about, and twice he was locked up in a room with two fierce-looking Sheikhs, but during all this, he still persisted that he was a Christian.

Suddenly a door was opened, and the father, together with a lawyer, rushed out, and Yousef, without ever having an opportunity to appear before the Governor, was hurried down the stairway. Fraser Bey, on hearing this, gave orders to stop them, and Yousef with his captors were overtaken in the courtyard. In the struggle that followed, Yousef, having fainted dead away, was thrown over the back of a policeman and carried off.

In answer to an appeal on Yousef's behalf, the Sub-Governor declared that Yousef was being handed over to his father for protection till he was twenty-one years of age.

When Mrs. Butros reminded the Sub-Governor of the Religious Liberty clause in the Egyptian Constitution, also of the statement in the Koran, which declares, "There is no compulsion in religion", he then gave orders that the boy be brought back again, but the report came that Yousef was in the hands of two doctors and too ill to be brought.

The missionaries, knowing that Yousef was afraid to eat or drink in his father's home lest he be poisoned, earnestly begged the police that he be placed in a hospital, but were refused.

This case of Yousef's has caused a terrific stir, and the whole country is ablaze. The Arabic daily papers have printed great headlines about Yousef, and the missionaries themselves have been accused of terrible crimes. It seems to be a test case for the application of religious liberty and freedom of conscience. Is Egypt to be run on favoritism and influence or law and justice to all? Shall the Egyptian Constitution become a scrap of paper when it comes to a matter of freedom of conscience, or is it a bona fide document?

A great issue is at stake regarding all missionary work in Egypt. May the Lord give us victory over all the powers of darkness, and cause the wrath of man to praise him. Do pray for freedom of conscience and religious liberty for Moslems.

The last word about Yousef is that he is ill and under the care of an English and an Egyptian doctor, and as soon as he is well enough, he will have to appear again before the Judge.

How One Mission Was Affected by the Conversion and Arrest of Yousef as told by Mr. Clapham of Sohag

"Egypt has been having lively times of late. The way for Moslem arrogancy has been steadily rising, and when a young Moslem in Cairo turned to seek Christ, the rage of the nation knew no bounds. Newspapers poured out lies daily about the awful crimes of the missionaries. Attacks were made on Mr. McLenahan in Cairo. His hall was smashed and the people were beaten. Then at Tanta, not far from here, attacks were made. Mr. Aboud's sign in Heliopolis was smashed several times.

"Then on Friday they made an attack on our house-boat with stones. I was writing, Mr. Mitchell ran up on the bank into the main street to remonstrate. Mrs. Mitchell called me, and I went up and demanded from the police the names of the ringleaders. They stopped for a minute, and I was taking Mr. Mitchell away when they suddenly commenced to beat him. They turned on me also and we thought our time had come. The attack was planned from the Mosque in the morning.

"We hardly knew what was happening, and after the first blow did not seem to feel much. Brother Mitchell seemed to get the most, but I got a black eye and many blows. We lifted our hearts to the Lord and they seemed to leave us for a while. We then walked into a Christian pharmacy and they closed one of the doors, as the crowd was lining up again. They rang for the police, who came quickly and took us all to the station, the crowd walking at a distance. Of course when they learned that I was a Britisher from Palestine they seemed a bit alarmed.

"Meanwhile Mrs. Mitchell, the servant and the baby were left on the boat. Some of the crowd went to the bank, threw rocks at the boat and cut it adrift, but the servant pulled it back again. Then the police officers brought us back and set guards to watch the boat.

"I insisted on having a meeting at night, so they sent a guard with us. Some thought that the people would not come out, as the news spread like wild-fire, but to our surprise the crowd came, and we had a wonderful time. People were sympathetic and happy, and crowded to see us. We had a grand meeting. Last night, Sunday, the crowd was great. I spoke of the Lord's coming, and there was rapt attention."

All missionary work is in the balance. Our prayer is that out of it all there may come religious freedom for the Moslems.—The Evangelical Christian.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR PROTESTANT MISSIONS

In America, including Canada, contributions to the cause of foreign missions during 1929 increased considerably, but the continental contributions fell off. In Germany, Sweden, Switzerland, France and Finland there was an increase, but not large enough to equalize the decrease in Belgium, Denmark and Holland. America contributes 55.5 per cent, England 22.04 per cent, and the Continent 9.3 per cent of the total gifts recorded. Sums contributed in 1929 were as follows:

America .....	$28,525,939
Great Britain .....	11,172,525
South America .....	3,700,184
Germany .....	1,448,517
Australia .....	1,390,292
Sweden .....	1,247,745
South Africa .....	681,275
Denmark .....	528,472
Norway .....	481,328
Holland .....	473,958
New Zealand .....	471,782
Switzerland .....	292,890
France .....	155,935
Finland .....	118,235
Belgium .....	4,633

Total ..... $50,693,710

The Adventure of a Ram--An African Story

By A. D. Helser

(Sixth of a Series of African Folk Stories Selected by Mrs. Orville D. Jobson, Missionary to French Equatorial Africa and published at intervals in The Brethren Evangelist for the special benefit of our young readers.—Editor.)

One day a ram decided to go on a journey and be a medicine man on the way. The ram brought some honey in a can. He then bought three skins and put them into the honey to use as medicine on the way.

He had not gone very far when he met a hyena. The hyena said, "Medicine man, where are you going?" The ram replied, "I am going on a journey, your honor." The hyena saw how nice and fat the ram was, so he said, "I want a charm, Mr. Medicine man." "All right," said the ram with fear and trembling. He then took one of the skins out of the honey without ceremony, and gave it to the hyena. "Do not swallow the skin, just suck off the honey and give it back to me, so that I can dip it in again for you," said the ram. But the hyena swallowed the skin, honey and all, with a relish. The poor ram with quivering legs, said, "Your honor, have you swallowed the skin?" The hyena did not answer, but with a snarl said, "Give me more, that is all I ask."

The frightened ram, remembering that he had but two skins left, took out another skin dripping with honey. As he gave it to the hyena he said, "Your honor, I beg of you, please do not swallow the skin." The hyena grinned and swallowed it with a gulp. The ram sighed, and timidly said, "Did you swallow it too?"

Great fear came over the sleek fat ram. His heart thumped as he thought of what would happen to him when the one last skin went to join the two that went before. "There will be nothing left but me." He did not need to wait long. "Medicine man, more," came the insistent voice of the hyena. The wise fat ram summoned his poise, and quietly suggested, "Your honor let us walk down the road a little way, and then I will give you more." The hyena was delighted. They started each with his eye on the other. They had only gone a few steps when they saw a lion coming to meet them. Their first thought to run was smothered with fear. The lion said, "Slave, where are you going?" The trembling hyena, hardly able to speak, said, "King of kings, this medicine man is going on a journey, and I am going down the road with him to say good-bye." The lion rolled his eyes toward the fat ram and said, "Medicine man, will you give me a charm?" "King of the world, I will gladly give you a charm," said the ram. Then the ram brought his one last skin out, and said, "King of the world, please do not swallow the skin." But the lion with one blink of his eyes, had swallowed it and was licking his chops for more. "Oh, King of the world, have you swallowed it? There is no other," uttered the lamb. Seeming not to have heard, the lion promptly demanded more. The ram had a brilliant idea, and he said, "I have no more skins. Ask the hyena to cut you a strip from his body." The lion walked closer to the hyena and said, "Will you give me a strip of your skin?" "It can not be done, King of the world," politely said the hyena. "Give me a strip of your skin quickly, because the medicine man is in a hurry." The frightened hyena began to cut some from his body without delay, but the pain was too great for him. He said, "King of kings, I can not do it, you cut me." The lion seized the hyena until he cried with pain. The lion then gave the strip to the ram. The ram dipped it into the honey, and then he gave it back to the lion who swallowed it with a sigh of satisfaction. "Where shall we get more skin?" queried the ram. The lion turned to the hyena and said, "Will you cut me more skin from your body?" But without answer, the hyena attempted to flee and was caught and skinned alive.

Proudly the lion came back with the hyena skin, only to find that the ram had deserted his medicine man equipment and fled. Thus the ram was saved from the hands of the hyena, for even though the lion hunted, he was never able to find that sleek fat ram.

French Equatorial Africa.

God bestows his gifts on those who will improve them, but takes them away from those who bury or neglect them.—Matthew Henry.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apollie
was a great correspondent

SHIPSHEWANA BIBLE CONFERENCE

July 17th to 24th

Sunday Morning

- 10:00 Sunday School
(Elkhart Supt. in charge)
11:00 Worship. Prof. Alva McClain—The Preacher
Afternoon
2:30 Elkhart Choir in Sacred Concert
Sermon—R. F. Porte
Evening
7:30 Pictures. S. M. Whetstone
8:00 Sermon. Prof. Monroe

Monday Morning

- 10:00 Bible Study. Prof. McClain
Evening
7:30 Pictures. S. M. Whetstone
8:00 Sermon. Prof. Stuckey

Tuesday Morning

- 10:00 Bible Study. Prof. McClain
Evening
7:30 Pictures. S. M. Whetstone
8:00 Sermon. Prof. Monroe

Wednesday Morning

- 10:00 Bible Study. Prof. McClain
Evening
7:30 Pictures. S. M. Whetstone
8:00 Sermon. Prof. McClain

Thursday Morning

- 10:00 Bible Study. Prof. McClain
Evening
7:30 Pictures. S. M. Whetstone
8:00 Sermon. Prof. Monroe

Friday Morning

- 10:00 Bible Study. Prof. McClain
Evening
7:30 Pictures. S. M. Whetstone
8:00 Stunts. By Training School

Saturday Morning

- 10:00 Bible Study. Prof. McClain
Evening
7:30 Pictures. S. M. Whetstone
8:00 Sermon. Prof. Stuckey

Sunday Morning

- 10:00 Sunday School. Nappanee Supt. in Charge
11:00 Worship. Prof. Monroe
Afternoon
2:30 Concert. Nappanee Men's Chorus
Evening
7:30 Pictures. S. M. Whetstone
8:00 Sermon. Prof. McClain

The music for all sessions will be in charge of Rev. Fred Vanator. All services to begin by Daylight Savings time.

The Committee in charge of arrangements are not wanting to dictate what Sunday you are to attend the meetings, but are reminding you that all folks not in the congregations at Nappanee and Goshen, and north of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad are especially invited to attend the services on the first Sunday. Goshen and Nappanee with all churches south of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, are invited to attend on the second Sunday.

H. F. STUCKMAN, Secretary.

MYTHICAL MONEY

The psalmist in looking backward over a life devoted to big tasks thrilled with success and saddened by sin; but never, without the awareness of God, sums up his observations as follows: "I have been young, and now am old; yet, have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

This calls to mind a story which appeared in one of the Atlanta dailies recently. Rudolf Steinherr, a Hungarian wine merchant, plotted his own death by murder to insure a life income for his family. Steinherr hired an assassin to do the deed after he had used most of his cash to pay the premium on $100,000 insurance in favor of his family. After his death it was found out that he was in the very verge of bankruptcy. And, too, The Constitution one day last week informed the public that Al Capone's fortune was vanishing. If the truth were known the fortunes made in the liquor business, legal or illegal, are more the creation of a credulous public mind than solid substance.

The only wealth that will insure one's children against want is righteousness—perpendicularity in all the relations of life. Too many of us think only of the imputed righteousness of Jesus Christ. It is an easy matter to lay all sorts of claims to that; but to do righteousness, love mercy and walk humbly with one's God is another thing and another sort of thing.—The Christian Index.

Do not let your heart be haunted by hate, or happiness will not have a ghost of a show in your life.

The Menace of Mammonism

By Frank G. Sayers of Youngstown, Ohio

(Delivered before the Northern Baptist Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, May 28, 1930, and previously published in "The Baptist," We are glad to pass on to "Evangelist" readers this most excellent interpretation of the present day situation.)

The topic can hardly be called optimistic and abounding in hopefulness. It sounds about as popular as a rain-storm at a Sunday school picnic. Of course popularity of appeal is incomparable with truth and right. The people may cry to Isaiah their prophet, "Prophecy not unto us right things, speak unto us smooth things, prophecy deceits," but he would not heed the clamor of the crowds.

January 24, 1848, Foreman John W. Marshall was superintending the construction of a saw-mill on the Sacramento River in California for Captain John A. Sutter. He had just let the water out of the new race when his keen eye caught the flash of yellow pin-heads of gold. He reported the discovery to his boss, who, in turn, reported it to Consul Thomas Larkin in San Francisco. On June 1 of the same year, a lengthy letter was written to Washington addressed to Secretary of State James Buchanan, who read this letter from Larkin at the next cabinet meeting of President James Polk. The excitement caused by the publicity attending this governmental news was so intense that its vibrations were felt across the ocean, and Europeans booked passage to the gold fields. Men on this continent began to trek across the prairie and the desert. Judges left their benches, doctors their practice of medicine, little red schoolhouses lost their aspiring young schoolmasters, and more than one pulpit was minus a minister on the following Sunday. The gold rush of '49 was on. Some of the finest types of men were in that rush, and some of the off-scourings of the earth. Both battled and fought for the "yellow dust"; both sought the washings of "pay dirt"; both hoped for the realization of their life's dream, "independent wealth."

The Republic of Plutocracy

It was November 11, 1918, The World War was over, and America stood on the threshold of a new era among the nations of the world. America was now the creditor, the banker, the third owner of all the wealth of the world. A new prosperity and power was hers, an exalted position and an unlimited possibility opened up before her. In her brief history she had experienced several phases of governmental life. Her first government was a "republic of aristocracy." Washington did not claim to be royal but he was lordly. Forty years later a man came riding out of the West, and America had her second form of expression. Democracy captured Washington under the clamorous regime of Jackson. In the first experience the United States had chosen a "gentleman" for its master and leader; in the second it chose a man of the people for its director. The World War over, the United States was to enter her third experience in governmental experiments. The republic of plutocracy had arrived; the age of wealth, invested capital and material prosperity. It was to be the "millennium of mass production and prosperity."

A new gold rush was on. A stampede for the commercial gold diggings was to begin. Federal Judges left their benches and salary checks of $7,500 for executive positions of a giant business involving remuneration ten times that amount per annum.

Army colonels resigned their commissions for chain store executive positions. Political party leaders left the old guard and dropped their interests in state and national affairs, for the amusement business was much more lucrative at $100,000 per year. Popular preachers were not omitted from the new gold rush, for more than one pulpit was vacated for the new offer of organizer of patriotic groups, or feature writer of syndicated newspapers, or it may have been psychology salesmanship school lecturers, or the overworked lecture bureau of spellbinderships. Even supposedly impractical poets, who had previously quoted with approval, "He who steals my purse steals trash," began to realize that perhaps they were wrong. They too started to look after the neglected purse by lecturing at $750 per night.

The gold rush of this new decade was moving all humanity. In the midst of this stampede for the "yellow dust" we had the blatant hypocrisy to denounce a red-headed college boy for trying to collect a cool half-million on his athletic ability. After which we had another righteous shock because a West Point cadet resigned for a better paying business position at the salary of an army major.

The story goes that Cortez when landing in Mexico and interviewing the ambassadors sent to this cunning Spaniard said, "Gentlemen, I and my followers have a disease of the heart, and only gold can cure it." Those Spaniards stated a universal truth in jest, for the disease of humanity is "chronic accumulitis". Who is there among us, who, at one time or another, has not suffered from the "consumption of the purse" that only gold could help?

Jesus Christ insisted that men should choose between mammon and God. He clearly intimated that he expected the greatest competition for the hearts of men from this golden god. He spoke of mammon as a form of worship, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Does it have a ritual? Are there priests to chant its liturgical services?

Was Horace Greeley wicked when he named the newly minted silver dollar, with the inscription, "In God we trust," "the almighty dollar"? Did he also think of it as a religion? Why of course it is a religion with priests and a theology. Its priests are found in the daily press, the magazine advertisers, the boastful secretaries of many a chamber of commerce. Each performs his job of beating the drums and blaring the shrill trumpets of the glorification of "the man with money." The theology of mammon is well defined in a few sharp statements of belief: 1. God helps those who help themselves. 2. A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. 3. Every good little boy and girl will become rich some day. 4. Look out for number one for the devil takes the hindmost. 5. Get the money; get it honestly if you can, but by all means get the money. The beatitudes of mammon are read on the pages of many current magazines: 1. Blessed are the rich in wealth: for theirs is the kingdom of men. 2. Blessed are they that make money: for they shall be comforted. 3. Blessed are the businesslike: for they shall inherit the earth. 4. Blessed are they which do hurry and pursue after riches: for they shall be successful. 5. Blessed are the merchantmen: for they shall obtain the profits. 6. Blessed are the full in purse: for they shall see the world. 7. Blessed are the go-getters: for they shall be called the leaders of men.

Woe is the politician who does not the bidding of this powerful potentate. Woe unto the business man who is foolish enough to challenge the mob cry of its devotees. Woe unto the foolish preacher who has the daring to quote the Lord Jesus, "It is hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven."

The Golden Melon

What a fertile field our rich land can be for this new religious cult! With unexcelled natural resources and indefatigable energy the United States has produced a golden melon to cut for its people. According to the Federal Trade Commission, our national wealth today is in the neighborhood of 550 billions of dollars; eighty years ago it was but seven billions; twenty years ago it was only 150 billions; but today we stand at the door of the world, guarding one-third of its entire wealth, and banking every twenty-four hours, $80,000,000. According to Scott Turner of the United States Bureau of Mines, "Since Columbus discovered America in the year 1492 the amount of gold taken from all the mines in the world is 1,003,563,529 ounces, more than half of which has been extracted since 1900."

What is the very ultimate of this lure of yellow dust? What would it all look like if it were piled together? Why, it would be a cubic block of gold 38 feet, 5 inches. Fix your eyes upon it! There is the lure of the hearts of men; there is the idol of millions; there is the "end of the rainbow" for its devotees; there is the alpha and omega for the mammonist.

The worship of mammon is the one stupendous fact of our generation. It may not be universal for there are thousands who have not yet bowed the knee to Baal, but it is the religion of the multitudes. Men are crowding his altars and listening to the chant of his priests. Men are offering the incense of their talents to secure his benediction and blessing. To a large extent mammonism has supplanted the worship of the true God and Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son. Their service to mammon is no lip service, but the service of a dedicated life. It is by their works these mammon devotees show their faith. Their lives give a gold testimony to the religion of mammon. They believe that mammon is stronger than God; they believe that he is a better protector and friend than God; they believe that he can and will do more for his followers than God. Even some of the churches and some of its kindred institutions, called "the arms of the church" seem to believe in mammon too. They possess a love for money endowments far more than moral equipment. They possess an inordinate desire for material bonds much stronger than for spiritual beliefs. Their emphasis is predominantly "get the money" rather than "get men for Jesus Christ."

Devotees in the pursuit of this worship have fallen from their high estate. It was this sin of mammon that branded Achan a thief; that made Gehazi a leper; that swung Judas at the end of a rope as a suicide-traitor; that made Ananias a liar; that blotted the previously fair name of Benedict Arnold of colonial days. It is the kind of sin that the modern pulpit is not saying very much about.

The pursuit of this golden god called mammon has not been unavailing for many. Our country alone has registered over 45,000 millionaires in her ranks, and this number is ever increasing. This is just the number who are capitalized at that stupendous sum. Within that number there are 327 who have an annual income of one million or more. Nineteen have an annual income of five to eight millions of dollars. New York State boasts in 1929 of ninety-six millionaires. This prosperity is also distributed to the worker, for the average income of the American family is three times that of Great Britain, and four times that of France and five times that of Italy.

Can We Stand Prosperity?

The question is, can we handle this prosperity? We have proved in past days that we could sanely handle adversity. We have shown that we can face bravely our serious during the Civil War and the more recent periods of calamity. Surely the spirit shown World War demonstrated to the unbiased, that calamity could not down us. When the calamitous loss between September 3, 1929, and November 13, 1929, in the stock market struck the United States, she suffered a reversal of the total German indemnity of thirty billions of dollars—coming through that experience with little more than a serious headache. But can we stand prosperity?

A nation facing destitution is like a river run dry. America facing unrivaled prosperity is like a river at the flood; if it goes wild it will wreck everything in sight. Are we intellectually and morally fit to handle one-third of humanity's wealth? Think of the peoples who have fallen through their mishandled prosperity, and remember that your list will treble those who have gone down because of adversity and calamity. Walk around the ruins of Egypt, Nineveh, Tyre, Greece and Rome. We see their lessons written in the ruins, wrecked through mishandled prosperity.

The student no longer carries Washington or Webster as his aspiring ideal. Jefferson and Jackson no longer thrill him with ambitions to repeat their aims. He has been told the day of speech making is past, statesmanship is not as lucrative as commerce. The man in America who leads the way, who is being idealized and lionized, is certainly not the statesman, the author, the dramatist, or the poet, but the successful business man. America is giving to the world the civilization of the business man. His ideals, his standards, his manner, his methods, his successes are, therefore, those which the mass of people strive to make their own.

"The business of life is to make life a business," is the newest ideal. They will tell you, "The greatest service you render to a community, the greater income you will command." This of course is not true, for you cannot estimate the service rendered by the size of the bank account. Is it true that a chain-cigar-store manager renders greater service than the schoolteacher or the nurse? Is it true that the chain-grocery-store manager is of more value to the world than Keats or Tennyson? Is it true that the industrial executive is more valuable to the world than a Dwight L. Moody?

The devotees of mammon denounce the down-town church that stays on the same location for seventy-five years. The church is criticised as an interloper on the sacred precincts of mammon and his rights to the market places on the highways of men. The new idolatry demands that location even by the coercion of public opinion.

Graduate students this June will say in their hearts, and many with their lips, "Away with this commencement speech of loyalty, service, sacrifice and character. These are milk-sops of yesterday, we are young sophisticates who know that the world largely gives its applause and its rewards to the financially successful. Our standards will be recorded for us by the size of our bank accounts twenty years hence."

The methods used by many devotees of mammon are not beyond condemnation. They will capitalize every human emotion; be it the sorrow of a widow and children, it can be made to pay a very fine exorbitant price. The lure of cash is so great that the advertising section of a modern magazine looks like the social register of leading Americans. Everybody who is anybody has been photographed beside a jar of marvellous cold cream, or a perfectly wonderful mattress, or was it the statement, "I'd walk a mile for a package"? Explorers even return from the North Pole and from the heart of Africa, to tell this country that had it not been for "Bunkum's Oil," and for "Hokum's Dog Biscuits," they would never have made it.

The church thunders out her horror at the guilt of those involved in a moral slip-up. The sins of heat and passion are shocking to her sense of honor. Yet she is exceedingly lenient with the sins of these money-grabbers, the sins of cunning, strategic, deliberate, premeditated and planning schemers. Who told the church of Jesus Christ that she could forgive so easily the violation of the eighth commandment and condemn so lustily the violation of the seventh? Who told the church that he who steals another man's wife is horrid, but he who stealthily steals another man's bank balance is a pretty neat business man?

Peril of Greed for Gold

What is the menace of mammonism? Wherein lies the peril of the greed for gold? Certainly there is no peril in a rightful accumulation and a righteous trusteeship of the gift of money. For money that I earn represents condensed gilt-edged service which I have rendered. All money is blood-money in one sense. My salary check is a month's worth of myself in my pocket. My vitality, effort, influence and enthusiasm has been expended to make that check possible. Money, like electricity, is stored power, the power of brain and brawn expended to create it. Those who do not earn money but get an allowance from their parents, are carrying a bit of the father around in their pockets. Money can be released for more creative power; it can be reinvested in a course in a night school, in pursuit of further intellectual advancement, in books, reading matter and post-graduate work.

Money can be a minister of good-will and a producer of health and happiness. Occasionally we hear some sanctimonious soul who has his nest lined and feathered, admonish some struggling and ambitious youth who is penniless, "Money does not bring happiness." Never was such a downright lie. Don't tell me as a young pastor visiting among mild hands who have been unemployed for five months, with hungry children staring them in the face, and the insurance policies lapsing because they could not pay the weekly premiums, that money could not have changed that weeping family to one of smiling contentment. Don't tell the missionaries that money can't bring happiness. They know that it will equip hospitals and schoolrooms in Africa and Burma; that it will put new life in the blood of a starving, famine-stricken community; that help can be sent out from the homeland if the money is forthcoming.

But there are perils in this pursuit for gold. There is a deadly menace in mammonism. There is a gangrene in this golden "pay dirt." When this competitor of the Lord Jesus Christ gets into a man's heart it completely blinds him to the things of the Spirit. When the mammonist is ascending the altar steps of his new god, when the mind, heart and hand are all dedicated to this alluring monster, then all the love of the spiritual virtues will have vanished, the taste for the things of our God will have passed away, and the gratification of the material needs will have caused the spiritual wants to have become less. It is mammon which makes most men invertebrates; the individual being is robbed of his sense of need of God and deprived of his spiritual image.

There is also a national peril in mammonism. Dishonesty, deceit, and greed cover the land like waters cover the sea. The nation where mammon reigns and rules is not looked upon by sister nations for its unusual moral teaching but rather considered as the nation of shrewd salesmen. A nation that counts its glory by the number of motor cars, the amount of its savings accounts, the average income of its citizens and its domination of the world markets, can hardly be filled with idealism. Its vision of spiritual values fades and it is endangered by becoming calloused.

In the last presidential election campaign little or nothing was said about the ideals of American civilization. At that time the public mind and the imagination was stirred by such dramatic events, the idol placed before it was the apotheosis of material prosperity. Shall this be the new national god of 120 millions of educated Americans?

This same peril threatens the Christian church. Mammonism will rob the church of a single eye to the glory of Christ. The prophets lifted up their voices against it. The apostles pointed out its fallacies and dangers. The revelator John predicted that the latter church would be bossed by the spirit of mammonism. "We are rich and have need of nothing" said the Laodiceans, yet the very Christ the church professed to love stood outside her door knocking, saying, "If any man hear my voice I will come in to him." He was an expelled Jesus Christ outside a mammonistic church. Did he not say, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon"? It is for the church to determine to whom she will give her worship. Is it not true that sometimes the church is putting an exaggerated emphasis upon the value of money? Are there institutions, professedly Christian, which would exchange their Christ for ready cash? Is it possible that there is an institution that will let "Christ out" if they can be assured of getting more "cash in"?

Where is the hope of the church? Must we look for it in the counting house and in the coffers of men? Shall Protestantism follow the pathway of another giant religious faith, which when seeing the gold being shipped to his headquarters, one of its leaders exclaimed, "It cannot be said with truth, 'silver and gold have I none.'" He was well answered by another, "Neither can it be said of the present church, 'in the name of Jesus Christ, rise up and walk.'" Can a church lose her faith in a supernatural dynamic for confidence in a natural material dollar?

Ye cannot serve God and mammon, therefore, "choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Shall it be Jesus Christ, the Messiah, or yellow gold called mammon? Shall it be the dictates of the Spirit of Christ or the guidance from the stampede after cash? Shall it be the gospel of redemption or the gospel of riches? Shall it be a people marked by the standards of Calvary or those of the counting house?

OUR GREAT PERMISSION

When Jesus had finished his work in the world he called his disciples and other followers together, saying, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This has been considered by many as the "Great Commission" for all Christians, but in a reality it is not their "Great Permission," to thus have a share with Christ in the redemption of the world?

Paul responded to this Great Permission, saying, "I am debtor both to Greeks and to barbarians. . . . So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel. . . . I hold not my life of any account as dear unto myself, so that I may accomplish the ministry which I received from the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God."

A church in New York has become noted throughout the world because of its spiritual atmosphere, its evangelistic work, and its far-reaching missionary activities. One of its pastors who did much to lead out and develop this church was William M. Taylor who said, "When your sympathies, efforts, and offerings are asked for the cause of Christ, let your mind go back to the day when Paul and Barnabas set out from Antioch; reckon up, if you can all that the world has owed to his work which was then inaugurated, and respond accordingly."—Sel.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE DOLL THAT TRAVELED

By Emma Florence Bush

Helen sat gazing out of the window. Her little white hands were clasped listlessly in her lap, and there was a decided droop to her mouth.

Out of doors the sun was shining, and a bed of pansies under the window nodded blithely to her in a morning greeting.

Her little kitten raced up and down the walk, chasing the dead leaves as the breeze blew them about in their last dance, but his little mistress never noticed him.

Altogether it is time something is happening, thought Aunt Molly, as she came into the room.

"Why, Helen," she said brightly, "how tired you look this morning! What is the matter?"

A big tear rolled down Helen's cheek. "I want to go out," she sobbed, "into the sunshine. I am so tired sitting here, and the doctor says I can't go out for a week yet."

"How very strange," said Aunt Molly gravely. "I came across Ethel May this morning in the attic, and she told me the same thing. She assured me she was very tired of staying there, and longed to go into the world again. In fact, she said, that were it not that dolls were made with no crying apparatus, she would have been drowned in tears long ago."

Helen saw the little sparkle in Aunt Molly's eyes that always came when she had some beautiful plan to propose.

"Yes," she said, with a little suppressed excitement in her voice, "Did she tell you where she wished to go?"

"No," said Aunt Molly, "she simply expressed a desire to see the world. But I have a plan. Suppose we dress her in her best clothes, pack her trunk, and when the doctor comes this morning, we will ask him if he knows a good boarding place for her."

"Goody!" cried Helen, clapping her hands. "The very thing, Aunt Molly. I have so many dolls I haven't played with her for a long time, and I suppose she is lonesome; a change would do her good, poor thing. Will you please bring her now?"

In a few minutes Aunt Molly and Helen were very busy over the wardrobe of the little traveller.

"I think," said Helen, "I will let her wear her blue dress with her coat and hat to match."

"That will be very pretty," said Aunt Molly, "and suppose you put on this white party dress. I will run some fresh pink ribbons in it, and with her pink stockings and shoes she will look very nice."

They worked busily for a while, and just as Ethel May was ready for her journey, the doctor appeared, and Helen eagerly laid the plan before him.

"Let me see," he said, pretending to think very deeply. "Over on Pine Hill is a little girl. I think would be glad to see her. She has broken her hip, and has to lie very still in bed."

"Oh, dear!" cried Helen, "Please take her right over. Has she any dolls?"

"No," said the doctor, "but I am going there now, and will take Ethel May with me."

Several days later, the doctor brought Helen a little square envelope.

Helen opened it eagerly, "Oh," she cried. "A letter from Ethel May."

"Dear little Mamma," it began. "I have had a lovely time with my little hostess, and she says I helped her bear the pain. While here, I have met a little girl who admired me very much. Now she is sick, and must go to the Children's Hospital in the city. The doctor thinks she will be less lonesome if I go too. May I go?"

"Your loving daughter, Ethel May."

"Well," said the doctor, "shall I take Ethel May on another trip?"

"Yes, indeed," cried Helen, "but doctor, she must have her winter clothes, wait and I will get her furs."

So the doctor departed with Ethel May's winter clothes and soon she was on her way to the hospital.

One morning Helen saw the doctor coming up the walk, and rushed to meet him, and learn the latest news from her traveling child.

"Ethel May," announced the doctor, "is homesick, and I have come to take you to her."

It did not take Helen many minutes to get ready to go with the doctor to the city, and soon they were in the hospital ward, where in a bed by the window, lay the little sick girl which came there with Ethel May.

It did not take the little girls long to get acquainted and the doctor left Helen for a visit with little Julia. One of the pleasant-faced nurses gave them a nice luncheon, and Helen was very sorry when the doctor came to take her home again.

That was several years ago, but Ethel May still goes from bed to bed in the hospital and she has grown so accustomed to traveling that Helen says she knows that Ethel May will never be content to stay at home again.—The Presbyterian.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

AMSTUTZ-MARTIN—Lillian Marie Amstutz and Ralph H. Martin exchanged their nuptial vows Wednesday, June 29, 1932. The ceremony took place at the home of Rev. R. E. Gingrich, pastor of the Fair Haven church.

Miss Amstutz was charming in an ensemble of blue and white. The groom wore a dark suit, and for the ceremony an informal wedding breakfast was served at the home of the groom after which the couple left for a tour in the East.

Mrs. Martin's home is near Sterling, Ohio. She is a very accomplished young lady, a member of the Sterling Brethren church and very active in the religious and social life of her community. Mr. Martin is the son of W. C. Martin of Congress township. He is a member of the Fair Haven Brethren church and is well known for his work among the young people of the county. At the present, he is president of the young people's organization of Chester township.

The happy couple will make their home at the W. C. Martin home. The best wishes for a happy wedded life go with these two from a host of friends. R. E. GINGRICH.

KUNS-WISE—Friday evening, June 17, at the home of the groom, southwest of Flora, occurred the wedding of Mr. Raymond Kuns and Miss Ullainee Wise, both of the same community. The service was a single ring ceremony. Besides the immediate families, a large number of friends witnessed the ceremony. The groom is the son of Mr. Amos Kuns, while the bride is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Wise. Mr. Kuns is Adult Superintendent of the First Brethren Sunday school of Flora, and vice-president of the Quads, the youth people's organization. The bride is a member of the same church and Sunday school and is a violinist of local note. Both are popular young people and will be at home to their friends at the seque of their wedding. Ceremony by the writer, their pastor. FREEMAN SKNRUM.

LEHMAN-MOCK—R. Glendon Lehman and Miss Helen M. Mock, both of Johnstown, were united in marriage by the undersigned at the home of the groom. The young people will make their home in the city. The groom is a member of the Brethren church and the bride of the U. B. church of Walnut Grove. The young people have been friends and neighbors of the undersigned since their birth and so felt that the writer should perform the marriage ceremony. Our best wishes go with them throughout the journey of life and our prayers for their welfare. GEORGE H. JONES.

IN THE SHADOW

MACCKELL—Mrs. Edward Macckell of Dale Boro, on the night of May 26th, passed to her heavenly home. Sister Macckell has been a member of the Brethren church for many years and raised a large family, several of whom have been leaders, actively identified with our work in Rosedale, Morristown, Johnstown and Pittsburgh.

She is survived by her husband and thirteen children, twenty-eight grandchildren and twenty-one great-grandchildren. A good mother she was, an inspiration to her children and all who knew her.

Funeral services by the undersigned. Interment in Grandview Cemetery. GEORGE H. JONES.

TINKEY—Charles B. Tinkey, son of W. J. and Alice Tinkey, was born in Ashland, Ohio, May 2, 1888, and grew to manhood in his native town. On January 27, 1909, he was united in marriage to Ethel Deffenbaugh, of Glenford, Ohio, moving soon after marriage to the Deffenbaugh homestead near Glenford, Ohio, where the family continued to reside until about two and one-half years ago when they removed to Richland County, Ohio, where they have since resided. Charles Tinkey united with the Methodist church early in life and upon removing to Glenford united with the Brethren church at that place. Upon moving to Richland County the family transferred their membership to the Park Street Brethren church at Ashland.

Brother Tinkey passed to be with the Lord on Monday morning, March 7, 1932, at the age of 43 years, 10 months and 3 days. He leaves as those who sorrow his wife, Mrs. Ethel Deffenbaugh Tinkey, one son, John W. Tinkey, his mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Tinkey, two brothers, Bernard A. and John D., of Ashland, and one sister, Mrs. Martha Chamberlain, of Xenia, Ohio, besides other and more distant relatives.

Funeral services were conducted at the family residence on Wednesday morning, March 9, with the undersigned as pastor as the speaker. Further services were conducted later in the day at the Zion Lutheran church, near Glenford, by Dr. J. Allen Miller in charge. Interment was made in the new cemetery at Ashland. The bereaved family may God give peace and comfort to the sorrowing bereaved ones. DYVOLL BELOTE.

VOL. LIV
Number 28

July 16
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

The Inward Unity of the Church

THE supreme task of the Church is not to maintain an outward semblance of unity, but rather to maintain a Christlike discontent with every bond of fellowship which comes short of his. As long as there is aught of constraint, of custom, of self-interest, of timidity in the fellowship of the Church, she is not wholly met in Christ's name. His name stands for the appeal of the perfect truth and for the aid of Omnipotence, which do not suppress, but set free. It is the name in which the ultimate might is not power, but love. And the fellowship of the Church is a fellowship of the redeemed, who have been saved out of all forms of self-love into love, by the endless might and wisdom of the love Divine. This love, being the final dissolution of opposition between God's truth without and man's thoughts within, between God's will without and man's purposes within, assures the perfect union of all who are saved into it. This is the fellowship which has in it the promise of the future. The present results, by which, in a haste compelled by our fleeting years, we are ever apt to judge, may be small, but eternity makes little of result in comparison with tendency. Magnitude of result is undoubtedly with the Church which has bulk and skillful leadership and temporal advantages, but the promise of the future is for the Church which approximates most closely to the ideal of the many or the few who are truly met in the name of One who unites men, not by enslaving them to his will, but by setting them free with the liberty of the children of God. Our duty, therefore, in our present divided state, is not to endeavor to repair the old bonds, not to seek any working compromise of creed or conviction, but rather to labor to cast out all that is of bondage for the sake of a fellowship which is established in the perfect harmony of the souls Christ has set free.

John Oman, in "Vision and Authority"
Published by Harper & Brothers

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

YOU need not "Solemnly Swear"

Members of the Brethren Church, who believe in obeying the Bible and desire to follow the time-honored principles of their own church, have sometimes been disturbed by the "Oath of Allegiance" which is required of those who desire to secure a governmental passport to foreign lands.

In the regulation application for a passport, the oath reads as follows: "Further, I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; and that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion. So help me God."

Two things in this obligation are wholly objectionable to the Brethren and other Christians of like faith. First, it is an oath. And second, it pledges the signer to the institution of carnal warfare; for that is undoubtedly the intent of the word "defend."

Owing to the protest of many missionaries, the matter was taken up with the State Department by the Executive Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and a favorable ruling was secured. The modified form of affirmation is as follows:

Further, I do solemnly affirm that I will support the Constitution of the United States and will, as far as my conscience as a Christian will allow, defend it against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; and that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion. So help me God."

Those interested should copy his form and request its use when making application for a passport. At the State Department in Washington and at the Passport Bureau in New York it will be accepted without any question. The Committee points out, however, that local officers in other places may not be familiar with it, and may possibly refuse to accept it. In such case the applicant should request that the matter be referred to the State Department in Washington.

The Christian should be grateful for a government that is so considerate of our faith. In this country you need not take an "oath" for any purpose. And if you are a Christian, you should not. "Above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath" (James 5:12). The command is perfectly clear. If you find fault with it, please remember it is not the present writer's opinion, but the inspired Word of the Living God.

THE Tragedy of Misdirected Prayer

A few days ago a physician was called to the scene of an automobile accident in New York, and there he found four little children, all rather severely injured, kneeling in the road beside the dead body of their mother and sobbing out over and over this prayer "Hail Mary, full of Grace—"

It is tragedy enough for these little children to lose a mother. But the tragedy becomes unspeakably deeper to find them, in their hour of distress, crying out to one who is merely human like themselves and who has no power to help more than their own mother who lies still in death. "Come unto Me," is the word of One who conquered death and the grave. He alone is able to reach across the "great gulf" and comfort those who are pierced with "the sharpness of death." The Roman Church must bear the awful responsibility of obscuring his Face with its mummery of "Saints" and human mediators. Read Matthew 18:6.

THE Legend of Blowing Rock

On our way to the Roanoke Conference, recently, we happened upon the little town of Blowing Rock in the western part of North Carolina. We had never heard of it before, but it has among other things the distinction of being the highest incorporated "city" east of the Rocky Mountains, being located on one of the peaks of the beautiful Blue Ridge Mountains. Out on the edge of the mountain is the great rock from which the village takes its name. According to the Indian legend, as I recall it, an Indian maiden had refused her lover; and he despairing went to this rock expecting to cast himself off and find death. But the wind which invariably blows up the mountain, held him on the Rock. Of course you know the end of the story; they were reconciled, married, and lived happily ever afterward.

After learning the legend of Blowing Rock, I read the appalling record of divorce statistics in America, and it occurred to me that we should have some Blowing Rocks scattered around over this country to prevent disillusioned and quarreling lovers from jumping over the deadly precipice of DIVORCE.

On second thought, I remember that there is a ROCK upon whose sure foundation the delicate and beautiful structure of wedded love is safe—THAT ROCK IS CHRIST. "He only is my Rock . . . I shall not be moved." Apart from him nothing is secure; all is built on shifting sands. And he is no legend.

MANY Laborers but No Harvest

Christ once said that the harvest is plentiful but the laborers are few. He was speaking of the spiritual realm. In the material world it is just the opposite—many laborers—no work. And we have no minds, apparently, big enough to solve the problem. Some prophets tell us that unemployment has been caused by the depression, and that one of these days the depression will end and unemployment will disappear. But Jay Franklin in "What We Are About To Receive" thinks otherwise. He thinks the depression and unemployment are two distinct things, not at all inseparably connected. He writes as follows:

"We are going to have a permanent wave of unemployment, which will outlast the depression and will become the greatest problem of the twentieth century. In the hundred years war between men and machinery, the machines have won. They provide a more efficient type of labor than do human beings. They don't eat. They don't go on strike . . . They don't get tired or drunk, and best of all, they don't vote."

One might think, in view of our tottering economic and political system, that the exploiters and owners of the machines would begin to think of dividing with the laborers they have displaced. But such a hope, apparently, is too optimistic. Selfishness is rooted deep in the fallen human heart. Only those who are "born from above" take seriously the divine word, "Look not every man on his own things; but every man also on the things of others."

THE Need of an Iron Hand

The Mafia, dreaded secret society of criminals in Sicily, for years lived parasitically on the country in somewhat the same fashion that gangsterism thrives in our own country. At last Mussolini, finding a little breathing spell in his job of dictating, turned his hawk-like eyes in that direction. "Five millions of patriotic Sicilians must no longer be vexed, blackmailed, robbed and dishonored by a few hundreds of evil doers," said the Duce while on a visit to the island. And Mussolini is no mere politician talking aimlessly. Taking one of his efficient helpers, Mussolini put him in charge, with the following result:

Previously in one year there had been 223 murders, three cases of blackmail, 246 thefts, 53 extortions and 51 of cattle stealing. When Mussolini's man got through the annual crime crop was one murder and one kidnapping.

No doubt any good soldier of the American army, if put in charge, could clean up the United States. But we would rather have crime than a police dictator, it seems. Dictators, men have learned, are hard to get rid of when you are through with their services. The world needs a dictator of the right kind, and it will have one finally. There will be no gangsters when Psalm 2:1-12 comes true, as it will one of these days.

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on the dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs.
He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.—Philip J. Bailey.

IN THIS NUMBER

Liquor Consumption and Crime—Editor,	3
Editorial Review,	3
The Minister's Attitude Toward his Community—W. R. Deeter,	5
Why Did the Word Grow?—Frank Gehman,	6
News and Views,	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey,	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench,	9
Historic Basis of Protestantism—Bishop H. M. DuBose, D.D., LL.D.,	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon,	11
Practical Points on Publicity—Dr. W. T. Ellis,	11
The First Indian Woman Physician,	12
News from the Field,	13
Our Little Readers,	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Liquor Consumption and Crime

In the wave of wet propaganda that is being spread over the country at the cost of thousands of dollars a day, there is much misinformation and deliberate misrepresentation being foisted upon the people, so that even many of the staunch friends of prohibition are being misled. If we are to credit John D. Rockefeller, Jr. with sincerity, we must conclude that he is a victim of the misinformation being continually handed out by the wet press. And this view is substantiated by the statement of no less an authority than Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock, chief prohibition enforcement officer of the federal government. In a letter to Senator Morris Shepperd, Col. Woodcock said concerning the Rockefeller statement, "It seems obvious that he based his conclusion to some extent on misinformation." We are wondering also if it is possible that that great religious leader, Dr. John R. Mott, may not have been influenced to take his untenable position recently voiced and broadcast over the country by some of the ridiculous claims and reasonings of the wet sophists. It seems foolish to suggest that each generation in its turn should pass upon the sections or amendments to the Constitution. We would be forever laying the foundation of our republic, and never getting anywhere, if each generation were to be continually tearing up and relaying the ground-work of our government.

Two outstanding points of misinformation that the wets are continually seeking to persuade the people to believe are that crime has increased as a result of prohibition and that there is more liquor being drunk and consequently more drunkenness now than before prohibition went into effect. Colonel Woodcock challenges the statement of Mr. Rockefeller that drunkenness is increasing, saying, "A survey made of the possible production of illegal liquor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930 indicates that the consumption of liquor in that year was materially less than in the last year of unrestricted manufacture and sale of liquor (1914)." In a former statement he indicated that the decrease is as much as 65 per cent, and the National W. C. T. U. in formulating a reply to Rockefeller figured out from government statistics the same proportionate decrease in the consumption of liquor under prohibition. Concerning the Rockefeller false statement that the speakeasy has replaced the saloon "not only unit for unit, but twofold if not threefold," Woodcock says this is "a stock argument of associations opposed to the Eighteenth Amendment and the national prohibition act for several years." He goes on to say that surveys in Detroit and New York "show that the direct opposite of this statement is true."

Regarding the claim that prohibition has caused a crime increase Woodcock says it is not founded on fact. He says "The total number of prisoners in the United States in both federal and state institutions who were there for violation of the liquor laws does not exceed 5 per cent of the total prison population." Now consider this in comparison with the statement of Dr. A. J. Irwin, of the Canadian Temperance Federation, that "Dominion Government statistics showed indictable crimes increased 80 per cent under government sale." They are also having a greatly increased crime wave in England where the liquor business is practically unbridled. Concerning this problem the New Outlook (Canada) carries the following statement:

"The British, particularly the English, press today is devoting attention to the problem of the serious increase in crime. All sorts of explanations are forthcoming, but the principal factor is studiously ignored. There is no question at all about the relation between drink and crime, and there is no question about the staggering size of Britain's drink bill, in spite of all boasted reductions. But the press of the country, lulled or slapped into silence by the vested interests of the liquor trade, avoids the subject and passes over the manifest evils of the traffic and its indisputable connection with the rising wave of crime in England. Drink is a double cause of crime, creating criminals and spreading the poverty which encourages crime. An impartial investigation by a committee of distinguished British citizens, recently made the report, which was given scant attention by the newspapers, that 'drink is responsible for fully forty per cent of all common criminal cases, that it is a factor in twenty-five per cent of violent crime, and nearly fifty per cent of all cases of assault and wilful damage.' The same investigation disclosed that in 'the large sections of Great Britain in which the earnings of families are insufficient to obtain the barest necessities, drink is responsible for twenty-five per cent of this poverty. It also disclosed that in eighty-five per cent of the cases wherein the earnings of families would otherwise be sufficient at least for physical efficiency, drink drags this poverty below the subsistence level.' Can such a cause of crime be ignored? Why should the bloated holders of vested interests in a brewery or distillery, or any other branch of the vicious crime-breeding industry, be allowed to hold back the truth from the people by their evident stranglehold upon the public press?"

There is the secret to the whole difficulty, the people are not being given the facts regarding the illicit liquor trade in this country and the success of prohibition. They are being deceived by a great mass of misinformation handed out daily by the public press. There is actually very little that one can believe in the daily papers regarding the prohibition in this country or the liquor traffic abroad. Most of such copy is prepared by paid propagandists of the wet interests. Therein lies the necessity of the church press telling the people the truth about this great moral problem.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. C. F. Yoder, superintendent of our mission work in Argentina, reports that the tent which proved so successful during the summer, has been discontinued during the winter season of that southern hemisphere country. A new church and parsonage has been built in a fine location at Almaguete. This new mission has a promising field, but it also has enemies, one especially in the person of a Catholic priest, who is said to be "a notorious libertine and gambler." That seems like a strange and shocking appeal to attach to a man who professes to be a representative of God, but it is the prevalence of that quality of men in the Catholic clergy, especially in countries where Catholicism predominates, that has brought Christianity itself into disrepute and is causing the people to be impervious to all religious appeals, turning to atheism and agnosticism.

Brother W. H. Clough, pastor of the church at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, writes that the work at that place is going forward with every auxiliary functioning enthusiastically. Within the eighteen months of his leadership the church membership has increased from 75 to 180, and the Sunday school attendance has gone from an average of 60 to 70 to 150. The Christian Endeavorers have launched into evangelism, including street meetings, hospital and shop work. The church continues with its full schedule of services through the summer with much interest.

Brother Leslie Lindower of Terra Alta, West Virginia writes of the Sunday school institute held at Berlin, Pennsylvania the latter part of May. This was cooperated in by the churches of Western Pennsylvania and was the second annual event of its kind and was greatly appreciated. Such Sunday school gatherings are valuable and could profitably be employed by more church groups than have been wont to make use of them. The National Sunday School Association has frequently offered to cooperate in the conduct of such institutes. Brother Lindower, by the way recently suffered the loss of his mother by death, and deserves our prayers and sympathy in his sorrow.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, pastor of the Smithville-Sterling congregation in Ohio, gives us some interesting items of news. Their monthly church night feature is proving to be quite interesting, and the June meeting was well attended and a profitable program was rendered. Community Day with five churches cooperating was an outstanding event for Sterling. The special Brethren Baccalaureate service for the Brethren young people of that congregation was a new and much worth while feature. Brother Carpenter says the Sunday school increased its attendance by about one-third as a result of the attendance contest conducted previous to Easter and that the increase is being held. That is the real test of the value of an attendance contest—the permanent gain realized.

SUPPORT AND STEWARDSHIP

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, reports receipts from the Educational Day offering to the amount of $258.08. That amount shows very definitely the effect of the depression of giving to the general interests of the church. But if the churches are doing their best, in view of the gravity of the local financial situation, we cannot offer any complaint, but rather can only be thankful for such support of these brotherhood interests as they are able to give. However, let us not forget to urge the very utmost of loyalty to and support of the general interests of the church that can possibly be given. Any other policy is short-sighted economy. There are some communities where financial conditions are so bad that our churches are compelled to make a fight for their very existence. Our hearts go out in sympathy and praise of these noble, sacrificing groups. But those who are more fortunately situated, should not allow the depression to become an excuse for selfishness and lack of loyalty. These are days when the strong should bear the burdens of the weak. If ever there was a time when Christian people are called upon to economize in those things that are non-essential, that time is now. Extravagance on the part of those who are favorably situated is little short of downright sin in times like these, and unnecessary expenditures should certainly be curtailed as much as possible and money used in ways that will contribute to the welfare of those who are in need, and in ways that God can bless. A lot of foolish counsel has been going the rounds, urging people to spend, spend, and thus help to restore prosperity. We cannot spend our way back to prosperity. There are doubtless some hoarders of incusted wealth, which ought to be put into channels of service, but to urge upon the people the habit of spending instead of saving is to encourage them in financial folly and weakness instead of wisdom and strength. We are too prodigal in expenditures already; we need to become more thrifty. As Christians, we need to learn the lesson of stewardship. For know assuredly, we shall be held accountable for the right use of all the material possessions with which God blesses us. And what excuse shall be offered for extravagance and luxury when such dire need is on every hand and when Kingdom enterprises are halting for want of adequate support?

A NEW POLICY

Prof. Alva J. McClain, in his department on page 2 this week, passes on some significant information that came to him in his capacity as secretary of the Foreign Mission Board. It brings fresh to our minds two Brethren ideals that have been passed over rather lightly in recent years, namely, opposition to oath-taking and participation in armed conflicts. We ought to make more of the teachings of Scripture along these lines. In regard to the former, we ought to urge not merely obedience to Christ's command to "Swear not at all," but to live so absolutely honest and truthful that no oath would be needed to bolster up belief in the integrity of our word, anywhere or any time. As to the latter, we ought to be giving more attention both to teaching the wrongness of war and the entire war policy, and to building up such strength of conviction against the bearing of arms as will enable us to stand like a rock as a witness to the Gospel attitude toward war. This change in the government's requirements of those seeking passports to the extent of recognizing Christian conscience against war, would seem to be significant in view of the recent tests of citizenship put to certain highly desirable individuals who have sought membership in our American Republic. Yet we cannot be certain as to what the significance may be. Does it mean that the government has decided to bear with those citizens it already possesses, who have sincere Christian scruples against war, but that it is determined not to have any more of them? Or does it mean that the government has decided to exact a more drastic pledge of allegiance of those who seek citizenship than of its citizens desiring a passport? Or again, does it mean that the militarizing forces have carried their program too far and that the government is backing water in response to the strong protest against the recent interpretation of the oath of allegiance and that in order to more consistently adopt a more liberal attitude toward conscience against war it has revised the form of the oath or affirmation of allegiance? Maybe the influence of a Quaker president is beginning to be exercised in the affair. If it does mean a more generous attitude on the part of our government toward scruples against war, it is well that its generosity has been limited to "conscience as a Christian," for that shuts out the atheistic Russian communists. We should give no privilege of citizenship to such godless propagandists. In fact, Christian conscience against war is the only kind that can be safely trusted. And every Christian who really believes that war is wrong ought to thank God for a government that has given recognition to a Gospel-inspired conscience against war, as is indicated by the following new form of the pledge of allegiance:

"Further, I do solemnly affirm that I will support the constitution of the United States and will, so far as my conscience as a Christian will allow, defend it against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; and that I take this obligation freely, and without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion. So help me God."

We had a reaction to the editorial suggestion in last week's paper relative to Brethren who must move, seeking locations in towns where a Brethren church is already established. A prominent layman said to us, "I like that suggestion. We ought to emphasize it more often. Why should not people who are looking for work go to towns where we have a Brethren church?" We are pleased to receive this approval of our suggestion. We believe ministers in their pulpits and on conference platforms ought to help to popularize the idea. We ought to seek to build up in the minds of our people a loyalty that would cause them to be unwilling to be separated from Brethren church privileges except by the most driving circumstances, and then occasionally to suggest for the benefit of those who may contemplate moving the advisability to considering a location where there is a Brethren church. Let's all help to spread the idea.

We recently received notice from Mrs. L. G. Wood, that Brother Wood, pastor of our church at Fort Scott, Kansas, was to undergo an operation "for prostatic trouble." As this paper was about due to go to the press another word came from Sister Wood saying: "Mr. Wood was operated on yesterday morning (July 7th) and came through the operation fine considering the seriousness of the operation, and the surgeon is well pleased with the work. He is resting very well this morning." Let us pray for Brother Wood's speedy recovery to strength and health and for the blessing of God upon Sister Wood during the days of increased burdens.

Brother and Sister W. R. Deeter of Carleton, Nebraska, celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary "the last of May," so we were informed by a note from Brother Deeter a little while ago, which note slipped our notice for a time, since it was attached to the close of an article written for publication in The Evangelist. We congratulate Brother and Sister Deeter on this quarter of a century of service together and wish them long years yet of happiness and of service.

Brother Charles W. Mayes, pastor of our church at Whittier, California, reports the blessing of God upon his work, fifty souls having been received into the membership of the church during the past twelve months. They have had a baptismal service every Sunday for the past five weeks. Attendance at both Sunday school and church services has increased fifteen per cent during the past year. Brother Mayes has been conducting a Community Bible Class which has gone as high as 175 in attendance. Also a Bible class at Norwalk, seven miles distant, has proven of interest and four families have been received into the church from that place.

From a newspaper clipping we learn that eight Brethren ministers and their families from Western Pennsylvania, were guests of Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Ashman of Johnstown on July fourth. An

(Continued on page 8)

The Minister's Attitude Toward His Community

By W. R. Deeter

"MY WORLD"

When I fare forth in the morning,
With the firm resolve "This day,
By God's good grace, with a pleasant face,
I will follow my chosen way",
Then the world seems nice and mellow,
With the skies serene and bright
And my thoughts are blent with a full content,
When I come to my rest at night.

When I start the day half-hearted,
Nor pausing to question why,
With a thankless air, and a look of care,
Then the world seems all awry.
The people I meet are listless,
And cold to a sad degree,
For the look of phlegm that I give to them,
Is the look they give to me.

I have pondered the matter deeply,
And this is the truth I find:
That my earth and sky are colored by

My attitude of mind.

So I mean, henceforth, to fashion
A pleasanter place to be,
For I've come to know that what I bestow,
The world gives back to me.

—Nixon Waterman.

I am indebted much to a fellow minister for what I am saying. We mingled together in conversation and discussion during a two-day period in which we traveled and worshipped together in recent weeks. The question we discussed was, How should we feel, think and BE toward the community in which we live?

My community is a good deal what I help to make it. My community is where I live. It is where my children and my neighbor's children mingle together in play and in school. It is where my family makes personal and social contacts with neighbors and strangers. It is where I get my salary,—or don't get it. It is MY HOME. In this self-same community the blacksmith, the section man, the doctor, the banker, the merchant, the garage-man, the school teacher, the pastor of the church across the street, the undertaker, the postmaster, all work to get their living. Here boys and girls of all school ages flock together along the street, or countryside—this is my community, this is my world. The people I meet in the church, at clubs, at dinners, at suppers, at picnics, at funerals, on the streets, in the stores, in the local paper,—these make up my community.

I am speaking about your community also because you have one about like mine. Oh, you may have a few more noses to count, a few more blocks of paving to boast of, a few more filling stations, a few more picture houses, but your community is very similar to mine. I know because I have lived in some of them and expect to live in others, and maybe, some time, be living in the very one you are living in now.

Some of you are living where we have been, others will be living where we are. So I want to help you, and I want you to help me. We are not living alone, brothers, we are playing this game together. It's a great game; and we can get a lot of "kick" out of it by looking upon it as such, and a lot of mutual help by playing it together.

There are some places in my community that I do not frequent—where card games are on, where profanity is used and where certain types of stories are told. I cannot go to these places and feel good about it. I like funny stories, though they are seldom funny when I try to tell them. But I want them to be clean and I want to use my influence in behalf of clean and uplifting conversation, or amusements or recreations in my community. I will not encourage the other kind by going where it is practiced. The Bible insists on clean hands and hearts, and I believe clean ears also. I believe the minister in the community should stand for things that are clean—clean for the eyes to see and clear for the ears to hear. One good preacher gave a sermon—a long one too—years ago, setting forth his attitude when he and his wife refused to attend the movies in his town because of the questionable things in it, and the townspeople respected this pastor and his wife for their stand and many were helped thereby.

We do not think it the preacher's business to grumble, defy and find fault with everything going on. It is far better to get in touch with the good things that need promoting, and help to make the community what it ought to be.

When a preacher goes to a village or school caucus, he knows perfectly well there is a certain element that does not want him there. However, he does not need to make himself obnoxious, but is interested in and may properly do what he

Two ministers of the Jerusalem community

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR THE CLERGY

1. Thou shalt not seek to monopolize the local limelight.
2. Thou shalt not secure a new church through politics and call it Providence.
3. Remember thy debts to pay them, for the community will not hold him guiltless whose bills cannot be collected.
4. Thou shalt not trespass on the premises of other shepherds.
5. Do not bear false witness with statistics.
6. In thine old age thou shalt not be a retired parasite, nor a self-appointed boss.
7. When thou borrowest thought, thou shalt not steal its garments.
8. Honor thy brother pastors that thy days may be respected in the parish which the Lord has given thee.
9. Thou shalt not return to perform the services which belong to thy successor.
10. Thou shalt not covet attention or service for thyself, remembering that the servant should be as his Lord, who came not to be ministered unto but to minister.

—Evelyn A. Cummins, in The Living Church.

can to get the right sort of men and women on the boards. Some do not do that. Some show no interest in public affairs at all. But listen, preachers, we have men and women on these boards and in other places of public service who need our sympathetic and intelligent support. Many of these people are trying hard to stand for the right against tremendous pressure from evil and wicked devices. Sometimes such pressure comes from neighbors with whom we have to live and do business all the time. But we must let our influence be felt for the right and our support given to those who do the right. The success of local government depends not on who is governor or president, but upon town boards and councils and local enforcement officers. We should help them.

We are opposed to many things going on in our community—Sunday business—of many types and kinds, Sunday baseball, Sunday movies, Sunday labor and odd jobs and bootlegging and dancing and a lot of other things, we are opposed to on any day. We must let the church and community know our stand and seek to lead them up to it. We should lead our church and encourage the cooperation of other churches and pastors to seek a modern wholesome Christian expression for a Christian community. There may be times when others will not cooperate, then we will have to stand alone.

We want to be natural and sincere wherever we go. We know that when we go into a new community, and move into the parsonage, we are looked upon as a minister of God—and will, as long as we stay. Wherever we go, we will be considered a religious leader of that community, one of its preachers, and we want to show ourselves to be genuine, a sincere servant of the community, worthy of respect.

We want to live in the community and among the people—all the people—as a minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, loving, helping, sympathizing, praying, rebuking, preaching, teaching, exampling, thankful to God for a place to live and work. We are to share other people's burdens, as well as bear our own, and listen to other people patiently, not as a priest, but as a pastor, a shepherd of the flock.

We are not called to be a tale-bearer, a spy, or a detective. Neither are we to presume to be an expert to tell our merchant friends how to run their business, or a county agent to tell our country friends how to run their farms. We can show an intelligent interest in what the merchant friend is doing, and show some degree of interest and appreciation of the work of the farmer folks.

We visit the schools in the country where some of our young people are teaching, or where we know we will see some of our church school boys and girls. We believe the teacher, pupils and parents like to know their pastor is interested in their school.

We visit the school in town—we like to do so; there we observe the hard-working teachers at their task. All too often these teachers get never a word of praise or commendation through the year. Plenty of criticism is theirs. We feel that the faculty of our schools are co-laborers and we are much happier when we are really cooperators together.

We like to promote good entertainment. All winter our town couldn't afford movies—we are just as well off this spring. Some good clean work has been carried on through other social activities.

The preacher must show himself a good citizen. He is loyal to God, first, a Christian citizen against wrong—he is for the RIGHT. He votes, and votes according to his best judgment. Every manly layman will respect the political beliefs of his preacher; and the preacher must do the same by the political beliefs of his members.

Jesus had a passion for men's souls and bodies, a hatred for sin, and a love for all kinds of folks. He was always ready to give men light and life. He was a lover of little children. He had a faith in men that could not be broken by disappointment in them.

My community offers to me a place of labor, and a challenge to do my very best as a Christian man. My fellow-citizens expect me to be honest and to pay my bills. They expect a little more from me in courtesy and gratitude than from some of the others of their own number. They like to have the ministers notice them in passing along the street. They really want us to succeed in the task assigned us in their community, and are disappointed if we fail.

Paul's statement should be our inspiration and counsel: "I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some" (1 Cor. 9:22).

Some communities are more responsive than others, but we find pleasure and joy in being a minister in the community.

Carleton, Nebraska.

Why Did The Word Grow?

By Frank Gehman

Text: Acts 12:24, "But the Word of God grew and multiplied."

Scripture: Acts 12:1-24.

In the natural world we expect everything that happens to have a cause. This looking for causes has brought many interesting things to light. No less is this true in the spiritual world. Definite results follow well defined causes.

Luke tells us in the words of our text that God's Word "grew and multiplied." Why? The setting gives us some interesting reasons why. Why, then, did this Word "grow"?

I. Because with the believers prayer was made immediately effective.

1. Prayer was made without delay. Not as a last resort. They believed in it. Directly they went to God. How little is our wholehearted dependence upon him? How often is going directly to God a real short cut to help. Immediate prayer when there is need. Not as an afterthought. Not as something to fall back upon when all else had failed. It was not called in as the doctor after the home remedies have failed. It was appealed to without delay. The result was immediate. Besides, "the Word of God grew." Small wonder. Are we thus helping it to "grow"?

2. It was earnest prayer, vs. 5. They really believed in prayer. It meant something to them. To them the moment was serious. Sufficiently so to warrant application of the most hopeful remedy. No mere form here. It came from the bottoms of their hearts, this anguish of soul for another. Luke 22:44—Christ agonized in prayer; it was for others. Rom. 8:26—the Holy Spirit now intercedes with groanings which cannot be uttered; it is for us. Can we, do we agonize in prayer for others? They gave earnest prayer for others. Final result: The Word "grew". Why did it "grow"? Is it "growing" now?

3. It was prayer to God. There was no red tape here. The early Church knew where to take its prayers to. Not to the officials either civil or ecclesiastical. Both were against them. They went over the head of organizations to get at the Great Head of the universe. They besought him on behalf of Peter. The others were in league with the devil. They went to God. They went seriously: They EXPECTED to be taken seriously because they came on the promises of Christ. Much time and breath are wasted in so-called prayer because it is not a heart to heart, man to God proposition through Christ. The church, its organization, officials, or material and worldly things may interfere. This church prayed to God. There was no time or effort wasted otherwise. They prayed to God. He gave them Peter and a "growth" of the Word in their midst.

Thus this prayer was effective prayer. It got results. It got them immediately, so soon, in fact, that the prayer-makers themselves were amazed, vs. 16. And the "Word grew and multiplied." Why?

II. Because of the obedience of God's servants.

1. "And he spake a parable unto them to the end that they ought always to pray and not to faint," Luke 18:1. The moment was critical, upsetting to men's courage. James killed by a conscienceless ruler to please a fanatical people. Peter seized by the same ruler to gain him greater favor with the same people. And what fates in store for the others? Here was occasion for faintness. Likewise, there were our Lord's words of Luke 18:1. They prayed. "The Word of God grew and multiplied." They were obedient. Is today a time for faintness? Are we obedient? Luke 18:1.

2. Paul wrote: "Let us therefore draw near with boldness unto the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy, and may find grace to help us in time of need," Heb. 4:16. Even though those words were not yet penned, the whole teaching of our Lord was one of dependence upon God. They depended. They were obedient. They asked. They did not condemn God for allowing the dire need to arise; they sought his help in it. They did not question his love because Peter was imprisoned; they cast themselves upon his mercy and strength. Small wonder with this obedience that the "Word grew and multiplied." Are his servants as obedient today? To be so means that the Word is "growing" in lives.

3. "And he did so . . . and he went out and followed," vs. 8, 9. Suppose Peter had just lain still. Oh, how many blessings we miss because we do not follow the bidding of our Lord. Obedient Peter became a freed Peter. The freed Peter became again a Word-proclaiming, soul-winning Peter. "And the Word of God grew . . . because there were obedient servants. It was not only obedience in faith, but in action, in works, in deeds for Christ and the Church. Obedience, therefore, bespeaks activity for the Lord, Spirit-directed activity and—fruits. Is the Church fruitful in this decade? That first one was.

This obedience brought real results. Being obedient the servants were at the right place at the right time. There was God-given growth in that day. Why?

III. Because of their willingness to give God the credit for what was done.

1. Vs. II. Peter did. He was scarcely more than awake until the angel had guided him out and left him. His first thought was of the incredible, well-nigh unbelievable nature of it. "But thought he saw a vision", vs. 9. His second thought was different. It was the thought of a waking man ("when Peter was come to himself"). "NOW I KNOW of a truth that the Lord hath sent forth his angel and delivered me . . ." Who sent? The Lord. Who delivered? The Lord. No pronoun "I" in the acting. Only the pronoun "me" in the being-acted-upon. It was the Lord's work. Therefore his glory, his credit. "Praise God from Whom all blessings flow" must have been the nature of Peter's waking thought. Nor did he change it when he told it again. The credit was God's.

2. The church was surprised when Peter appeared.

"Thou art mad", to the maid. And "were amazed" for Peter's appearance. This concludes that no human efforts were being put forth for his releasing. These were depending upon God alone. Suddenly and unexpectedly the answer came. They were briefly astounded. But none of them made pretense to having gained his release by human means. It was God who did it. To him be the glory. And his "Word grew and multiplied." He got the credit for what he did. Does he get it today? Maybe that is a secret to help his Word "grow."

3. Peter trusted them to tell it straight the next day and the days following that. "Tell these things unto James and the brethren." He must have been sure they would give God his rightful place in it. Often it is the "I" who does things in the Lord's work. God is left in the background. This is one of the devil's favorite methods of destroying the testimony of Christian workers. Let us admit God did it. Surely we didn't. They admitted God's part and the Word "grew." Peter trusted the church to tell that convincing story straight. No exaggeration allowable. The Word would "grow" more rapidly today if churchmen were always jealous of the exact truthfulness of their every word. Serious-minded, honest people are often kept from the church because some churchmen exaggerate without cause, promise without thought of fulfilling the promise, take credit to themselves where it belongs to God. May WE not hinder the Word's "growth."

Their faithfulness in crediting God with the miracle was rewarded. Moses once failed on that very point. Moses lost thereby. This church credited God. The Word "grew and multiplied" in that hour. Why?

IV. Because the Lord's mighty works were not kept a secret.

1. Peter made those works known. Right away he declared the matter to the church. God had worked. He had worked mightily. The world should know it. Peter had been a great preacher before. He must have been a greater afterward. Christian experiences are fruitful of stronger testimonies. Peter had been in prison. Now he was free. His enemies certainly would not free him. His friends could not. God both could and would. Thus Peter was free. Peter declared God's mighty workings. It helped the Word to "grow and multiply." What is our witness? What, our testimony? Do they help this Word to "Grow"? Do our experiences strengthen our testimony?

2. The church told the miracle of Peter's release. He told it to do so. It did so willingly. Here was a marvel. Should not all know it? It was God's work. Seeing God working before one's very eyes strengthens believers' consecration, convicts unbelievers. The church told the story. Of course, first amongst their own numbers. Then it got out. There were others who wanted to know how Peter got out. It was God's method. God did it. The world needs to know, today as ever that God does care for his own. Does it learn of his providential care for us, or is it just called "luck"? The Word "grew" in that day because Peter's "luck" was made known in its true light as the work of God for a child of his.

3. The defeated power of evil declared God's work. Vs. 18. Let righteousness defeat evil and the forces of evil set up a hue and cry to the very skies. Witness the enemies of Prohibition. For Peter the jail was overcome, and its means of imprisonment. The guard was of no avail. Herod was beaten. Satan, defeated. Result: A "no small" stir amongst the soldiers, an examination by Herod, and death for the guards. They were innocent on that count; helpless in the face of the power of God. Man is ever thus. The evil they had allied themselves with did not hesitate to take their lives. "But the Word of God grew and multiplied", evil powers notwithstanding. Defeated, evil cried out her defeat. Her defeat being cried out was an honoring of God. Only God defeats evil. Man needs the victory. How obtain it? Simply line self up with God. This was done and the Word "grew".

The story being told, no matter how, became a witness to God's greatness. And because God was set forth in his true light the church knew growth. This was and is God's glory, i. e., the bearing of fruit.

After all, why did the Word "grow"? Because God's people full of all "gave their own selves to the Lord", 2 Cor. 8:5. Can there be such a growth in this century? The first step lies with believers. We hinder or we aid God's work. Not by our strength or weakness, but by our consecration or lack of it. Henceforth, by the Grace of God, let us be Second-Corinthian-eight-fivers, giving our very own selves to the Lord.

Krypton, Kentucky.

Editorial Review

(Continued from page 4)

item of business was the shaping of the program for the district conference program to be conducted in the First church of Johns-town October 3 to 6. The rest of the day was spent in games and social conversation.

Brother and Sister Freeman Ankrum of Flora, Indiana, announce the arrival into their home on July 3 of Mary Alice, tipping the scales at 8 pounds and nine ounces. Congratulations to Brother and Sister Ankrum. A babe is a gift of God.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

CHURCHES CHALLENGED

In a recent letter on current conditions as touched by the church Roger Babson, the well-known financial writer, appeals to the churches to maintain their services through the summer in order to minister to the people of the wisdom, self-control and courage which they need in this crisis more than anything else. He feels that to close churches in such a situation is "like closing hospitals in an epidemic." The matter is not altogether so simple as it appears to Mr. Babson. There are few, if any, churches which would close if there were the chance of ministering to those thus needy. One trouble is that so many people, in the days of material prosperity, were weaned away from the services of the church by the prevalent materialism and worldliness. Not many of these have yet come to realize that they need "wisdom, self-control and courage" more than anything else. There are excellent reasons for keeping the churches open, but not with the expectation that they would be crowded as would hospitals in an epidemic.—The Presbyterian Advance.

WHY UPTON SINCLAIR IS A DRY

"Whisky in its multiple forms—'mint-juleps,' 'toddlies,' 'hot Scotches,' 'egg-noggs,' 'punch'—was the most conspicuous single fact in my boyhood," says Upton Sinclair. "It was not that my father could not earn money, but that he could not keep it. . . . When he was not under the influence of the Demon Rum, the little 'drummer' dearly loved his family; so the thirty years during which I watched him were one long moral agony. He would make all sorts of pledges, with tears in his eyes; he would invent all sorts of devices to cheat his cruel master. My earliest memory of the home of my maternal grandfather was of being awakened by a disturbance downstairs, and looking over the banisters in alarm while my grandfather—a Methodist deacon—was struggling with his grown son to keep him from going out while drunk."—The Baptist.

EUCCHARISTIC CONGRESS

What the Roman Catholic Church arranges for the welfare of its constituents and the propagation of its projects is of course strictly the business of the hierarchy. If vast gatherings of "the faithful" for the adoration of the holy sacrament appears worth while to them, no non-Catholic would debar them this annual festivity. It is only when the widespread publicity given these affairs assaults the eyes and ears that we evangelicals reach our conclusions concerning their merits.

Convinced as we are of the falsity of the doctrine of transubstantiation (that the bread of the sacrament by the consecration of the priest becomes and remains the real and true body of Christ) "the adoration of the host" seems to be an artificial appeal to the emotion of reverence. The pomp and ceremony involved, the processions arranged and the dramatization produced become a theatrical spectacle. It is incongruous, when the simplicity that characterized the institution of the Holy Supper by our Lord, is recalled. It is a localization of his presence for purposes that seem to rest on public display. In the early Church, from which Rome is so fond of drawing authority, the Sacrament of the Altar was so shrouded in sacredness as to receive the title mystery. We have in the technical language of things right and proper the significant term, congruity, which refers to the fitting together of dissimilar elements. This deserves attention.

The attribute of unseemliness is not lessened if the objective of these meetings is mass enthusiasm and mass momentum. The Roman hierarchy cannot accuse evangelicals of baseless prejudices, if we are critical in spirit, when they seem to encourage mass psychology to an unjustifiable extent. We cannot escape the inference that solidarity more than any other mark of the Christian Church is emphasized by Rome. The policy of centering around the most individualistic rite of religion an affair likely to make an impression which is political and ecclesiastical rather than devotional seems to a non-Catholic unjustifiable on purely Christian grounds. In thus commenting, one does not charge hypocrisy or ulterior purposes against the throngs of simple folk who gather to witness the gorgeous ceremonies.—The Lutheran.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Job I

"The patience of Job!" Who has not heard that phrase uttered over and over again? It refers, of course, to a man who, universal in character, because of his intense sufferings, was as impatient as the proverbial setting hen with her multifarious distempers, and who, in God's own time, became a model for all the Christian sufferers who follow the Model Sufferer.

No one can read the book of Job long until he is greatly impressed with its central intent and core ideas. He soon discovers that it has to do with grief and pain, anguish and despair, tooth-ache and back-ache, gout and cancer. Moreover, he recognizes that the timeless and ageless problem of real suffering has no answer except for him who sees not as man sees, but as God and God alone views matters of physical disability and mental distress.

Again, the reader is aware of the hosts of wickedness and the heroes of faith as he reads the swelling lines of the poet-dramatist of ancient times. He sees the endless and eternal conflict between evil and good and welcomes the prophetic outlook of the Scriptures which assures him of the ultimate triumph of right in the universe. He sees, with far clearer vision than did the suffering patriarch, the immortality which was foreshadowed in the Old Testament and explicitly revealed in the New Testament, as the only solution of all of the pain problems which vex mankind. He joins the earnest inhabitant of Uz in saying, as they anticipate together the pleasures of the upper sanctuary,

"There the wicked cease from troubling;
And there the weary be at rest.

"There the prisoners rest together;

They hear not the voice of the oppressor.

"The small and great are there;
And the servant is free from his master."

These, to the writer, are some of the grandest and most eloquent lines of all literature. Read them, then think.

However good the above may be, let us come back to Uz and live with Job for a period. The book which bears his name is, no matter in what way we may view it, perhaps the greatest poem of adversity known to man. Luther regarded it as "more magnificent and sublime than any other book of Scripture." The illustrious Tennyson thought it was "the greatest poem, whether of ancient or modern literature." And the biting and stinging Carlyle pronounced it to be "one of the grandest things ever written by man. A noble book! All men's book! Such living likenesses have never since been drawn. Sublime sorrow, sublime reconciliation; oldest choral melody, as of the heart of manhood, as soft and great as the summer midnight; as the world with its seas and stars. There is nothing else written, I think, of equal literary merit."

Job, although many do not so think, was a real man, purely historical, not merely dramatically so. The Scripture itself settles that question. God says through his prophet Ezekiel: "Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver, but their own souls." (Ezek. 14:14, 20). In James 5:11 it is recorded: "Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." Cf. also Job 5:13 and I Cor. 3:19; Job 41:11 and Rom. 11:35; Job 1:21 and I Tim. 6:7; Job 14:2 and Jas. 1:10; Job 34:19 and Acts 10:34; Job 39:30 and Matt. 24:27. These references are not exact quotations. Furthermore, read for your own enlightenment, Gen. 46:13; Num. 26:24; I Chron. 7:1.

Although the language of the book of Job is couched in poetry in the main, that does not necessarily conflict with his historicity. The poet was clothing the historic experiences of the patriarch in literary language. That is perfectly permissible and does not conflict with the historic and established view of verbal inspiration of the Scriptures.

The theological culture and intellectual knowledge of the patriarchal age in which Job lived were remarkably full. The great doctrines of the Christian faith are found therein, together with much exact scientific knowledge, and, although the book is not scientific in its outlook, it presents much scientific truth centuries before the era of science dawned. For instance, consider "He hangeth the earth on nothing." (26:7); "Can't thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades?" (33:31) ((Who taught Job astronomy?); "The morning stars sang together." (38:7) (Light rays are vocal); "By what way is light parted?" (38:24) (Spectrum analysis); "He is green (or is full of juice) before the sun," (8:16) (Chemical absorption of chlorophyll by plants from light); and other "natural" observations.

However, the main problem of the epic of Job is concerned with the mystery of suffering. It is not exactly the result of personal sin as Job's friends so dogmatically declared. While the case is not solved, yet advanced light is thrown upon the problem, proving that affliction is not merely chastisement, but a tester and revealer of character, an educator and instructor, towards righteousness. Job's friends wanted to know "how can this man be godly if he suffers?" Contrariwise, we modern Christian believers ask, "How can this man be God-like if he knows nothing of suffering?" We feel that self-knowledge and self-judgment by man are ephemeral things, if they are not revealed, deepened, and broadened by trial and pain, and purged by the raging fires of fever and periodic disease. This, and this alone, is the additional light which we have since Christ became our Sufferer. He was made "perfect through sufferings" (Heb. 2:10), and we are willing to tread the wine press with him. We simply cannot reign with him, unless we suffer with him.

"Sure I must fight, if I would reign;
Increase my courage Lord;
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy Word."

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Study No. 2

Rom. 4:18—"Who in hope believed against hope, to the end that he might become the father of many nations, according to that which had been spoken, so shall thy seed be." (R. V.).

If a man believes in God, contrary to what seem to be facts to him, what is it to "believe against hope"? This Abraham did. The scriptural incident referred to, stands out boldly as illustrating how sublime it is to believe when one can see that the thing commanded by the Almighty is clearly wrong in itself. God imposed such a task upon Abraham, evidently with the great purpose in view of exalting the sovereignty of divine commands. How heartening to hold up before weak and vacillating man this man of God, who "staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God" (Rom. 4:20). The story of Abraham offering his son Isaac upon the altar as a sacrifice to God has been told over and over again. But have you weighed the incident in the light that "might does not make right"; that God's eternal Word must stand ahead of any and all considerations; that God's Word makes right, whether it is reasonable or unreasonable to man.

How startling it must have appeared to Abraham one day to hear God say, "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of" (Gen. 22:2). A great Bible scholar gives the whole setting in these trite words: "Remember, this man was no hardened Pagan, trained to human sacrifices; but a man whose whole training was averse to anything of this kind. What does he do in the premises? What an opening was here for talk about essentials and non-essentials! for talk about 'the spirit of obedience', without obedience itself! What a plausible speech might have been made, excusing himself from doing what was commanded! He might have argued that to execute this commandment will frustrate the promise of God, that in his seed all nations shall be blessed. Then, it is contrary to the moral law. It is wrong to kill. Not only so, but the sentiments of filial affection, which God has implanted in his own breast, forbids that this thing shall be done; and even the common sentiments of humanity forbid it. Did Abraham institute any such reasoning? Not a word of it! No such unbelieving talk falls from his lips. God has spoken! The Jehovah has commanded! The Supreme Majesty of heaven and earth has commanded! There is but one way out of it. That which has been commanded MUST BE DONE."

The very next verse after God had issued this strange and startling command, probably is intended to startle all who read the story; that is, without one quibble from Abraham, God's Word says, "And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him, and Isaac his son, (no dodging the issue, you notice) and clave the wood for the burnt offering, and rose up, and went into the place which God had told him." One of the pathetic scenes in this making of "the supreme sacrifice", was when his son turned to the father with the words, "Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" The only answer given at this moment is "My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering." So Abraham proceeds, builds the altar, places the wood, binds his son and lays him on the altar. "And Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son" (Gen. 22:10). But the Lord of heaven called from heaven, stopped the hand which held the knife, and Abraham, glancing behind him saw a ram caught in a thicket by his horns; this, then was used in the offering. Is it any wonder that both Old and New Testaments make much of the sublime faith of this patriarch? James says, "and he was called the Friend of God." The Hebrew letter, after recounting this sublime struggle of obeying when he could see that the thing commanded was morally wrong, throws in this side-light: "Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure" (Heb. 11:19). When I see such confidence placed in the divine commands of God, who am I that I should withstand God? Is he not wise enough to command the right thing, and good enough to do what is best for his children, without stopping to explain everything?

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N. MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

Historic Basis of Protestantism

By Bishop H. M. DuBose, D.D., L.L.D.

The roots of Protestantism are in history, all history. In this sense, Protestantism is more than an exception taken to errors in doctrinal interpretation and religious practices. It is the recovery and restatement of truth, as also the repledging of theological integrity. It is not only a return to the traditional gospel, but is a revalidation of the basic conditions of personal freedom in thought and choice, as of the right of revelation to make strict appeal to the record which itself has created. The right of private interpretation and the final authority of the written Word are not only the ultimate tests of Christian theology; but constantly are being emphasized in human history. The affinities of Protestantism are seen in these consistent developments.

Of course due respect must be had to the demand for a proper interpretation of Protestantism. Manifestly, all forms and expressions of extant Protestantism are not equally valid. Also, it may be accepted as a conclusion of universal application that Protestantism has not reached the final stage of its development; and certainly there has not been completed a summary of its actual contents and unrealized inclusions. But, as for that matter, Christianity itself, from the viewpoint of theology, has not been fully and finally interpreted. Protestantism, doctrinally considered, being a phase of that interpretation. In the case of both Protestantism and its original, apostolic Christianity, the developments of history must be awaited, in order that the exceeding greatness of the truth may become known to all men. Not, indeed, that to history has been given the office or the power to modify the Word; but to make it more distinct and available to human faith and understanding.

The earliest distinct tokens of Protestantism must be sought for in that species of history known as prophecy, and particularly in that section of prophecy known as apocalyptic which, strictly interpreted, is anticipatory interpretation of history. This is logical, since the antecedents of organized Protestantism wrought as hidden forces in the thought and records of men previous to the time of its symptomatic and overt showings to the kingdom of God. The spiritual dynamic of Protestantism is accounted for in the fact that, in its nascent in prophecy and history, as also in its subsequent development, it has lain close to the divine will and consciousness which have moved effectively through human change and advance. It is by this spiritual dynamic, and its faithfulness to original type, that the genuineness of Protestantism is to be tested in all times and relations. If Protestantism is not spiritual and faithful to the written record it is hybrid and abortive.

The datum of the Book of Daniel is the logical, if not the initial, emergence of the force and ideals of Protestantism in the currents of historic action and forecast. In the year 606 A. D., according to accepted reckoning, Nebuchadnezzar had a dream concerning a history embodying statue of gold, silver, brass, iron and clay. This dream, at first forgotten, but recalled and interpreted by Daniel, as told in chapter 2 of his prophecy, is the norm of that long succession of apocalyptic visions which involve the Babylonian, Persian, Grecian and Roman world rules, culminating in the appearance of the Messianic Kingdom, represented as "a stone cut out of the mountain without hands." This is the miracle of the Galilean ministry and sacrifice and of the apostolic dispensation; and for which the Protestant spirit and evangel are seen to have direct affinity throughout the apocalyptic passages of Daniel and the stages of the Revelation of St. John the Divine.

Any attempt at interpreting the apocalyptic visions of Daniel involves the risk of speculation; but for our present use the un-glossed text of the prophecy in connection with the history composite statue of Nebuchadnezzar's dream is direct and conclusive. Referring to the clay toes of the statue; which were the final shape taken by Roman imperial power in the transitions of its breaking up within the early Christian age, the prophet says:

And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another; even as iron is not mixed with clay.

Whatever turn may be given to these words, as they relate to the age long controversy concerning the Romanistic apostasy, they describe an effort to fuse some form of aborted religious power with the suffrage of "the seed of men"; as also they indicate the course and persistence of that kingdom of the mountain stone—the kingdom of absolute spiritual ideals and freedom of will—which "shall not be left to other people." If this is not the primal record of Protestantism, as we know its spirit, not to seek for the highest type of organized life; then it is that larger protest, written on every page of revelation and history, against "the man of sin," "who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is God." Protestantism is of the abiding spirit of the evangel, rather than of a departure in ecclesiasticism. Again, it is of the nature of the Sinaitic law, which is prohibitive, corrective and reconstructive of those materials of faith and experience which are eternal.

The portents of the Revelation of St. John the Divine also partake of both the nature of history and prophecy. The basis of that remarkable writing, as also that of Daniel, was current history, events that were then in process of happening. The projection of that history through the centuries in the form of apocalyptic forecasts was the pledge of the advance of truth and thought life in the course of their movement toward the goal of self-fulfillment. The field of controversy delimited from the picturesque forecasts of the Book of Revelation is too thoroughly strewn with the wrecks and obstructions of modern theorizings to make it desirable to enter even the modest essay at further construction. It is enough to fall back on what already has been posited as an argument—namely, that all those passages of the Revelator's book which have been thrown into the scale against papalistic Rome as being the Beast, the Scarlet Woman and Babylon, at last indicate the persistence of the spirit of faith and testimony, which was alive in the earliest covenants of the saints, in the law, in the prophecies and in the evangel a protest against error and unrighteousness both in statement and practice; the spirit which must make overt announcement of itself when offense is full and the times are ripe.

The genius of decadent Roman imperialism, or, more properly, the history which it took to itself under the influence of a slowly declining Christianity, describes the toes of clay seen in Nebuchadnezzar's troglodyte statue. These earthen members of the dream body were the foil of that subjective religious consciousness, coextensive with history, whose best expression since apostolic times is seen in the early Protestant ideals and confessions. The Christian consciousness which could not fuse with "the seed of men," even as iron and clay cannot mix, asserted itself from slow inward impulses until it burst into the fullness of the Reformation.

The definite rise of the papacy in the fifth century marks the setting forth of claims in religious authority and doctrinal interpretation antithetic to the subjective religious influence which we have noted as being perpetual in history. This influence, the destined birth soil of Protestantism, was thus isolated from the general religious sense of the times, and left to work, like leaven, until it should be separated from "other people." Thus, as already asserted. Protestantism is an accommodated term describing that which is eternal and universal in the realm of religious being and activity. It must, in this, be seen that Protestantism is not only a reinstatement of gospel doctrine; but a recovery of the grounds of religious experience and a reidentification of the elements of Christian evidences.

The Renaissance, or the Revival of Letters, which is the intellectual side of that movement of which the Reformation is the spiritual expression, was itself the outcome of latent forces in history, and which ramify back to the beginning of thought. Both the Renaissance and the Reformation were as inevitable as the procession of the equinoxes. The world has certain teachers. It will have none others. Indeed, there is a sense in which it can have none others. Art and literary culture from Athens; law and the science of administration from Rome, and religion from Jerusalem. The authority of these is set, and history works itself out in accordance therewith. Those who reject this dictum in the interest of a self assertive modernism do but shoot thistle rods against the face of a cataract.

The records of the slow coming of intellectual freedom so completely parallel the spirit of Protestantism as to indicate not only elemental sympathy between them; but as also to establish the unity of those laws to which they have made a common and history long appeal. True religion is educative; true culture is religious, to the extent that it partakes of the spirit of that subjective religious sense, which is always corrective of the objective forms of worship and conduct. This is the office of Christian experience; this is the rule to which the spirit of Protestantism answers.

As our readers will have noted, it is not to the controversial side of Protestantism that recourse is had in this paper; but to the spirit in which it is found set in history. A new protest is due to be made from this viewpoint, as to the selective and perpetual testimony of history to Protestant faith and teaching. No rational, or logically connected, chain of Christian evidences is possible on any basis of religious consciousness and doctrinal interpretation than that which is elemental in Protestantism. But, alas, Protestantism must too often protest against itself. However, in this it only follows the order of the believer who is being renewed after the image of that which is perfect—Christian Faith and Life.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
with
Thoburn C. Lyon

THE DELIVERANCE AT THE RED SEA

(Lesson for July 24)

Lesson Text: Ex. 14:10-16, 21, 22; Golden Text: Ex. 15:2

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Led Through the Wilderness. Ex. 13:17-22

How exactly this passage shows the wonderful way in which God leads and cares for his people through the wilderness of life! The pillar of cloud and fire, symbolic of his constant presence (v. 22); his apparently roundabout leading was also planned for their good (v. 17). So often we cannot see why God does not permit us to take the short path to the thing we desire; yet later on as we look back we realize his way was best, and that he causes all things to work together for our good. Our one concern should be that we do not miss the blessings that come from following where he leads. Let us pray for strength to follow on and to point others to him who alone can lead us to the Promised Land.

TUESDAY

Delivered at the Red Sea. Ex. 14:10-16, 21, 22

None of us have ever faced a more discouraging situation than these Israelites. From the human standpoint theirs seemed a hopelessly lost cause, but God said, through Paul, "My strength is made perfect in weakness." His strength mightily delivered his people then, and still delivers today, if we will only go forward when he commands. The Lord fought for them, and this was no isolated case: there was Jericho, and Elisha (2 Kings 6:17); Jesus referred to the heavenly hosts he might have summoned to fight for him had he so chosen. Let us not strive in our own weak strength, but let us ask the Lord to fight for us. So shall we win the victory.

WEDNESDAY

God a Defender. Isa. 41:8-16

These are troublesome days in which we live, men's hearts failing them for fear as they contemplate the things that are coming to pass on the earth. But the Christian need not fear: God speaks of Abraham, his friend (v. 8); he has also called us his friends (John 15:15). has told us of his plans, and assured us of his presence and help. Let us praise the God who makes such blessed promises as those in v. 10—and remember that he is faithful that promised!

THURSDAY

A Song of Deliverance. Ex. 15:1-10

God had mightily delivered his people, and they praised him. Note, in v. 1, it was not "we have triumphed," but "HE hath triumphed." Let us not fail to give God the glory. It has been remarked that even the Pharisee's prayer becomes acceptable when the accent is properly placed: "Lord, I thank THEE that I am not as other men!" Surely we do not have to go back as far as the Red Sea for an illustration of God's deliverance: let us praise him "who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us (2 Cor. 1:10)."

FRIDAY

A Psalm of Deliverance. Ps. 18:1-17

Be sure to read the superscription at the head of this Psalm: David spoke these words "In the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies." He hath likewise delivered us from all our enemies save one (1 Cor. 15:26), and him he has robbed of his sting and power. The day cometh when the last enemy shall be destroyed; then what a psalm of deliverance shall go up from the redeemed of all ages (1 Cor. 15:54, 55)! Let us now give thanks unto God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

SATURDAY

The Goodness and Severity of God. Nahum 1:1-8

The goodness of God was evidenced in the deliverance at the Red Sea. We too have tasted of his goodness, but let us not forget his great hatred of sin, that awful thing that caused the death of his Son upon the cross. Read this passage carefully, then consider what is our duty! Certain false teachers, who have lately adopted the new name of "Jehovah's Witnesses," would have us believe that God will not punish the wicked as his word declares. Let us be Jehovah's true witnesses, sounding forth the warning, even as Judah in Nineveh, and holding forth the word of life.

SUNDAY

Security in God. Ps. 37:1-7

May our hearts no longer be troubled, but let us have faith in God and in his Christ. Temporal happiness, the abundance of things—these are not the chief end of living. Trust in the Lord and do good; so shall we come into all the promises of God, and we shall be fed (John 6:51).

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK  C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBail Ave., South Bend, Ind.	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E. Canton, Ohio
--	---	--

Practical Points on Publicity

By Dr. William T. Ellis

There is one wonderful way whereby every Christian may extend his influence immeasurably, and count for all the things which make for righteousness in the world.

That way is to cooperate with the press in Christian publicity.

This is not a plan for experts. It is work for the average church-member. What this article suggests is practicable for everybody everywhere.

The aim of Christian publicity is to cooperate with the press in securing adequate, intelligent, and sympathetic presentation of the real news, local and general, of the church.

There should be no effort to circulate anything for which there is not real warrant as honest news. The activities of the church are great enough, and diversified enough, and inherently interesting enough, to stand on their own feet as news.

Christian publicity is not a scheme for "working" the press. It is a sincere and open endeavor to cooperate with periodicals of all kinds.

What Is News?

Whatever is new and important is news. New forms of service, new workers, new organizations, new buildings, new members, new gifts, and the unclassified and unpredictable, these are church news.

Whatever in a church touches the life of a considerable number of persons is news. Thus: all civic, State, denominational, or in-terdenominational organizations are a prolific source of news.

Routine announcements—as that the regular services are to be held and the regular minister is to preach—are not news. They are advertisements, and preferably to be inserted as such. The filling of newspaper columns with these "notices" as typical of church news has given the world an inadequate and misleading impression of the church's mission and activities.

The congregation's work is a more prolific source of publicity than the pastor's words.

"Human interest" items, concerning veterans in service, unusual forms of endeavor, and work in jails, almshouses, hospitals, etc., are a good sort of news.

Special church days always afford opportunity for publicity.

Every new missionary who appears in a community affords "copy" for at least one article.

Kingdom news is good news, and often better worth printing than local items. Every congregation is a branch agency of a world-wide work, and there is a sound warrant for printing locally the great news about world-wide missions.

This sort of news in the form of incidents, statistics, and important generalizations may be obtained from the missionary magazines and from the missionary boards. It may also be secured by newspapers from various syndicates.

But only local persons can get it into local papers.

Good publicity also insures editorial comment upon religious news and tendencies. It helps give Christianity its place in the eyes of the world.

What To Do With News

Every congregation should have a publicity committee. preferably one layman or young woman.

The young people's society or the adult Bible class could profitably take on this service. The local church advertising should also be handled by this committee. Publicity work answers the common question of Bible classes for "something to do."

These committees should cooperate with the local editors as to what they desire. They will be found ready for any fair cooperation.

Furnish typewritten copy.

Treat all the newspapers in the community alike.

Beware of personal puffery or self-advertisement.

Give the editor advance information of news.

Help him get pictures when possible.

Keep news brief.

The success of publicity is not measured by the length of the articles printed, but by the impression upon the readers. Better four small items than one long one.

The occasional person can write religious news for the great magazines.

Having done all—keep on doing it. The grace of continuance is a fundamental virtue in publicity work.

About Religious Advertising

The day of the church's mendicancy is at its sunset.

Christianity is no longer asking favors of the press. It is good-naturedly requiring its rights.

Whatever is the business of the church to say to the public, it pays for, business-fashion, just as it pays for the sign at the church door.

Announcements of the place, time, and character of meetings have to do with the business end of the church. These belong in the advertising columns; reports of what a church has actually done belong in the news column as a matter of right and not of courtesy.

The concerted invitation of all the churches of a community to all the people should be printed as display advertisements and be paid for. That is the new way (and the only way) of reaching all the men and women who do not attend church. When the church pays for printing her plea to the people, she gives clear proof of the sincerity of her interest in them.

Wherever the churches regularly advertise, it is easiest secure sympathetic publicity on a large scale for all classes of church news.

The Religious Press

Every Christian family should subscribe for a religious paper. The importance of this is stressed. Such a publication is really necessary for the dissemination of the news of the denomination and of the church the world round, and for inspiration to Christian living.

The promotion of the circulation of Christian literature is a far-reaching and proper service for publicity workers.

Real news and helpful methods should be sent regularly to the church papers.

Hospitals, jails, asylums, etc., should be kept supplied with religious literature.

Writing to the Editor

Investigation has shown that editors of many daily newspapers are really troubled by lack of cooperation on the part of church people. As a rule, they do not hear from them—except when they ask for something.

Every newspaper reader can be of service to the public and to the church by telling his editor what he thinks of the way his paper handles religious subjects.

Many a newspaper has dropped its religious features simply because it has never received a word of interest in them from readers.

Is a newspaper doing well by the church? Say so.

If the church news is too petty and local, too one-sided, too neglectful of big Kingdom movements, say so.

If you would like special religious features, like a Sunday school lesson, a missionary or social-service department, a Bible-study column, a young people's feature, a weekly sermon, say so.

The editor must run his own paper, but he will prize the counsel of every fair-minded reader. Many editors fail to print religious matter simply because they have never heard any demand for it.

If the church folk sincerely want religious news, let them express that desire in courteous, friendly fashion.

And when you know any real news upon any subject whatsoever, telephone to the editor about that too. He will learn that church people are friends worth having.—C. E. Word.

Swarthmore, Pennsylvania.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.,
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

The First Indian Woman Physician

Susan La Flesche Picotte spent her early childhood on an unsettled Indian reservation; her home was a tepee. In an unusually brief time she evolved from primitive life to highest civilization, and today stands out as a unique figure in the annals of the North American Indian. Her rapid advance educationally was due to her keen mind and unlimited courage. After elementary education at a mission school and a government school, she was brought East in 1879, at the age of thirteen years, and placed for three years in a preparatory school at Elizabeth, New Jersey. Next she was graduated from Hampton and entered the Philadelphia Woman's Medical College, graduating two years later at the age of twenty-two, with first honors in a class of one hundred.

Following a year of hospital experience, she was appointed Government physician among the Omaha Indians. This service involved long trips over the reservation and four years of the roughest life of exposure and hardship as she ministered night and day to the needs of her people, when she was compelled to resign, because of ill health, she removed to Bancroft, built up a large private practice and gave her services to two races. Not only was she sought by Indian patients, but by white people who admired her proficiency.

In 1894 she married Henry Picotte, a French Sioux Indian, intending to live the quiet life of a homemaker but she could not long withstand the needs of her people and soon resumed her practice, gradually assuming a spiritual leadership as well. In addition to her practice she nursed her aged mother; reared two boys, training them and equipping them for life's duties; cared for a sick husband; conducted services in the little mission church; did active temperance work; kept up her social activities, and never lost close personal touch with all the affairs of her people. She at one time led a delegation of her tribesmen to Washington. This proved to be the most important and successful mission ever undertaken by her tribe for through the protest presented to government authorities the sale of liquor in towns on the Omaha and Winnebago reservations was forever prohibited in the title conveyances.

After her husbands' death in 1905, she built an attractive home for herself and her two boys, Caryl and Pierre, and until illness forced her to become inactive, she gave her time and strength to the Omaha Indians as medical missionary among them. Dr. Picotte was one of the organizers of the Presbyterian Church at Walthill.

In later years she confined her medical activity to the Presbyterian Hospital under the Board of Home Missions at Walthill. This is indeed a memorial to her unceasing labors, and located and equipped as she had planned, is the realization of one of her dreams for her people.

Her identification with the religious life of the Omahas was ever foremost. Eight miles from Walthill she went over rough roads every Sunday to the Presbyterian church at the agency to conduct services for the Indians and to speak to them in their own language.

For the last twenty years of her life, which ended in 1915 when she was but forty-six years of age, she suffered from an incurable malady, never being free from pain. In spite of physical limitations and tribal prejudice against the leadership of a woman, for the last fifteen years she was recognized as the most influential person among the Omahas. Always indifferent to praise, she said before her death in answer to words of commendation, "I cannot see how any credit is due me. I am only thankful that I have been called and permitted to serve. I feel blessed for that privilege beyond all measure."—Adapted from Home Mission Monthly.

ARGENTINA

We are now in midwinter in Argentina. The winters have been gradually getting colder than they were years ago, probably due to the cold Pacific polar current being thrown closer to the coast by the gradual elevation of the floor of the central Pacific.

As buildings are not heated, the people do not like to go out much in the winter unless it be to dances, where they keep warm with exercise.

Our tent work met with great success everywhere during the summer. but by the middle of April, which corresponds to September at home, the nights were too cool for the people to sit with the tent open, and with it closed they do not come well. We therefore put it away for the winter. Brother Pisani went to seminary to study; Brother Sicardi located in Rio Cuarto as helper to Romanenghi, and Federico Sotola, Jr., came with me to Almafuerte where we have built a nice church and parsonage combined in a very fine location, and are still busy with details of the work. Just now we are digging a well and expect to reach good water within a week.

The priest, who never came to this town before, will now be paid for it, now comes weekly and goes from house to house to threaten all who have come to our meetings. But he is well known as a notorious libertine and gambler and will not be able to do a great deal. The first thing he did on arrival was to visit the school to ask the director, one of his standbys, to punish the children for insulting him. She has threatened to expel the children who come here, but if she actually does so we will see the authorities in Cordoba about it. On the other hand, one of the teachers boards with one of our evangelical families and already sympathizes with our work and will be an influence in our favor. We have a good Sunday school and hope to organize the women next month, if the workers' conference is held here.

Pray for this new work that we may walk wisely in the midst of our enemies and be able to win many souls for Christ while yet we may.

C. F. YODER.

We are very happy to report that within 18 months the membership of our church has grown from the number 75 to the number 180. During the revival last winter we had the joy and the happy privilege of leading in the neighborhood of 100 souls to Jesus Christ. This alone brings joy to the heart of any pastor and people, to see souls saved but in this number we are praising our Father God that we have a group studying their Bible, doing personal work, and becoming soul winners.

Our Sunday school likewise has grown in a wonderful way from an enrollment of approximately 80 members to a present enrollment of 180 or better. Eighteen months ago we had an average of around 60 to 70 present each Lord's day while today we have an average way over 150 with a record of 192. Our goal for this year is 200 members.

Our Christian Endeavor is also doing splendid work, it has more than doubled in members in the same period. We have recently organized a Junior society and they too are growing nicely. Our Christian Endeavorers are just about to launch a campaign of evangelism including street corner work, hospital work and shop work. This will not only be a help to the society but an advertisement for our church stamped with the approval of God.

The Men's Bible Class, The Berean Bible Class, and other classes in the Bible school are worthy of comment, each doubling in members but space will prevent us saying more.

Since our revival closed last winter, the attendance at our evening service has not fallen off, the church usually being filled, even during this hot weather. We believe that God will make good his promise to bless his word and the preaching of his word, therefore we do not close our doors like many other churches in our city during the hot weather, and we are experiencing the blessing of God in the salvation of precious souls, and the edifying of the saints every week.

Our present need—prayer and much prayer. We covet your prayer for a continued revival in our midst.

Yours in the blessed hope,

WM. H. CLOUGH.

SMITHVILLE-STERLING ECHOES

And there are plenty of echoes for there has been something constantly doing during recent months since our last report. Mother's Day was happily observed and then came Children's Day with two splendid programs and two large audiences.

Eight delegates were present at the Bryan conference and the timely echoes heard on our "June Church Night" were interesting indeed. All were pleased with the conference at Bryan. The program was very good and the entertainment even better.

One hundred and six were present for our "June Church Night" and all enjoyed the program which included a fine playlet entitled "The Anybody Family on Sunday Morning." The experiences in a family of seven in getting ready for Sunday school on Sunday morning are more or less similar, doubtless, in many families everywhere. Anyhow they decided that no more would they be late in arriving for Sunday school. Not a bad resolution, what say you?

A Community Day was held recently at Sterling when five churches in and near Sterling joined forces for Sunday school and church, the services being held in the

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

WHITTIER, CALIFORNIA

We rejoice to report that we are enjoying the blessing of the Lord on our church in Whittier. Every department of the work of the church is increasing in interest and attendance. The Bible school attendance is showing an increase of about fifteen percent over last year and the same can be said of the church services.

Additions

Many souls have been saved in the last few months. Several have come to us from other churches so that we have received more than fifty into our membership in the last year. We have had a baptismal service each Sunday for five weeks. We praise the Lord for his care and guidance and expect his blessing to continue.

Community Bible Class

After the close of the John Brown Union meetings in Whittier, which were a great blessing to our church and to the city as well, I was asked to teach a Community Bible Class in the study of the book of Revelation. The class was started in a home with 40 present. Then another auditorium was used. It was outgrown and now the class is meeting in one of the churches. Last night it is estimated that one hundred and seventy-five were present. The interest is wonderful.

Norwalk

The Lord also opened the way for a Bible class to be conducted in Norwalk seven miles away. This has been running for about two months. Of late we have received four families into our membership from Norwalk.

"Speakeasy Class"

Six of our young men and two from other churches have organized a group to meet at the church once a week. These young men are of High School and College age. At each meeting, one prepares a message on some Biblical theme and presents it to the others. Questions are asked, constructive criticism is offered and suggestions given. The young men testify that this is most profitable to them. The following are some of the subjects used. "The Reliability and Authenticity of the Holy Scriptures," "the Deity of Christ," "Justification by Faith," "Biblical Baptism," "Regeneration," "Sanctification," "The Atonement," and others. The purpose of this group is to gain a knowledge of the Bible and a knowledge of how to present it to others from personal study and experience. After all, the way to do something is to do it.

Special Meeting

Some of our young men are planning to hold a Daily Vacation Bible School and nightly meetings about 60 miles from Whittier, near the desert. In answer to prayer a way has been opened in a little Sunday school conducted there under the American Sunday School Union. This will be a great opportunity for the young men to deliver the Gospel of his Grace. Several of our young people are volunteers for life service. Some have graduated from the Bible Institute of Los Angeles. Others will probably attend there when school opens. It is our hope that we will have one young man in Ashland Seminary this fall.

Prayer

In these difficult times, it seems that the Lord is trying to teach the saints that our advance is only on our knees. Every blessing we receive here comes in answer to definite prayer. We have a special Tuesday morning prayer meeting which is one of the most important services of the week. If you do not have a special prayer meeting some time during the week, the writer wishes to commend such a meeting and offer a testimony to its inestimable value.

CHAS. W. MAYES.

UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Several months have rolled around since you last heard from us, and we feel at this time a word from the Uniontown church is in order. There is much to report, but to save space we will be as brief as possible.

Every auxiliary in the church is functioning nicely and enthusiastically going forth to victory for our Lord Jesus Christ.

High School auditorium and the picnic dinner in the gymnasium. There the tables were heavily laden but about two hundred hungry folks soon lessened the weight and increased their weight.

The Mothers and Daughters had their annual happy get-together recently with a covered dish banquet and the guest speaker was Mrs. Clara Miller of Ashland. Her splendid address was highly appreciated.

Sunday, July 3, was a happy day for our whole membership, when joint Sunday school and church services were held outdoors at Rices' dam near Lodi, a beautiful spot quiet and clean, with nothing to mar the spirit of worship. There too, the picnic dinner tables groaned beneath the abundance of good things to eat. About one hundred fifty were present. Among the guests were Brother and Sister Johansen of Cleveland. Also the "Newlyweds" came home in time for dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Martin, the latter being formerly Miss Lillian Amstutz, returned from their happy honeymoon trip to Niagara Falls. Mrs. Martin was one of our most faithful workers in the Sterling church, and the bridegroom is well known as a loyal member and leader in the Fair Haven church.

Another of our most faithful daughters in the church started on her honeymoon trip on the morning of the above date. At 8:30 A. M. we spoke the words that joined in marriage Miss Thelma Kropf and Arthur Bodager, two more splendid Christian young people. Mrs. Bodager is employed in the Wayne National Bank in Wooster. They will visit Atlantic City and other eastern points. May the Lord bless abundantly both of these couples and make them a great blessing.

Another event enjoyed by all was our special Brethren Baccalaureate service in honor of the seven High School graduates and the eleven eighth grade graduates, all members of our Sunday schools and our church. The service was held at Sterling on Sunday evening, June 5. Our slogan was: On to Sterling tonight at eight. For our Brethren Baccalaureate, To honor our youth who graduate, Whom we all wish to congratulate.

Our Sunday school is holding the increased attendance gained through the red and blue contest conducted before Easter. The gain in the average attendance at Smithville is about one-third. All are highly pleased with the results.

Plans are on foot to decorate the interior of the church at Smithville and also to drill a well.

We are more than pleased with the fine spirit and the splendid cooperation given by this people. May the Lord continue to lead and to bless.

When seeing America do not miss seeing Wayne County, Ohio, and especially Green Township of that county. Hundred acre fields of potatoes, combination harvesters such as you see in the middle west (at least one), orchards and gardens and homes among the best, a people than whom you find no better, these are a few of the attractive features of this garden spot of America. "Come and see."

G. C. CARPENTER.

If there was the same propensity in mankind for investigating the motives, as there is for censuring the conduct of public characters, it would be found that the censure so freely bestowed is oftentimes unmerited and uncharitable.—Washington.

S. S. INSTITUTE OF THE BRETHREN CHURCHES OF WESTERN PENN. SYLVANIA HELD AT BERLIN, PA. MAY 22, 1932

This institute was the second of its kind, the Brethren being so enthusiastic about the first one held at Johnstown, November 19, 1931, that they requested a similar one semi-annually. The program was carried out substantially as it was published in the Evangelist just prior to the above date. Fine cooperation was given on the part of the speakers in giving their best effort in introducing the subjects to which they were assigned in order that the delegates might more intelligently discuss them. Those attending showed fine active interest in the things under consideration and gave their closest attention and contributed their finest thoughts to the discussions.

Favorable testimonies to the helpfulness of this institute were voiced by all those with whom the members of the Pennsyl-

IN PRAISE OF COMMON THINGS

By Lizette Woodworth Reese

*For stock and stone;
For grass and pool; for quince tree blown
A virginal white in spring;
And for the wall beside,
Gray, gentle, wide;
For roof, loaf, everything,
I praise Thee, Lord.*

*This is the best:
My little road from east to west,
The breadth of a man's hand.
Not from the sky too far,
Nor any star,
Runs through the unvalled land;
From common things that be,
It is but a step to Thee.
—Selected.*

vania district Sunday School board had the privilege of speaking. It was again urged and agreed to continue these institutes for the help and inspiration which they give to our Sunday school work. Plans are being made at the suggestion of those present, to have another Sunday school institute during the first part of September. The probable location will be Mt. Pleasant. This institute will serve as a Rally Day "boost er", and if possible some subjects relating to the work of the primary and children's departments will be discussed. Any other suggestions will be very much appreciated.

The Sunday School Board of the Brethren Churches of Pennsylvania.

N. V. LEATHERMAN, President,
A. D. GNAGEY, Vice-President,
L. E. LINDOWER, Secretary-Treasurer.

THE 1932 EDUCATIONAL OFFERING

There could have been no Ashland College at all, if it had not been for the devotion to high educational ideals in the hearts of the large group of Brethren, most of whom have long since gone to be with the Savior, to Whom they had surrendered their lives. And there could be no Ashland College now, were it not for the worthy successors of that group. Brethren have stood loyally by their college, both in its endowment, and in the matter of annual offerings, opportunity for the bringing of which is furnished by the action of the General Conference, setting aside the second Sunday of June as the day upon which special prayers and gifts are to be offered in its behalf. And in spite of the unparalleled depression which is afflicting our land and all the rest of the world, and in spite of the fact that many of the congregations of the brotherhood are having more or less serious trouble to finance themselves, our people are still remembering the college, and placing their gifts upon the altar in its behalf. A financial stringency may be reflected in the amount of the gifts, but so also is the spirit of the devotion, for the college and the high things for which it stands. Let the report of gifts as it appears below, be an acknowledgment to donors, of the receipt of their gifts, as well as an expression of our gratitude. We appreciate the gifts all the more because we know that they are accompanied by the prayers of the givers. May God bless you all, is our devout wish. Gifts are as follows:

Mary Snyder	$ 5.00
La Verne, Calif.	14.00
Martida Antrim	10.00
Mrs. E. G. Good	2.00
Berlin, Pa.	18.55
Ardmore, Ind.	5.50
Gretna, Ohio	5.53
Ashland, Ohio	53.25
Milledgeville, Ill.	10.00
Fairhaven, Ohio	15.82
Conemaugh, Pa.	21.85
Wooster, Ohio, W. M. S.	5.00
Uniontown, Pa.	5.00
Kittanning, Pa.	2.30
Homerville, Ohio	4.58
Dayton, Ohio	12.05
Muncie, Ind.	15.00
Louisville, Ohio	3.45
Williamstown, Ohio	5.00
Waynesboro, Pa.	15.00
Hagerstown, Md.	6.65
Los Angeles, Calif. (1)	3.75
Terra Alta, W. Va.	10.00
Sergeantsville, N. J.	6.50
Carleton, Neb.	2.30

Total to date, July 10, 1932 ..... $258.08

Send all gifts to Martin Shively, Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio.

Honey, says the United States Department of Agriculture, is one of the best of the foods high in energy-producing value. Being composed almost entirely of simple sugars it can be assimilated easily. It is therefore of great importance to people whose normal digestive activities have been impaired by disease of old age, or to babies and young children, since it puts practically no burden on the digestive tract.

A BANKER IN TEARS

A leading bank in a certain community notified a customer that his note was past due, and asked him to pay it up. This is the snappy reply the bank received.

"I wish to inform you that the present condition of my bank account makes it impossible for me to send you a check in response to your request. My present financial condition is due to the effect of federal laws, by-laws, brothers-in-laws and outlaws that have been forced upon an unsuspecting public.

"Through these vicious laws I have been held up, held down, walked on, sat on, flattened and squeezed, until I do not know where I am, what I am, or why I am here. Their laws compel me to pay a merchant's tax, capital stock tax, water tax, excess tax, income tax, real estate tax, automobile tax, gasoline tax, light tax, street tax, dog tax, school tax, system and carpet tax.

"In addition to taxes I am required to contribute to every society and organization that the inventive mind of man can organize; to the society of St. John, the Woman's Relief, Navy League, Children's Home, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Boy Scouts, Police-men's Benefit, Dorcas Society, Jewish Relief, Near East Relief, the Gold Diggers' Home, also every hospital in town, the Red Cross the Black Cross, the Double Cross, and the Purple Cross.

"The government has so governed my business that I don't know who owns it. I am suspected, expected, inspected, disrespected, examined and compelled, until all I know is that I am supposed to provide an inexhaustible supply of money for every need, desire, or hope of the human race, and because I refuse to donate to all and go out and beg, borrow or steal the money to give away, I am cursed, discussed, boycotted, talked about, lied about, held up, held down, and robbed until I am nearly ruined."

The bank officials burst into tears at the receipt of the letter and immediately granted the customer another year's time in which to look up some more taxes, laws, crosses, societies, etc.

(Ed.) This all sounds true except the last paragraph; but possibly that is true also, as the failure to get his money on demand, is the one only thing that ever brings tears to the eyes of a banker.—The Christian Fundamentalist.

THE PERFECT PREACHER

He is never too long, either in his sermons or prayers. He never forgets anything he ought to remember, and he never remembers anything he ought to forget. He knows just where to speak and when to be silent. His laughter is always well-timed, and his tears are always shed at the precise moment of psychological correctness. His sermons are always well prepared, well delivered, and appropriate. He is educated enough to be a college president, and unassuming enough for an humble beginner. He never has any financial embarrassments as he always manages to live comfortably on the smallest salary. He never quarrels and yet he always is outspoken and courageous. He is at once an ideal student. He is a real leader of Israel's hosts and yet even his enemies speak well of him. His wife is absolutely without fault, and his children are all just like her. His theology is old-fashioned enough to please the most conservative, and new-fangled enough to satisfy the most radical. There is never any difficulty in stationing him, as any appointment is glad to get him, and he is always willing to sacrifice himself for the good of his brethren.

Unfortunately for us, we have never met this brother. We have heard of him: we have listened wonderingly to the tales of his perfection; and we have hoped to meet him; but, always he has happened to move away or die just before we could meet him. But we are still looking for him, and when we find him we shall have no hesitation in letting our people know just where he lives.

But, meanwhile, we have some thousands of good men in our ministry who are carrying on the work. They are not perfect, and

DEGRADING DARKNESS AND, EFFECTUAL LIGHT

By H. A. Gossard

Make me as one unborn!

This foolish wish,—reverse of every law,
I make in fear, and blushing—at it scorn;
Then yield to every wind—as chaff and straw.

Make me as yet Unborn!

Though I, defiant, bend my will to law,
I,—like a night-hawk dreading coming morn,
Choose darkness, while at putrid prey I gnaw.

I beg, make me Unborn!

I loathe to see the Light; I choose to hide
From it, lest seeing, I should be forlorn
In knowing that its blessings are denied.

I as unborn would be—

If naught but darkness shroud this breathing form;—

Or, seeing Light, in fear from it I'd flee—
Unloved, untaught, unsaved,—to meet a Storm.

Unborn?—Say not UNBORN!

Soul, rise, from hell's abyss of loathsome night,

To leap and greet with joy the breaking morn;

And bathe your wings for an eternal flight.
I would not be Unborn,

But reborn, since one ray of light has shone

Into my Soul;—its power to adorn

Has chased the King of Darkness from his throne.

Lanark, Illinois.

they know it, and we know it. And yet it is surprising how great a work these men are doing. They have lots of faults, but more virtues; and they are honestly trying to build up the kingdom of God. And it may be that of them we shall say by and by with great depth of sincerity, "of such is the kingdom of heaven." If your congregation is looking for a perfect preacher, we don't want to discourage them: keep on looking; but take our advice and don't wait till you find him, but pick on some brother nearby who has a score of faults, but who, after all, is loyal to his Master and who will be loyal to you.—Christian Guardian.

MEN THAT DO AND MEN THAT DO NOT USE TOBACCO

By Rev. Wilbur O. Fix

Some men have tried to un-Christianize those who use tobacco. I desire only to bring out a few facts relative to its curse upon humanity and to tell why those that use tobacco fall beside the man that is free from this habit.

According to medical science, tobacco contains from three to nine per cent of nicotine. And nicotine is a poison. It is declared to be the most deadly poison next to prussic acid known to medical science.

Dr. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, says that when he took the nicotine from a cigarette and made it into a solution and injected half of this solution under the skin of a frog, in a few minutes the frog was dead. He took the other half of the solution and injected it into the body of another frog and had the same results as in the former experiment. He says that any boy who smokes twenty cigarettes a day takes enough poison into his system to kill forty frogs.

While I was attending business college a few years ago a young man came through the town with a show crowd. They stopped just outside the town, set up their show, and charged ten cents to see this young man. He was a cigarette fiend. He could not talk above a whisper, and the outer skin of his body was as tight on his limbs as if it had been stretched just to fit. His cheeks were sunken. He was a nervous wreck. He was given a cigarette every five minutes and would almost go into convulsions when without one. He slept only while under the influence of medicine and died a horrible death three weeks after he was on exhibition at the place mentioned. A noted professor said a cigarette fiend is like a "wormy apple," he falls before his time.

A test made in the schools of New York City revealed the fact that nineteen out of twenty boys who smoked cigarettes were slow thinkers, low in their rank of studies, had poor memory, bad manners, poor physical condition, impaired hearing, and were poor workers or not able to work continuously. Keeping these facts in mind we do not wonder at a former president of Yale University saying that there had not been a cigarette user graduated with honors in that institution for the past fifty years.

A noted educator said three years ago that he had never known a student who constantly used cigarettes who could be trusted. It kills will power. The hot nicotine is exhaled through the nostrils and is pulled into the brain cavities and does its deadly work.

Doctor A. S. London tells of examining a portion of the brain of a cigarette fiend, beside that of a brain from a man that was not a tobacco user. The analysis showed that practically every cell of the cigarette fiend was dead. He was burnt up. The brain examined from the man that did not use cigarettes did not have one single dead cell in it although it was taken from a much older man.

"I am not a mathematician," said the cigarette, "but I can add to a boy's nervous trouble, I can subtract from his mental powers, I can multiply his aches and pains. I can divide his attention from his studies. I can take interest from his work and I can discount his chances for success."

Sixty per cent of the boys in America above the age of fourteen use tobacco. Forty per cent are tobacco fiends. There is probably a connection here between this and the fact that only two boys out of every hundred who start to school ever finish the academy course.

A noted educator said, "No use to worry over the future of a boy who becomes a cigarette fiend, he has no future." He further said, "We now have an instrument that records the time it takes one to think. In a normal person it takes one-sixteenth of a second from the time the nerve impulse starts until it reaches the brain. It takes three times as long for a cigarette fiend, everything else being equal."

Every form of insanity known to medical science has been cured, except, insanity caused by the use of tobacco.

The tobacco bill of our country would pay for a college education for every man, woman, and child in our land. It costs us annually three times as much as did the Panama Canal and in two and one-half years it would pay the bonded indebtedness of our country.

Facing these facts, allow one question: Can you use tobacco and do it for the betterment of humanity and the advancement of yourself?—The Christian Conservator.

PHILIP THE LAYMAN

By Charles R. Erdman, in Church League Bulletin

"Philip the evangelist" was not an apostle. He was not ordained to preach. Yet he testified publicly for Christ with such power that multitudes were converted and a whole city was filled with joy. Thus some of the most noted evangelists have been laymen and many who have not been prepared for the ministry may today find rich opportunities to bear public witness for Christ.

The most instructive incident in the life of Philip was, however, his achievement in converting the Ethiopian eunuch. This episode is a classic example of success in a field of service which is open to every layman—namely, that of personal witness for Christ to individuals.

The incident suggests among others the following lessons: (1) Opportunities for such work are found in most unexpected places. Philip was in a desert but there he met the African prince whom he led into the way of life. (2) Opportunities are fleeting. Philip "ran" and joined himself to the chariot. (3) One must win confidence and interest at the start, so the first words of Philip were sympathetic and arresting and made possible further conference. (4) The way is usually prepared for the messenger. If it is the work of the Lord he will go before his servant. Philip found the eunuch reading the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. No better opportunity for his message could possibly have been given. (5) One must center the conversation upon Christ. Philip "began at the same Scripture and preached unto him Jesus." (6) The aim must be to lead one to an open confession of Christ as Lord and Master. The Ethiopian was brought to the point where he himself said, "What doth hinder me to be baptized?" (7) Such testimony and the consequent decision issued in gladness, "He went on his way rejoicing."

The last scene in the life of Philip indicates that Evangelism finds its first and most important sphere in the Christian home. When Philip is seen entertaining missionaries and when his four daughters are mentioned as witnesses for Christ, then for the first time he is given the title which is assigned to no other character in the Scripture—namely, "the evangelist."

THE AUTOIST'S PRAYER

Lord, you'll please excuse me from worship or service today—your day. I know—but it's the only one I have for rest or play. And so I'd like to spin at 30, 40, 50 miles an hour through a couple hundred miles of your fair footstool. So please don't let it rain. And I trust you'll not count the same a sin. The worship and the praise and song, I'll leave to those whom you have not blessed with worldly goods, to the extent that they can even afford—a flivver. I trust you will accept my loyalty to thee upon my word. You know I'd like to give to charity, or church at home and church abroad, but at the present price of gas and oil, Great Guns, it takes the product of my toil to keep the bus a-rolling, so that out upon the road I need not take from ungodly scorchers' gibes and dust.

I send the kids to Sunday school to learn the way to heaven, while I grease her up so that she may be driven, slip no pins, or break an "ax" and send us prematurely to that same heaven.

You know how it is I can't appear at church, or even have time to read the Word. After six days' rush in office or in store the seventh I need to rush a little more. To do it at a pace, that makes me feel I'm a live one, and hold up my face, I have to pump the tires and all the cups fill with grease.

From my duty to my car, I've taken time for this, my prayer, to show that my early training is not forgotten, that on the Sabbath to God we should have a thought.

Keep us from turning turtle in some ditch, or by some drunken joy rider (I'll vote dry next time) being smashed, and some day when I get rich enough to own two cars, I'll let my chauffeur have one to take plenty of the poor to church.

And will you overlook some minor sins of mine, and pardon my hogging all my your time, which you in your good providence have given and will some day—not now, I'm awful busy—take me to your heaven. Up there I trust you'll furnish me a proper car, that needs no oil or gas or tinkering, to ride the golden streets. Till then, please bear in mind, I'm rushed to death with living.

THE AUTOIST.

P. S.—My excuses may not seem so strong but I spend thy day this way, to please my children and wife, who lead such a dull life when I'm away, so please charge them their share, if it is wrong—From the Calendar of the First Brethren Church of South Gate, California.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE BOY WHO WILL NOT TAKE A DARE

I read recently in a paper of a boy who came to his death by being run over by an express train. The paper said that some of the boy's companions with whom he was walking home from school had "dared" him to stand on the track until the train had reached a point within a few feet of him. "He would not take a dare," and he will never have the opportunity of taking another in this world. He tripped and fell when he turned to leave the track. Not long ago I read of a boy who fell from the top of a ten-story building. He had dared to try to walk along the very edge of the flat roof. A sudden gust of wind caused him to lose his balance. No doubt a long list could be made of people who have lost their lives because "they would not take a dare." They belong to the class of people we call foolhardy. Men are often found in this class. The spirit of the braggart urges them on to attempt things that wise and modest men would not think of undertaking. It is the part of wisdom to be unwilling to take a dare at times.

When the ice in a wide river was breaking up and beginning to move last spring a number of boys stood on the banks in a Pennsylvania town. One of the boys dared another boy to attempt to cross the river on the ice. Instead of taking the dare the boy calmly asked, "Do I look like a fool?"

"I didn't say that you did," replied the other boy.

"Well, you implied that you thought I was one when you seemed to think that I would not take your dare to cross that river. Cross it yourself if you want to. I respectfully decline to do so, dare or no dare."

That boy was wise in his day and generation.

One day last summer I was one of a party of six in an automobile driven by a boy of sixteen years. We were approaching what is called a "blind crossing" on a country road. It was a railway crossing with a deep cut on either side, so that one could not see the train until it was within ten or fifteen feet of the crossing. We could see the smoke of a train perhaps two hundred yards from the crossing, and there seemed plenty of time for us to run across the track; but the boy driving the car brought it to a standstill. Another boy in the car said: "I dare you to run across the track."

"I'm not going to cross the track until that train has gone by. Safety first," was the reply.

Then the other boy said: "Pooh! Who's afraid? Let me have the wheel. I dare to cross the track ahead of that train."

"But you don't do it with my father's car," replied the other boy.

As usual, there was the spirit of the braggart back of this boy's dare and his willingness to run the car across the track in front of the approaching train. You will discover that the boy who boastfully proclaims that he is not afraid to take a dare is abundantly supplied with self-conceit and that often there is a vacuum where there should be brains in his young head.

Refusing to take a dare often involves other than danger of physical injury.

There are men behind prison bars who are there today because they did not dare to refuse the first dare to sin that Satan set in their way. Years ago a boy I know was dared by some other boys to go on a "lark" with them. He was well aware of the fact that the proposed "lark" involved some wrong doing, and in his heart he did not want to go. But he had not the moral force to take a dare, and he found himself in the police court the next morning. Of course it requires moral force to refuse to take a dare. Great is the power of ridicule. Some boys fear it more than they fear wrongdoing. It is easy to lead a boy of that kind into taking a dare.

What do you suppose General Pershing or any other general of the late war would have said had he been dared to make an advance on the enemy entirely regardless of the risk involved? No one ever heard of a war general who took a single step without weighing well every foot of it. The boy who will not take a dare is often infinitely braver at heart and far wiser than the boy who dares him to do this or that. "Who's afraid?" is often the challenge of the fool. Taking a dare is often one way of taking a leap in the dark, and no wise boy or man is ever willing to do that.

You will discover that the boy who is always ready to take a dare belongs to the type of boys who are always eager to show off, and no boy is held in less respect than a boy of this kind. Vanity is a dominant thing in his make-up, and he lacks the strong traits of character that prompt wiser and more modest boys to refuse to take a dare.—Exchange.

Dr. J. Allen Miller, (Is)
Grant St.,
Ashland, O.

VOL. LIV
Number 29

July 23
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

"THE GLEANERS"

Courtesy International Journal of Religious Education

Insane or Religious?

Dean Frederick D. Kershner, of the School of Religion of Butler University, conducts a department in The Christian-Evangelist similar to that of Prof. Alva J. McClain's in this paper. He writes that he recently received a little four-page folder entitled My Testimony, published by the Harvest Field of Keokuk, Iowa. In it he found the following statement:

There was a little oil stove burning in my kitchen, also a coal fire. I walked over to the little stove and held my hand over it. Many times had I done this before, but this time, quicker than it takes me to tell it, the floor around the stove seemed to be grass and the light from the stove like a bonfire. The light was shining through my fingers and the following words shot through my heart: "Peter stood by the fire and denied Jesus." I felt that if I surrendered all those things, the world would know that I was one of them that follow Jesus wherever he goeth. If I did not do it, I would, like Peter, deny my Lord. The whole thing was clear to me as in the twinkling of an eye. There I stood debating: "What shall I do?" I counted the cost as follows:

"If I do it I will lose all my vocal pupils, for who would have a crazy woman teach them; my children's respect, my husband's love, my singing engagements; for the people would not engage such a simple looking person as that would make of me to sing for them. Socially I would be laughed at, for I myself would think a person crazy if he did that." Then after a moment, I said, "I'll do it! I am going to do it!" When I said that, I felt empty. It was the most wonderful feeling. I knelt down and said to God: "Here is all I have and I am at thy feet to use as thou seest fit now and forever." Hardly was this said when something like fire came from above into my soul. I felt I was branded and filled, and that God had come to his Temple. Later I found I had received the baptism of the Holy Ghost and was sealed.

The days following revealed that I had been instantaneously delivered from sin, fear, hate, envy and all else. There was no self-control or will power necessary. When I read my Bible, verses would stand out in raised letters, and all THE TRUTH was revealed to me supernaturally. Religions were explained and the doctrine was made clear. My friends called me crazy, sick, old fogey and many other things. I was despised and rejected by all, none believing that I had found THE TRUTH. My hair is white and I am outside the camp, bearing his reproach. One more thing I want the world to know. As time went on I found that I was under the BLOOD. The BLOOD of JESUS was made plain and I could see what was the meaning of the blood-washed throng, washed in the Blood of the Lamb. God sent me out to tell all people to surrender. They are not safe unless under the BLOOD of JESUS, when HE comes in the air. He is coming for the hated and rejected, blood-washed ones. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Twentieth century religions are for those who are serving Mammon and calling it God. Many shall be deceived.

Commenting upon this confession, the editors of the pamphlet say:

Dear Reader.—May this burning and true testimony help you to your Pentecost is our prayer.

Then Dean Kershner makes the following comment:

Cases like the above, if placed in the hands of distinguished alienists like Doctor Prince, or Doctor Dercum, would in all probability be classified as illustrations of some form of dementia. Psychologists like Professor Jastrow, or other distinctly scientific advisers, would doubtless reach the same conclusion. Data of this kind always raise the question as to the relationship of rationality to religion. How much of what is usually included under the latter term is really sane? When Paul wrote to Timothy to the effect that the Christian faith manifests pre-eminently the characteristics of a "sound" or a "disciplined" mind, was he right or what did he mean? If religion is not essentially rational what will ultimately become of it? These are some of the questions which always arise when we read testimony of the kind cited above.

The Apostle Paul says of them: "I bear record that they have a zeal for God but not according to knowledge."

A CALL FOR PRAYER FOR REVIVAL

Great evils have come upon us because we have forgotten God.

The world is sick, and as in a like sickness before, the Word of God gives us the explanation, "Are not these evils come upon us because our God is not among us?" (Deut. 31:17).

God tells us that at the end of this age there will be "distress of nations, with perplexity," and speaks of "men's hearts failing them for fear." Such times are upon us, but it may please God to send revival, since he says, "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and heal their land" (2 Chron. 7:14).

There is a bankruptcy of human leadership in all fields. The situation in the world is desperate and beyond the control of men. It may grow worse rapidly unless there is supernatural intervention.

The supreme need of the hour is a great spiritual awakening like the revival under the Wesleys in the eighteenth century which saved England from the horrors of the French Revolution. Such movements have always been prepared by a widespread force of prayer, as in the thousands of prayer groups that were formed in Wesley's time.

We therefore earnestly appeal to Christians everywhere to forsake their sins and to return to the simplicity of Bible faith. We appeal to Christians individually to pray more earnestly for revival within the church, and to form prayer groups for united intercession.

We suggest the following to meet the special needs of the various classes of each community:

1. Groups of women, meeting in one another's homes, daily or weekly, at some convenient hour during the day.

2. Cottage prayer meetings in homes in the evening to be held each week.

3. Weekly prayer meetings for young people.

4. Daily or weekly prayer meetings for business men at the noon hour in the center of the city.

5. Prayer groups of ministers and church officers on Saturday night; and of ministers with each other.

We ask Christians to pray and work for the formation of thousands of such small groups.

Please send the name and address of one member of your prayer group to the Evangelist or radio preacher of your choice, or to the Great Commission Prayer League, 808 North LaSalle Street, Chicago.

SOME CATHOLICS ARE DRY

I venture to protest against wet propaganda, insinuating that Catholics are anti-prohibition. Catholics are freemen and they do not have to say, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," because stomach worshippers choose to so cry. I am not a radical prohibitionist, but a constitutional one.

The wets have no arguments. Yells and stampede are their stock in trade. Of a very limited experience, the wets love to quote the Wickersham report, and forget what all of us learned long ago, "Positive lies, comparative lies, and superlative statistics."

We are all sick of figures. A soldier so said as he turned from a screen exhibit that was persuading him to keep the Ten Commandments. I know some one thousand families, I traveled three thousand miles last summer to study other places of the East and Middle West. I have come to the conclusion that the radio talkers against prohibition are at least week and gullible.

Not one of the thousand families I know has any apparatus for brewing or distilling on the premises. I am sure they would not think of letting their children indulge habitually in stimulants. I am sure that not even ten per cent of Catholic school children have anything like home saloon life.

I believe I have an open mind on this matter, and I am anxious to find this "bete noir" of the frightened wets. I would ask those gentlemen to pause and listen, and see if this deep, manly voice against prohibition be not from the stomach. . . . We should congratulate our friends that they have helped us to beat and break the terrible whiskey ring, and demolish the saloon, this alone were enough to live in the eternal gratitude of free and decent Americans.—Rev. T. J. McDonald. in Catholic Daily Tribune.

IN THIS NUMBER

Have I a Right to Live My Own Life?—Editor, . . . . .	3
Keep the Preachers Preaching—Editor, . . . . .	3
Editorial Review, . . . . .	4
The Spiritual Life of Jesus—W. H. Beachler, . . . . .	5
Studies in the Book of Revelation—R. I. Humberd, . . . . .	6
Keep Your Eyes Upon the Cross—G. B. Kulp, . . . . .	6
We Finish To Begin!—D. H. Poling, . . . . .	7
Significant News and Views, . . . . .	8
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, . . . . .	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, . . . . .	9
Why We Had No Summer Slump—Mrs. I. B. Oldham, . . . . .	10
Capturing and Holding a School's Interest—L. T. Law, . . . . .	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, . . . . .	11
Committee Installation and Consecration Service, . . . . .	11
Jews Become Christians—S. T. Stuart, . . . . .	12
News from the Field, . . . . .	13-15
Our Little Readers, . . . . .	15
Announcements, . . . . .	16
The Tie that Binds, . . . . .	16
In the Shadow, . . . . .	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Have I a Right to Live My Own Life?

That was the Christian Endeavor topic a few weeks ago, but it has such a challenge to it that the whole church ought to be brought to face it. It expresses a natural bent toward selfishness that is found in all of us, and an inclination to defend that selfishness. But that naturally selfish disposition is hereby called in question. Have I a right to live in such selfishness? Have I no obligations to others? Or is altruism merely somebody's fancy and service a piece of foolish sentiment? If I have a right to "live my own life," then selfishness is a virtue and consideration of others a weakness. It is a most important question to contemplate, particularly when world conditions are in such a distressed state of affairs.

This question strikes at the fundamental and most glaring weakness of the church—selfishness. That is the thing that intercepts between the soul and God; it detaches from the divine influence; it insulates from the source of power. It harks back to the natural, the worldly, the fleshly, from which we were renewed and has no rightful place in the life of the Christian. When Paul warned the Galatians against "the flesh" he meant "self" for that is what you have when the "h" from the word "flesh" is dropped and the order of the remaining letters is reversed—it is S-E-L-F. We must be on guard against self, the ego, the "BIG I." It is the prominence of "I" that makes sin what it is.

I have no right to "live my own life," because such a course will mean loss and ruin to myself, a ruin that would be irreparable, and that is too great a price to pay for a little season of freedom in self-direction. We have the Word for it, for we read: "He that would save his life shall lose it, but he that loseth his life for Christ's sake shall find it." Man simply has not the wisdom nor the power to direct his little barque through the rough sea of this life safely and alone. "We have all sinned;" "there is none righteous," and "the wages of sin is death." And if I am warned in advance of the absolute futility of attempting to go it alone, why should I be foolhardy enough to try, or, perchance, so careless as to neglect, or so heady as to reject, the warning? I can gain nothing from it. "For what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" My life is valuable, and I have no right to run needless risks with it. It is so valuable that "God gave his only begotten Son that (I and) whosoever . . . should not perish, but have everlasting life." And that sacrifice stands sufficient and ever available for the man who has been in the Father's house but has wandered away, as well as for the one who has never confessed Christ. For let us be warned by the possibility of a child of God becoming a prodigal, or a son losing his heirship, by a continual "living of his own life."

In the second place, I have no right to "live my own life" because others have a claim upon me for service. I am my brother's keeper and helper. I owe sympathy and helpfulness to those who are in need, and I am under obligation to make my contribution to the world's work and progress. I am here to serve, even as Jesus declared concerning himself. The divine command is, "Bear ye one another's burdens." And the parable of the Good Samaritan reinforces the obligation. Every page of the Blessed Book as well as every relationship of life is an emphasis of the duty of unselfish living. The church is waiting in its progress and the kingdom of God is tarrying for the coming of men and women whose support to the limit can always be counted on, whose thought is always of others and whose one aim in life is "Not to be ministered unto but to minister."

And finally, I have no right to "live my own life," because it does not belong to me; it is an entrustment from God, and I ought to use it in a manner pleasing to him. "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price." Again we read: "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." If we know ourselves to be his own possession, we ought to recognize that fact in life. That was the thing for which Paul pled when he said: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Are we stewards of our very lives? Then let us treat ourselves as belonging to him, and let us seek his will and way in all that we do. But that we find difficult to do. We are wont to display in our attitude toward God all too much of the spirit of the Revolutionary patriots toward the British crown. It is well enough to speak of "certain inalienable rights" when dealing with our relationships to entirely human institutions and authorities, but there is no room for a declaration of rights "to life, liberty and the pursuits of happiness" in matters pertaining to the kingdom of God. We have no "rights" when we face the claims of the Lord of Glory. We forego them, deny them, set our faces away from them when we accept his Lordship. Life still is precious to us, but we find that it is not to be had by selfishly seeking it. We still cherish liberty, but we have learned that liberty in the highest sense is to be enjoyed when we give ourselves freely and fully as bondservants of Jesus Christ. We still desire happiness, but we have discovered that true happiness comes not from directly seeking it, but from doing the Master's will. "He that loveth pleasure shall not be satisfied." But we are satisfied in Christ, for he came that our joy might be full, and we are daily experiencing it in larger measure, when we live, not our own life, but the life that he freely gives, the life that is hid with Christ in God. May every professing member of the church seek to live that abundant life.

Keep the Preachers Preaching

There never was a time when the Gospel message was more sorely needed than now, or when a church can so ill afford to dispense with preaching as now. Yet churches are being tempted to do that very thing, as a means of economy. And some have actually decided upon such a course. We recently learned of a church deciding to dismiss their pastor and to go through the year without preaching, not because of dissatisfaction with their pastor, but because they thought they could not afford to pay for preaching. From another church word comes that similar action is under contemplation at that place. And some of the leaders in other churches are discussing the advisability of such a course. While we sympathize with the hard pressed condition of the people that induces such action, yet we say emphatically that it is poor policy. It is not the right way out of the difficulty. Such retrenchment will prove far too costly for a time like this. The proclamation of the Gospel should not be silenced when discouragement and doubt and hardship everywhere abound and when the world is reaping the harvest of its folly in an appalling measure. The church must let its light shine; its voice must continue to be heard. It can point to the only solution of the world's ills. The church budget may need to be cut, and in some cases sharply cut, but the pulpit must not be closed.

Moreover the church is dealing unfairly with its pastor whom it dismisses in a time like this in order that it may save itself the necessity of some real sacrifice. The pastor may fairly be asked to share with the church in the needed sacrifices, and we doubt if we have a pastor who is unwilling to do so, but he should not be required to bear the whole, or a disproportionate share, of the burden. Provide for your pastor as best you can, but do not add to the curse of unemployment by dispensing with your church's preaching ministry during the depression.

One of our esteemed contemporaries, The Christian-Evangelist, issues a warning along this line. It had received the following pertinent letter from one of its readers:

Don't you think what we need is a national crusade of some kind to keep our churches open? Many of them are being closed to save money. This is not fair to the preachers or to the Kingdom. The best kind of a pension for ministers just now is a job in their chosen work. Our congregational form of government puts the responsibility upon the local church. Many of them take the easy way of getting along without preaching.

Every church ought to be open in these trying times to inspire the people with hope and stabilize society, as well as to proclaim the Gospel. Can there be a national stirring of conscience upon this matter? We ought to be able to command our entire resources, of ministers employed, and our responsive laymen to organize and lay this matter upon the hearts of the deacons and elders in hundreds of churches not now having regular preaching.

Then the editor makes comment, a portion of which we here quote:

Everything in us goes out in agreement with this suggestion. There is no higher duty before the churches of the brotherhood. In fact the situation is a crisis and a menacing one. . . .

The churches have worked with zeal and given without stint to abate the terrible condition of unemployment throughout the country and this was essential to their Christian integrity. Now they should heed the state of the case in the ranks of their own ministry. We cripple the whole church, and we weaken the spiritual elements in personal life and civilization when we silence our preachers by closing the pulpits to them on account of unemployment.

Your church can afford to dispense with almost any other feature of its worship sooner than the preaching of the Word. Whatever economy program you may find it necessary to launch, be fair with your minister and you will find him ready to meet you more than half way. But by all means keep the preachers preaching.

---

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Warsaw, Indiana, writes his annual invitation on behalf of Warsaw's distinguished offspring, Winona Lake Institutions, urging Brethren people to attend both the Bible Conference and the National Conference of our own church. Conference date is August 22 to 28. Let's go.

We are informed that Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Warsaw, Indiana, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Waterloo, Iowa, to succeed Brother S. M. Whetstone, who is soon to become pastor of the church at Goshen. Brother Riddle will leave for Waterloo after National conference, and will be succeeded at Warsaw by Brother Leslie Lindower of Terra Alta, West Virginia.

Sister Ellen G. Lichty of Pasadena, California, after reading Dr. W. S. Bell's message in The Evangelist of July 9th, regarding the proposed merger of our news-carrying publications, wrote us as follows: "I say yes and amen. We should have all our missionary news in the Evangelist instead of having it scattered. It should be under one cover."

The secretary of the Northwest District Conference gives us a report of the recent meeting held at Harrah, Washington, where Brother Fred V. Kinzie is pastor, and who also was elected moderator of next year's conference. The moderator of the recent meeting was Brother Albert Lantz, pastor of the church at Spokane. The conference was limited to one day and a night, due to the depression, but it appears that that short time was crowded full of many helpful sessions and profitable discussions.

Brother George E. Cone, national statistician, issues another reminder to the churches about making report to their district statisticians. Some of the districts have been heard from 100 per cent, but others have considerable work yet to do. It is not a great task that is asked of the churches, nor is it one that is made hard by the depression. It just requires a little energy to counteract that "putting-off" habit, and it is soon done. Let us cooperate, every one.

Brother Raymond E. Gingrich, pastor of the Fair Haven, Ohio, church, called at the Editor's office and informed him that Dr. Louis S. Bauman is to be with him to lead his church in a two weeks' revival meeting beginning July 31. Brother Bauman will leave Long Beach immediately after the close of the Southern California Conference, driving through and bringing his family with him. Miss Iva and Paul Bauman will be present to assist their father in the music of the campaign. The pastor invites the cooperation of neighboring churches in these meetings.

A successful revival was held at the Corinth Brethren church in Indiana under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. The pastor of this church is Brother Mark B. Spacht, whose faithful cooperation with the evangelist was a considerable factor in the success of the meeting. There were nineteen baptized on the last day of the meetings and three remain to be baptized. These and the one reconsecration makes twenty-three to take their stand for Christ during the meetings.

Brother Robert F. Porte pastor of the First church of South Bend, Indiana, recently spent a few days in Ashland and shared the editor's office while browsing through old Evangelist files of fifty years ago and later in an endeavor to discover the thought and spirit of early Brethrenism. Brother Porte, who had completed his residence work for a Doctor of Theology degree in Princeton, is working on a thesis that inquires into the relation of the Brethren (Dunker) church to the Pietistic movement in Germany. When he left our office he confessed to have become pretty thoroughly saturated with the spirit of early "Progressive" Dunkerism as a result of his research.

Brother Ray Klingensmith, student pastor of the church at Anketown, Ohio, reports splendid progress in the Lord's work at that place. The pastor's Sunday night instruction class in Brethren doctrine is a feature of the work that deserves special mention. Such instruction is one of the most important requisites to the perpetuity of the Brethren faith that lie within the province of the pastor to promote, and we are glad to note some of our young preachers catching the vision so early in their ministry. Nine are reported baptized and seven added to the church. The Sunday school is growing in interest, the attendance recently having reached the 103 mark.

We have this week a report of the Southeastern District Conference recently held at Roanoke, Virginia, where Brother H. W. Koontz, who makes the report, is pastor. It is said to have been an inspiring and greatly enjoyed conference. The well prepared addresses by various members of the district and the lectures by Prof. Alva J. McClain made it a conference of real worth. The newly elected moderator is Brother Frank G. Coleman of Hagerstown, Maryland, and the place for the next meeting is the Bethlehem church near Harrisonburg, Virginia, where Brother John F. Locke is the pastor, and the time is the first Tuesday in June of next year.

From an attractively printed circular recently received we learn that the churches of Gratis, Ohio, are cooperating in union Sunday evening open air services during the month of July under the leadership of Dr. W. H. Beachler. He is not doing all the preaching this year, however, such speakers as Prof. J. Oscar Wenger of Manchester College, a Methodist pastor from a nearby town and the Preble County Sunday School superintendent being called in for addresses. Special music, a strong speaking program and ample facilities for an open air assemblage have cooperated to make such a summer evening series an annual event of growing popularity and large attendance in the Gratis community.

Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs, president of Ashland College, reports that the mid-summer commencement exercises were well attended and that the total number of graduates is sixty-five. This number added to the number of graduates at the spring commencement brings the total for the year to 172, which is more than the total college enrollment for the years when some of us were students at Ashland. Professor Jacobs points out that the new tax law imposes quite a heavy burden on the college and he asks the cooperation of the supporting constituency to the end that the burden may not be any heavier than absolutely necessary. In making payments on obligations to the college, please keep this in mind. In a personal conversation with President Jacobs, he said the outlook for the college year opening in September was bright. Brethren young people contemplating a higher education should consider the opportunities and advantages of Ashland College.

The Spiritual Life of Jesus

By Dr. William H. Beachler

This address and another on "The Social Life of Jesus" to be published next week were prepared by Dr. Beachler for the inspiration and guidance of young people. They will prove helpful to adults as well as young people and we are glad for the opportunity to present them to Evangelist readers.—EDITOR.

Are we always clear as to just what we mean when we speak of the spiritual life of Jesus, or of St. John, or St. Augustine, or anyone, for that matter? Maybe for the most part we are. And yet, it might be helpful to pause for a moment to refresh our minds with the meaning of the spiritual life.

For example, let us note this angle of the subject. One man's life may be spiritual. Another man's life may be more spiritual. Which implies that the degree of spirituality and spiritual attainment may differ and does differ in different Christian individuals. Some people seem by nature more spiritual than others. For such, the struggle is not so great or difficult to attain unto greater and greater spiritual growth and development.

But after all, what does growth in the spiritual life mean? At least it means that there has been progress in our endeavor to gain God-consciousness. It means that we have found delight and satisfaction in God and the things which are good. It means that there has been progress in the matter of bringing the carnal, baser side of our natures under subjection and control of the nobler, the spiritual side of our natures. It means that we, like Enoch of old, love to walk with God, and delight to do his will. It means that we abound in the fruits of the spirit—love, joy, longsuffering, goodness, patience, kindness. It means that when we do wrong, it grieves us. And when others around us do wrong, they grieve us.

Naturally therefore, our friends know it when we are spiritual. It shows in our entire life and conduct. It shows in our attitudes toward right and wrong. It shows in the things we talk about. It shows in our habits and the things in which we are interested. It shows in our unselfishness. It shows in our willingness to help and serve. It shows in our loyalty to the church and every department of the church. Our friends in our homes know when we are spiritual, just as our companions know it. And certainly our pastors know it too. The spiritual life is something that cannot be hid, any more than an apple tree can hide its fruit, or a song bird can hide its beautiful notes.

When we think of Jesus and his spiritual life we think of the perfect man. Jesus is the supreme example of one whose whole life and nature was under complete control of the spiritual. He allowed himself to do nothing which did not enjoy the sanction of his nobler, spiritual nature. In the consciousness of Jesus, God was always present. God was to him the object of his supremest love, and delight and devotion. His meat was to do his Father's will. His entire life was an unbroken walk with God. God was real to him as he has never been to any other person. Consequently he loved the right as none other has ever loved the right. And evil and wrong grieved his sinless, sensitive heart as evil has never grieved another heart. In all that he said; in his perfect control of himself at any and all times; in the matchless grace and beauty of his life, he showed, as has never been revealed before or since, how God wants us to live, and what the life and conduct is like when we are in complete subjection to God.

But we do not stop with the thought of Jesus as the most spiritual man that ever lived. We also turn to his example and his teachings for our fullest light on the subject of spiritual life and growth. The paths that led Jesus to the spiritual life, and enabled him to keep the spiritual fires burning in his soul are the paths we too must follow. Those paths lead us into constant companionship with God, and into our abiding in Christ. They lead us to regular and sincere Bible study. They lead us to the church for Divine worship. They lead us to the garden of self renunciation and surrender. They lead us into a greater and greater desire to know God's will that we may do it. They lead us to unselfish and faithful service. Jesus said, "Abide in me and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing." And herein is the secret of the spiritual life.

Dr. W. H. Beachler

Gratis, Ohio.

"His blood-red banner streams afar;
Who follows in his train?
Who best can drink his cup of woe,
Triumphant over pain,
Who patient bears his cross below,
He follows in his train."

WHAT CHRIST MEANS TO ME AS A BUSINESS MAN

It is far from possible for me to try and express my real feeling as to what Christ means to me as a business man. The more I get into the subject, the deeper the conviction and realization of this blessed relationship and its true meaning and significance. It is in truth the greatest joy and happiness that comes into my life, and I could not get along a day without it. From experience, I can gladly attest that the ideal life is the Christian life. Not one of emotion and sentimentalism, but of real strength and power, and of constant inspiration. The blessed thought that the Saviour is nearer to me than the very breath that I breathe and that he really cares and sympathizes in my weakness and failures, keeps me going, and is a delight beyond expression. He helps me from living a barren, weak, and poverty-stricken life and through his influence it is easier to convey the feeling of love that I cherish for others, but far too often fail to make known. I know that he wants me to have everything in life that makes for growth and happiness, and in days of stress and strain, accentuated by sorrow and bereavement, I have leaned heavily upon him, and have never been disappointed in his matchless and marvelous love. He lifts me from my cares and heavy burdens to contentment and peace and I too frequently gather thorns, thistles and leaves, rather than fruits and flowers. What a blessed thought, "Lo, I am with you always," and what a tragedy that men do not seek him when he may be found. Only Eternity can measure the awful calamity of leaving him out of one's life, and may we all experience more of the great joy and happiness that comes through living close to him, and in having a part in the winning of the lost to the blessed Saviour.—Alfred R. Willingham, in "The Christian Index."

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

Study No. Four

The expression "Lord's Day" has no meaning to those who contend that it means Sunday, for it would make no difference to us whether the vision were given to John on Sunday or Monday, in fact it is doubtful if all that this book contains could have been given to John and written by him in one day.

Those who know their Old Testament will have no difficulty in recognizing a reference here to the Day of the Lord, for Revelation is certainly a book revealing great judgment and contains in detail the exact things that prophecy foretells of the Day of the Lord.

The Day of the Lord

Let the reader study such passages as Joel 3 and Isaiah 13. "Howl ye, for the Day of the Lord is at hand; ... Behold the Day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger ... the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light, etc."

John was living in the early period of church history but was picked up and placed ahead some two thousand years to the time when the church will have run its course and the tribulation will be upon the earth.

Describing the Wrong Thing

It is right here that so many have difficulty. They try to make this book fit into an age different from the Day of the Lord. Some try to make it fit church history or the destruction of Jerusalem and when it does not conform to facts they discard the whole book as unworthy of our study.

If I was trying to describe a horse and my hearers thought that I was describing a house, we would have difficulty. If I would say that it has one white ear and a white foot, it would be hard for them to think of a house with an ear and a foot. It is thus with this book. After chapter four it gives a rehearsal of the Day of the Lord, the time of the great tribulation which is to run its course after the removal of the church. Thus it is easy to see why those who try to make it fit other ages have such difficulty.

The Precious Church

"I saw seven golden candlesticks" (vs. 12). In verse twenty we are informed that the candlesticks represent the churches. Great crowds may gather on the earth in the name of entertainment or excitement but in heaven there is no response, but let a group of Christians gather and Christ is there in the midst; they are the most precious of all things on earth in his sight—pure gold.

The Vision

"And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle." Here we see our Lord in the midst of his church, clothed in robes of honor and dignity. He had been in glory some sixty years and came back to the isle of Patmos to give his last message to his churches. He is in their midst watching for any carbon that may collect and hinder their light and in his messages to them he warns them of their dangers and comforts and gives promises to the overcomer.

The All-seeing Eyes

"His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire." Those eyes are upon us NOW. It is well to practice the presence of God. Our eyes see only the body, but those eyes pierce even to the soul. Our eyes require light from without, while those eyes shine with the penetrating sharpness of an electric flashlight. Nothing is hid from the gaze of those eyes for they pierce even to the secrets of the heart.

There is something overawing in the human eye. Men have died under the glaring eye of a king. Although the eyes of this vision strike terror to the ungodly there is a calm and inspiring warmth for the righteous.

The Seven Stars

"And he had in his right hand seven stars." We read in verse twenty that these "seven stars are the angels of the seven churches." Many think that these messages or angels are really the pastors of the churches. This book is written to "his servants" and is signified by an angel unto John, who is commanded to write it down and a blessing is promised to the reader. Everywhere the implication is to the effect that the messages are for human beings, and are written to men who are the pastors.

Martinsburg, Pennsylvania.

Keep Your Eyes Upon the Cross

By George B. Kulp

Colonel D. B. Birney was the commander of the Twenty-third Pennsylvania Regiment, in the Sixth Corps, Army of the Potomac. He had been in many an action with the enemy, and had seen the old flag as it floated above the smoke of battle like a shot through rainbow; but now, he is in his last battle, and the end is not far off. The loved ones are standing around waiting for his departure and listening to his words. Once more he is at the head of the old Twenty-third; once more he is pressing the battle at the front; once more he cries, "Keep your eyes upon the flag, boys, keep your eyes upon the flag," and then the final victory.

If you and I would have the victory when we come to the end, for the end will come, we must be so possessed of God that we will always have the cross in view; for only by the cross will be ever conquer. You have read of Constantine, who before going to battle with the Pagan army, had a vision, a cross in view, and around it were these words, "By This Sign Conquer." It came to him as a message from the skies, and he so received it and won the victory.

Back yonder is a man, educated, cultured, who has paid the price—left all—counted things the world thought of much worth as but dung, yea counted all things as but dross, that he might win Christ and be found in him. He laughs in his soul as he thinks of the glorious exchange that he has made, not looking at ship-wrecks, stripes, stonings, imprisonments, perils among false brethren, nor at death, but determined to know nothing among men but the cross, Christ and him crucified, "to the Greeks"—the cultured of that day—"foolishness;" "to the Jews"—the church of that day—"a stumbling block;" but unto him, "the power of God and the wisdom of God." With the cross in view this man can do only one thing, press forward; there is no such word as retreat in his vocabulary. Forward! Back yonder he had met Jesus, yes,

There were men who would make oath they had seen him lie on Calvary, and seen his body placed away in Joseph's tomb, but all this is nothing to him. He had met the living Christ, had heard him say, "I am Jesus;" and from that hour he had never lost sight of his Lord. In prisons he had sung his praise, in shipwrecks, he had proclaimed his faith, in close view of the block he wrote, "The time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight. . . I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown." Victors receive the crown, and he is a victor. Cross bearers are crown wearers throughout all eternity. The man who lives with an eye upon the cross will conquer all the graveyards sin has left in its wake. When he who clung on the cross went through the grave on his way to the mediatorial Throne, he left the hilltops on either side of the valley ablaze with the light of immortality; and there is no dark valley to the soul that lays down the cross at the journey's end. No wonder the child of God sings:

"The cross of Christ I'll cherish,
Its crucifixion bear,
All hail reproach and sorrow
If Jesus leads me there!"

The cross has wings that lift up; it has an attraction that outweighs all the powers of this world. The cross speaks of naught but victory. If a cross bearer should stumble he will fall toward the cross; if he should die under the load, the angels of God would have him in the presence of the King before his body was cold. For him to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord. To stay here is to be always moving homeward. Well did the poet sing,

"Here in the body pent,
Absent from him I roam,
Ye nightly pitch my moving tent,
A day's march nearer home!"

O beloved, make much of the cross! It was by the cross God would save the world, and by way of the cross you will be saved and at last reach home. God's love and tenderness was shown by way of the cross. I think the great Apostle was thinking of Calvary when he wrote, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Give the cross plenty of time to act upon your soul; see naught but Jesus only. I love to think of him seated up yonder in Glory, but I never would have had that vision had he not gone to the cross. Some one wrote the other day, yes, quite recently, that we ought to have another symbol of Christianity than the cross; that spoke of "torture." I would much rather take the word of my Lord, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." This spake he of the death which he should die.

"And that high suffering which we dread,
A higher joy discloses;
Men saw the thorns on Jesus' brow,
But angels saw the roses."

—Herald of Light.

We Finish to Begin!

By Daniel A. Poling, Chairman, Allied Forces

And what a finish! Ten months of mighty marches and then the climax of conferences which brought representative citizens and young people to Atlantic City from every section of the United States. Every goal set was reached and passed and every standard raised was carried to its triumph. As a speaking campaign alone, the Allied Forces will be remembered, for their record is without parallel in the history of the American platform. But their claim to worthy immortality among temperance movements rests not upon the six hundred cities visited, the million and a half citizens enrolled. It stands squarely upon the enduring character of the continuing educational program they left with the people. And it is this program that proclaims with convincing detail and unmistakable faith—"We Finish to Begin!"

Allied Forces are today not a "history that is told" but a marching army. With an executive leadership made up of more than one hundred citizens from among the most representative men and women of America, with Allied Youth established as a permanent organization for young people and led by young people; with Allied Women under the direction of two inspired officers and with field plans that promise intensified activities of even greater value than the effort that has just closed, we are justified in believing that our greater contribution to the cause of the Eighteenth Amendment and liberty under law is yet to be made. A great national political campaign is immediately at hand. We are ready for it. We shall select vital states and strategic congressional districts in which to concentrate our efforts. We have at our disposal and on call to these hundreds of local units of Allied Citizens, outstanding speakers of the country. We are proceeding at once with the necessary effort to secure financial support for these immediate responsibilities. The marvelous way in which our friends have financed the crusade of the past ten months justifies our confidence in their spirit and ability to "see this thing through."

"We finish"—and it is indeed a glorious finish. A triumph beyond the dreams of those who were associated in the conferences that gave the movement birth and who were comrades in the at times well-nigh appalling ordeals through which it went forward.

We finish! Finish 260 days of constant travel by day and by night across the land and through the air. Finish the schedule of nearly 600 cities and more than 2,600 conferences and mass meetings. Finish the enrollment of a million and a half citizens of whom more than 500,000 are young people. Finish the organization of more than 1,200 local units and the distribution of millions of pages of free literature. All of this and much more we finish, but we finish only to begin!

Again we declare our challenge to the foes of the Eighteenth Amendment. We expect to win. Win with the facts and in the open. Win as Americans who believe in representative constitutional government; who believe in prohibition not for its own sake but for the sake of America, America on the march! For the sake of human welfare and that highest conservation—conservation of men, women and children. We grant the right of the opposition to state its case and to seek in orderly fashion the expression of its purpose. We grant that there is an honest, deep-seated difference of opinion. But negation is not enough. Those who seek repeal should state their alternative. Without a substitute for prohibition, repeal would invite greater lawlessness and threaten the very existence of representative government. Nature abhors the vacuum and in government anarchy would fill it. Let party platforms define the principle and procedure under which the opposition may record its will. But an opposition without the maturity of a constructive plan can never write a plank for any party that will save that party from justified, united, militant, Dry opposition. Such opposition can make a slogan for defeat but not a charter for success.

The Allied Forces finish to begin. They go forward now intensifying their activities and moving into new positions all along the line. They stand for the Eighteenth Amendment and for liberty under law. Upon this issue they fight!

New York City.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

DEATHS FROM ALCOHOLISM SHOW DECREASE

In the midst of all the wild and irresponsible discussion about prohibition it is significant to find in our local press but "not in the headlines" the report of the government census bureau at Washington which shows that deaths from alcoholism have decreased in the last two years for which the figures are available. In 1917 the death rate from this cause was 5.2 per 100,000 population; in 1920 it was 1.0; in 1927 and in 1928 it was 4.0. In 1929 it dropped to 3.7 and now in 1930 to 3.5. If the tremendous drive of the wets can be stopped it is possible that still more significant social gains from prohibition may be placed before the American people. It may be that we have already "rounded the corner" in this realm if not in the economic.—The Christian Century.

CHICAGO PROTESTANTS ADD 48,000 MEMBERS DURING YEAR

Nearly 48,000 members have been added to the Protestant churches of Chicago during the past church year, according to a report by Walter R. Mee, executive secretary of the Chicago Church Federation. The Lutherans lead, with 13,479; then come Methodist Episcopal, with 5,960; Presbyterian, 5,624; Episcopal, 3,673; Congregational, 2,687; Baptist, 2,219; Evangelical Synod, 1,781; Disciples, 975.—Selected.

E. STANLEY JONES WILL GO TO CHINA

Rev. E. Stanley Jones will leave India next month and will spend several months among the students of China. He writes of the call that has come to him: "In July I go to China. The different bodies of China have sent an urgent appeal to come to China this autumn. There is a race on between communism and Christianity for the soul of China, with communism leading. The students are the key to the situation. This invitation was so pressing that I could not refuse." Of his recent months in India he writes: "The last three months have been a period of intense national crisis. Gandhi returned from the round table conference, negotiations for a settlement broke down, and he was swiftly sent to jail along with thousands of others. With constant jailings and the lathi charges, my work seemed impossible. But it has been the best three months I have ever had."—Christian Century.

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE

In Kansas, a woman physician, Dr. Mary Bennett, has retired from practice at the age of eighty. With her husband, also a physician, she went to Kansas long ago, when conditions were hard. Many recitals of her devotion and sacrifice have been printed recently. One testimony impressed us:

"Another woman told how, when she lived in a sod house, forty years ago, out in Ford County, her husband was terribly injured when the horses ran away and dragged him. Dr. Bennett came fifteen miles, urging her ponies until they were white with lather, but was too late to save the man for this world. 'But she saved him for the next world,' said this woman. 'She brought divine comfort to many a dying person. She was doctor, nurse, cook, preacher and friend to the sick in this country in an early day.'"

Dr. Bennett's own words are worth repeating:

"The last thing any physician should think of is his fee. I do not mean that he should not have his fee if his patients are able to pay him. It is the duty of every one to pay his doctor and to pay him as promptly as possible. But the doctor's first concern should be to help and heal the sick without thought of a fee. I do believe the majority of doctors realize that theirs is a mission of helpfulness first and that the thought of money is secondary. A doctor has to live, you know, and he must be paid, but I always thought of myself as following in the footsteps of Christ, as far as I was able to do so, going forth to help and to heal, as he commanded. The healing, the helping, the comforting all went it together."

That is fine. Unknown to the great world, without place and conspicuous honors, she has wrought far better than the most of us. Hers has been a beautiful life. May her retirement be sweet! —The Presbyterian.

IT HAS BEEN PROVEN

Chile has a new law which leans toward prohibition. It requires all saloons to close on Friday night and remain closed forty-eight hours in order that the wives and mothers may have a chance at the pay envelope of the workmen who are paid on Saturday morning. A lot of people in the United States would probably be willing to compromise on a prohibition law that would open saloons for forty-eight hours over the week ends in order to give the brewers and a few other parasites a chance at the pay envelopes before they reached the wives and mothers. In most cases forty-eight hours would be amply sufficient.—Religious Telescope.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Job II

The book of Job is a revelation of the ministry of pain and affliction. It evinces how the Maker of men views character as disciplined virtue and not merely protected innocence. The beckoning hand, not the mailed fist, is what Jehovah wishes the sufferers of all ages to see. All afflicted souls should be able to rise on "stepping stones of their dead selves to higher things." They should realize that the via crucis (way of the cross) is only another name for the via lucis (way of the light).

"Only the prism's obstruction shows aright
The secret of a sunbeam, breaks its light
Into the jewelled bow from blankest white."

The writer wonders, does man have enough moral resilience to "find in loss a gain to match?" Can he transform his crucifixion upon an ash-heap into a glorious resurrection victory? Assuredly. The night without stars is but an hour, if he has his eyes fixed upon the rising Morning Star. He is our Days-man. And even in the night men may read: "God . . . giveth songs in the night." (Job 35:10; Ps. 119:54, 55).

But someone will urge: "But he sends enemies, Satan and his hosts, for us to do battle during the night." Well, what of it? Is it not man's business to think for himself in resisting the Devil? Is it not his divine prerogative to aggressively fight for the right? The moral fight within and without is about the noblest task this world affords. Browning was right when he wrote of our modern Jobs:

"No, when the fight begins within himself,
A man's worth something. God stoops o'er his head,
Satan looks up between his feet—both tug—
He's left, himself in the middle: the soul wakes
And grows. Prolong that battle through his life!
Never leave growing till the life to come!"

Indeed, eternal life begins when Christ vouchsafes it to man. It is a gift—a gracious gift of grace—which is enriched and purified in the furnace of affliction. How sweet are the uses, then, of adversity!

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Job, Moses, Elihu, or possibly another. Uncertainty prevails as to its true authorship.
2. When and Where Written. In Patriarchal times; in Palestine.
3. To Whom Written. To universal mankind in general; to patriarchal characters of patriarchal times in particular.

4. Purpose. To discuss the problem of pain and the uses of adversity. Immortality is not mentioned.
5. Authenticity. Job is generally regarded as an historical character. His experiences and conversations are presented in dramatic form to the reader.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. Job and His Trials. 1-2.
2. Job and His Friends. 3-37.
3. Job and His God. 38-42.

III. THE STORY OF THE BOOK

The great epic of Job opens with a controversy between heaven and hell in which Satan figures as the tempter of the righteous, prosperous, and widely known citizen of Uz. Afflicted with elephantiasis, Job's friends seek to comfort him and then charge him with sin. Three cycles of philosophical controversy follow. Job hears their arguments, answers them, justifies himself, and continues to suffer. The last voice announces that suffering is educational and then Jehovah and Job have a conversation of their own. It is a challenge to Job and he, witnessing his poverty stricken former self, repents, and is restored to health, receiving twice the prosperity he formerly knew.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Suffering. Chastisement.
2. Key Verses. 34:31, 32; 10:15; 19:25-27; 42:1-6.
3. Key Chapters. 38, 42.
4. Key Ideas. Pain and Providence; Purity and Power.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The book of Job is a valuable contribution to our common spiritual life for several reasons:

1. It discusses intelligently a big problem of the ages.
2. It associates Satan with the spiritual worlds of good and evil.
3. It portrays the inadequacy of human philosophies to solve the problem of suffering.
4. It reveals the purpose of God as gracious.
5. It evinces the breadth and length of wisdom and knowledge in the patriarchal times.
6. It promises immortality dimly, but surely, to man.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Christ is the Days-man and Redeemer of the book of Job. The afflictions of Job, guiltless and upright, should have prepared Israel for the Innocent One who was "stricken and smitten" and yet was "without sin." He was more patient than Job under the smiting rod. He is our only Example in trial and tribulation.

VII. THE TEACHINGS OF THE BOOK

Appended below are the summarized teachings of the book of Job as they are set forth by the pen of that admirable, reverent, conservative Old Testament scholar, Dr. Sampey:

A. Negative Teachings.

1. Suffering is not always a punishment for sin. The best man of his time may be the greatest sufferer.
2. Justice does not always find perfect expression in individual lives.

a. The wicked often enjoy prosperity, die in a ripe old age, and are honored after death.

b. The righteous often suffer misfortune, and die in poverty and distress. If there are no rewards and penalties beyond the grave, it is impossible to present a satisfactory demonstration of the justice of God.

II. Positive Teachings.

1. Certain great doctrines are clearly taught.
  - a. A judgment after death. The sins of this life will be punished. God will vindicate the righteous, and stand as thier Go'el. Give God time, and justice will prevail.

b. The everlasting superiority of righteousness over wickedness is affirmed. The battle for goodness is not to end in defeat for the innocent.

c. Job's cry for a mediator foreshadows the work of Jesus Christ as the one Mediator between God and man.

2. The teachings of Job's personal experiences.

- a. The final perseverance of the saints is beautifully illustrated. Jehovah believes in the saints; Satan sneers at them.

b. The afflictions of the righteous lead to a nobler faith. Job was lifted to a higher faith and a nobler life.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

John 4:21 22:—"Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. Ye worship ye know not what; we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews." And the next verse adds, "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him." Moffatt reads: "Woman, said Jesus, 'believe me, the time is coming when you will be worshipping the Father neither on this mountain nor at Jerusalem. You are worshipping something you do not know; we are worshipping what we do know—for salvation comes from the Jews. But the time is coming, it has come already, when the real worshippers will worship the Father in Spirit and in reality; for these are the worshippers that the Father wants.'" This text opens the question of a suitable place to worship Almighty God. From the first, man fixes on certain places where he might find and worship God. Job in distress, when he thought he was cast off, cried, "O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come unto his seat." Abraham under special commandment of God made a three-days' journey to Mt. Moriah as a fitting place to offer acceptable worship to his God. Isaac builded an altar at Beersheba, and there God appeared to him. Jacob, under the splendors of a Syrian sky, made his bed in the open plain, and the angels lending their presence, he called the place "Bethel," and declared, "How dreadful is this place! There is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven!" (Gen. 28:17).

Thus the patriarchs meet God in the open plain, and worship him there. After a while the tabernacle was set up in the wilderness, and God met his children there. By and by, the great Temple was erected. So sacred was the inception to the people that without the sound of "hammer or ax" the magnificent structure rose. How God made his presence known there is familiar to all Bible students. The open plain—how simple that meeting place! the great Tent—how interesting and unique! The Temple—how imposing and magnificent! All of which means, whether the meeting place be crude, or simple, or grand, IF GOD MEETS THERE "it is a holy place."

Before entering the holy place of the Temple the priests changed their garments. The old were left outside. In our meeting places with God some things should be left outside. Let us leave outside the door of God's house the rude speech; the sarcastic retort; the gossipy whisper; the cheap and smutty story. I do not hesitate to say that the church of God should be the most dignified, cultured and refined place on earth. The foul story and the shady suggestion have no place where people expect God's presence. The two do not belong together. Wit and humor, even in the pulpit, has its place, BUT LET IT BE CLEAN! For the pulpit to go to the gutter to gather its "smart sayings", is like putting the writings of Longfellow, and Bryant, and Tennyson the lewd and obscene story that certain persons may be induced to read them. I have real concern for the minister who must pull down the exalted standard of the CHURCH OF THE LIVING GOD to that of the vaudeville in order to attract a few people who must live on trash.

May God save the church from becoming cheap and trivial. Let us come into his courts with reverence and sober demeanor. Come with a joyful heart filled with the spirit of praise. Come to worship that great Being we call God in the beauty of holiness. Dr. Samuel Johnson has been criticised for the habit of lifting his hat whenever passing a church-house. Better that, by far than to look upon the house of God as of no consequence to the community.

God's house, likewise, is a house of prayer. God so ordained. Christ so taught. "My house is a house of prayer, and ye have made it a den of thieves." Our worldly nature may desire it to be a place of fun and entertainment. But God has thought otherwise. Why should man pull away from God then expect the Father to smile upon him in his troubles? We sometimes sing,

"Sweet hour of prayer, sweet hour of prayer,
That calls me from a world of care,
And bids me at my Father's throne,
Make all my wants and wishes known."

Isn't there something in it?

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. KILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.

MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR.
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

Why We Had No Summer Slump

Thirteen reasons for good attendance in a class of business girls, in spite of the soaring mercury

By Mrs. I. B. Oldham

There is, in the First Baptist church of Muskogee, Oklahoma, a class of business girls, which was organized three and a half years ago by seven girls who felt the need of a young ladies' class studying the Uniform lessons. In a few months the attendance was up to thirty, and during the past winter there were between fifty and sixty in the classroom each Sunday, with seventy-five on the regular class roll. During the summer months, an attendance of between thirty and forty was maintained even though twenty school teachers who are members of the class left the city.

In giving my reasons why there is no slump during the summer months, when the mercury is often over one hundred, I would list the following activities which are carried on all the year.

1. Evangelism is never slackened; the message of salvation is brought each Sunday in song and story while personal work has changed thirty "prayers for salvation" to "prayers for Christian growth."

2. All officers are consecrated Christian girls living a life separate and apart from the world, and therefore, are more interested and zealous in the work of the class.

3. On the fourth Sunday of each month the girls have charge of the lesson. One girl has entire charge of the program. For instance, on the fourth Sunday of August, there were three groups taking part, with a leader for each group. These groups met in various sections of the classroom and discussed each question with their respective leaders. The discussions were: "Why I know that I am a Christian," "Why join a church," "How to live a Christian life." In the closing exercises the groups reassembled, and each group presented a concrete, brief report of its conclusions. Of course, the manner of conducting the lesson may be changed each month.

4. The activities of the class are many and varied:

(1) A Sunday school in the country is sponsored and evangelistic services are held by various laymen or pastors once each month. Sunday school is conducted each Sunday, with the class providing a teacher for a class of young men and women numbering about twenty.

(2) The girls have charge of a downtown mission, giving a program one Friday evening each month.

(3) Members of the class meet twice each week on Tuesday evenings and Friday afternoons, at the Oklahoma Baptist Hospital, and make dressings and surgical bandages for use in the hospital.

(4) Gospel tracts are made available in various public places, such as hospitals, missions, country schools, and restaurants.

(5) The class clothes an orphan girl in the Baptist Orphanage in Oklahoma City.

(6) Clothing and lunches are provided for a high school girl in one of the Muskogee high schools.

(7) Boxes of clothing have been sent to a mountain school.

Each member of the class is urged to take part in some phase of the work.

5. Advertising the class is one feature. The name "Uneedus" speaks for itself—how the world at the present time needs young girls to stand for the Master. During the Oklahoma Free State Fair, there were displayed a "Uneedus" scrap book, made in the class colors, blue and gold, each page designed by a different member of the class, and giving an idea of her special work. Probably this should be called information rather than advertising. Nevertheless, it shows the activities of the class sufficiently to draw the attention of those not associated directly with the class.

6. The teacher strives to avoid the lecture method of teaching the lesson and she also attempts to keep the class out of a rut in every way. For instance, the president does not always preside, and the teacher does not always teach the same way. Sometimes the lesson is given using questions only, often the girls give five parts of the lesson. Practical, every-day, living lessons are presented, and Jesus Christ is held up as the Way, the Truth and the Life. The pastor brings an evangelistic message once a year. Special effort is put forth on the part of the girls who are Christians to get the girls who do not know Christ to be present at this time in order that they may have an opportunity of accepting Christ and entering into his service with those who are striving to do his will. Variation of the programs is also provided by special numbers during the opening exercises such as music, readings, and so on. A Bible is brought by every member of the class and is used each Sunday in the class.

7. Perhaps the seventh reason is the one reason for the success of the class in the winter as well as the summer. A year ago, a "One by One" Club was organized on the basis, "You get the one next to you, and I'll get the one next to me." This club functions outside of the class as well as through its membership.

8. The cooperation and faithfulness of the officers, pianist, and song leader—there is never any question as to whether or not they will be present. They are there, and on time. The records are kept strictly up to date on the secretary's book. By looking on this book, the teacher can tell just where each girl stands—interested or not interested.

9. Each girl is to look after each week. If she is not in class, why? If she is sick, some one visits her; if she is out of work, work is sought for her; if she is in trouble, in some way comfort is given.

10. An ideal meeting place is provided by the kindness of the Guipel Funeral Home, with the use of a piano and hymn books, where the class may meet and study undisturbed, and worship with a spirit of reverence that cannot be obtained where these conditions do not prevail.

11. New Testaments have been sent to the foreign field in China through the Moody Bible Institute.

12. The social life of the class is by no means overlooked. Under the direction of the second vice-president, many lovely parties, receptions, picnics, and get-together meetings have been planned and carried out very successfully.

13. During the past several months, there has been maintained a Relief committee that has charge of all gifts of clothing, food, etc., when calls come to the class. It would be impossible to estimate the number of such requests that have been received and needs supplied.—The Sunday School Times.

Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Capturing and Holding a School's Interest

When the Superintendent catches the viewpoint of young folks

By Lyman T. Law

For several years I had a job as superintendent of a small Sunday school. I received the same pay that most Sunday school superintendents receive. But I did not take the job because of the pay,—or because I wanted it,—or because I was fitted for it. It was simply a case of no one else being willing, and I was brought forth as a "last resort."

Although old enough to be a grandfather, I endeavored to catch a viewpoint of the young folks. I tried to make the Sunday school service interesting to them. But I found that what interests the children almost always interests the grown-ups, too. I tried to make the exercises brief, snappy, and attractive. No long preliminaries,—no long waits. When our program started it went right along from one thing to the next without an instant's pause, and with very few announcements,—but never in the same order. I doubt if the order of exercises was exactly the same at any two sessions. This kept the scholars on the alert as to what was coming next.

There was no long Scripture lesson, no long prayers, no long talks. If an outside speaker came before us, he was seldom given over five minutes, ten minutes at the most.

Instead of a long prayer that covered everything around the world and back again, and in which the children lost all interest before it was half over, we tried to boil it down to one thought or object and to make it in such a brief, pithy way that even the youngest would catch the thought and carry it away. For this reason the prayer was usually made by the superintendent or the assistant superintendent (a fine fellow), although sometimes a teacher would be asked to lead in prayer, with a caution not to "overstay."

The Scripture lesson was given in various ways. Sometimes a little girl would repeat a Psalm. Sometimes a class would read the Scripture. Sometimes four boys would come up front and read a passage alternately. Maybe a young man or a young lady would lead in responsive reading. Maybe the boys and girls would read responsively. One way that proved interesting was for the superintendent and the assistant superintendent to read responsively, not by verse, but stopping at each period, or perhaps stopping at the first punctuation mark. The children would hold their Bibles in their laps and watch eagerly to see if they could catch one of the readers in a "clip."

I emphasized the music and crowded in all the singing our time would permit. I tried to select hymns with a "go" and a "swing" to them that the children would enjoy singing. We also organized a children's vested choir. At that time our church was fortunate in having a most capable and consecrated young woman deaconess. She took charge and developed this children's choir so that it became a very important part of our Sunday school.

We opened our school with a processional and the choir usually sang a selection during the service. The children's choir had their regular weekly rehearsal, and the members had to be on time on Sunday morning or they could not wear their vestments and make part.

Special days such as Washington's Birthday, Mother's Day, Thanksgiving, and the like, were usually noticed in some brief and attractive way. Even a current event might be taken up. The Sunday after Colonel Lindbergh landed in France, the blackboard back of the superintendent's desk was covered with a sketch of an airplane. The superintendent asked: "Who is the most talked of person in the world this morning?" The children looked at the blackboard and shouted "Lindbergh"—"Lindbergh"—"Lindbergh."

Then some things were told about Colonel Lindbergh, his character, his devotion to his mother, and the like, and a few lessons therefrom were driven home.

When we came one New Year Sunday morning we found the following chorus printed on our blackboard:

Shine, shine, just where you are.
Shine, shine, just where you are.
Into the night, throw out the light
Shine for the Lord where you are.

(Continued on page 15)

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
With
Thoburn C. Lyon

THE GIVING OF THE MANNA

(Lesson for July 31)

Lesson Text: Ex. 16:1-5, 14, 15, 35; Golden Text: Jas. 1:17

Daily Readings and Suggestions MONDAY

The Manna Promised. Ex. 16:1-10

As we read this account we must ever marvel anew at the wondrous grace of God. He had led the children of Israel from Egypt with a strong hand, had performed mighty miracles to protect them, had evidenced his glory to them—and still they grumbled! His promise of the manna was not wrung from him by their murmurings, but was the gift of his gracious love to their need, and would have been given as freely if they had not complained. Their murmurings served no purpose other than to cheat themselves of added blessing and fellowship that might have been theirs. He has given us many precious promises which he will surely keep; let us not rob ourselves of any part of his blessing by a wrong spirit.

TUESDAY

The Manna Given. Ex. 16:11-18

The Lord promised, and sealed his promise with the presence of his glory (v. 10). The Lord kept his promise, supplying the needs of the Israelites, just as he had kept every other promise and has supplied our every need. He is known as the "covenant-keeping God," and is distinguished by this very fact from the various false gods that men have worshipped. After a long life of difficult leadership, Joshua testified: "Not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake (Joshua 23:14)." For our further meditation consider this question: The manna came direct from the hand of God; is our daily bread in any way less truly from his hand?

WEDNESDAY

Persisting in Sin. Ps. 78:19-32

Our hearts are made sad as we read of a people so persistent in sin in the face of such miracles and providential care. It would seem that they were without excuse, and that God would have been fully justified if he had blotted them out. But before we are too severe in our condemnation, let us consider whether his people today are any quicker to believe, or less prone to doubt and disobey. We have seen the fuller unfolding of his plans as revealed through the prophets, and finally through his Son; we have seen the fulfillment of many more of his promises and prophecies—and still we persist in our doubts and murmurings. May God graciously forgive and renew a right spirit within us!

THURSDAY

Bread that Satisfies. Isa. 55:1-5

What a message for the world today is found in v. 2, the whole world madly pursuing that which satisfies not! It is not less true now than then, that if we have the Bread that satisfies many shall run unto us for it. Great, then, is our privilege and our responsibility. Let us pray for strength, that we may not fail those who are hungry about us.

FRIDAY

Not By Bread Only. Deut. 8:1-3

Bread is very necessary to our physical existence, and as such is not to be despised. However, this passage, which Jesus quoted in his own hour of temptation, emphasizes the fact that there is something of greater importance than mere things. It was this he also had in mind when he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom . . . and all these things shall be added!" If we make "first things first," our God shall supply all our needs, even as he supplied manna in the wilderness.

SATURDAY

Spiritual Food. 1 Cor. 10:1-7

Perhaps the key to today's passage is found in v. 11, where we are reminded that all these things may serve as examples to admonish us today. It was Christ who gave them the water of life; it was also he who fed them from heaven, and who baptized them with his Spirit in the sea and in the cloud. Let us not feed our bodies at the expense of our souls, and let us not be unmindful of the starving souls of men about us.

SUNDAY

The Bread of Life. John 6:32-40

The Father hath given us the true bread from heaven, even him who came down from heaven and giveth life unto the world. How we should praise him with lives of service, remembering that he giveth life not to us alone, but to the WORLD! Let us cease from our murmurings and disputings and go forth, holding forth the word of life (Phil. 2:14-16).

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK  C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio
--	--	--

Committee Installation and Consecration Service

Arranged by Ethreba Maxwell

(Clip and save for your Installation Service)

The Friendship Fire

(Place chairs in a friendship circle or two circles if desired. Have an unlighted candle in the centre of the circle.)

Worship Service.
Call to Worship.

Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove,

With all thy quickening powers;

Kindle a flame of sacred love

In these cold hearts of ours.

Hymn. "Come, Thou almighty King."

Hymn. "Since Jesus Came into My Heart."

Scripture. John 15:1-16. "Friends."

Friendship fire lighted, while the leader repeats this verse:

Fire, fire, pure and strong,

Make free our hearts from secret wrong;

Kindle wonder with thy light;

Give us reverential sight;

Lift our souls in high desire;

Radiant mystery of fire,

We bow before thy flame.

Singing. "Follow the Gleam."

Presentation and Installation of Committees.

(The committees should be called by the director and installed by the pastor. When called, each committee will rise and stand in a circle about the fire. The chairman of the committee will speak as indicated, and place his torch in the fire. The choir will sing as indicated, and the pastor will install the committee.)

Director. The friendship fire of Christian Endeavor has been lighted, but it cannot be kept burning unless the committees of Christian Endeavor keep it alight. What has the prayer meeting committee to bring to the friendship fire?

Prayer Meeting Committee Chairman. We bring to the friendship fire the flame of friendship with Christ. As a committee we shall endeavor to plan all our meetings with the aim of helping each Endeavorer to know and love Christ first and best of all. We shall encourage daily prayer and Bible reading that we may all grow in friendship with Christ. Jesus said, "Ye are my friends."

Choir. Second verse of "I've found a Friend."

Pastor installs the prayer meeting committee.

Director. Has the lookout committee some gift for the friendship fire?

Lookout Committee. We bring to the fire of friendship the flame of friendliness among our own members and the young people in our own church. As a committee we shall constantly try to keep the flame of our individual consecration burning brightly, and will try to kindle a love for Christian Endeavor in the hearts of the young people in our own church who do not now belong to our society. Jesus said, "Go to ... thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee."

Choir. Verse 5 of "I Am Praying for You." Pastor installs the lookout committee.

Director. Surely the missionary committee has something to add to the friendship fire.

Missionary Committee. We add to the friendship fire the flame of world friendship. We as a committee shall endeavor to interest our society in the spreading of the gospel story throughout the whole world. We build our program on the words "Know," "Pray," "Give," "Go." Jesus said, "Go ... and teach all nations."

Choir. Verse three of "We've a story to tell to the nations."

Pastor installs the missionary committee.

Director. Has the social committee some gift to bring to the friendship fire?

Social Committee. We bring to the friendship fire the flame of fellowship. Through recreation we shall try to make bright the ideals of all our young people. We read in the Bible, "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly, and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother." We desire that all our Endeavorers shall know that Christian Endeavor friends are the best friends.

Choir. "I would be true."

Pastor installs the social committee.

Director. What has the calling committee to add to the friendship fire?

Calling Committee. We add to the friendship fire the flame of friendship for the sick and shut-in. We bring cheer and joy to those less fortunate than ourselves. Our Master said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these ... least, ye did it unto me."

Choir. "Just as I am, Thine own to be," verse one.

Pastor installs the calling committee.

Director. Has the publicity committee something to bring to the friendship fire?

Publicity Committee. We bring to the fire of friendship the flame which spreads the fire until all know that my friends are your friends and all of us are friends of Christ. friends in Christ and friends for Christ.

Choir. Verse one of "Ye servants of God, your Master proclaim."

Pastor installs the publicity committee.

Consecration verses repeated by every member present.

Singing of prayer verse.

(Tune, "Faith of Our Fathers.")

Before Thee, God of life, we bear

The swinging censers of our prayer,

And lay upon Thine altar fire

Our gift of love, with strong desire;

That rising, fragrant, Lord, to Thee

Accepted may our offering be.

Consecration prayer by the pastor.

Consecration hymn. "O Jesus, I have promised."

Announcements and offering.

Mizpah benediction.

NOTE. An artificial camp fire may be made by using a red light bulb or red crepe paper over an ordinary electric bulb, over which sticks are placed in tepee fire formation. The torches for committee chairmen are flashlights with red crepe paper over the end. The pastor will "charge" the committees with their duties in his own words.

—C. E. World.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN

Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.,
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to

R. PAUL MILLER

Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

Jews Become Christians

By the Rev. John Stuart Conning, D.D., New York

No statement is more frequently made by Jewish leaders when referring to Christian missionary effort in behalf of their people than that it is ineffective and almost wholly barren in results. Ridicule is heaped upon those who seek in any way to win Jews to the discipleship of Christ. Attempts have even been made to estimate in pounds or dollars the high cost of "making a bad Jew into a worse Christian." Unfortunately there are Christians who in ignorance of the facts repeat the assertions.

The fact is that from the beginning Jews in varying numbers have, often at great cost, yielded wholehearted allegiance to Christ. The results of Christ's brief personal ministry have generally been underestimated. We hear of the hundred and twenty in the upper room, but forget the tens of thousands who came under his sway, and who later formed the Christian synagogues which were scattered over Judea and Galilee. In the Christian churches of apostolic origin many thousands of Jews were included. The "strangers" to whom Peter refers in his epistle were without doubt Jews of the dispersion who had become followers of Christ. The existence of an "Epistle to the Hebrews" bears convincing testimony to the wide extension of Christianity among the Jews of the period.

And since apostolic times there has been no age that has not seen many Jews owning the Messiahship of Jesus. In the thirteenth century England had more than one Domus Conversorum to care for Jews who had become identified with the cause of Christ. Rev. J. F. de la Roi, a careful statistician, estimated that 224,000 Jews during the nineteenth century entered the Christian churches of Europe and America. And this in spite of the fact that very meagre efforts were put forth in their behalf. Such a result is greater by far than was reported from any other part of the world's mission field. A quarter of a million converts from ten millions of Jews is a vastly greater result than three million converts from one thousand million heathen. In one cast the proportion is one in forty, in the other one in three hundred.

In our own day there is a distinct movement toward Christianity among Jews in certain parts of Europe. Sir Leon Levison, president of the World's Hebrew Christian Alliance, after a personal investigation of what is going on, wrote: "The age of miracles has not gone by. Ninety-seven thousand Jews in Hungary alone accepted the Christian faith, in Vienna seventeen thousand, in Poland thirty-five thousand, and in Bolshevik Russia sixty thousand Jews became Christians. We also found Jews turning to Christ in Germany, Sweden and Denmark. Not a few have done likewise in Great Britain." In America a careful estimate places the number of Christians of the Jewish race at not less than twenty thousand.

Dr. Arthur Ruppin, the Jewish publicist, whose bias is certainly not toward Christianity, in looking over the entire Jewish field declares: "Even allowing for the thousands and tens of thousands who succumbed to persecution. Judaism today should be stronger than it is by millions and tens of millions, were it not for the continuous secession to Christianity."

Nor must we forget the high character of many Jews who have cast in their lot with the Christian Church, since the days of Peter and James and John and Paul. What other mission field has produced a list of distinguished individuals that can be compared with converts among the Jews? We think of men in the nineteenth century like Dr. Paulus Cassel, Dr. Alfred Eldersheim, Bishop Hellmuth, the Herschells, the Mendlesschons, the Margoliouths, Dr. Capadose, Adolph Saphir, Joseph Rabinowitz, David Baron, Louis Meyer and hundreds of others. In America we think of men like Isidor Loewenthal, the pioneer missionary to Afghanistan, who translated the Scriptures into the Pushtu tongue for the people of that land, and of Bishop Schereschewsky who translated the Scriptures into Wenli for the four hundred millions of China. But for possible embarrassment it would be easy to mention many prominent Christians from among the Jews of our own generation. Speaking of recent converts, Sir Leon Levison says: "Among the men and women who have come out from Jewry for Christ there are many who hold university degrees, doctors of law, medicine, philosophy, science, literature, etc."

Nor should we fail to consider the indirect results of Jewish contacts with Christianity. The disappearance of the ghetto and pale, and the freer associations of modern times are gradually wearing away the old antagonisms and bringing about a new state of mind more favorable to a consideration of the claims of Christianity. Jews today are open-minded as they have not been for many generations. They are reading the New Testament and other Christian literaare, listening to messages over the radio, and occasionally visiting Christian churches. Most revolutionary of all is the changing attitude toward Jesus. Whereas for long centuries his name was never mentioned by reputable Jews, today he is widely acclaimed as a prophet and as one to whom Jews should give heed.

Do Jews become Christians? Yes, always. Wherever Christ is fairly interpreted with sympathy and understanding there is an encouraging response. If the results have not been greater, the fault lies mainly with the Christian Church which has seldom been concerned for the spiritual welfare of the Jews. Rarely has the Gospel been given a fair chance. Prejudice, bigotry, injustice, and ill-will have too often hidden the face of Christ from his people. But a brighter day is dawning. The Church is gradually awakening to a sense of her responsibility. The bringing of work for the Jews within the program of the International Missionary Council gives promise of a larger and fuller service than has hitherto been possible. Over this long neglected field the day at last is breaking.—Missionary Review of the World.

class banks through which we may remember our loved ones in the far fields each Sunday.

We are glad for the pages in the Evangelist through which we can thus send our greetings to all of our Brethren everywhere. We at Ankenytown are proud of our distinction as Brethren. We hope you are too.

Sincerely, the Pastor
RAY J. KLINGENSMITH.

NORTHWEST DISTRICT OF BRETHREN CHURCHES

A rousing song service, conducted by the Sunnyside chorister, opened the 14th Annual Conference of the Northwest District of Brethren churches in the faithful little church at Harrah, Washington, June 28.

In spite of a hot period as well as a busy season the "little flock" at Harrah gathered in goodly numbers promptly at 8 P. M. to welcome delegates from Spokane, Sunnyside and other points. The Harrah church stands out noticeably as a friendly church. We, as visiting delegates were greeted with the usual welcome and at once felt at home.

Due to the depression the three churches decided on a one day conference. However, there is no depression with God, for the cattle on a thousand hills are his. The Lord poured out blessings in abundance upon the conference. Every one felt that the Holy Spirit prevailed there in that little church. The weather had been so hot but we were favored with a cooler day on June 29 when a three-day program was marvelously crowded into one day.

On Tuesday, June 28th, the way for the all-day service to follow on Wednesday was paved by an impressive sermon on "The One and Only Foundation," by Albert L. Lantz, pastor of the Spokane church. We went into the Wednesday service with the indelible imprint on our minds that "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

A lively business session followed the morning devotions on Wednesday with Rev. Lantz acting as moderator. Special courtesies were extended to Mrs. Florence Gribble who was the main speaker.

The following officers were elected: Moderator, Fred V. Kinzie, of Harrah, Washington; Secretary, Lillian Bowers of Spokane, Washington; Statistician, Mr. B. Jones of Spokane, Washington.

The business session closed with conference suggestions for 1933.

The 11 A. M. hour was taken up by a discussion of church interests and was conducted as follows: Publications, by Earl Reed, Grandview, Washington; Benevolence by Fred V. Kinzie, Harrah, Washington; College by Harold D. Fry, Sunnyside, Washington; Home and Foreign Missions by our much loved Dr. Florence N. Gribble. In spite of the fact that a sumptuous basket dinner, prepared by the Sunnyside and Harrah ladies, was waiting the audience, listening to Dr. Gribble's inspiring and uplifting address, they reluctantly heard the morning benediction. The noon meal was not at all indicative of a worldwide depression. Old friends met there as well as new ones. A few strange faces were there but the Harrah people soon made them realize they were no longer strangers but one of them.

The afternoon was one long to be remembered. First came the W. M. S. Hour with the District President in charge. Miss Margaret Hoffman of Sunnyside gave a

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The following program was carried out at the mid-summer commencement held in Redwood stadium last Friday afternoon. The attendance was large, the south end of the stadium where there is afternoon shade, was filled and there were some over in the north side.

The total number finishing was 65. This with the 107 this past spring makes a total of 172 leaving the institution this year. While this is an accomplishment for the College, yet it imposes an added burden in securing that many new students to take their place.

The summer term just closed was satisfactory but the financial stringency was reflected in the finances. The outlook for the second term is very encouraging. Following is the program of the recent commencement exercises:

Academic Procession.

Hymn

Prayer, . . . Prof. Milton Puterbaugh, M.A.

Vocal Selections, Miss Dorcas Bame, Mus.M.

For the Class . . . . . Miss Marguerite Lutz

Vocal Selections . . . . . Miss Bame

Announcements.

President Waldo Pittinger, B. Sc. in Ed.

Address & Conferring of Degrees,

President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

Announcements . . . Dean E. G. Mason, M.A.

Old College Home.

Social on Redwood Field

Word received from Dr. Bixler, who is abroad and from Professor DeLozier, who is studying at Penn State, indicate that they are both having a profitable time. All the other College teachers are connected with the summer school.

The new federal taxes have hit us hard. I estimate that the government will take from us next year upwards of $1,000.00 unless we can conjure up some way to eliminate certain taxable papers. I want the readers of this paper to bear this in mind and assist as they may be able in the payments of anything owing the school. I do not see how we can stand a tax of that much money with our present budget. I hope those interested in the College will make note of this. It is bound to unbalance our budget.

Several of our teachers will be at the Shipshewana conference when this paper reaches its readers.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

ANKENYTOWN CHURCH, OHIO

Our church is happy to report that the Lord has been very gracious this year. We have in a sense suffered from the material depression; but spiritually we have enriched ourselves. The new pastor was installed by Dr. Martin Shively in September. The Homecoming, a little later in the fall, was one such as only our Eastern states can enjoy. The beauty of the hills at the home church and the loyalty to the Brethren brought many of our old folks back to worship and spend the day with us. The California Quartette, from Ashland Seminary was there and brought a program in the afternoon. A mixed quartette from the Mansfield Brethren church also sang for us. It was a wonderful day to all. The Young People of our church, of which there are thirty some, have wonderfully taken hold of their Lord's work. They meet each Sunday night with their pastor and study BRETHREN doctrine. They are learning to love the Word and the Lord. They have done a loyal piece of work. They have also formed a good choir which practices regularly and as a result sings well. The older Brethren have been loyal to all the services too. A Saturday night prayer meeting has been organized which is successful. The Lord has added to our little flock. Nine have been baptized, and seven have been received into our church. The others were those who claim membership in a church which cares nothing about Scriptural baptism. The Ashland College Men's Glee Club brought a fine sacred program one Sunday night this May. We were delighted with them. It was their first appearance at Ankenytown.

The church has been loyal to every call and faithful to every service. The pastor is proud of Ankenytown and is pleased with her quiet, earnest labors for the Lord. The Official Board has been exceedingly helpful to the young pastor. One of the changes this year in our church program is the addition of a Communion service. We love to meet our Lord there. There were seventy-one at the last one.

The Sunday school is growing steadily. There were 103 at the last service. We are trying to increase Brethren instruction in our Sunday school classes so we have requested that all of the teachers be present at the Pastor's Bible Study on Brethren Doctrine with the young people. The church and Sunday school has the desire to increase her offerings to our mission work, so we have begun the system of individual very interesting report during the Christian Endeavor hour.

At three o'clock a Bible school round table followed, with the Harrah Sunday school superintendent in charge. Every age of the Sunday school was discussed in a most helpful and interesting manner, with emphasis laid on the teacher being a devout and surrendered Christian. I think I am safe in saying, there was not one teacher there who, after hearing those lively discussions, didn't feel down deep in his or her heart:

"Lord, who am I that I should teach the way

To little children day by day,—
So prone myself to go astray?

"I teach them knowledge, yet I know
How faint the flicker and how low
The candles of my knowledge glow.

"I teach them love for all mankind
And all God's creatures, yet I find
My love comes lagging far behind.

"Lord, if I still their guide must be,
May all the little children see
Their teacher leaning hard on thee."

Church problems are always interesting as well as numerous. The discussion on "How to Overcome Them" was a welcome one, for our churches are indeed being tested in these last days, but God is faithful and there are still praying mothers. Thank God for them! The Junior church problem is one of interest and one of vital importance when there are so many temptations facing our young people. Again I say "God is faithful" and is not willing that any should perish.

The evening meal was served in the basement of the church. During this hour we not only had food for the nourishment of our bodies, but food for the soul.

At 8 P. M. the Harrah chorister led the song service which was followed by a praise service and a report of the resolutions committee. An outstanding recommendation was extended to the Home Mission Board that a faith work be started at Vale, Oregon. The field there seems to be very fertile and several families live there who are spiritually hungry for Brethren teaching.

We listened to a heart searching closing message by Dr. Gribble. A strong appeal for conversion, for reconsecration and for parents dedicating their children to God was made. We feel that our Lord and Master indeed favored us by sending our Sister Gribble to us again. We bid her "God speed" and even though we do not like to see her leave the states yet we rejoice in knowing some of our members will see her again at Winona Lake as Rev. Kinzie was elected as delegate to Winona Lake. The Lord willing the pastor's family will attend the conference there and also visit the Kentucky work before returning. We can't all go to Africa but we can all pray for the work that is so precious to Dr. Gribble's heart.

MRS. EMMA LIGHTY.

REVIVAL HELD AT THE CORINTH BRETHREN CHURCH

On Tuesday evening, June 21, we began a meeting in the Corinth Brethren church located near Twelve Mile, Indiana. This is strictly a rural congregation with all its rural advantages and disadvantages. We found here a congregation that has been one of the best in the State of Indiana in times past. However, of late years things have not gone so good with them, discouragement has been stalking through their midst leaving its trail in many lives and homes. Satan is working hard these days to turn many people from the Lord and to close many churches because of financial difficulty, if possible.

I had worked with Mark Spacht, the pastor, of this church before. We were together in a meeting at Mexico, Indiana last winter. It was there that I found him to be a most loyal hearted man of God, willing to cooperate in absolutely every request made of him for the work. While in the Corinth meeting, the pastor and I made in the neighborhood of seventy-five personal visitations upon the men and women of that community. It is needless to say that community round about them for a great work. May this church have leaders with a vision and wisdom sufficient to rise up and take the opportunities for Christ that abound all about them. Men and women are just waiting to be shown that Christians really love them and do care for them and are concerned about their souls. Too many men these days are saying truthfully "no man careth for my soul."

I shall long remember this meeting at Corinth and look forward to the happy day when I may return and labor with these people once again.

R. PAUL MILLER.

REVIVAL IN THE CORINTH BRETHREN CHURCH, TWELVE MILE, INDIANA

On Tuesday evening, June 21st, Brother R. Paul Miller began a revival meeting in the Corinth Brethren church at Twelve Mile, Indiana, which continued three weeks closing on July 10th. Brother Miller tirelessly and fearlessly proclaimed God's truths both in the pulpit and to the individual in the home, in the field, on the highway, or wherever he changed to meet the soul that was outside the Master's fold. To say that the pastor enjoyed these meetings and the fellowship of Brother Miller is to put it mildly. May God's richest blessings abide with Brother Miller as he undertakes many other meetings that hundreds and even thousands may be won for Christ Jesus our Lord because of his steadfast witness for the truth.

This revival was held in the midst of a very busy season, but the meetings were well attended right from the start. Brother Miller preached a series of sermons on Christ's Return, three of these messages being on Sunday afternoons. The average attendance in Sunday school for the three Sundays of the campaign was 135. The average for the Young People's Class was 34,—Miss Edna Carson is the teacher. On the last Sunday, following the afternoon service, nineteen splendid young people entered the baptismal waters in the stream nearby. A large crowd thronged the banks to witness this sacred rite and to sing songs of gladness to his praise. Three others are awaiting baptism and there was one young man who reconsecrated his life to Christ's service. Many were on the verge of making the great decision, but disappointed us by not doing so. We hope and pray that they will come in the near future. Altogether we had a glorious revival.

MARK B. SPACHT, Pastor,
Mexico, Indiana.

SOUTHEASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Following is an abridged report of the 45th Annual Conference of the Brethren Churches of the Southeastern District held at the First Brethren church, Roanoke, Virginia, June 14 to 16, 1932.

The Conference was called to order by the Moderator, Rev. E. L. Miller, Maurertown, Virginia, Rev. H. E. Eppley of Oak Hill, West Virginia, led an inspiring song service. Rev. H. W. Koontz, pastor of the entertaining church, gave the address of welcome which was followed by responses from the churches represented. This opening service was followed by a business session which elected Conference officers. Rev. Frank Coleman, Hagerstown, was elected Moderator; Rev. E. L. Miller, Vice Modera-

LIFE'S QUEST

By C. F. Yoder

There is a prayer in the heart of man,

In many ways expressed,

There is a hunger in his soul

That will not let him rest.

There is a power that leads him on

Until he finds his quest.

It is the thirst for fellowship,

Unknown to insensate clod,

It is the guide post of the path

That human feet have trod,

It is the cry of human need.

"Oh that I might find God."

That cry once rose from Moses' lips,

"Let me thy glory see."

And lo, the goodness of the Lord

Passed by in majesty,

And oh, the face of Moses shone

With that divinity.

Then in the fullness of the time

Men saw that light divine,

Incarinate in the Son of God,

It found a fitting shrine.

Now, in the face of Jesus Christ

God's love meets thine and mine.

The soul at last may find its quest;

Its human cry is heard.

The heart receives its royal guest

In Christ, the living Word.

Come, weary one, to him and rest

And you shall know the Lord.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina.

no grass grew under our feet during that time.

Brother Spacht worked hard and earnestly for the success of this meeting and deserves much of the credit.

The very finest of hospitality was extended me by the Hoovers, Carsons, Maus's and scores of others who entertained us so finely while in this meeting. I cannot help but remark on the splendid spirit and interest manifested on the part of the men and women of the Brethren Church and of the entire community, the way these farmers harvested wheat, made hay and plowed corn in the day and then with wearied bodies and tired minds would come to church literally worn out was a sight to behold. Their love and loyalty to Jesus Christ and their interest in the Word of God was most refreshing. I never enjoyed preaching to people more than I did to these folks.

There is a wealth of young folks in this church upon which a magnificent work for Christ can be built within the next ten years. There is an unlimited field in the Rev. H. W. Koontz, Secretary-Statistician; Rev. Homer A. Kent, Washington, Assistant Secretary-Statistician; Rev. John F. Locke, Woodstock, Virginia Treasurer.

After the business session, Rev. Alva J. McClain, Ashland, Ohio, gave an address on the subject, "The Opportunity of the Brethren Church at the Present Hour." He declared that as long as we stand four square upon the Bible the Brethren Church has a contribution to make to the world. Some suggestive statements were as follows: "We must continue to stand uncompromisingly for the Bible and its truths. We should put on a program of propaganda to make known our position to the world. Our Seminary should receive our heartiest support. Evangelism must be emphasized. All should be loyal to their church and leadership. There ought to be a spirit of unity and love for one another."

The Tuesday evening session was opened by a song service led by the Conference song director, Brother F. W. Hartman, Washington. A short Bible study was given by Rev. J. L. Bowman of Linwood. He chose as his subject, "The Blood." "The Blood of Christ," he said, "removes both acquired and inherited sins." "A bloodless Gospel is a powerless Gospel."

This Bible study was followed by the retiring Moderator's address. Brother Miller recounted briefly the history of the Brethren Church and showed the causes for encouragement in the present outlook. He stressed the value of proclaiming a well rounded body of doctrine. "The Brethren preacher should not fear to preach the specific doctrines of our church. He should ever preach the pre-eminence of Christ and his second coming. He should ever contend earnestly for the faith."

The Wednesday morning quiet hour was conducted by Rev. H. E. Eppley, Oak Hill, Virginia, who reminded us of God's great and unchanging promises to those who will pray in accordance with his will.

Next came the Sunday school hour. Two addresses were given. Rev. John F. Locke, spoke on the subject, "What the Sunday School May Do to Aid Prohibition." He said, "Because of the false impression now publicly given about Prohibition the Sunday school should give the people the truth by teaching them the harmful effects of alcohol upon the mind and body, by showing them what the liquor trade was like in the past in contrast with the good effects of prohibition, by teaching Christians their duty as good citizens." The second address was given by Prof. Alva J. McClain upon the subject, "Methods of Teaching." Prof. McClain enumerated four methods of teaching; the Talking Method which he called helter skelter teaching; the Lecture method in which the teacher has a definite outline and goal; the Recitation Method, where the teacher assigns questions to be answered by the class the following Sunday; the Discussion Method. The last method he said is the hardest method for the teacher for it requires a most careful preparation. "By asking skillful questions, the answering of them brings all to the goal set by the teacher."

Rev. H. A. Kent then presented the Standard of Excellence of the National Sunday School Association.

Rev. Frank Coleman presided at the Mission session which followed the Sunday school hour. Reports of the three District Mission churches, Winchester, Buena Vista, and Cumberland, were given. Rev. W. S.

Baker of St. James then gave an address on the subject, "Missions." He stated that the supreme work of Missions was to exalt Christ and make him known to men. "District Mission work is two-fold: First, establish new churches in every needy field as rapidly as men and means can be provided; second, strengthen our weaker churches and help them get on their feet."

Wednesday afternoon Rev. McClain made an address on the subject, "The Image of the Invisible God." He stated that if men will but think they must believe in the existence of God. "The great question in the hearts of men down through the ages is 'How and where can I find him?' Apart from Divine Revelation man has never discovered God. Christ is the image of God and thusly the answer of God to man, 'Where can I find God?'"

Wednesday evening a short play called Missionary Arithmetic was presented by the Roanoke S. M. M. This was followed by an evangelistic sermon delivered by Rev. Frank Coleman. He took as his text Romans 14:12. He said, "God has an appointment with you, with me, every man. This is one of God's unchanging decrees and applies to all. Christ is the only way out for men. He opened a way to God by the shedding of his precious blood upon the cross."

The Thursday morning Quiet hour service was led by Rev. E. Rohart, Winchester, who quoted many promises of God's Word that assured all that God would hear and answer prayer.

In the morning business meeting that followed the Conference voted to hold the next Annual Conference at the Bethlehem Brethren church to begin the first Tuesday in June, nineteen hundred thirty-three. Rev. John F. Locke is the pastor of this church.

Thursday afternoon the Young People's Session was held. Rev. E. L. Miller presided; Brother F. W. Hartman led the singing. The first talk was given by Miss Mitheline Hausenfluck of Winchester on the subject, "My Bible and I." She named each book of the Bible, giving the number of chapters, a theme verse, a brief outline and several important truths for each book. A second address was given by Brother Preston Campbell of Washington on the subject, "Youth's Need of the Cross." He said, "Youth needs the Cross of Christ for Salvation, as a power to overcome temptations, and as a power in soul winning." Miss Virginia Brumbaugh of Roanoke then gave two very appropriate readings that had for their purpose the drawing of each Christian to a more worshipful attitude in the church and to a more willing walk with the Lord Jesus Christ. Following this reading Brother Louis Glenn Locke, Woodstock, gave an address on the subject, "The Glory of the Cross." He said, "All life, sorrow, as well as pleasure, is sanctified by the cross. Our existence takes on new significance and meaning, for without the death of Christ on the Cross and the subject resurrection we would be without hope." The last address of this hour was given by Brother Burnley Conner, Roanoke. His subject was, "The Challenge of the Cross to Youth." His message was a challenge to youth to take up their crosses daily and denying themselves, follow Christ.

At the last session in an impressive service Frank Coleman, Jr., was ordained to the Brethren ministry. The last message of the Conference was given by Rev. W. C. Wakeman, of Cumberland. He spoke on the subject, "The Unconscious Presence of the Lord." In his sermon he said, "It would make such a big difference in us if we more often were conscious of the Lord's presence. God promises to be present at all times, even to the end of the age. The consciousness of the presence of God will keep unity among Christians and churches."

H. W. KOONTZ,
Conference Secretary.

CAPTURING AND HOLDING A SCHOOL'S INTEREST

(Continued from page 11)

The musical director took charge and soon had the school singing this chorus many times over, vigorously and enthusiastically. After which we all stood up and together made a New Year's resolution that we would try to shine for Jesus all through the year. Then two very small members of our school, with plates piled high with bright new pennies (they looked like gold pieces), passed around the room and gave every one a new bright penny to be kept as a reminder of our New Year's resolution. This took well with both young and old, and many times during the year someone said to the superintendent, "I've got that shiny penny yet."

One Christmas we planned to make a special offering to a certain children's hospital. Several weeks before, every member of the school was given a little red Christmas stocking made of cardboard, with places fixed where dimes could be inserted. Each stocking held ten dimes or $1.00 when full. Some of the scholars quickly filled the first stocking and asked for another.

On the Sunday we collected the stockings two little girls, dressed as hospital nurses carried between them a large red stocking into which the small red stockings were deposited as the little nurses presented themselves to each class. This resulted in a much larger contribution to the cause than any of us thought possible.

(To be continued)

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE SNOW ROBINS

By Frances Hensley

Very early in the spring a pair of robins appeared in the vicinity of the Roddy bungalow and began scolding Tommie Toddlers (the Roddy cat) and everybody else who came near them.

They were a busy and noisy pair. They were looking for a place to build themselves a nest, and they were very choicy. Several times they seemed almost decided upon a spot—even carried a few twigs—then they'd give it up and start over again. They considered the building of their nest a subject worthy of deep and serious thought.

At last they appeared to agree upon a cup-like hollow in an old oak tree—a hollow formed where a big limb had broken off and the end had decayed. It did seem to be a splendid place—more sheltered from storm than some others.

Day by day they carried materials. Anxiously they consulted over the construction. Sometimes the children were sure that they quarreled, for one would bring some twigs and rootlets, put them in place, and immediately the other would scratch them out and throw them petulantly to the ground.

At last the nest was completed, but although to Carl's and Carolyn's eyes it seemed beautiful, commodious and well made, the robins were dissatisfied. They abandoned it and began another in a crotch of an apple tree near the porch.

"Perhaps they were afraid Tommie Toddlers would find that nest. It is rather near the ground," observed Carolyn.

The second nest-building venture proceeded more happily than the first. At last all was finished to the satisfaction of both robins. They took life easier after that, except that once each day the mother robin visited the new nest to leave a blue egg. When there were four she began to brood.

Then, when all seemed to be going so happily, a most unusual disaster befell them. It began to snow although the month was May and there were plenty of green leaves on the apple tree.

Every branch was soon covered by damp, clinging snow. A mound formed over the nest—a mound from which the head and tail of poor mother robin stuck out, showing that she was faithfully guarding her eggs.

But she didn't wait alone. Close by her side, his back covered with snow, his feet clapping the snow-covered branch, sat her mate. Poor little birds! How sad and forlorn they looked huddling against the damp, cold branches; shrinking in vain from the falling snow while they watched over the nest and the precious eggs.

"Do you suppose they are thinking of the south, and wishing that they had not come north so soon, Uncle Robert?" asked Carolyn.

But Uncle Robert was thinking of something else.

"Don't I wish I could have a picture of them!" he exclaimed.

"Why can't you?" asked Carl. "You could get a step ladder and put your camera on top of it."

"I wouldn't dare." And Uncle Robert shook his head. "Our poor robins are having trouble enough. It would be just too cruel to frighten them away from their eggs now."

But late snows do not last. The next day the sun came out bright and warm and the snow melted rapidly away. By night not a trace remained, and the robin on her nest looked comforted and happy.

"A bad beginning makes a good ending," quoted Carolyn one day as the children watched the old birds flying back and forth in such a contented, unhurried way feeding the four little robins that were growing so fast and so fat that they threatened to overflow the nest.

And indeed it did seem that the robins had had all their troubles in the beginning and nothing else bothered them. Tommie Toddlers never so much as looked at their nest. Before the children thought of such a thing the little robins took to their wings.

"Why, we must have a picture of our snow robins!" they cried. "Catch one. Put him on a branch like Uncle Robert did the rain crow." For the children had begun to make bird pictures for themselves.

One of the babies was finally caught and perched upon a limb. But the little snow robin was not so easily managed as the baby rain crow. As soon as he found himself free he hopped down. They got his picture at last—held fast in Carolyn's hand.—Christian Evangelist.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ANOTHER CALL

Indiana District is getting their Statistics sent in. Keep at it Brethren. Let us have a full report this year. If you do not have blanks, we still have some. There are but two other Districts from which I have not received the report. Time is slipping away. LET US DO IT NOW. It will now cost you an extra one cent to return the report. Determined to celebrate this year at Winona Lake, let us do it now by getting the reports into the District Statisticians. Indiana is either Rev. J. W. Clarke or Rev. R. F. Porte, South Bend, Indiana, Pennsylvania is Rev. R. D. Crees, Kittanning, Pa., and Southern California is Rev. J. G. Lienhart, 217 E 42nd St., Long Beach. Any church in the brotherhood that has not reported should do so at once. This notice is written July 14.

GEORGE E. CONE,
National Statistician.

YOUR INVITATION TO WINONA LAKE

It has been our custom over a period of years to write a brief invitation to the people of our church and their friends some time previous to the Brethren National Conference. The Warsaw Brethren church and pastor are expecting to see all their old friends for many years and a host of new ones at BEAUTIFUL WINONA again this summer. This conference will convene August 22nd to 28th inclusive. Rates have never been so reasonable. Our Executive Committee has arranged an Anniversary Program. Too much emphasis cannot be given to the importance of this conference. This will be our last official invitation and welcome to Winona, as pastor of the Brethren church of Warsaw, for our pastorate here will end with the closing of conference. It has been our joy and delight to serve and assist many conference friends in a personal way over these years and it will give us the same pleasure to help you in any way this year.

In this same connection, may it be said again with pleasure, that our own Dr. Alva J. McClain of Ashland Theological Seminary will be one of the speakers this season at the Winona Bible Conference, which convenes just before our own conference. A card written to Winona Lake Institutions will bring you a program.

Looking forward with keen anticipation to the hour of your arrival, we are yours for service and a great conference.

The Brethren Church at Warsaw and Pastor.

By E. M. RIDDLE.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

CLINE-CUNNINGHAM—Sister Emma Cunningham and Mr. Elmer Cline. Mrs. Cunningham was a resident of Polo, Ill. and Mr. Cline of Franklin Grove, Ill. They were married by Z. T. Livengood, June 4th, 1932, at Lanark, Ill.

Z. T. LIVENGOOD.

STAMM-ACKERMAN—Mrs. Vernon Stamm and Miss Anne Ackerman, both of Chicago, Ill., were married by the writer at their home in Lanark.

Z. T. LIVENGOOD.

BELL-WALKER—W. S. Bell, D. D., and Miss Fannie Walker of Milledgeville, Ill., were married by the writer, assisted by Rev. Geo. Cone, on June 19th, 1932, at Lanark, Ill.

Z. T. LIVENGOOD.

BODAGER-KROFT—On Sunday, July 3, at the parsonage in Smithville, Miss Thelma Kroft, of Wooster, was joined in marriage to Arthur Bodager of Marshallville. They are splendid Christian young people, Mrs. Bodager being one of the most loyal and faithful workers in the Smithville Brethren church. The ring ceremony was used. They left at once on a honeymoon trip to eastern points. They will reside for the present in Wooster. May a long, happy and useful married life be theirs. The ceremony was performed by the bride's pastor, the undersigned.

G. C. CARPENTER.

IN THE SHADOW

BUELL—Miss Rhoda Buell was born at Warsaw, Indiana, April 1st, 1898, and died June 20th, 1932, aged 34 years. As a girl she attended the Brethren Sunday school but when her mother was called, she was taken to Mexico, Ind., to live for several years. Here she became a member of the Brethren church. The past few years she has lived in Warsaw, where she has been attending the Brethren church. Funeral services were conducted at the Warsaw Brethren church by the pastor. May God comfort the brothers and sisters.

E. M. RIDDLE.

RICE—Lewis W. Rice was born March 18, 1875, and answered the last call to the flesh June 29th, at his home in Warsaw. Many years ago he was baptized in the Brethren church but placed his membership with the Methodist people, because of his father's influence in that church. He has been a business man in Warsaw for the last several years. He developed a peculiar illness of the heart and after suffering to the extreme for months, death ended the struggle. He was a good man, patient and kind. He is survived by his wife and four children.

Appropriate services were conducted in the M. E. church with the undersigned preaching the sermon, assisted by the pastor, Rev. Gibbs of the above named church.

E. M. RIDDLE.

DOBBS—John Dobbs at the age of 44 years expired at his late home in Warsaw, July 4th. He has been a member of the Brethren Church for over twenty years. He was interested in the Church and always ready to do his part as long as his health permitted. He was also industrious and a father to his two boys and a cheerful burden to his wife. They with his mother and many friends are all mourning his untimely death. Funeral services were conducted at the church by his pastor. May God's blessing be upon the wife and boys.

E. M. RIDDLE.

CULP—Mrs. Amanda Corneil Culp, wife of Ephraim Culp, was instantly killed in an automobile accident on the evening of June 16th, while riding with her husband. Mr. Culp was also painfully injured, but is recovering. Mrs. Culp had spent her entire life in this community. She had reached the age of sixty-seven years. She had been closely associated with her husband in building up and maintaining one of the largest undertaking establishments in Indiana. Perhaps no woman in this community was so well and far-reaching known. She was one of the leaders in women's work among the churches of Indiana, and was for many years a pillar in the Goshen church. Her life was one of hard work, honesty, industry, and intense loyalty to the church.

She leaves to survive her untimely death, her husband and three sons: Floyd, Elmer and Joy Culp, all of Goshen. The entire community as well as the church in general will extend to them their sympathy.

H. F. STUCKMAN.

KING—Cora Ann, wife of Wilson King, was born in Preble County, Ohio, June 2, 1868, and died at her home near West Alexandria, Ohio, June 24, aged 64 years and 22 days. She was married 45 years ago to Wilson King, and to them were born two children, a son and a daughter, both of whom survive her. Her husband passed to the Great Beyond only a few months ago, his funeral service having been conducted on December 5, last. For almost 40 years Sister King and her late husband had been members of the Brethren church, it being my privilege to serve them at five different periods as pastor, twice in California and thrice in Ohio. The relations between this family and my own have been very close, and thus the duty of conducting these services was a doubly difficult one. It was much easier, of course, because of my knowledge of the fact that both husband and wife were consistent, loyal Christians, and Sister K., especially a modern saint. She was a great sufferer for many years, and anxiously awaited release from her pain, and the entrance into the rest which remains for the people of God. Only an almost incomparable devotion on the part of her family, and especially the son, made it possible for her to live as long as she did, and the grief incident to her going is not intensified by the knowledge of her life.

Funeral services were conducted at the family residence by the writer, assisted by Brother McClain and Brother Barnard, both intimate friends of the family.

MARTIN SHIVELY.

SHOW—Florence Ellen Show, wife of George Show, was born September 27, 1862, and died at her home in Tilghmanton, Md., May 19, 1932, aged 69 years, 7 months and 22 days.

She is survived by her husband and two sons. Funeral services at the Manor Church of the Brethren, by the writer.

W. S. BAKER.

BOYER—Mrs. Eliza Elizabeth Boyer was born October 27, 1870, died at her home near St. James, Md., May 27, 1932, aged 52 years, 7 months. She was a member of the Brethren church at St. James, an active member of the W. M. S. and also of the Berean society in the Brethren church at St. James. She is survived by a husband and one brother. Funeral services at the Bakersville Lutheran church by her pastor.

W. S. BAKER.

CROSS—After having been an invalid for many years, Mrs. Emma Cross went to her eternal home on June 18, 1932. Besides her aged husband she is survived by one daughter, a faithful member of the Brethren church at St. James.

Funeral services were conducted in the Brethren church at St. James, by her pastor, the Rev. Bernsburg, of the Lutheran church, assisted by the Rev. Spewer and the writer.

W. S. BAKER.

VOL. LIV
Number 30

July 30
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Thy Blessing, Lord, on All Vacation Days

Molly Anderson Haley, in New Outlook

Thy blessing, Lord on all vacation days!
For weary ones who seek the quiet ways,
Fare forth beyond the thunder of the street,
The marvel of Emmaus Road repeat;
Thy comradeship so graciously bestow
Their hearts shall burn within them as they go.
Grant those who turn for healing to the sea
May find the faith that once by Galilee
Flamed brighter than the glowing fire of coals.
And when Thou hast refreshed their hungry souls,
Speak the old words again, beside the deep,
Bid all who love Thee, Master, feed Thy sheep!
Be Thou with those who bide where mountains rise,
Where yearning earth draws nearest to the skies!
Give them the peace, the courage that they ask:
New strength to face the waiting valley task,
New light to lead through shrouding valley haze!
Thy blessing, Lord, on all vacation days!

Come up to the mountain top with God,
And stroll on the peaks where he trod—
Far above the common plains of thought,
Up where the souls of the great are wrought.

Bible Teaching

"The entrance of Thy Word giveth light" is more than a bit of religious metaphor. It is continually being proved in every-day life. There is no teaching so much needed as that of the Bible, and there is no preaching that is so effective as that devoted to expounding it; yet the hungry, searching soul can gain much, even without human guidance, from the study of its pages. In the right soil it is ever proving a seed of marvelous vitality, as experiences from all parts of the world testify. Rev. Thomas E. Barber, a Presbyterian missionary in Bogota, Colombia, has given, in The Bible Society Record, these striking instances:

"Often such labors on the part of colporteurs reach the hearts of priests in these lands. Some years ago, in the city of Medellin, one of the most progressive cities of Colombia, a priest told me the following story. For some years he had been faithfully reading the Bible. On being asked how it came about that he began reading the Bible, he replied, 'When I was a small boy, my parents, at the request of the parish priest, sent me to the seminary to be educated as a priest. I remained there until I was twenty-two years of age. During all those years they taught me just three things; a little of their theology, a little of their philosophy, and to hate all others.'

"When I graduated from the seminary, I was just a poor, ignorant, innocent youth. For more than forty years I tried to preach the gospel. During all that time I had never read the gospel. One day I met one of your colporteurs. From him I purchased a Bible. I took it home and read it through. It just seemed so good, I went back to him and purchased four more Bibles and gave them away to other priests, friends of mine, who were beginning to think as I was. I have been reading it ever since.' Then he added, 'May your work prosper. It is the hope of Colombia.'

"Another experience will show how the story of the gospel goes into remote regions through colporteurs. Some years ago it was my privilege to send a colporteur of the American Bible Society into a region where no missionary, as yet, had entered. When he returned, he told me the following experience: He said that in a town four days' journey by mule from the railroad he was invited to enter a home. They handed to him an old, well-worn Bible. The man said to him, 'My father bought this Book from a colporteur many years ago. He began reading it, and there he found Christ as his Savior. The parish priest commanded him to give him that Book to be destroyed. Father would not do it. He quit going to mass and to confession. He said he could pray to Christ and confess to him. He continued to read this Book to the end of his days. Shortly before he passed away, the priest came to him and wanted him to confess and return to the church. To the priest father replied, 'I need not confess to man. Christ is my Savior. I have all faith in him. To him I confess, and he forgives me. This Book has taught me to put all my trust in him, and I am not afraid.' And so father passed away. We keep this Book and treasure it in his memory.'—The Biblical Review.

The Christian in Politics

Nowhere else is he more needed. Without his influence and activity in political affairs the forces of evil and corruption rule with a high hand and subvert the processes of government. To hold in check the selfish and designing politicians who seek to rule that they may serve personal and private interests, at the expense of the public welfare, the Christian is under great obligations to concern himself about the affairs of politics and the activities of the government in which he lives.

It cannot be too strongly urged nor too emphatically stated that the Christian has a distinct civic obligation and he cannot escape severe condemnation if he fails to meet it. He is a derelict in duty if he pays no attention to it and permits those forces unlimited and unrestrained power which seek the reign of corruption and vice.

Is there anyone so blind as not to see that the same two forces are struggling for mastery in politics as are opposed to each other in every other realm? Here as elsewhere righteousness must struggle with unrighteousness, and light with darkness. The battle lines are for the most part sharply

“IN GOD’S TEMPLE”

By Mildred Michael

If me and mine may gather here
With you and yours—throughout this year
In Christian fellowship,
And having heard the Master say,
“I am the truth, the life, the way,”
Together we may worship.

If we may join with you in song
And kneel before God's holy throne
In joy and praise and prayer.
If we may know the peace within
That comes to those who walk with him,
And all our burdens share.

If we may praise him every hour
For loving, healing, saving power,
And cleansing from all sin.
We'll ask no greater gift from Heaven,
Secure within the promise given
That we are one with him.
Rossville, Indiana.

defined. The issues are clearly drawn. The outcome will be determined by the attitude of the Christian citizenship of the country.

Just now the predominantly moral issue confronting this nation's body politic is the liquor question. As far as party platforms are concerned the forces of temperance and righteousness have been defeated and the advantage placed with the enemies of national morality. Our sole hope in this campaign seems to be centered in our ability to elect dry senators and congressmen. We believe that the Christian forces of this land can save prohibition from defeat, can even avert the resubmission of the Eighteenth Amendment, if they will vote solidly for dry candidates, not hesitating to cross party lines if necessary to do it. This is one of the strategic years, when every Christian voter is of vital importance. By voice, by prayer, by vote, he should seek to determine the results of the coming presidential and congressional elections, and use every effort to turn back the motley crowd who are determined to restore the most iniquitous traffic ever known to flourish on American soil.

Surely, the Christian should be in politics. The Evangelical-Messenger.

Dry Strategists Open Their Campaign

The national prohibition board of strategy, which comes nearer than any other body to representing the consensus of judgment of the dry leaders, was in session at Washington during the week of July 11 to study the national platforms of the Republican and Democratic parties and to make recommendations as to the attitude which should be taken by dries in the coming presidential and congressional election. The recommendations are, in brief, as follows: (1) The retention of the eighteenth amendment is favored and the legalizing of the liquor traffic in any form is opposed. (2) No opposition is expressed to a test of the popular will by an election in proper constitutional form. "The question of the retention, modification or repeal of the eighteenth amendment should be determined by vote of the people in senatorial, congressional and legislative elections." (3) The people are urged to vote for those candidates, from president on down, who believe that prohibition ought to be the law, and to oppose "the proposals that have been made for modification or repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the weakening of the Volstead act." (4) The records and present attitudes of all candidates should be studied. No specific recommendations are given as to the choice between the Republican and Democratic tickets, further than those which are implied in the brief digests of the records of the presidential and vice-presidential candidates, which show—that every-knew already—that Mr. Hoover and Mr. Curtis has been favorable to prohibition, and that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Garner have been and are opposed to it. The substantial part of the board of strategy's recommendation is: Vote for dry senators, congressmen and legislators. No doubt the board will issue another statement on presidential candidacies after Mr. Hoover delivers his acceptance speech.—Christian Century.

Liquor in all its forms, and used for any purposes whatever, I believe to be an unmitigated evil. I believe in fighting it in every way possible.—Dr. Howard A. Kelley, of the Johns Hopkins University.

IN THIS NUMBER

Conference Trends of the Church of the Brethren—Editor .....	3
Editorial Review .....	4
Some Characteristics of the Efficient Christian—L. L. Garber .....	5
The Social Life of Jesus—W. H. Beachler 7
Significant News and Views .....	7
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library —M. A. Stuckey .....	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible— G. W. Rench .....	9
Why Our Men's Bible Class is a Success—L. Marini .....	10
Capturing and Holding a School's Interest—L. T. Law .....	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon .....	11
How to Organize a Junior Society —Jessie Chapin .....	11
"Do Not Give All to Foreign Missions" —J. R. Edwards .....	12
News from the Field .....	13-15
Business Manager's Corner .....	16
Announcements .....	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Conference Trends of the Church of the Brethren

We were not privileged to attend the recent Annual Conference of the Church of the Brethren held at Anderson, Indiana, but we are in receipt of a printed copy of their Minutes, recording certain actions which seem to be indicative of the trend of development in our sister church. It would be unfair to attempt to pass judgment on the efficiency of their conference machinery, not having been present to see it in operation. We judge that it operates smoothly and harmoniously enough, though development seems still to be in order.

That the "Conservatives" are no longer conservative is well known. They are both progressive and aggressive, building up a program year by year that is becoming steadily more far-sighted and vital and is being carried out with increasing cooperation and zeal. They are still pretty much Conference-centered in their interest and Conference-controlled in their district and congregational actions. We judge it to be true, however, that they are developing in the direction of greater congregational freedom in polity, while we, starting from extreme congregational independence, are making our way in the direction of greater centralization of influence and control. Their conference interest seems to be directed along practical lines of Dunker idealism and Gospel teaching, rather than toward the accuracy of Christian theory,—at least, so far as said conference interest finds expression in conference action. However, we would not imply that the Church of the Brethren is not concerned about theological accuracy. On the contrary, we believe it is, and that its ministry, at least a vast majority of it, can be truly termed conservative, and standing practically with our ministry in their faithfulness to the Word of God. As an evidence of this the report of Bethany Biblical Seminary refers to the Church of the Brethren's "more faithful adherence to the Word of God," and declares that "never has the world needed more than now a band of faithful witnesses to the absolute trustworthiness of his Word." In the main, however, it may be said that the emphasis of our sister church has been with the problems of Christian life rather than Christian theology, though there are indications that greater interest in the theological emphasis is developing, and we are happy to believe that it is certain to be decidedly conservative.

It is interesting to note that the Anderson Conference gave attention to some of the very identical problems which have been up for consideration in our own Conferences, and in not a few instances they moved in the same direction or offered similar suggestions toward a solution.

Some Moral Welfare Problems

Divorce and Remarriage is a problem facing some of their churches and Conference was called upon to decide whether persons divorced and remarried, under certain conditions, might be received into the church by baptism. The question grew out of a specific case, which was cited. Conference appointed a committee to study the whole question of divorce and remarriage and to report at next conference. It might be noted that our own National Ministerial Association has a committee supposed to be studying along a similar line.

The church was asked to take a stand, or to reaffirm its stand, on the Eighteenth Amendment. Strange as it might seem to some, it was the young people who called up this question. According to popular newspaper criticism, the younger people are supposed to be disinclined in Prohibition, if not actually opposed to it. But these Brethren young people were informed and had convictions. Evidently they had been instructed. Conference replied, "We do reaffirm our position in favor of the Eighteenth Amendment without reserve."

What was to be the church's position on war? On this problem the Conference set forth its attitude very definitely and positively.

We have not the space to quote it entire, but give herewith some of the most significant statements:

"One of the fundamental tenets of the Church of the Brethren since its origin in 1708 has been the acceptance of the New Testament as its rule of faith and practice. Our church fathers have consistently taught and declared in private life as well as in official pronouncements that Christianity and war are incompatible. They believed in and taught the gospel of peace and goodwill. They founded their faith in the spirit and teaching of the Bible as exemplified in the life and teachings of the Prince of Peace.

"The Church of the Brethren was founded in Europe at a time when persecution, hatred, war and bloodshed tried the souls of men. The church fathers suffered persecution and imprisonment for the cause of freedom. They suffered greatly during the trials and tribulations of the war periods because of their non-resistance. Their peace principles were misunderstood and sometimes challenged, but their faith and convictions remained steadfast. They taught that war is out of harmony with the spirit of Jesus.

"Our Conference has clearly defined the doctrine of non-resistance to its members. The fathers were unalterably opposed to war and refused to bless, sanction or take part in warfare. They confined their teaching to the overt act of war as it related to their own membership more than to aggressive opposition to war systems among all peoples and nations.

"For more than two centuries official decisions and pronouncements have been made from time to time on the subject. The implications of the peace ideals, the fundamental persuasion that the whole war system is wrong, have deepened the conviction in the membership of the Church of the Brethren that war has no place in human society.

"Therefore we feel bound to avow our conviction that all war is out of harmony with the plain precepts of the Gospel of Christ, and that no plea of necessity or policy, however urgent, can be set up to release either the individual or the nations from the paramount duty which they owe to Jesus who enjoined all men to love their enemies. We express, in all humility, our firm persuasion that all problems, questions and exigencies incident to the well being of civil government and the social order can be settled under the banner of the Prince of Peace in strict conformity to his commands.

.....
"The fundamental ground of our opposition to war is religious and ethical. .... The Christ way of life revealed in the Holy Scriptures, the voice of conscience revealed in the soul, make our participation in war under any or all circumstances impossible.

"... We further believe that our allegiance to the Will of God transcends all commands, orders, or mandates incident to the will of man where the voice of conscience and faith have been made subject to the demands of men."

Congregational Problems

In response to a call for a classification of church membership, Conference named the following classes: Resident and Non-resident; Active and Inactive. Then the different classes were defined. An active member was defined as "one who avails himself of the public means of grace by attending some regular church service, or a communion service, or contributes to the support of the gospel and the various enterprises in such way as he is able." Apportionments, for support of district and general work, are to be made on the basis of the number of active members, both resident and non-resident. We too, have had to decide on the classification of members, deciding there is only one class in statistical reports,—all are active.

Two requests came to Conference for permission to elect deacons and deaconesses to serve for a period of years from 'among those who are ordained in a congregation, also to put the selection of deaconesses on the same basis as deacons, that it, "Any qualified woman shall be eligible to this office regardless of being married or unmarried." No decision was rendered, but a committee is at work restudying "the whole deacon question." The proposed new method is already a custom among many of our larger churches.

Conference Business Made More Prominent

It was decided to give their Conference business session a front seat in their conferences hereafter. It has been the custom to hold their business sessions on the closing days of their ten days Conference, with the result that attendance and interest at these sessions have been declining. Now the business sessions will be interspersed with the sessions devoted to instruction and inspiration. The very opening session of Conference proper is to be a business session when committee appointments will be made, letters of greeting read and the conference sermon preached by the moderator. This new arrangement, which is in keeping with our own method of placing business sessions, gives to business the prominence that it rightly deserves.

Fraternal Relationships

Of more interest than the foregoing items, which should nevertheless help to increase the understanding of Brethren peoples for Church of the Brethren, is the action of the Anderson Conference on the matter of fraternal relations. A committee was appointed at the 1931 conference to study and report the next year on the interchange of representation on the part of the different branches of Brethren to their several conferences, and the entering into working relationships on the part of congregations and groups of related peoples. We quote in full the committee's report, as adopted by the 1932 Conference, authorizing the appointment of fraternal delegates and speakers to conferences and the entering into cooperative arrangements for work and worship on fields where there is duplication of efforts. The report follows:

Your committee recommends:

1. That the Annual Conference authorize the Conference Program Committee to invite other bodies of Brethren people to send representatives to our Annual Conference and to provide a place on

(Continued on page 8)

---

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

Don't forget that Semi-Centennial Conference program to be held at Winona Lake, August 22 to 28. Program copy just arrived; will be published next week.

Brother Harold D. Fry of Sunnyside, Washington, says his district conference has decided upon a faith mission in Oregon and a call is issued for a pastor who is willing to undertake the work.

We are right glad to have a word from Brother L. G. Wood, giving tangible evidence of his rapid improvement since his operation. Pray that God may continue to bless him to the end that his recovery may eventually be complete.

Brother I. D. Bowman writes of a long journey he recently took in his Whippet, accompanied by his wife and other relatives. He held a brief series of meetings at one of his stopping places and as a result four persons were baptized.

Brother J. L. Bowman, pastor at Linwood, Maryland, writes of a successful Daily Vacation Bible School, in which ten of his accomplished teachers cooperated with splendid satisfaction. Other special features of the church program are announced.

From Turlock, California, comes a report of progress under the leadership of Brother N. W. Jennings. The people of this section are said to have been hit hard by the depression, but they are courageous and sacrificing in their loyalty. Brother Jennings is appreciated and has been unanimously called for his sixth year of service.

As we were going to press word came to us through Mrs. L. L. Garber of Ashland, informing us of the death on July 22, 1932, of Mrs. Rebecca A. Moomaw, of Roanoke, Virginia. Sister Moomaw was 89 years old, the wife of Elder D. C. Moomaw, and passed away as the result of an attack of pneumonia. The Evangelist extends its sympathy to the aged companion who is now past 93 years

The "Ashman Evangelistic Party" conducted a successful meeting at Pike church near Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where Brother Robert Ashman is the student pastor. Assisted by his father and sister, thirty confessions of Christ were received, four of which were reconsecrations. Twenty-two members were received by baptism and four by relation and letter.

Brother Charles H. Ashman reports the work of the Lord at the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, going forward with good spirit and cooperation. The spring communion was attended by over 400 communicants. The pastor received a unanimous call for the twelfth year of service at that place. Brother Ashman speaks of his good fortune in securing a beautiful country home within the city limits, and which he and his good wife have dedicated to the Lord's work.

Brother R. E. Gingrich, pastor of the Fair Haven, Ohio church says there has been no spiritual "depression" in his church. There isn't usually such a depression when the people are well fed spiritually, as these people seem to be. His Bible instruction has proven quite popular and no doubt helpful. Announcement is made of the sermon themes to be used by Dr. L. S. Bauman in his revival to begin July 31.

President E. E. Jacobs writes that the second term of the summer has an enrollment of 219, the largest in history for that period. These together with the still larger enrollment in the first term made the Ashland summer school one of the largest in the state, outside state schools. A new Dean of Women for the school year opening in September is announced in the person of Miss Doris Stout, who comes well equipped and qualified for this position.

The Business Manager has again broken another long silence and gives us a report of the Publication Day Offering, and also of renewals of Evangelist Honor Rolls and of hot weather. We join with him in congratulating and thanking the churches which are standing by us so loyally by maintaining their places on the Honor Roll. Roanoke, Indiana and South Gate, California are new additions to the Honored Class and they deserve special mention for their achievement. Brother S. C. Henderson is pastor at Roanoke and Brother Leo Poleman at South Gate.

AN EMERGENCY APPEAL

This is no time to make an emergency appeal for a special offering, but still you cannot keep quiet and allow the aged members of your own family to starve, can you? That is the situation that is being faced right now. The Old Folks Home at Flora, Indiana, is in need of funds with which to provide the very necessities of life. We have been informed by those charged by Conference with the conduct of this work that the Brethren Home will be completely out of funds by August the first, and there is no other possible way of relieving the situation than by the gifts of Brethren people. The president of the Brethren's Home Board, Dr. J. Allen Miller, made a special appeal for funds some time ago, but there has been no adequate response. Now the treasury is empty, and the larder is all but empty too. What are these old people, dwellers in our Flora Home, going to eat? They are looking to the Matron; the Matron is looking to the Board; the Board is looking to the church; and the church is looking to the members of the congregations.

What shall we do about it? Shall we allow these aged members of our church family to go hungry and uncared for? No self-respecting people would think of doing that. Members of a family will share what they have with other members who may be less fortunate, rather than allow any to starve. That is just what we shall have to do in this case. We will have to share with these aged people. We have pledged ourselves to care for them, and that we must do. It would be nothing less than a disgrace to sit by and ignore their need. Those who have money to share with them should send it to the treasurer, Brother Henry Rinehart, of Flora, Indiana, and those who have no money but have foodstuffs may share that. We hope to have a letter from the Matron, Mrs. Cyrus Myers, next week telling us just what things they most need in the way of foodstuffs. But in the meantime we have no doubt that eggs and butter and potatoes will be very acceptable. Let us take this matter seriously. The honor of the church is at stake as well as the physical well-being of these aged members of our church.

Some Characteristics of the Efficient Christian

An Address by Prof. L. L. Garber, Litt. D.

First and fundamentally the efficient Christian practices the presence of Christ. He makes Christ his constant companion. Henry Drummond narrates a delightful story of a singularly lovable and beautiful Christian girl whom he knew. She was pure, gentle and effectively persuasive. She wore a tiny locket which she never permitted to be opened. She fell ill, the locket was opened, and there was disclosed an image of the Christ with the inscription, "Whom having not seen I love." This companionship with the Christ was the secret of her splendid Christian life, and the source of her strength and power.

Winston Churchill, in that popular novel, "The Crisis," narrates how his hero, Stephen Brice, went up from St. Louis to Freeport, Illinois, to hear the famous debate between Lincoln and Douglass. The magnetism, the personality, the power of Lincoln made a profound and ineffaceable impression on young Brice. Afterward he had strange power with people. He radiated a magnetism and an attractiveness similar to that of Lincoln in his speeches and contacts with men. This spirit of Lincoln in his life made him bold, strong and true to his convictions, and a mighty force with the people who came under the sway of his personality. He was effective because Lincoln was with him.

In a similar way, but to an infinitely greater degree, one who practices the presence of Christ is safeguarded, inspired, and becomes dynamic and effective. In truth such presence is the only certain protective prophylactic against modern temptation. To beat back the almost overwhelming tide of evil suggestion that overflows the youth of today, nothing else certainly prevails. It was never so difficult to keep the mind clean, and the life attuned to high issues as today. Life grows increasingly complex and homogeneous of texture. The cool sequestered paths along which our fathers walked in innocent piety and kept the noiseless tenure of their unoffending way is no more.

Today through the daily press, magazines, books, movies, dances, excursions, the radio and social contacts, the young are literally inundated by a flood of suggestion in the form of attitudes, sentiments, fads, fashions, frivolities, amusements, and what not. Between the evil suggestions which these thrust into the receptive mind of youth and the forces of righteousness, there is a constant battle for the mastery of the spirit-life. Far too often it is a losing battle for the better forces. The things of the Spirit are smothered out, or overwhelmed, or undermined, or gassed by the deluge of environmental suggestion.

Under these circumstances only a great and vital idea as the conscious presence of Christ in the heart is adequate as an expulsive emotional power to keep the heart clean and the purpose high amid the sweltering ocean of modern evil forces. Face to face, heart to heart with Christ, the Christian finds joy, peace, power, effectiveness. He is thus attuned to the better things, insulated against the worse, and prepared for the heroic life. "The hero is the man who is immovably centered," says Emerson. To practice the presence of Christ, to keep him with you constantly, to make him your daily companion and friend,—this is to be immovably centered, and will make one a constructive force in civilization.

Dr. L. L. Garber

The second characteristic of the effective Christian is that he assumes the dignity of divine sonship. He speaks of himself and thinks of himself, the rational genus homo, as divine rather than as a higher animal or evolution of the animal. To him consciousness is more than phosphorescent glow, or a galvanic spasm; and man more than the efflorescence of mud. In short, the "mud philosophy," as Carlyle termed the materialistic philosophy, has only a speculative interest for him. He does not live by it. In fact, no man can. He has learned that in the last analysis, the foundations of science are as nebulous and tentative as those of theology, and that from certain points of view both are incapable of proof. He believes with Tennyson,

"We have but faith, we cannot know;
For knowledge is of things we see;
And yet we trust it comes from Thee;
A beam in darkness, let it grow.

"Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell;
That mind and soul according well,
May make one music as before,
But vaster."

Thus in a case where theoretic proof is at least as inconclusive as in another, he concludes that the wise course is to hold to those beliefs about the ultimate nature of things which have been found essential for the preserving of the higher values of life. Hence he closes his Haeckel, his Huxley, his Darwin, and opens his David, his Tennyson, his Browning. He discards the materialist for the idealist and moralist. In the songs of David he reads, "Thou hast created him a little lower than the angels," and in Browning he reads,

"Thence shall he pass approved
A man, for aye removed,
From the developed brute; a god though in the germ."

(Of course, approval is not here given to the ideal that men may develop into a God, but only that he has a divine relationship, that he is created in the "image and likeness of God.") He hears Emerson saying, "O rich and various man, thou palace of sights and sounds; having in thy brain the geometry of the city of God, and in thy heart, the realms of right and wrong."

With this point of view he lives the life of the real man and not that of the refined animal. He eats to live rather than lives to eat. He knows that the animal appetites and lower pleasures run back to the beast, but that the ideal man moves upward toward the higher life, toward the kingdom, on to the city of God. He dislikes the oft quoted phrase, "Man must first be a good animal." He may say and does say that he must have a good body, or a good animal mechanism through which to work, but never that the animal is he, or that the two are in any way identical. He may use the phraseology of a certain college president. This college president was traveling on a train. When the dinner hour arrived he took his lunch from the shelf and said, "I must feed the animal." He did not feed himself. He could not feed himself on material things, for man infinitely transcends material things. He is above material classification. To all the enticements of material comfort, to all the allurements of the flesh, to all the seductions of material power and prosperity, he responds that man, the real man, lives by joy and hope and faith and God.

Since man is man, a third characteristic of the effective Christian is that he masters the appetites, and is not a slave to pleasure or amusements. Pleasures he has, but they are the higher pleasures of the mind, and those that recreate the body. He makes all his pleasures contribute to his health and efficiency. He puts aside everything that corrupts his tastes, wastes his energies or time, or does not make a positive contribution to human welfare. He knows that many so-called harmless amusements burn up time, dissipate energy, destroy the finer tastes, smoke-screen the moral atmosphere and smother the higher life.

The efficient Christian has no amusements as such, but abundant recreations. Amusement, he knows, is not necessary to the joyous, well-ordered, efficient life. The great grow up and live without them. Amusement in the popular sense is physiologically unnecessary and psychologically harmful. The play spirit may always express itself in useful directions. The sculptor may play at his statue, the painter with his canvass, the poet with his pen. The indulgence in pleasure and the arousing of the emotions for the joy of the amusement is a perversion of nature and a detriment to the fine wholeness of character which belongs to goodness and moral leadership. One thus becomes accustomed to emotions which habitually pass without promptings to deeds. Professor James says, "There is no more contemptible type of human than that of the nerveless sentimentalist who spends his time in a weltering sea of emotions, but never does a manly concrete thing." The psychological purpose of the pleasurable or emotional feeling to one is to instigate to action. When emotions evaporate without action or fuse out into nothing, they break the nexus, or close connection, between emotion and conduct, and thus create the half-man, the hypocrite, the Sunday Christian.

No great civilization was ever made up of or created by this type of man. The Greeks were emotional, but likewise great actors. Many of the great poets were likewise sculptors and military leaders. The Stoics who made Rome illustrious had few amusements and were supreme in their mastery of the animal man. The Puritans of our own age disdained pleasures, lived their beliefs and emotions and preserved that wholeness and effectiveness of character which made them great in the halls of legislation and on the battlefields. The efficient Christian maintains the mastery over himself, a subtle kind of mastery; a mastery of his desires, his aspirations, his longings, so that he can say after the manner of Saint Paul, "Whether I eat or whether I drink, I do all to the glory of" my Christian ideal.

A fourth characteristic of the efficient Christian is that he loves and embodies simplicity, even in a highly organized and artificial society. He is great, according to Emerson, who, "while it is easy to live after the world's opinions, and easy in solitude to live after your own, yet maintains in the midst of the crowd the sweetness and simplicity of solitude." The efficient Christian lives in, and expresses, the simple elemental things of life. "He finds more joy in the unadorned simplicity of a Greek statue than in the gilded gingerbread of a movie theater." The heavens that declare the glory of God, the stars of the midnight, the primeval forest, the wind that will be howling at all hours, and the complaining brook are music and a delight to him. Like Socrates, Cato and Lincoln, he lives simply, scouts luxury and avoids waste.

He has learned that the love of luxury and the pride of waste are always a precursor of the decline of civilization. He remembers that the Hebrew prophets, the great old Greeks, and every type of greatness, has kept aloof from the deadening influence of fashionable routine and wasteful ostentation.

He remembers that while the Roman lived in austere simplicity, he was the ruler of the world and an example worthy of imitation. But when he filled his house with slaves and servants, when he disdained to soil his hands with useful effort, when he wasted the world's wealth in artificial adornment and spent his night in feasting and revelling, his dominion departed and his glory faded. In our passion for luxury and its accompanying waste and strife, the modern prophet finds one of the outstanding signs of modern degradation. Measured in terms of the way we spend our wealth, we are a fallen and an apostate people.

It is a sorry fact that we waste much, perhaps most, of our money and a large part of our time in foolish deference to harmful customs and ignoble fancies. But it is a sadder fact that we worship this sort of life and rate men and women according to its standards,—not according to what they are, nor according to the service they perform, but according to what they have, according to what they waste.

The spirit of this modern idolatry is aptly portrayed in a sonnet by Wordsworth:

O friend, I know not which way I must look
For comfort, being as I am oppressed.
To think that now our life is only dressed
For show; mean handiwork of craftsman, cook,
Or groom! We must run glittering like a brook
In the open sunshine, or we are unblest:
The wealthiest among us is the best;
No grandeur now in nature or in book
Delights us. Rapine, avarice, expense,
This is idolatry; these we adore:
Plane living and high thinking are no more;
The homely beauty of the good old cause
Is gone; our peace, our fearful innocence,
And our religion breathing household laws."

Against this worship of waste and luxury, this lust for the material things of life, this passion for material achievement and material comfort, the efficient Christian must stand staunchly in unaffected simplicity and conscious rectitude.

Lastly, the efficient Christian believes and radiates the doctrine of hope rather than the doctrine of despair. He is none of the "57 varieties" of mechanists, fatalists, determinists, or pessimists. He believes in large possibilities of human improvement and in the relative perfectability of human society. He neither carries up from the lower animal creation some biological-psychological determinism, nor does he draw down out of the higher ether some meta-physical-theological fatalism. Likewise, he is neither a traditional nor an economic determinist. He does not believe that what has been must be, because of a false and narrow view of human nature. He realizes that life has its limitations, but that it has likewise its glorious and most infinite possibilities for change, enlargement and improvement. He has studied some history and has observed how small and insignificant beginnings under the influence of Christianity and the direction of wise education have developed into magnificent movements, bringing hope and happiness to benighted millions. Realizing that man is the crowning expression of the Infinite Creative Energy, who can be understood not only through his Revelation but also through all his works, he studies not only his Bible and history, but art and literature, from which he absorbs the ideals and the "best and happiest thoughts of the best and happiest men." Knowing that the "old order changeth, giving place to new," he believes with Lincoln, that man as well as nations may, under God, have continuous new births and be transformed from character to character.

This does not mean that society can or will be miraculously transformed into a perfect state, but that society has the means in the religion of Jesus Christ through and by which it may gradually improve and advance toward a more and more perfect state. To the efficient Christian all of these pessimistic attitudes are harmful, devitalizing, and destructive of wise aspiration and sane Christian living. He believes that the present order and condition of society is, under God, the direct result of human effort. He believes that under the freedom and liberty which God allows to human personality, we may, by the wise applications of means at our hand, vastly improve our civilization. He believes that by the application of Christianity and the wise adaptation of education to the problems of moral and social betterment, the race may attain a degree of perfection, of happiness, of achievement of which only poets have so far dreamed. To this end, with the equipment and in the spirit herewith suggested, we can make a certain and worthwhile contribution.

Ashland, Ohio.

The Social Life of Jesus

By Dr. William H. Beachler

It would be impossible to estimate the measure of the world's loss because we know so little of the social life of Jesus. Since our information is so very meagre, it is easy to almost entirely overlook the social side of his matchless life. But there was a social side to the life of Jesus. And we do well to try to piece together the mere bits and fragments of information we have, in an endeavor to form as clear and complete conception as possible of what his social life was like.

Great injustice has been done to Jesus as a boy, by those who have pictured him as so different and so superior to other boys and girls of his age that he could find no possible pleasure in mingling with other boys and girls in their innocent games and pastimes. It is natural to feel that in the social life of Jesus as a boy, and Jesus as a man, there was ever and always a proper poise and dignified restraint which kept him far above silliness and giddiness, and the frivolous, just as there was always in his life that wonderful element of kindly consideration for others, refinement, courtesy, and sense of fairness. The boys and girls of Nazareth who loved purity and right, must have delighted to have had the young Jesus as one in their midst. And that he enjoyed games as any normal boy enjoys games, and that he found pleasure in the innocent pranks and merriment of those who were boys and girls with him, there can be no doubt at all. We would not want to think that it was otherwise. All of which means that even as a boy there was a social side to the life of Jesus. The man Jesus who loved to mingle with folks and be with folks, loved as a boy to be with boys and girls. How thrilling and beautiful would be the story of friendships Jesus made with other boys when he was a boy! Jesus as a pal and companion—his dependability, his loyalty, his sympathy, his unselfishness, his honesty, his complete freedom from snobbery—I say, what a wonderful story it would make!

When Jesus became a mature man, fully entered upon his great ministry, his great social instincts did not dry up and die: if anything they became more abounding and acute. Living far above the tendencies of the recluse or the hermit, Jesus was ever to be found among the people. He loved the people and they loved him—the common people. He trod the paths that the multitudes trod. He was among the press. He studied the people. He was conscious of their needs, and problems, and injustices. He was present at a wedding, not to frown upon all that went on there, but by his hallowed presence to bless the occasion. He was happiest when surrounded by little children. He entered the homes of his friends. Truly Jesus was a man of the people and for the people. Sociability reached its highest and best in Jesus of Nazareth. He was at once the most truly sociable man that ever lived. And the surest of all ways for young Christians to enrich their own social natures, at the same time purifying and sanctifying their social contacts, and assuring the worth of their social contribution to their fellowmen is to study the social life of Jesus our Lord and Master and follow in his steps. God endowed each and all with social instincts and capabilities. Those instincts and capabilities can only come to their fullest and best as we yield our lives to the influence of God through Jesus Christ. If we catch his spirit we will choose to "live in a house by the side of the road, and be a friend to man."

Gratis, Ohio.

---

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

---

COWARDLY SURRENDER

Recently a prisoner charged with robbing a Chicago bank of $60,000 had the charge against him dismissed upon request of an assistant state's attorney, upon the plea that two officials of the bank who had identified the accused man as the robber had been under guard since April 29 to prevent their assassination. So long as state authorities lie down before such threats, that long will they have gangsters and the peril to life and property incident to their operations. If there are no laws for dealing with this new form of crime successfully, they should be enacted and, if necessary, the state militia called out for their enforcement.—The Presbyterian Advance.

SALVATION ARMY CUTS SALARIES

Salvation Army officers in the United States will have their salaries cut ten per cent, effective at once, according to an announcement from headquarters of the Army. The cut will affect about four thousand officers. In addition, four of the Army's training schools will be closed in order to meet the financial emergency now upon the organization in its work of caring for the unemployed. The schools to be closed are those in New York, San Francisco, Atlanta, and Chicago.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

PURGE THE MAILS OF SALACIOUS LITERATURE

A friend handed me a book catalogue the other day. Nothing unusual in that. But this one was an unusual catalogue—chiefly on account of its degraded and degrading character. It contained a brief description of twenty-five books and as nearly as I could judge all of them were of the grossest and most vulgar, obscene, false and corrupting character imaginable. If there were publishing houses in Sodom and Gomorrah these must be some of the output. The only ray of light in the whole sordid business is the fact that something in the advertisement indicates that they did not sell as well as expected. The house which sells these books is a New York concern. The mails should be kept clean from such stuff, but alas, there is much of it afloat. A man or woman found with one of these volumes should be regarded as a degenerate. A clean, wholesome, well thought-through and well-written book is one of the richest possessions in the world, but to read a book of the kind I have mentioned here is to get a black spot in the mind which will permanently degrade character unless washed out by the grace of God, which can work miracles.—The Christian Evangelist.

PROHIBITIONISTS TOO COMPLACENT

Professor George Croft Cell of Boston University School of Theology, speaking before the Men's Council of the Methodist General Conference a few days ago had some very wholesome things to say concerning prohibitionists. He said that the wets "have out-thought us, out-generalled us, out-fought us." There is much truth in this. The prohibitionists have been altogether too complacent and have already lost valuable ground. One reason for this complacency has been the feeling that prohibition could not be repealed because there would always be found 13 states to oppose its repeal. The speaker was quite right in saying that although 13 states might prevent repeal they "cannot hold the ideal of the temperance movement in the hearts of the American people." The council adopted his platform for a revitalized temperance crusade and it should be adopted by prohibitionists everywhere.—The Presbyterian Advance.

PRESBYTERIANS ON PROHIBITION

Contrary to the views frequently expressed by wet dailies and popular magazines, Methodists have no monopoly on the use of terse and forceful language with reference to the liquor traffic. In fact the Presbyterians at Denver did a little better in this respect than did the Methodists at Atlantic City. Witness the following:

Concerning a proposed prohibition referendum, the committee declared: "We are opposed to a vote on repeal which provides no constructive substitute, in the conviction that mere repeal will bring back the saloon. We are opposed to state control, holding with the Wickersham report in this respect. We are opposed to the government going into the liquor business, refusing to endure the sight of the American flag floating over the legalized liquor traffic. We heartily approve the work of Amos W. W. Woodcock and his department in the effort to enforce the prohibition laws. We are prepared to look higher and follow the flag upward, but we resolutely refuse to be dragged back to the hole of the pit whence the nation was digged."—The Christian Advocate (Portland).

ADULT EDUCATION IN TURKEY

Last winter the Turkish Government set up a new institution for popular education with the appealing name, "The House of the People." The first of these "houses" was opened in Constantinople in February. It is planned to extend them to twelve cities of the republic. These centers are designed "to promote education, language, history, fine arts, sports, social service, libraries and publications, museums and exhibitions." ... It is suggested that good readers should be appointed in the libraries, reading rooms, clubs, and even some coffee houses. These should read worthwhile books to the people so that the unlettered may enjoy the advantages of education. Once in fifteen days secretaries of this institution will visit the homes of the peasants for the special purpose of writing their letters so that their illiteracy may not be a hindrance to correspondence with their distant friends. This will mean the creation of a better union in the nation." The quotations are from Turkish newspapers.—Congregationalist.

CONFERENCE TRENDS OF THE CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN

(Continued from page 4)

the Conference Program for the presentation and acceptance of expressions of friendship and good will. The Program Committee shall also be authorized to appoint representatives to convey our felicitations and goodwill to the conferences of other branches of the church at such times as seem feasible.

2. That the Annual Conference authorize and encourage the Ministerial and Home Mission Secretary, the regional representatives of the General Ministerial Board, District Boards and local congregations to study the problem of comity and cooperation with other branches of the Brethren people where conditions justify it and where it is mutually agreeable; and to refer their findings to the General Ministerial for approval. The General Ministerial Board may submit these problems to the Standing Committee for advice.

Committee: I. W. Taylor, D. W. Kurtz, A. B. Miller, H. L. Hartsough, M. R. Zigler.

This report becomes all the more significant when its representative character is noted, as will be evident to those who are acquainted with its personnel. The most conservative as well as the most liberal are represented on the committee. It shows that all parts of the Church of the Brethren constituency are making commendable progress toward losing their prejudice for their so-called "Progressive Brethren." It was really a long step to take toward a renewal of fraternal relations and fellowship and we should be ready at the proper time to meet our Brethren half way.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Psalms I

The Psalms are the heart songs of the Saviour. How many times Mary, Jesus' mother, crooned the tunes of the hymn-book of the Hebrews in the ears of the Babe, none of us shall ever know. And those who feel that Jesus never joined in the glad hosannas of the pilgrims who yearly moved from Nazareth to Jerusalem manifest an amazing short-sightedness. It must be remembered that Jesus was human and possessed refined emotions and feelings such as no man has ever possessed. They are revealed in the Psalter. He explicitly states: "All things must be fulfilled which were written in the Psalms concerning me." Luke 24:44.

It was during the Christmas season of 1920 that the writer made the discovery that Jesus loved the Psalms better than any other book of the Old Testament canon. He arrived at the conclusion when he made a study of the Old Testament quotations and allusions which appear in the New Testament. Imagine his surprise when, having carefully enumerated the passages under their proper captions, he saw that Jesus quoted more often from the Psalter than from any other sections of the Scriptures. Our Lord memorized the entire expressions of religious feelings and thought which his Father had revealed in the morning twilight of his Revelation to mankind.

When the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Spurgeon finished his monumental commentary entitled "The Treasury of David,"—an excellent exposition of the Psalms in five volumes—he wrote: "A tinge of sadness is on my spirit as I quit 'The Treasury of David' never to find on this earth a richer storehouse, though the whole palace of Revelation is open to me. Blessed have been the days spent in meditating, mourning, hoping, believing, and exulting with David. Can I hope to spend hours more joyous on this side of the golden gate? The book of Psalms instructs us in the use of wings as well as words; it sets us both mounting and singing." This "tinge of sadness" was reflected in the life of our Lord in every step of his way. His cheer was not the cheery-cheerily of our earth.

Nor is the famous tabernacle evangelist of London alone in his praise of the Psalter. There are others like Perowne who asserted: "No single book of Scripture, not even of the New Testament, has, perhaps, ever taken such hold on the heart of Christendom. None, if we may dare judge, unless it be the Gospels, has had so large an influence in moulding the affections, sustaining the hopes, purifying the faith of the believers." And the mighty Luther joined the careful Perowne in labeling the Psalter as "a Bible in miniature." Truly the Psalms are the nightingales of the Old Testament singing in prophetic ecstasy the melodies of Easter and the sorrows of Gethsemane in the hearts of all Christian believers.

The Psalms are poem-songs treating a wide range of subjects and yet are quite uniform in design. There are didactic, devotional, historical, processional, messianic, etc., types of Psalms. Of these the devotional type is perhaps the most popular in expressing humility, trust, comfort, longing, lament, praise, thanksgiving, adoration, petition, penitence, and what not. They are accompanied with musical terms and directions for the singers. For instance, take one term which has been vague more or less, mostly more, than almost any other occurring in the Davidic hymnology, namely, SELAH. A full paragraph in studying it certainly will not be out of order, will it?

SELAH

Of a certainty, it will be proper to consider the word in its Hebrew original. To the Jews "selah" meant "elevation." It occurs seventy-one times in the Psalms and thrice in Habakkuk 3:3, 9, 13. In the latter instance the word appears in connection with the famous prayer of that book, a prayer set to music by the composer or composers of that day. While absolute certainty cannot be produced relative to the absolute meaning of the term, at least the following opinions ought to be instructive:

1. Amen. "So it is," "the matter is true and right," "thus."
2. Forever. Targum so renders it; likewise Jerome.
3. Pause or Lull in the Music, a sustained musical rest.
4. A Repetition, akin to the repeat marks at the end of a scale.
5. The End of a Stanza, or Strophe, however long or short.
6. A Fortissimo, or playing with extraordinary power.
7. An Obseance, or bending of the body as in worship.
8. A Ritornello, or a recurring symphonic theme.
9. An Orchestral Interlude filling up the Pause (See 3).
10. A Change from Piano to Forte. Louder continuation.
11. Hallelujah or Praise the Lord. See end of Ps. 147.

THE NAMES OF GOD IN THE PSALMS

While the first three psalms of the Psalter generally envision the gist of the entire Hebraic hymnological system in that they treat the subjects of happiness, Christ, and God's Providence, yet the main phrases and principal words for God in the Psalms are interesting. In the entire Psalter:

1. Jehovah occurs 664 times.
2. Adonai occurs 45 times.
3. Elohim occurs 234 times.
4. Eloah occurs 3 times.
5. El occurs 40 times.
6. Elyon occurs 21 times.
7. Shaddai occurs 2 times.

This tabulation given in the Princeton classroom under the wise tutelage of the nestor of the world's linguists—one is tempted to say of all time, because of his remarkable versatility—Dr. Robert Dick Wilson, is perhaps the most reliable in print. There are other usages besides the above, but they are not major usages. God and Christ cannot be measured in terms of names: they are infinitely above the possibilities of human expression and human understanding. However, the Psalmist saw God whole and was glad; we may experience some of that gladness by looking up in a concordance the English equivalents of the above names.

CLASSIFICATION OF THE PSALMS

(By Dr. A. T. Pierson)

(A Convenient and Trustworthy Classification)

- Psalms of the Law (3) 1, 19, 119.
- Psalms of Creation (3) 19, 29, 104.
- Psalms of Curse or Judgment (15) 10, 14, 28, 35, 52, 53, 55, 58, 59, 69, 70, 83, 109, 137, 140.
- Psalms of the Christ or Messianic (16) 2, 16, 22, 24, 40, 41, 45, 68, 69, 72, 89, 97, 102, 110, 118.
- Psalms of Life (6 Personal) 3, 18, 31, 57, 142, 143. (12 National) 44, 60, 68, 78, 81, 105, 106, 107, 114, 126, 129, 136.
- Psalms of the Heart (78)
  1. Ps. of Penitence (7) 6, 32, 38, 51, 102, 130, 143.
  2. Ps. of Sorrow (6) 38, 39, 69, 102, 120, 137.
  3. Ps. of Darkness (9) 42, 43, 74, 75, 77, 78, 79, 80, 88.
  4. Ps. of Faith (11) 23, 27, 31, 37, 49, 56, 61, 62, 121, 123, 131.
  5. Ps. of Prayer (13) 6, 10, 13, 17, 20, 25, 26, 54, 64, 86, 122, 132, 141.
  6. Ps. of Worship (28) 21, 30, 33, 47, 48, 63, 65, 66, 67, 84, 95, 96, 98, 100, 101, 108, 111, 112, 113, 116, 117, 133, 134, 138, 144, 48, 150.
  7. Ps. of Vision or Special Revelation of God (5) 4, 34, 84, 91, 123.
- Psalms of Jehovah (38)
  1. God's Eternity (1) 90.
  2. God's Natural Perfections—Omniscience, Omnipresence, Omnipotence (1) 139th.
  3. God's Universal Sovereignty (12) 46, 75, 76, 82, 93, 97, 99, 115, 124, 125, 135, 146.
  4. God's Moral Perfections (9) 5, 7, 9, 11, 13, 50, 71, 76, 94.
  5. God's Providence—General and Special (7) 18, 25, 31, 104, 127, 128, 147.
  6. God's Grace (5) 36, 85, 86, 103, 130.
  7. God's General Excellence and Worth (3) 8, 92, 145.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Matt. 9:28, 29—"And when he was come into the house, the blind men came to him: and Jesus saith unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto him, Yea, Lord. Then he touched their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you." Moffatt reads, "When he went indoors the blind men came up to him, and Jesus asked them, 'Do you believe I can do this?' They said, 'Yes, sir.' Then he touched their eyes and said, 'As you believe, so your prayer is granted.'"

"According to your faith." Moffatt says, "As you believe." These are very common expressions, and often heard without any regard to whom one's faith must rest upon, or upon what. As though faith was independent, in religion, of either WHOM or WHAT. It should be noticed in this account, that before Jesus considered the claims of the two blind men, he asked, "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" Evidently, Jesus himself, was to be the object of their faith. And that is the sublime thought of the entire New Testament teaching. With all due respect for "the boys who like to make creeds," and for the other fellow to accept, New Testament faith centers upon "Whom," instead of "What." Your WHAT does not concern me, unless spoken by the great I AM.

If the church is losing her power in the world, it is because she is losing her FAITH in God, and in Christ, and in the Bible. This is the great Trinity which stands or falls together. If the church is to regain her lost power, (she alone is to blame) then she must RETURN TO HER PRIMITIVE FAITH. "According to your faith, be it unto you," is yet true. That the church of today has not the strong, masculine, and conquering faith of the church of the first century, must be admitted. The Acts of Apostles gleams with heroic incidents of church leaders who were set on fire in directing all men to the once dead, but NOW the resurrected, and LIVING CHRIST. Paul cried out, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." Yes, "According to your faith, be it unto you." In Paul's day after describing the Christian's armor he says, "Above all, taking the shield of faith" (Eph. 6:16). But in our day the efficient "SHIELD OF FAITH" has too often been exchanged for a flimsy rationalistic philosophy, which has in it neither a dead nor a living Christ, but a "Jesus of beautiful character." And there is nothing in such a plea to stir the soul to deeds of daring and heroism. All that can be said about a church floundering in such a sea is, "According to your faith, be it unto you."

The importance of the value of faith in "doing the unheard of," is strikingly set forth in Heb. 11. Here is a chapter in "religious patriotism." What the story of Bunker Hill, Valley Forge, Nathan Hale, and Yorktown is to American liberty, so the stories of God's heroes are to the accomplishing of the "impossible." And it was all "According to someone's faith." "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became the heir of righteousness which is by faith." "Being warned of God," he was "moved with fear." That's the kind of faith that counts—the kind that MOVES MEN to do the impossible. Anybody can do the commonplace things. Having a faith to preach unusual doctrines, and when church people warned men like Swihart, and Brown, and Bashor, not to do so, resulted in the organization of many a church. "According to your faith, be it unto you." Again: "By faith, Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." It is but fair to my theme to say that present-day rationalism would have stumbled at both of these commands of God. But God's heroes had a faith which led them to accept a challenge like that. God had set the goal, and would he not help his faithful leaders to reach it? Yes, to the extent that church leaders lose faith in the divine Son of God; that he is not what he claimed to be, the only begotten Son of God; and cease to plead with men to return unto the Lord, who will have mercy upon them, and to our God who will abundantly pardon them, the chain in the divine economy of grace is broken, and its power is gone. Holding up a broken chain as an anchor in the time of storm will not appeal to earnest souls.

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.

MAGAZINE SECTION

M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR,
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

Why Our Men's Bible Class is a Success

The story of a large New England class where the Word is faithfully taught

By Louis Marini

One who takes his seat in the auditorium of the First Presbyterian church, Quincy, Massachusetts, any Sunday morning at nine thirty and listens to J. Paul Foster teach the Bible will learn, in part, at least, why that church has one of the largest and most regular Men's Bible Classes in New England. An average of 263 men, old and young, came Sunday after Sunday to hear what the Bible has to say and teach during the period from September, 1930, to June, 1931.

Mr. Foster, in addition to being the teacher of this Men's Bible Class, is a commercial organization secretary. He believes in putting business methods into church work, and religion into his business activities. When he organized the Men's Class four years ago few had faith that it would continue long because of several previous failures, and only one or two shared his belief that the class would grow to its present proportions.

The class was organized March 15, 1927, at the pastor's home. The plan was outlined at that time, and twenty-five men agreed to support the experiment for three months until the end of June. At that time the class would adjourn for the summer with the understanding that it would be resumed in September only if there was a definite, strong demand for it.

The first Sunday, March 20, 1927, twenty-three of the twenty-five members appeared.

The business-Bible man then proceeded to give a business talk on the spot. He said he was accustomed to business methods, and that meant when a man promised a thing he would live up to his obligations. Mr. Foster saw no reason why Christian churchgoers should not do as well as the business man. Indeed, he offered to resign right there unless, with the class members, promises were sacred obligations.

A new spirit fired the men. The class continued to the end of June, and the total attendance for the period was 557, or an average of 37 men for each of the fifteen Sundays.

Of course the class resumed in September, and the average attendance figures for the four winters are as follows: 10, 138, 170, 263. The best attendance this year was on March 1, when 367 men were present. The session this year with the smallest attendance was on February 15, when 205 men were present.

These figures, however, hardly tell the entire story. When the class began, most of the men attending were members of the First Presbyterian church. At the present time they come from all sections of the city, its suburbs, and from many other places in Massachusetts. There are eight men on the mailing list who attend regularly from adjoining states. A census taken last year showed that sixty per cent of the men attending did not belong to any church.

"What is the secret of the success of this Bible Class?" "What is the compelling force which binds the men together?" and "What does this Bible Class offer to attract such a following?" are questions often asked.

Many studies have been made of its work by various groups and individuals. The best, however, is contained in the following summary:

1. The class is a genuine Bible study group. The only lure offered is the simple assurance that for one hour each Sunday morning the class will apply itself to an uninterrupted study of the Bible and a systematic searching out of its teachings. The class is not a forum or debating club. "Popular" topics of the day are not discussed in the class, neither is any entertainment, as such, provided. It is strictly a Bible study group. It is interesting to note that the teaching period of a session is fifty minutes, and that the teacher holds his audience during the entire time gripped by his presentation of a Bible subject. There is no discussion. The Bible's teachings are unmarred by the presenting of varying human "interpretations of life."

When Mr. Foster stands up he is ready with his lesson, upon which he has spent three or four evenings in research and study. Every detail is ready in his mind, and he presents only what the Bible teaches on the subject. Undoubtedly one secret of Mr. Foster's ability as a teacher is the fact that his father was a clergyman, the Rev. James M. Foster, for thirty-eight years pastor of the Second Reformed church, Boston, who together with his mother imparted to his son a deep faith, and love of the Scriptures.

2. A second reason for the power of the class is that the Bible is recognized as the Word of God, and so taught, and its teachings are respected as authoritative and final in religion.

3. The great outstanding feature of the class, of course, is that continual effort is made to seek God's guidance. Therefore, God has blessed it.

4. Sound business methods are used. For instance: a man who attends is expected to pay for what he gets; not in money, but in enthusiasm whenever he is talking about the class, in regular attendance, and in bringing each month at least one new friend to class. Membership is available to any man who feels the need of fellowship in the deep common interests, provided he does not neglect his own church; and the records show that two out of every three visitors become regular attendants, and come back with friends.

Each Sunday the men sign attendance cards. When a man has attended two sessions in any season, he is placed on the class mailing list for that year. Incidentally, a new mailing list is built up each year, which insures that only active interested men find places on it. The mailing list last season contained 541 names—the largest yet.

Every two weeks a mimeographed bulletin, gotten up in an attractive form and giving information about the class, is sent to all on the mailing list. In this way the class as a whole is kept informed of what is going on and of the progress being made on the year's objectives. Also twice each year every man on the mailing list is visited at his home, and the visitor is instructed to confine the conversation to class subjects and to be certain that the one visited is told about what the class is doing and is urged to take a larger part in the work. Of course all suggestions secured as to how to make the class work more effective are brought back to the Executive Committee for consideration.

To give definiteness to its activities, and to set a goal, the class establishes each year a "Program of Work." The several points in the program are kept before the class, and systematically mention is made of the progress attained toward accomplishing each. The "Program of Work" for the 1931-32 season is:

1. To continue our study of the Bible. The class was organized for study of the Bible; and it adheres strictly to its purpose. The only lure held out is the attraction of the Bible.

2. To have the church auditorium filled with men at the class sessions held during the year. The auditorium seats only 340. Last year our average attendance each Sunday was 263.4 men.

3. To carry on a special automobile service for those who otherwise cannot attend the class.

4. To continue the development of our Men's Chorus.

5. To administer the Emergency Fund of the class.

6. To establish permanent office headquarters for the class.

7. To encourage attendance in the Sunday school, the Men's Bible Class again offers to reward in some tangible way every boy or young man who attends his class

(Continued on page 15)

CAPTURING AND HOLDING A SCHOOL'S INTEREST

(Continued from last week)

One year we used the following method to help our missionary collection. Brand new bills (one ten, two fives, several twos, and several ones) were attractively arranged on a large sheet of card board and shown to the school for several Sundays while the matter was being developed. As the result of an offer of a friend of the school, any class in which every member made a missionary contribution was given a $10.00 bill to add to their total. If all but one member contributed, a $5.00 bill was given; if all but two members, a $2.00 bill; and if all but three members, a $1.00 bill. We had the best missionary offering in years.

Our school closed two months during the summer, so we try to make the last Sunday before vacation an interesting one. One year we ended by all the school holding hands around the room and singing, "Bless be the tie that binds." Then everyone present was given a little round-cornered card on which was neatly printed "A Memory Verse while we are absent one from the other." It read:

"Cause me to hear thy lovingkindness in the morning: for in thee do I trust: cause me to know the way wherein I shall walk: for I lift up my soul unto thee" (Psalm 143:8). Any member not present on the last Sunday received a memory verse card by mail with a short letter from the superintendent. When the school met again in the fall, the memory verse was called for, and most of us I think, got it pretty firmly fixed in our minds.

Perhaps as interesting as anything attempted was the method of teaching the school the books of the New Testament. It started one Sunday by the superintendent saying "Come next Sunday and tell me the name of a book in the New Testament written by a doctor." When the question was put the next Sunday it brought out, of course, the answer, "Luke!"

Then the number of chapters in the book was asked for, and the assistant superintendent gave the key word, and some older scholar read the key verse. All this was noted on the blackboard in a prepared place.

Then probably the superintendent would say, "Next Sunday be ready to tell the name of a New Testament book containing the words 'the kingdom of heaven' thirty-two times. This brought out 'Matthew,' and was set up on the blackboard; with the number of chapters, key word, and key verse.

Perhaps next a book containing ten sermons would be asked for, and "Acts" would be set up on the board.

Books were never called for in their order, but after we had a group of half a dozen or so set up on the board we would cover the board and the school would try to repeat them without seeing them. After another group was set up, we would cover the board again and try repeating both groups.

By vacation time we had the whole twenty-seven books before us, with all the information about each and when we parted for the summer, each one was given a little slip on which was printed the whole layout as on the blackboard. This was for home use and home study.

The conditions in our church were such we could not expect to have a very large Sunday school so we aimed to have a good school regardless of numbers. Our motto had to be "quality not quantity."—Sunday School Times.

New Haven, Connecticut.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON at the Family Altar With Thoburn C. Lyon

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS (Lesson for August 7)

Lesson Text: Ex. 20:1-11; Golden Text: Deut. 6:5

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

Duties to God. Ex. 20:1-11

There are two lessons on the Ten Commandments, centering around the two natural divisions of the commandments themselves: Duties to God, and Duties to Man. It is well to remember, however, that these are not two separate subjects, but have each a close and intimate relationship with the other. These are old familiar verses, but the so-called Christian world has never yet learned to keep them and fulfill their reasonable duties to their God. Let us especially apply v. 2 to our own lives: Our God has delivered us from the realms of Satan and the bondage of sin. In so doing he has shown himself strong, able to save to the uttermost, and we should fall before him in adoration, with thanksgiving.

TUESDAY

Idolatry Forbidden. Deut. 4:15-24

The burden of this passage is against the making and worshipping of any graven image. Jesus taught, however, that the imagery of our thoughts is as real as the more tangible things of life, and we must see to it that we do not set up within the sanctuaries of our minds any image which shall in any way stand before God. Fire is a most apt symbol of our God: purifying, enlightening, consuming the dross and leaving the good still more refined. Let us guard our thoughts well, lest all be consumed.

WEDNESDAY

The Teaching of Monotheism. Deut. 6:1-9

In the land of Egypt which they had just left; in the pagan lands through which they had come; and in the promised land to which they went, there was an endless multiplicity of gods. It was to guard them from just such an error that they were reminded again and again that "the Lord our God is one Lord." Today we have for the most part become accustomed to accept this belief, but we need to give special emphasis to v. 5, which Jesus quoted, and v. 7. If this last verse were practised in any degree at all, even in the Christian homes of the world, conditions would be vastly different from what they are today. God help us to love the Lord in the whole-hearted way he has taught us, and to teach our children to do likewise!

THURSDAY

Rewards of Obedience. Ex. 19:1-6

There is no promise in the Bible that is not conditioned upon our own obedience to God's expressed will. God here made a wonderful promise to the Israelites, but it was conditioned upon their obedience. God has made us a promise that is almost the same, word for word (1 Pet. 2:9). Let us pray for grace that we may keep his covenant, that we may obey his voice indeed, and that we may walk worthy of the high position to which he has called us.

FRIDAY

The Supreme Choice. Josh. 24:19-28

How we still need the warnings which Joshua gave his people here! We need to be reminded of the penalty of turning away from God, and of our own weakness without him. We need some Elijah to cry out: "How long do ye limp back and forth between two opinions, serving now one, now the other?" Oh, let us put away the strange gods that are among us, and incline our hearts unto the Lord God of Israel!

SATURDAY

The Call to Worship. Ps. 96:1-13

True worship may be called the central theme of the week's lesson. It is not so much that God craves honor for himself, as that he desires a right and loving attitude on the part of his people in order that he may fellowship with them and aid them. If we read this psalm prayerfully, surely we must feel within our hearts the call to worship and bow down before the Lord our Maker.

SUNDAY

Spiritual Aspiration. Ps. 19:7-14

How we ought to praise God for his wonderful word! As we read vs. 7-10, the heart of every Christian must echo, "Amen!" Verse 11 beautifully sums up the twofold purpose of God's word, and vs. 12-14 might well be our prayer for the day. There is, perhaps, no higher spiritual state to which we may aspire than that described in v. 14. May every thought and deed of our whole beings be such that the God who is our strength and our Redeemer can come in unto us and sup with us in blessed communion until that day when we shall see him face to face!

E. M. RIDDLE,
President
Warsaw, Indiana

F. C. VANATOR,
Associate
Peru, Indiana

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK

C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBull Ave., South Bend, Ind.

GLADYS M. SPICE,
General Secretary
and
Treasurer

2301 13th St., N. E.,
Canton, Ohio

How to Organize a Junior Society

By Jessie Chapin

1. Leadership.
  - a. Junior Christian Endeavor offers an opportunity for service that will benefit the church and enrich the leader's own life. The superintendent should be a consecrated man or woman who knows the ways of children, who knows Christian Endeavor, or is willing to learn.
  - b. Secure a committee from Senior Endeavor, and train assistants.
  - c. Work out a plan in cooperation with the pastor.
  - d. Announce the meeting through Sunday school and classes of Junior age, nine to twelve.
  - e. Parents as well as children must be interested.

The International Society of Christian Endeavor will send an organization packet containing a constitution, pledge-card, and other practical helps.

Several weeks or months of preparation are necessary before children understand the pledge thoroughly enough to sign it.

Parents are expected to signify their consent, and willingness to help the child keep the pledge.

2. Officers and Committees.
  - a. President, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer.
  - b. Lookout, prayer meeting, social, missionary committees. Other committees as needed.

- c. Provide a class in "The Junior Text-Book" or use the leaflets. Much guidance by the superintendent is necessary at this age. She must plan and suggest; yet only through the child's own activity does he get the desired training.
3. Program. Get a Junior program chart from your district or State Junior superintendent. Then determine goals for your society for the year. The suggested goals may be changed to fit the needs of each society.
- a. Worship service in every weekly prayer meeting, conducted by the Juniors.
- b. Enroll the children in the Quiet Hour.
- c. Define memory work.
- d. Use of Junior Christian Endeavor covenant or its equivalent.
- e. Every Junior trained in participation and leadership, prayer meeting programs prepared in advance.
- f. Monthly consecration meeting.
- g. Increase in society membership.
- h. Program of recreation, reaching non-members as well as members.
- i. Subscriptions to The Junior Christian Endeavor World. Special rates for clubs of ten.
- j. Monthly missionary meeting. Study of home and foreign mission books. Gifts and service to missions through your denominations.
- k. Cooperation with district and State Christian Endeavor unions. Attendance at rallies and conventions. Observance of Christian Endeavor Week.—From C. E. World. Spokane, Washington.

study, in contact with peoples of another race where customs are strange, where the Scriptures must be translated and interpreted in letter and through human life; where Christian communities must be begun, schools organized, hospitals established, churches founded, the processes of real civilization developed. A study of these lands reveals old religions declining; nationalism, communism and other modern forms of human expression interesting and stirring the people into new life. To see the needs of these lands and the missionary approach to them is to visualize Christianity's great place in the world, directed to the childhood of the world-neglected; to the womanhood of the world-burdened; to the manhood of the world-misled and undeveloped. It is in such a pursuit that one learns to pray as he faces tasks which are impossible of doing by mere human skill.

Study the missionary. He compares favorably in intelligence, devotion, spiritual power, with any other individual or group of followers of Jesus. He has a high calling. The missionary is our better self, carrying on for us. He has gone from our homeland, our home church, our home center. He is still part of us.

Give a Rightful Share

Do not give all to foreign missions, not even all of your benevolences. There are other claims upon you as Methodists, as Christians—claims at your very door, in your home, in your church—approved by the Church to which you have given allegiance. Be generous with these interests which have a claim upon you as Christians and as Methodists. Give a share—a rightful share—to the work of foreign missions. Give in prayer and in love for those who have left home and kindred, many of whom today are serving under the stress of world conditions which requires faith and courage equal to any epoch of the Christian era. Give in the light of the young Church in foreign fields passing through unusual trials, keeping back the encroaching tides of atheistic and materialistic movements which bode ill for the whole world.

There are those who have given, many liberally, whose income is seriously reduced or temporarily cut off. One's possessions may be taken away, his prayer life never. If gifts must decrease, let prayers increase; substitute prayer for the tithe. Maintain the spiritual glow. We are followers of him who leads the only spiritual movement that is destined for world-redemption—satisfying, complete, final. We are his co-workers.—Pacific Christian Advocate.

HOLY SPIRIT AND PERSONALITY

If you ask how the Holy Spirit can dwell within us and work through without destroying our personality, I cannot tell. How can the electric current fill and transform a dead wire into a live one, which you dare not touch? How can a magnetic current fill a piece of steel and transform it into a mighty force which by its touch can raise tons of iron, as a child would lift a feather? How can fire dwell in a piece of iron until its very appearance is that of fire, and it become a firebrand? I cannot tell.

Now, what fire and electricity and magnetism do in iron and steel the Holy Spirit does in the spirits of men who believe on Jesus, follow him wholly, and trust him intelligently. He dwells in them, and inspires them, till they are all alive with the very life of God.—Pentecostal Herald.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.,
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

"Do Not Give All to Foreign Missions!"

By John R. Edwards, Corresponding Secretary, Board of Foreign Missions

Do not make all your contributions to foreign missions! Not even all your benevolent contributions.

There are other claims upon you as Methodists, and as Christians—claims which are approved by the Church of which you are a part.

Do not give all to foreign missions! One may become missionary-minded, denominationally missionary-minded, or broad-minded. There is a selfish piety, a zeal that savors of selfishness for a cause or an interest to a degree that loses the essence power and strength of undefiled religion. This is not the time for it, nor the place for it. It is rather a time for service—service broad and generous.

The missionary group itself responds to such a motive. It stands ready to help anywhere. Test the missionary and he will respond to the limit of time and strength. He will press the claims of Jesus wherever opportunity is given.

"Missionary Everywhere"

Are missionaries judged too aggressive, selfishly solicitous of the needs and claims of one cause? They are heavily burdened with a knowledge of the world's needs, but motives must be clear, the spirit must be missionary everywhere.

When in cultivation of the home field, a foreign representative goes forth planting, watering, reaping. In so doing he may not tramp out the vintage of another set of workers. By the process of his well-trained, well-informed life, he is helping the home churches. He is carrying an atmosphere of sunshine and a sprinkling of the Water of Life which he brings fresh-flowing from his spiritual prayer life of Asia, Africa, Europe or Latin America. The messenger of foreign missions to the home church does not seek to take away that part of God's tithe which is for investment at home, but only a just share of the total giving which the foreign fields need and merit, in the light of a balanced program.

Foreign missions should have a share—a rightful share. A proper understanding of the work will show that it should have a real share, not a mere pittance or a leftover portion when all other claims are satisfied.

Visualizing Need

It is like a romance to follow the life of some devoted missionary—across the seas, into uncharted communities, in language

THE CONQUEROR

By Ruth Waymire

War came stalking out of the East
On a hideous beast
Called Greed.

And with him flocked his dreadful hosts,
Pestilence, hunger and famine ghosts.
But by his side of world-wide fame
Death, the fateful conqueror came.

Now who is the winning side today?
And who will pay
The price?

'Tis the hosts of helplessly bound mankind,
Struggling and battling, pity blind;
Who will pay the price with blood—and then—

'Tis death will be conquering at the end.

Then who is the one who benefits?
There's never quits
With him.

Ah, he's never satisfied with a life.
He must have all—with bullet or knife
He strikes—and takes his fill of gore.
So Death will be conqueror evermore—

Till the Prince of Peace shall come again,
Of warring men
Of earth!

This horrible monster with merciless hand
Will continue to conquer on sea and land.
Ah look to the Day free from grief and pain

When the Master of All shall descend and reign.
Englewood, Ohio.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The enrollment for this second term is by far the largest in our history, 219 i. e. largest for the second summer term. If I am not much mistaken Ashland has about the largest summer school in Ohio, outside of the state schools.

Now, bigness is not necessarily goodness, but when a school builds up on merit and merit alone, it is encouraging. But the really gratifying thing is that we have more to work with, and therefore can set higher standards. Also in this time of depression, the financial income is vital. No one quite knows how we could meet standards IF IT WERE NOT FOR THE SUMMER SESSIONS. Please bear this fact in mind. This also applies to our Saturday courses.

However, the school year will be well towards its close when this is read by the readers of this paper, when we will have three weeks' vacation some of which is at the time of our National Conference.

The fall semester opens Tuesday, September 13th. Advanced enrollments indicate the usual number of students, which however is, of course, problematic.

I am at work on a brief history of higher education in the Brethren Church for the program at Conference most of which revolves around this institution. I have found the early history most interesting and it is astonishing how higher education in general has changed since that far-off date. In faculty training, standardizing agencies, physical equipment such as laboratories and library, number and variety of courses, record-keeping, and so-called extra-curricular activities, there have been the most remarkable advances. I doubt whether there have been greater advances made in any other field of human activity. When one thinks of the ox-cart and now the automobile, the old post-rider, and now the telephone, one sees no greater change than has taken place in the field of education.

The Dean of Women

It is a satisfaction to announce that Miss Doris Stout, A. B., Ashland, 1926, was elected to the position of Dean of Women and Associate in Elementary Education at the spring meeting of the Board of Trustees.

Miss Stout is a member of our congregation at Pleasant Hill, Ohio, where she has been teaching in the public schools. This past year she spent in Ohio State University where she takes her Master's degree. Since Mrs. Leslie resigned a year ago last January, Miss Lulu L. Wood, librarian, has served in a most acceptable manner, a position which she assumed only on my request.

Miss Stout is a member of the church, and with her experience her as a student, as a teacher in the public schools, and with her work at the University, she seems to be admirably suited for the place. To be Dean of Women here takes a great degree of tact, patience, and an exemplary life. Former students and those contemplating entering may look forward to a pleasant year at the Girls' Dormitory.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

FAIR HAVEN CHURCH, WEST SALEM, OHIO

It is a pleasure to write again in behalf of the Fair Haven church. Since we are interested primarily in things spiritual, we are glad to report that there has been no "depression" here. That, I am sure, is the most interesting and hopeful item that shall appear in this report. To be sure there are those who are like the waves of the sea, that fluctuate with the tide and are tossed with the wind, but they are found in every church. However the majority of our members are faithful and loyal to the church and to the Lord.

Since the last writing many things have transpired. A very helpful and instructive week of pre-Easter services was enjoyed at this church. In May we enjoyed our spring communion services, with about eighty members participating. Considering the fact that we have been afflicted with much sickness, this was very gratifying. One of our most loyal families in the church has had much sickness and misfortune. The mother in the home was in an accident and received a compound fracture of her limb. Since she could not come to the mid-week prayer and Bible study she asked the pastor to present the studies to her in her home. Just that week diphtheria broke out in her home and since then they have been deprived of Sunday school and church attendance as well.

We are very proud (with righteous pride) of our mid-week prayer and Bible study. Our attendance has been most gratifying. It averages from twenty-five to forty weekly. We are studying the book of Daniel. So interesting have been the studies to some of the members that, although they work in the harvest field until dark, yet they come without supper and in work clothes. How is that for loyalty and interest in the Word? The pastor uses as a basis for the study, in addition to the Bible, his classroom notes which he received last winter in Ashland Seminary under the tutelage of Prof. McClain. This in itself should be an incentive for our young people to go to our own school, especially our Seminary, if they are interested in knowing God's Word. The men's glee club from Ashland College gave a very interesting concert here in May. It was well received by the audience. Many requests were made for their return next year.

We are very glad to announce through these columns that beginning July 31 we shall have two and a half weeks of intensive evangelistic services here at the Fair Haven church. Dr. Louis S. Bauman will be our evangelist. We feel fortunate in securing the services of so capable and successful an evangelist. We covet the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of this work. May the Lord have a great victory in this field. With Dr. Bauman will be his son Paul, his daughter Iva, perhaps, who will both assist in the song service. We invite our neighboring brethren to join us in these services. Below is a list of subjects which Dr. Bauman will use.

Sunday, July 31 (A. M.) Is the Old Book True?

Sunday, July 31 (P. M.) God's Terrible Seven-fold Judgment Upon the World.

Monday, August 1. Jesus Christ; Was He Very God?

Tuesday, August 2. The Devil; His Origin, Purpose, and Destiny.

Wednesday, August 3. Why Doesn't God Kill the Devil?

Thursday, August 4. The Difficulties of Unbelief.

Friday, August 5. Counting the Cost.

Saturday, August 6. Nearing the Hour for the Midnight Cry.

Sunday, August 7 (A. M.) "In Christ Jesus."

Sunday, August 7 (3:00 P. M.) "The King of the North," or, Russia in prophecy.

Sunday, August 7 (evening) "Caught Up," or, The Coming of Christ for his Church.

Monday, August 8. The Second Coming of Christ.

Tuesday, August 9. Clear Tokens of Our Lord's Return.

Wednesday, August 10. Appointments God Makes with Men.

Thursday, August 11. "Away with Him! Away with Him!"

Friday, August 12. Sowing and Reaping.

Saturday, August 13. "Playing the Fool."

Sunday, August 14 (A. M.) Fighting the Devil.

Sunday, August 14 (3:00 P. M.) Jonah, the Sign of the Jew.

Sunday, August 14 (evening). Contemplating the Cross.

Monday, August 15. Unpardonable Sin.

Tuesday, August 16. "Mene! Mene! Tekel! Upharsin!"

Wednesday, August 17. "What Then Shall I Do with Jesus?"

R. E. GINGRICH, Pastor.

TURLOCK, CALIFORNIA

It has been some time since we have sent a report to the Evangelist relative to the work in the Turlock church. We always note with interest the reports of activities of other churches in the brotherhood, and we feel we should do our share toward contributing to the "News from the Field," trusting that the progress of our work will be read with interest also.

Few churches, and particularly small ones, are breaking records along lines of growth these days and our church is not an exception. The field here is hard, perhaps one reason being, too many churches for a small community, but as we read of the work in other fields we note that there is no evidence of rapid growth anywhere. Be that as it may, we do praise God for the way he has blessed us, when economic conditions are at such a low ebb; people generally are so depressed and such a spirit of unrest is manifested among all classes! The greater number of our people have endeavored to work with a unity of purpose making real sacrifices, but happy to do it, if we can be of service to our Lord through our church. Faithfulness on the part of a flock is always an encouraging factor to a pastor, but after all why should we not be faithful to one who earnestly tries to emulate the spirit of the Master, in feeding the flock upon the pure milk of the Word and by showing such untiring interest in the care of his people. We are all truly thankful for our pastor, Rev. N. W. Jennings, who has been such a kind under-shepherd for almost five years. These few years have had their ups and downs but they have been good years and we feel that many marks of progress have been made. Perhaps we have not accomplished all we had hoped for, but were we entirely satisfied there would be nothing to strive for.

It no doubt will be of interest to the brotherhood to know that at our business meeting, held the first of the month, this church gave Brother Jennings a unanimous call for another year. Due to the adverse circumstances into which many of our members have been placed, it became necessary to offer a lower salary than we feel Brother Jennings to be worth. A condition that exists in other lines of work as well, and to supplement this proposition we expressed our willingness, in the event he accepted the call, to grant him an occasional furlough to do evangelistic work. He has felt for some time a definite urge to get back into this line of work and we are not so selfish as not to pray that there may be some openings for him, especially do we pray that whatever he is led to do, that he may be in the will of the Lord.

I should like to mention a few of the outstanding achievements of the last few months. As our communications are sent in not more than twice a year, it is necessary to go back a little farther than we would if we wrote more often.

In preparation for our spring communion Brother Jennings in a few well arranged discourses paved the way for the Love Feast which was held on April twenty-ninth. Rev. J. Wesley Platt assisted in conducting, what proved to be a very blessed service. I am sure all good Brethren will agree, that when we follow the example and command of our Lord in the fellowship of the Love Feast our souls are built up and developed in Jesus Christ.

May twenty-second stands out as our homecoming day. Several weeks previous to the date set, efforts were put forth to get in touch with as many non-resident members, and those who had drifted away, spiritually from the church, as was possible with a view to a revival of fellowship. Services were planned for the entire day, dinner being served after the morning service, by the ladies of the W. M. S. Dinner was served to one hundred and twenty-five people and a most enjoyable time was spent around the tables. Visitors from the other churches in the district were present, also the Rev. Roger Darling of San Jose. Brother Darling gave messages in the morning and evening. Preceding the afternoon message, which was brought by Brother Platt, short greetings were given by Brothers Harley Wolford, C. E. Johnson and Kenneth Ronk. These men are or have, at some time, been identified with the work of the Turlock church, so it was a real privilege to renew old ties. Much could be said about the results of the fellowship of the day but space will not permit. Our efforts were worth while and no doubt the day will be long remembered by all.

A union revival campaign in which most of the churches participated, was held in our city during the month of June. Rev. W. W. Shannon of Oakland, the evangelist, was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Mills of Los Angeles. The campaign was carried on in a large tent that would seat approximately a thousand people. During the entire four weeks there was a very good attendance, although the weather was uncomfortably warm. There was an absence of the unsaved in the attendance but a few were won to Christ and there were many reconsecrations. Rev. Shannon is a fearless speaker and is faithful to the Lord in preaching the Bible. It was said by many that they felt he was superior in his interpretation of the Word. Such men always build up those who are in the faith.

As I close this article I should like to ask an interest in your prayers for the work here. We have a faithful earnest group of people but the way seems hard.

The various auxiliaries of the church are doing a fine work. I would especially like to mention the W. M. S. which has been such a help to the church in a material way. Spiritually it is doing a real service, their devotional meetings being of the highest type.

Several of our members have been under the hand of affliction for months and have been kept away from services. We are praying that, if God wills, they may be restored to health and may be able to carry on with the church again. May the hand of God guide us and may our faith and trust in him never waver, realizing always that he will care for his own and that he doeth all things well.

MRS. CLARA LUNDAHL.
Church Correspondent.

A BRIEF NOTE

After two weeks and one day in the hospital, with an operation, I am now at home recuperating. The prospect is good for my entire recovery. I did not know that Mrs. Wood was making this so widely known, until I was receiving post cards and friendly greetings from various sources, also mention in the Evangelist. I hereby express sincere appreciation, for all prayers and fraternal greetings from all. Through the power and mercy of our Lord we expect to attend the conference at Winona, as usual.

Please continue to remember us at the throne of grace, and especially our Bible conference, with Brother Mayes, from July 31st to August 7th.

Yours in his Name,
L. G. WOOD.

OUR SECOND TRIP TO VIRGINIA

We were home only two weeks after closing our campaign in Buena Vista, Virginia. Following the same trails of the first trip of seventeen hundred miles, we stepped in our little Whippet again for a round trip of two thousand miles. This time in addition to my son, Joseph Walter and myself, we took with us Mrs. Bowman and my little grand-daughter, Arlyne Bowman, eight years old, and who never saw a mountain. The first day we drove through Baltimore, Washington and about thirty miles beyond Washington, to my sister's daughter and spent the night there at Manasses, Virginia. At Manasses we took my oldest brother, Henry, and his only child Daisy, drove by the Luray Caverns, over the Blue Ridge Mountains, then over another group of mountains. We struck the Shenandoah Highway at New Market, Virginia, eighteen miles north of Harrisonburg, where I was born and partly raised. We drove through our home town and went east ten miles to my brother Jacob Bowman's, left my oldest brother there, drove a mile to see our little granddaughter, Blanche Hand, who is spending the summer with my wife's cousin; then we drove to my wife's only sister, Mrs. Sally Shoemaker, near Mt. Crawford, Virginia, who lost her husband only a few months ago.

The next morning we picked up Brother and daughter and drove to Jordan Mines, Virginia, near Covington, where we remained for two weeks, with my youngest brother, J. S. Bowman.

We held a short meeting at Rich Patch, about eight miles from Jordan Mines. This is a small, newly organized congregation who worship in a union church building. While the congregation is small, it is composed of the best and most influential people of that community.

The interest grew from the beginning and nearly every night the house was packed and often overflowed.

It seemed a pity to close at the height of such interest but the extremely busy times and short nights made it expedient to close until a more convenient season, when we hope to return again and finish the work thus begun. My brother baptized four the last day of the meeting. While this number was small I feel sure that this meeting was a great benefit to the community. The unsaved are very hard to reach. Our Methodist brethren held a six weeks' meeting in the same community a short while before our meeting, without a confession.

This is a country church, in the mountains near Covington, Virginia, composed of a very intelligent and high-living people spiritually. They have splendid public and high schools here, and some of our young people are graduates of high schools, and make public prayers and give public testimonies in church.

My brother, their pastor, taught school thirty years, much of the time, high school and while pensioned for life he is still on the school board in this county.

It is a pity that he does not give more of his time to preaching the gospel as he is very popular in the community. He marries more people and preaches more funerals than any other preacher in this community. He lives on a two hundred acre farm and is tied down somewhat in overseeing it and the financial depression is felt here, so he preaches gratis and paid over half of the expenses of this meeting besides.

We hope to return when nights are longer and times are not so busy and by visitation and strong evangelism in the pulpit we hope to reap a future harvest, if it is the Lord's will.

We drove two hundred and twenty miles over the highest mountains in West Virginia to Huntington and spent two nights with our daughter Bertha. We passed within a few miles of Oak Hill and Gatewood, West Virginia, where I held seven revivals. Our heart burned within us to stop and see these good people but our limited time forbade.

This highway No. 60 I think, is through Switzerland of America. We stopped at the Hawk's Nest and Lovers' Leap and looked down hundreds of feet almost perpendicularly to the river below.

Returning we stopped at Buena Vista over night, attended their prayer meeting and stayed with Brother Naff over night, after the most tiresome drive of our whole trip.

The Church of the Brethren at Millcreek made an announcement for me at Mill Creek church, even announced a subject for me without my knowledge. We preached to a massive crowd on "The Signs of the Times." The next day we drove about fifty miles to Mauretown and took dinner with my spiritual son, Ed Miller. We found "Ed" as busy as ever, just arrived home from Cumberland, Maryland, where he ordained a man to the ministry in that flourishing mission. After this happy meeting we drove to Baltimore and spent the night with my wives' sister's only daughter. On Sunday morning we left for Mt. Olivet, Delaware, where we filled our appointments at 2 P. M. and 8 P. M., Sunday. On Monday we drove 120 miles home, weary and tired, but happy over a trip of two thousand miles. In our two trips of 3700 miles we only had a few minutes' trouble with our little Whippet for which we were very thankful.

As this article is long enough we will reserve a little news of our Delaware work for another article.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN,
Leesburg, New Jersey.

VICTORY REVIVAL AT PIKE BRETHREN CHURCH

Munday's Corners, Pennsylvania

A very happy privilege was granted us during the month of June. We conducted a Victory Revival at the Pike church. Our son, Robert, is the student pastor. Our daughter, Mary, was the pianist for this revival. Father, son, and daughter composed the "Ashman Evangelistic Party." It was a happy arrangement for us and the Lord was pleased to bless the revival.

Although the meeting was held during the "garden season," the attendance was good. This church is fortunate in having so many boys and girls and young people who are regular, faithful, and active in all the work of the church. Also, there are the steadfast ones among these of more mature years. It is a country church, but is maintaining its testimony and even making commendable progress in many ways. The music was a pronounced feature of the revival. Congregational singing, choruses by the boys and girls and a special by the church choir each night made the services so inspirational. Robert was the music director and filled the office excellently. There are not many churches, country or city, which can maintain two choirs and both of them large in numbers, yet this church does so.

A question box, pre-prayer service, dedications from Brethren and Church of the Brethren churches, a picnic dinner on a Sunday under the large oaks in the church yard, two Sunday afternoon meetings of a prophetic nature, Decision Day in the Bible school, and genuine fellowship in the homes, all made their contribution to this Victory Revival. The Sunday school attendance record was broken,—the largest record over a period of years being passed. This church has a good Sunday school and an excellent Christian Endeavor Society. Yes, and they maintain a mid-week prayer service.

There were 30 confessions in all, four of whom were members renewing their covenant relations with the Lord. Four members were received by relation and letter. Twenty-two were baptized. A "Brethren Night" was held the week following the revival, at which the new members were welcomed and an evening of Christian fellowship enjoyed by all.

REV. CHARLES ASHMAN.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH
Johnstown, Pennsylvania

Almost five months have passed since our last church report. During this period, we have enjoyed many blessings from the Lord. The Easter Offering for Foreign Missions was a triumph, considering present conditions here. It was less than previous years, but a more liberal offering than the church had ever given before. Mother's Day was appropriately observed. Some declared it was the finest service of its kind we have ever held. The Spring communion service was well attended,—going over the 400 mark again. Miss Estella Myers was with us for the day, delivering a missionary message in the morning and enjoying the communion with us in the evening. Children's Day was a success, both in attendance and program rendered. Our Daily Vacation Bible School was among the very best this year. The commencement exercises were a credit to any Bible school. The regular church services and prayer meetings have been well attended with sustained interest. We are maintaining all our services throughout the summer. These are times when the church should be open, not closed.

Our annual business meeting was one of the best in spirit, attendance, and unity of action, we have ever held. It was one of the largest in attendance in the history of the church. There was absolute harmony of action. The church officers were elected and several vital matters decided. The pastor was extended an unanimous call to remain for the twelfth year. Also, he was asked to conduct the Victory Revival again this year. The church pledged most sincere support and cooperation with him, if he would accept these two calls. After prayerful consideration, we have accepted both of these calls.

We have been blessed of the Lord in securing a beautiful country home within the city limits. It contains about 5 acres of land with a large home, spacious lawn, grape arbor, fruit trees one and one-half acres of garden, etc. We have dedicated it to the Lord's work. Many social affairs of the church are being held here. The arbor and lawn have been wired and lighted for the evening occasions. Picnics, class meetings, prayer meetings, etc., are being held here. Thus the Lord's people are enjoying themselves in a Christian manner.

Perplexing problems face us on every hand. There are few cities in the United States which have been hit any harder than Johnstown in the present depression. Some are hiding behind these conditions in many ways, but the church is facing them courageously and going forth to do her best. Our budget has been sliced, trimmed, and cut and the end may not be yet, but the Lord is blessing and providing. Brethren, rejoice with us as we rejoice with you. Pray for us and we are praying for you. These days demand a closer walk with Jesus and a more mutual, sympathetic unity among the Brethren.

Pastor C. H. ASHMAN.

LINWOOD, MARYLAND

Our revival service conducted by Brother R. Paul Miller has been reported. This was followed a week later by our communion service. This was largely attended and greatly enjoyed by all, especially by all our new members.

Following this was our Vacation Bible school. While not quite as largely attended as some in former years I think the work was of a higher order. We had ten teachers who were very faithful and earnest and who really accomplished a great deal. Sister Anna Green, an Elmer Wolf high school graduate and who won an art scholarship, sketched the journeys of the Apostle Paul. This made the work of tracing the journeys of the Apostle much easier. This class was taught by Sister Catharine Bowersox and the class and teacher were enthusiastic over the sketches traced by Sister Green. Sister Green will enter an art school in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania this fall. Without exception the work of the teachers was very satisfactory.

Plans are being completed for our Union service to be held at Rocky Ridge on July 24. It is our custom to hold a Union service here every year. These services are largely attended. Following this service is our Harvest Home service and then our Homecoming which is attracting more people every year. This year the address will be made by Attorney McKeldin of Baltimore.

Now there will be something new under the sun. Brethren Day or, a Brethren Rally, which promises to be a very unusual event, will be held at Rocky Ridge Park on September 10th. A fine programme for this event is almost finished and will be published soon. Addresses by prominent Brethren, group singing and a vesper service at 5 o'clock will close this service.

Brethren everywhere are invited to spend the day with us. J. L. BOWMAN.

On the ground floor of an apartment house in New York City, has been installed the first automatic market, where the housewife may buy her meat and groceries by inserting a coin in the slot. When an article has been bought and removed from the opening, another just like it is moved into place on a tray attached to an endless chain. There are two types of these machines: one made in a refrigerator, and the other made to hold food at room temperature. When the purchaser has not the right change he inserts a coin and the machine returns the proper change.

WHY OUR MEN'S BIBLE CLASS IS A SUCCESS

(Continued from page 10)

without an absence from October, 1931, to June, 1932, inclusive.

8. To underwrite the expense (up to $100) of the 1932 Summer Bible School for children in the neighborhood.

9. To erect in the hallway of the church a bulletin board for class and church notices.

10. To contribute $100 to our own church in appreciation of its generous support of the class.

11. To hold during the year two worthwhile socials for the men of the class and their friends.

12. To conduct a picnic for the men of the class, their families and for all connected with the church.

13. To contribute $50 to the American Bible Society.

14. To contribute $50 to the Hebrew Christian Center of Boston.

15. To carry on special automobile service for aged members and others who cannot come easily to church services.

16. To prepare the way to put the class session programs "on the air."

One other fact about the business methods employed is that the class strives never to deviate from its definite purpose, that is, to study the Bible. Therefore, no outside speakers are permitted. No notices of special gatherings, aside from those of the class or of the church are presented, and no solicitations of any nature are made, irrespective of its worthiness. A voluntary collection is taken up at each class session. But men are told frankly that the purpose of the class is for study, and they are just as welcome whether they put anything into the collection or not. In passing, it can be said that the collection each Sunday morning averages 11.7 cents per man and that each year the class has carried out every one of the objectives on its "Program of Work" for that year. The Emergency Fund mentioned in the "Program of Work" for this year is a sum of $1,000 which has been built up and used for the assisting of men connected with the class who have fallen into financial straits.

And so this Men's Bible Class grows; and, we hope will continue to grow.

How much good the class has done there is no way of measuring. Men have joined the First Presbyterian church of Quincy and other evangelical churches because of the class; many others have rededicated their lives to Jesus Christ and now are doing better work for him; hundreds of homes have been made happier because the men in them are living new lives. There can be no question that whosoever the Bible is presented faithfully God will use that presentation in his own way for his own glory. —The Sunday School Times.

Quincy, Massachusetts.

Business Manager's Corner

A Long Silence Broken

It has been a number of months since the Business Manager has filled any space on the last page of the Evangelist. People are inclined to think it is the "same old song," if the space is occupied too frequently, so we waited this time until the Editor said he thought it was about time for the Business Manager to occupy his corner once again.

While we have not been saying much we have been trying desperately hard to do a great deal; but we have found it mighty hard to accomplish a great deal. And we feel very sorry for a great many of our pastors, if the problems they have to face are the underlying problems that react with such telling effect on the interests and work of the Publishing House.

When Faith is Tried

The old song tells us "Faith is the victory that overcomes the world." And of course this is but a re-statement of a Biblical teaching, but if there were ever a time when faith was being tried that time is now. We believe we still have faith in the integrity of the Brethren church, but the fruits of our faith are not outstanding as we could wish. Of course "times are hard," but we fail to see just why the accumulation of hard times for all the congregations should be visited upon the Publishing House. On July 1st we mailed statements to all our customers that have unpaid accounts with us and enclosed a special request, asking them to meet their bill by July 20th, if at all possible. These statements amounted to thousands of dollars, every dollar of which is needed by the Publishing House to meet operating expenses. Some responses were made with dispatch, while many others have not been heard from at all. Our today's mail brought us $4.38 only, when in fact we really should have received a couple hundred dollars or more. And the mercury registers just 90 degrees in our office at this minute, which is entirely too warm to worry over financial matters, so we will just try to "grin and bear it," and do the best we can, for we know from both observation and experience just about how great are the difficulties many people have to contend with.

The Evangelist Honor Roll

Some folks may think because of the financial stress of the present time there would be a large falling off of the Honor Roll churches; but such is not the case. It is true we have lost a great many subscriptions to the Evangelist during the past year just as all church papers have done; but the greatest losses have not come from the Honor Roll churches, although we did lose a few of them also.

However the following churches have renewed their Honor Roll subscriptions since our last report—Oakville, Indiana, 13th year; Waterloo, Iowa, 14th year; Berne, Indiana, 13th year; Howe, Indiana, 9th year; Raystown, Pennsylvania, 7th year; Washington, D. C., 7th year; Smithville, Ohio, 11th year; Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, 9th year; Allentown, Pennsylvania, 13th year; Second Brethren church, Los Angeles, California, 4th year; Harrah, Washington, 2nd year; Summit Mills, Pennsylvania, 5th year; Hagerstown, Maryland, 11th year; Danville, Ohio, 12th year; Gretna, Ohio, FIFTEENTH year; Fair Haven, Ohio, 14th year; Morrill, Kansas, 12th year; Lathrop, California, 9th year; Nappanee, Indiana, 14th year, and Roanoke, Indiana and South Gate, California, first year.

The churches here named make good company for one another, and none of them need be ashamed. It is a good work, and after fifteen years' trial we still believe it the best way for the local churches to handle the matter of their church paper. The Honor Roll churches are the best informed churches in the entire brotherhood, when it comes to matters that have to do with the church in general, and that surely makes the work easier and more successful for the pastor.

The Pastor and the Paper

We were glad for the place the program committee gave to the Publishing Interests in arranging for the recent Ohio conference. It has been our privilege to address a great many district conferences in the interests of our Publishing House, but I can not recall ever addressing a conference where a greater interest was manifested by the congregation than at the recent Bryan meeting. One point we tried to stress was that of the responsibility of the pastor as the contact man between the churches and their denominational publications.

The Publication Day Offering

The Publication Day offering was a long drawn out affair, and reflecting the financial condition of our churches as all other offerings have done during the past year, it was not large. While not large enough to reduce the debt on the building in any amount, it does go a long way toward meeting the yearly interest on the indebtedness.

We mailed a receipt to the sender whenever an offering was received, so the senders have had no occasion to worry about the offering being received because the list has not been published before now.

The Offering

Mrs. Etta Studebaker, .....$ 1.00

Ashland Brethren Church, .....	55.26
Fair Haven Brethren Ch., .....	15.26
Mrs. H. S. Enslow, .....	.50
Corinth Brethren Church, .....	2.50
Mrs. Fetter Hall, .....	3.00
Muncie Brethren Church, .....	10.00
Mrs. C. E. Ullom, .....	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. W. W. Heltman, .....	3.00
Berlin Brethren Church, .....	23.25
Oakville Brethren Church, .....	3.00
Mrs. E. G. Goode, .....	1.00
Martinsburg Brethren Church, .....	7.00
Roanoke, Ind., .....	5.00
Williamstown Brethren Church, .....	6.44
New Lebanon Brethren Church, .....	6.05
Roann Brethren Church, .....	12.50
Conemaugh Brethren Church, .....	11.65
Mr. & Mrs. H. H. Merritt, .....	2.50
Carlton, Iowa Brethren Church, .....	1.25
Mrs. A. O. Horne, .....	1.00
Burlington Brethren S. S., .....	4.70
Seltha Dawson, .....	3.00
Mrs. A. C. Frye, .....	3.00
Gretna Brethren Church, .....	8.15
Hagerstown Brethren Church, .....	6.00
Washington Church & S. S., .....	28.31
Ardmore Brethren Church, .....	5.00
Fremont Brethren Church, .....	9.35
Mrs. Susan Wyman, .....	1.00
Carleton, Nebr., .....	4.10
Mr. & Mrs. Lee F. Myer, .....	3.00
Johnstown, 3rd Brethren, .....	7.05
Dayton, 1st Brethren Ch., .....	20.10
J. S. C. Spickerman, .....	2.00
Mrs. Matilda C. Antrim, .....	50.00
Women's Bible Class, La Verne, .....	5.00
Waterloo Brethren Church, .....	16.00
Mrs. W. H. Robertson, .....	1.00
Mrs. Nancy Housley, .....	2.00
Nappanee Brethren Church, .....	2.00
Wooster W. M. S., .....	10.00
Mary A. Snyder, .....	5.00
Mexico Brethren Church, .....	5.00
Peru Brethren Church, .....	1.50
McKee Brethren Church, .....	1.00
Kittanning Brethren Church, .....	1.00
Mrs. Ellen Lichty, .....	2.00
Mrs. Annie C. Martin, .....	3.50

Total, .....$388.02

We wish to take this opportunity to again thank those who have come to the aid of the Publishing House in this time of need and we trust when the financial situation of the world gets better one or two more efforts may succeed in entirely wiping out this debt on our building.

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

MISSION PASTOR WANTED

The Northwest District is venturing forth in faith in beginning a new work in Oregon. Some earnest man will be needed to take over this work immediately at the conclusion of our meeting. This is a call to some consecrated, soul-loving minister who is not afraid of work, that may be sacrificial. The faithful brethren of this place will not permit such to go hungry.

Will such as may be interested in taking hold of this project, if successful, in September, please address:

Earl W. Reed, Grandview, Washington, or Harold D. Fry, Sunnyside, Washington.

The brotherhood is requested to intercede for us that souls may be won, and churches built in this great and needy Northwest.

HAROLD D. FRY.

VOL. LIV
Number 31

August 6
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

IF THE EXALTED CHRIST

Is exalted in the thoughts and hearts of every minister and layman at Conference a great spiritual blessing will be brought upon the church.

See General Conference Program Page 2

FORTY-FOURTH GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN CHURCHES

Semi-Centennary Celebration of the Brethren

Arnold's Grove and Ashland—June, 1882—to Winona Lake—August, 1932

Winona Lake—August 22-28, 1932

Slogan:—"The foundation of God standeth sure." 2
Tim. 2:19.

Conference music directors—Leo Polman and Dr. Chas.
A Bame.

MONDAY, AUGUST 22

Evening

7:30-9:00 Opening Conference Session
7:30 Song Service and Prayer
7:45 Bible Exposition—A New Testament Book
—Dr. J. C. Beal
8:05 Sermon—The Supremacy of God
—Vice Moderator, S. M. Whetstone

TUESDAY, AUGUST 23

Morning

6:30-7:30 Morning Prayers—M. L. Sands, Leader
8:00-9:00 Auxiliary Organizations
1—Ministerium—Inn Chapel
Devotions
Address—Fifty Years in the Ministry
—Dr. A. D. Gnagey
2—Laymen—Sunday Tabernacle
Devotions—F. B. Frank
Special Music
Address—D. C. White
3—Sisterhood of Mary and Martha—Westminster
Program to be Supplied
9:00-11:00 Conference Organization, Moderator's Address, Business
Scripture and Prayer—Samuel J. Adams.
Report of Credential Com., and Election of Officers and Coms.
Moderator's Address—Retiring Moderator,
W. I. Duker

11:00-12:00

Bible Lecture Hour
Prayer—Freeman Ankrum
Bible Lecture—Baptism and Confirmation
—R. F. Porte

Afternoon

2:00-3:00 Hour on The Brethren Church: Historical
Devotions—R. D. Barnard
Address—Home Missions in the Brethren Church
From Germantown to the Pacific Ocean
— S. C. Henderson
3:00-3:30 Address—R. D. Barnard
3:30-5:00 Women's Missionary Society—General Session
Devotions—Mrs. G. T. Ronk
Reports:
President ..... Mrs. U. J. Shively
Financial Sec. .... Mrs. N. G. Kimmel
Treasurer ..... Mrs. C. L. Anspach
Literature Sec. .... Mrs. D. A. C. Teeter
Appointment of Committees
Memorial Service ..... Mrs. Joyce Saylor

Evening

6:15 Vespers for Young People
7:15 Song Service and Prayer
7:35 Bible Exposition—Dr. J. C. Beal
7:55 Special Music
8:00 Doctrinal Sermon—The Doctrine of God
—Prof. Alva J. McClain

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 24

Morning

6:30-7:30 Morning Prayers—Raymond Gingrich, Leader
8:00-9:00 Auxiliary Organizations
1—Ministerium—Inn Chapel
Reports:
President; Secretary; Committee on Handbook;
Committee on Peace.
Committee on Divorce Question.
Elections
2—Laymen—Sunday Tabernacle
3—Women's Missionary Society—Auditorium
Devotions—U. J. Shively
Special Music.
Address—Dr. C. L. Anspach
Devotions—Mrs. L. G. Wood
Business—Gen. Secretar's Report
—Mrs. Gertrude Briscoe

4—Sisterhood of Mary and Martha—Westminster
Program to be Supplied
9:00-10:00 General Conference Business Session
Devotions—Dyoll Belote
Financial Reports:
National Sunday School Association
National Christian Endeavor Society
Publication Board
Home Mission Board
Other Financial Reports
Reports of Committees
Report of Statistician—Geo. E. Cone
10:00-11:00 Benevolences and Publication Board
Brethren's Home Board and Benevolence Board Reports and Plans for the Year
Publication Board Reports and Plans for the Year
11:00-12:00 Bible Lecture Hour
Prayer—E. A. Duker
Bible Lecture—Feet Washing—Dr. L. S. Bauman

Afternoon

1:20-1:50 W. M. S. Mission Study Hour
Teacher—Miss Clara J. Hendley
2:00-3:00 Hour on The Brethren Church: Historical Devotions—Delbert Flora
Address—Printing in the Brethren Church
—Dr. Chas. A. Bame
3:30-5:00 W. M. S. General Session—Our Foreign Missions
Devotions—Mrs. S. M. Whetstone
South America—Brother and Sister Percy L. Yett
Africa—Sister Florence N. Gribble, M. D.

Evening

6:15 Vespers for Young People
7:15 Song Service and Prayer
7:35 Bible Exposition—Dr. J. C. Beal
7:55 Special Music
8:00 Lecture Sermon—The Person and Work of Jesus
—Dr. J. Raymond Schutz

THURSDAY, AUGUST 25

Morning

6:30-7:00 Morning Prayers—Sylvester Lowman, Leader
8:00-9:00 Auxiliary Organizations
1—Ministerium—Inn Chapel
Devotions
Address—Qualifications of Christian Ministers
—Prof. M. A. Stuckey
2—Laymen—Sunday Tabernacle
Devotions—Ira C. Wilcox
Special Music
Business
3—Women's Missionary Society—Auditorium
Devotions—Mrs. Geo. M. Simpson
Presentation of New Program, Goals and Budget
4—Sisterhood of Mary and Martha—Westminster
Program to be Supplied
9:00-10:00 General Conference Business Session
Reports; Unfinished Business; New Business
10:00-11:00 Home Mission Board and Sunday School Board
Home Mission Board, Reports and Plans for the Year
Sunday School Board, Reports and Plans for the Year
11:00-12:00 Bible Lecture Hour
Prayer—N. V. Leatherman
Bible Lecture—The Lord's Supper and Eucharist
—Dr. J. Allen Miller

Afternoon

1:20-1:50 W. M. S. Mission Study Class
Teacher—Miss Clara J. Hendley
2:00-3:00 Hour on The Brethren Church: Historical Devotions—L. A. Myers
Address—The Sunday School in the Brethren Church
—Prof. M. A. Stuckey
3:30-5:00 W. M. S.—General Session
Devotions—Mrs. A. E. Whitted —
Election of Officers
Our Seminary—Past, Present, Future
Our Home Missions in 1932

Evening

6:15 Vespers for Young People
7:15 Song Service and Prayer
7:35 Bible Exposition—An Old Testament Book
—Dr. K. M. Monroe
7:55 Special Music
8:00 Lecture Sermon—The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit—A. V. Kimmel

FRIDAY, AUGUST 26

Morning

6:30-7:00 Morning Prayers—Mrs. Edna Nicholas, Leader
8:00-9:00 Auxiliary Organizations
1—Ministerium—Inn Chapel
Devotions

(Continued on page 6)

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

The Spirit of Militarism is Growing

There is no greater menace to human welfare than militarism. Notwithstanding all the commendable efforts to curb it, it is still going strong and tightening its grasp upon the governments of the world, the American government included. The failure of the Geneva Disarmament Conference is evidence afresh of the throttle hold of the militaristic spirit on the governments of the world. With President Hoover's challenge of a one-third cut in all armaments staring the delegates in the face, they weakly yielded to the counsel of those who would promote war through the engendering of fear, and greed, and suspicion, and hatred, and closed the conference and went home with nothing to their credit but the shame of defeat and failure.

Much enthusiasm had been evoked over Mr. Hoover's proposal. It was thought that, because of the financial stress of the nations, they could hardly avoid giving favorable consideration to it. The world was brought to its present stringency because of war and the maintenance of military establishments, and Mr. Hoover told them frankly that it was "folly for the world to go on breaking its back over military expenditures." It was entirely unnecessary either for the maintenance of internal order or protection against foreign attack. Moreover, the nations had all signed the Kellogg-Briand pact, agreeing to settle their international disputes by pacific means, so what was the use of all this vast amount of war equipment? Surely at least one-third of it could be dispensed with and "save the people of the world from ten to fifteen billions of wasted dollars during the next ten years." Surely governments would see the wisdom of so definite and concrete a proposal, and if not, the anticipated relief from such a reduction of armaments would call forth such a response from the people of all lands as to compel the governments to give heed. Such expectations were created and such new life was put into the almost moribund Geneva conference that it was said by some that "The hope of the world is bound up with its success." Of course, it did not really possess such far-reaching significance as that, but some people thought so. And now it has all come to naught; hopes were burst like a bubble. Why? Because militarism sat at the conference with the delegates and wielded a powerful influence.

That is what we are to expect of militarism. It frowns upon any effort on the part of the people and their spiritual leadership to take the glory out of war and to lessen dependence upon, and preparation for, the argument of arms. It is operating to that end in France and is about to resume its old force in Germany. It is the moving spirit in Russia and in Japan, where it is in league with godlessness, bitterness and greed to an extent that is alarming, and is seeking to make war and hatred the expected and normal experiences of men. The nature of militarism and how it tends to affect the lives of men is revealed by a confession of a Japanese university graduate serving his term in the army. He said: "Our officers are telling us that war is inevitable and that we should welcome it. We are allowed to read only the newspapers which are approved by the staff, the more liberal sheets being denied admission to our barracks. It is also forbidden to read the Bible. My captain said he would tell me why some day, but he hasn't done so yet, and yesterday he left for Manchuria. I, too, shall be going to Manchuria soon. They are sending many troops into northern Manchuria now. Our officers urge us to hate Russia, for war will soon come. The soldiers don't talk much about it, or even think; we are kept too busy from early morning till late at night. Those who have been sent to Manchuria have all been rather anxious to go, but they don't like to think what may happen. That's about the way I feel about it, too; I rather like military service, and I'm anxious to see Manchuria, but I don't like to think of killing Chinese or Russians." But militarism always has killing in mind. It builds up a constant expectation of war, presents war as inevitable and is continually preparing men and munitions for war.

The spirit of militarism has a strong hold on the forces of our own country. There is scarcely a medium of influence or agency of education that it does not seek to control or intimidate. Most of the popular criticism against church leaders and human welfare agencies speaking their mind against war and militaristic preparations originates with the leaders of militarism. A correspondent to the Christian Century tells of a certain Admiral speaking before an American Legion convention in Georgia in June, and taking "a punch at the churches" for seeking to influence public opinion and political action along these lines. He was strongly opposed to the church taking an attitude of opposition to increased armaments and the war system. The warrior's own words are quoted to indicate the crux of his opposition to church influence:

"Now I would like to say a few words as a church member—I deplore church organizations opposing adequate national defense, or sponsoring or opposing any political measures as such. In my opinion the church organizations that go into politics are injuring the cause of religion and the defense of the country! They should stick to the Bible and especially to the Sermon on the Mount."

Then the reporter makes this comment: "Spoken like an admiral! And like a politician. We have heard much of this philosophy down here, but it doesn't seem to take. The churches become bolder, the preachers become more vigorous in their outcry against the whole system that is breaking down the nation financially in competitive armaments and hastening the day of warfare."

The church is set against evil in all forms, and war is certainly an evil. Against it must the church speak out and register its opposition in every right and proper way. To hold its peace is to become a party to the evil that is seeking to spread its tentacles over the land.

The plea for disarmament has not been carried far enough, nor made thorough enough. Disarmament ought to be complete, except for adequate police force, and there ought to be some means whereby the police might keep the rest of the world disarmed, even as the police of our land disarm individuals and then annually dump the collected weapons into the sea. Men cannot be trusted with the weapons of warfare. And there is no such thing as taming down and humanizing war. It is folly to think to make war subject to rules. War is destruction—destruction of everything. Only love and Christ can save and free men from destruction and war.

"Forward Together with Christ in Evangelism"

That is the theme adopted by the Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council at its conference recently held at Northfield, Massachusetts. More than fifty representatives from many different churches were present from various parts of the country. These leaders agreed upon this theme as their watchword and aim for the coming year.

It is explained that "Forward" is the direction the church must proceed in these critical times. And they are right. If ever the witness of the church is needed, it is in a time of turmoil and confusion, of hardship and suffering, such as the world is experiencing now. And never was the message of the church more needed than in these days. And never were multitudes more ready to listen. The church must be aggressive in evangelism. This is its day of opportunity.

We are told that "Together" indicates the unity and cooperation that is characteristic of the work of evangelism. And it is true that there is no kind of endeavor in which the church can engage that makes possible more widespread unity and cooperation than that of evangelism. Men may differ in forms and ceremonies; they may cling to differing ecclesiastical governments; they may insist on differing interpretations of Scripture, but if they have succeeded in getting at the heart of the Gospel at all, they believe in and emphasize evangelism. Evangelism is so prominently set forth in the Word of God and is so essential to the very nature of the Gospel that it is difficult to see how anyone can read it seriously and fail to be impressed with its importance and necessity. All who claim to be evangelical are united in a desire to extend the Gospel message and to win adherents to the church of Christ. They may differ as to method, but all alike are inspired by the evangelistic motive. And there is no Christian activity that has such power of bringing men and women together and uniting them in a common effort as that of seeking to win souls to Christ.

But the task is not to be undertaken by human direction, and so we have the words, "With Christ." He is the way forward, and the slogan expresses the need of his supreme leadership. Evangelism is a divine undertaking and must be divinely directed. When we attempt to carry the message of salvation to the lost, whether they be near or far, we must go "with Christ", or our effort is vain. We need not only divine direction, but divine empowerment. We need to share with Christ the divine urge that drives men forth in love and pity for those who are lost, and also the divine bestowment of wisdom that will enable us to be successful winners of souls. From every possible angle the presence of Christ

(Continued on page 8)

---

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

If the church is indeed the body of Christ, how can a person be a Christian without identifying himself with the church?

Those who are here giving the church the "absent treatment," will likely find themselves being given the same kind of treatment in the courts of heaven.

Brother C. D. Whitmer has another installment of his splendid articles for young people in this issue. This week he writes on "Sensitiveness versus Selfishness." You will find it on Christian Endeavor page.

Brother George C. Pontius supplies us with a copy of the Ohio Conference Minutes. He first gives us a complete record of business transacted and then reports briefly the inspirational program. We believe he has improved on his former reports and we congratulate him. Our Ohio people will especially appreciate his good work.

Our children and young people will enjoy the new African Folk Story provided this week by Mrs. Orville D. Jobson. We are wondering how many of our young readers, who are enjoying these stories, would like to write a word of appreciation to Sister Jobson about her stories. Any who wish to write her a card or a short letter of appreciation, may send it to the Editor and he will forward all such messages to Mrs. Jobson in Africa.

Brother I. D. Bowman writes of his work at the Mount Olivet church in Delaware, where he continues to struggle against handicaps in his efforts to establish the Brethren faith in that community. He has a faithful band, rather widely scattered, but centered in the Mount Olivet church. One was recently added by baptism and at the communion service thirty-six communicants were present.

We have a report of a Daily Vacation Bible School recently conducted in the church at Louisville, Ohio, where Brother A. E. Whitted is the pastor, and who has the supervision of the school. It was a Brethren-conducted and Brethren-taught school, but was not confined to Brethren children. The school closed with a program demonstrating the splendid work done. Such schools are very much worth while as a factor in religious education, and we hope the depression has not caused a lessening of effort along that line.

It is unwise economy to cut yourself off from the religious world outside the borders of your own congregation, as they are doing who are asking us to stop their church paper in these trying times. Never was the need of such a religious messenger greater than now, and no Brethren home can really afford to be without its informing and inspiring voice. Keep The Brethren Evangelist in your home, and read it, next to your Bible, for your spiritual guidance and counsel.

Word comes that the recent Young People's Camp and Bible Conference at Shipshewana Lake was a great success, both in attendance and in quality of program. It is said that we will hear more about it shortly. Professor Stuckey says the attendance went over the hundred mark, far above any previous record. And more and more people seem to be falling in love with the place. Rev. Robert F. Porte writes: "This is a lovely spot." He and his family stayed a week beyond the close of the conference "resting and enjoying the beauty of nature." And concerning the conference he says it was "wonderful."

From its weekly calendar we note that the First church of Long Beach has extended to Dr. L. S. Bauman "for the twentieth time an invitation to continue his work" as its pastor. The church is just as old as the years its present pastor has served it, since he has been its only pastor. Though Brother Bauman has not given his answer to the call, he nevertheless fittingly expresses his deep appreciation of the confidence of the church in extending him the call, and doubtless the church also feels that it has complimented itself in doing so. Dr. Bauman says the work of his church, "save for the financial stringency felt by everybody, never looked brighter."

Prof. J. Raymond Schutz, pastor of our North Manchester, Indiana, church, whose candidacy for Congress was given notice in The Evangelist some time ago, recently gave an address before a large gathering of citizens of his district at Upland, Indiana, in which address he came out boldly, as we would expect him to do, in favor of Prohibition. He declared himself in no uncertain terms and his frankness and straightforwardness won him the praise of the Hartford press and it seems that the people appreciated having a candidate be fair and unequivocating with them. Brother Schutz's address was printed in full in the Hartford City paper, and it shows both courage and discernment. The Evangelist is frank in wishing Prof. Schutz success in the November election. Such men are needed in Congress.

Dr. J. Allen Miller issues a call for a meeting of the Brethren's Home Board for Tuesday after dinner of General Conference week at Winona Lake, Indiana. In this connection we would call the attention of our readers to the letter written by Mrs. Cyrus Myer, matron of the Home, in which she tells friends of the Home how they can give a helping hand to the task of caring for the aged and infirm people who are making their home there. We are sure that many, after reading the letter, will be glad to contribute what they can. She says the grocery item represents their biggest problem, but remember, if you have any cash, that will help solve all the problems connected with this work. Send money to Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana.

The General Conference program occupies a big place in The Evangelist this week, and we hope a goodly number of Brethren will begin to give it a large place in their thinking and planning. It is a different program from any that has been offered to a Brethren conference before, because it is built to celebrate fifty years of history since the Brethren became a separate and distinct body. We are glad to note that the emphasis is calculated to be placed, not on the fact of the division, but on the body of doctrine which we hold dear, and which, if reunion is ever to be brought about, must be the basis of the rapprochement. The various addresses on fundamental Brethren doctrines there to be heard, if they were all Conference offered, would make attendance abundantly worth while. But there are many other splendid offerings, many other good things to be enjoyed. It promises to be a great conference, and every church should do its utmost to have a large delegation in attendance. The date is August 22-28, and Winona hotels and lodging houses and restaurants are said to be offering better rates this year than we have been wont to pay.

The Moral Influence of Our Treasures

By Robert F. Porte

Text:—"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also"—Luke 12:34.

This is an old text that is often passed by lightly or perhaps joked about. It seems so commonplace to many people that its real meaning is overlooked. Notice its setting. It is a part of the twelfth chapter of Luke's Gospel, a chapter telling about the "abiding way of life"—Our text is the axiomatic statement of Jesus regarding the whole thought contained in the chapter. Get the thought of this text and you catch the meaning of other poignant statements. Your treasure is the focal point of your life as the text declares. Life is made up of our choices and what we possess at the close of life will be those things we chose and kept as valuable. Esau of old chose a mess of pottage and satisfied his appetite for the moment, then in a more sober frame of mind he discovered that he paid for that meal with an eternal treasure which was his until he bartered it for perishing food. The tragedy of such a barter lies in the fact that the mess of pottage does not last and the unfortunate victim of the delusion has nothing with which to make another bargain. This is the tragedy of the soul that says, "No" to the pleading of the Holy Spirit and thereby forfeits the riches in Christ Jesus; the perishing world passes, declining physical strength makes one conscious that we are slipping, then, O the tragedy, when the discovery is made that the Precious Savior has been rejected and we stand helpless and alone in our weakness. This is the price the sinner pays for a brief moment of this world's glory.

The twelfth chapter of Luke tells us about some of the ways to possess permanent treasures. "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy". Dear Reader, you and I can say all the nice things we can think of about respecting the religious beliefs of other people but the fact is that there is only one way and that way leads by the Cross of the Son of God. The followers of Christ must also learn obedience even to the suffering of a Gethsemane. Sacrifice lies at the heart of the religion of Jesus. He died that we might live. We die to sin and are buried in baptism that we may be raised together with him to walk in newness of life. No individual can see the vainglories and excesses of the world and expect to have the treasures of the Kingdom of God. If we despise Holy things and love the things which please the carnal nature we may expect to have carnal things and NOT the riches in Christ. To accept Christ is to forsake the world and to give oneself to be guided and directed by the Good Shepherd and the Holy Spirit. In 2 Timothy 1:9, the Apostle Paul reminds all Christians that "God hath saved us, and called us with an Holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." The treasures of religion are never to be found in the mechanicians of priests and ritual but in Christ and Christ alone. Every so-called means to worship, other than those ordinances laid down in Scripture are nothing more than devices of Satan to deceive the seeking soul. The hollow forms of the Pharisees were hypocritical leaven and furnished to the sinner no salvation. The same criticism applies to some types of religious practice and belief in our day. Like the Prodigal Son, "they fain would fill their bellies with husks which the swine eat" until in their hunger "they come to themselves and say, I will arise and go to my Father." In the Eternal Triune God only is satisfaction and peace and people will never find the real treasure they seek until they come to God. Remember, Satan is going to do all he can to deceive you with attractive religious forms and procedure and abominable hypocritical sanctities in order to keep you and many others from finding the straight and narrow way that leadeth to life.

The opening verses of Luke 12 suggest the wonderful security to be found in God. "And when they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto the magistrates, and powers take no thought how or what things ye shall answer, or what ye shall say: for the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say." This is a message to those in Christ. Who would know the voice of the Holy Spirit but a true follower of Christ? This is another treasure to be found in God. The eternal security of the child of God. We witness today a world torn by fear and distressed in mind over the economic collapse of our tower of Babel. We builded our Colossus and it has resulted in confusion. Like the picture in Revelation 17 we notice the world leaders mourning over their great industrial building paralyzed and helpless. It does not seem to occur to the world leaders to mourn over the sad spiritual condition of the world. The world does not seem to realize that we do not all speak the same thing. There is confusion of speech. The security of the believer lies in submission to God in Christ. The believer is one with the plan of God. He knows the voice of the Good Shepherd and also the voice of the Holy Spirit. The believer is one with the creating God. He is not a party to a condemned sinful people. Our security is assured as we abide in our Father's house. God is not defeated or surprised by the failure of a rebellious people. God's Word calls us to the choice of the abiding treasures in the Kingdom of our Heavenly Father.

The tenderness of the Heavenly Father's care is indicated by his care of the sparrow, verse 6. Thousands of people today are wondering what they are going to eat and wear and that they are going to do on the morrow. The life of many a person is in complete darkness regarding their security. When the ship is sinking no one is in the mood to joke about their ability to save himself. When defeat has come there is no help in claiming victory. The times in which we are now living ought to enable professed Christians to know assuredly whether they have the abiding and satisfying treasure. We need Gospel preaching today as we have always needed it. Perhaps the present day offers the greatest opportunity to appeal to God's elect and those whom God shall yet save, to accept the salvation offered in Christ and the eternal security therein contained. God never allows a catastrophe to come upon the world without first giving a special warning. The preaching of Brethren ministers should carry the assurances which the believer has in Christ and also the follies and deceptions offered by Satanic influence in these latter times. The treasures of God come to those who prove themselves worthy by faithful and diligent searching of his Holy Word. Jesus advises us not to "cast our pearls before swine!" The clear testimony to the way of salvation in Christ is our program today. The task is so great and the field is so wide that no one whom God has called needs to be concerned about a place to preach the Truth of God. The modern need is for men with the courage of Jeremiah to rebuke sin everywhere and even in high places and to point God's children to the security the Heavenly Father assures us of. "Let not your hearts be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me"—

The modern world is more concerned in getting justice for themselves than in being just. In verse 13 we have a very modern complaint set forth. "Master, speak to my brother that he divide the inheritance with me." The modern man is spending a great deal of thought on getting his share of this world's goods. Again it is pathetic to observe that too few people are deeply concerned about the spirit in people which withholds the goods of the world from others. It is not wholly a matter of concern that some people, like this brother mentioned in Luke 12:13, do have more than their share rather we are concerned in knowing why this brother chose to hold that which he might have shared with his brother. "A man's life consisteth not in things." Yes, this is the statement of Scripture, yet on the other hand, many people in this period of economic depression think they would be happy if they possessed things. The need of the world today is a change of heart so that we would properly share the goods of life to all. God has been most bountiful in the bestowal of material things on the world. Man has failed to enjoy them because he has forgotten to include God in his thought. The world is spoiled without God. Human life is spoiled without God. When Jesus said, "Ye are the salt of the earth," he gave to Christians a significant illustration of the importance of Christians in the world. God in the heart makes the Christian useful in the world. Take God out of the human heart, that heart becomes a conflicting element with other elements in the world. God in the heart combines to make the whole life of humanity richer and better. This principle needs to be observed in our modern life. It is that quality which God alone can impart by his indwelling presence in the human life which makes possible harmony and mutual helpfulness.

The moral influence of our treasures is nowhere better illustrated than the account of the rich farmer mentioned in Luke 12:16ff. Whatever we may choose as being the most valuable thing in life will surely tend to dominate our life. The material success of the rich fool, as the Scripture calls this man, wholly consumed his life interest. Nothing mattered except to revel in material accumulations. Now since material things perish, and since a man can not live to the flesh, the whole life of this rich fool collapsed with the collapse of his perishable god. The rich fool builded upon the sand and his house fell. Contrast, if you will, Dear Reader, the person whose whole interest is in material things with the person who is interested in art and literature. How do these compare in the stability of their interests? Which one will live longest in memory? Now compare these with that one whose interests center in God and in his purpose in Christ for his people. What is it that makes Abraham, Moses, and Paul live in vital meaning in this present age when thousands of their contemporaries have long since been forgotten? Is it simply because these men and others like them were better than those who live in their day or is it because of their relation with the Eternal? Your answer is obvious, you know why some men and women live while others perish. God is seeking to bring you and me into relation with himself through the vicarious work of Christ on the Cross. The New Birth is a work of God in our behalf whereby God effects a new disposition in his Child to love and obey him. The New Birth brings God-likeness and in this relation is found victory over death and defeat. It is the way of life, because we have become united to the Fountain of Life. There is no magical results to be found in the true faith of God. That is, we cannot of ourselves effect the permanent and the satisfying by some sort of magical ritual. The work is of God, the way is made in Christ, the power to effect the plan of God in the believer is through the Holy Spirit. The Word of God is the Divine Seed, living because it is God-breathed, and when accepted by the human heart through the work of Christ and the Holy Spirit it becomes the guarantee of salvation and fruitage for God. The thought most desired here to be grasped is that our abiding religious treasure is never of human origin. It is a gracious work of God in the heart of one who gives himself into the hands of God to be used as God shall determine. The teaching of the Brethren Church is that God's Word is the Foundation of faith and practice. We regard this to be wholly a Divine Foundation wholly without human agency. Our insistence upon the Bible rests in the fact that here we have the Divine contact with man and when man takes hold of the Word of God firmly and sincerely then God effects further changes as his Will determines. We do not believe that man through being religious and using religious forms and ceremonies which please the eye and enchant the emotions, comes into a saving relation with God but that God himself is the Author of salvation through the implanted Word. Man's part consists in "presenting himself" to God and submitting his will to God. The purpose in the believer to possess the treasures in Christ will lead to the grounding of his soul in God. He must forsake the world to pursue this high calling and finds the path growing brighter and brighter until the "Perfect Day"—We each may well ask ourselves, "What is it that we most desire that is offered us in this world"? Will we choose to stand with God and possess all things or will we choose to accept the vain offerings of Satan and with him be cast into destruction? "All the kingdoms of the world will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Yes, but the kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our God and his Christ. Satan's gift is only temporal, God's gift is eternal.

(To be continued)

CONFERENCE PROGRAM

(Continued from page 2)

	Address—A Standard for Ministerial Ordination —Dr. K. M. Monroe
	2—Laymen—Sunday Tabernacle Devotions—Stanley Hauser Special Music Unfinished Business Address—Prof. M. A. Stuckey 3—Women's Missionary Society—Auditorium Devotions—Mrs. Clyde Rager Unfinished Business 4—Sisterhood of Mary and Martha—Westminster Program to be Supplied
9:00-10:00	General Conference Business Session Reports; Unfinished Business; New Business
10:00-11:00	Evangelistic League—College and Seminary Reports and Plans of Bible and Evangelistic League Reports and Plans of College and Seminary
11:00-12:00	Bible Lecture Hour Prayer—B. F. Owen Bible Lecture—The Healing Question and Anointing with Oil—C. W. Mayes
Afternoon
1:20-1:50	W. M. S. Mission Study Class Teacher—Miss Clara Hendley
2:00-3:00	Hour on The Brethren Church: Historical Devotions—W. H. Schaeffer Address—Higher Education in the Brethren Church —Dr. E. E. Jacobs
3:30-5:00	W. M. S. General Session Devotions—Mrs. D. C. White Recognition Service, Banner Societies Feast of Ingathering

Our Signal Lights—Mrs. Homer A. Kent.
 Problem Hour—Round Table Discussion
 —Mrs. U. J. Shively

Evening

6:00-7:00 College Luncheon—Self-Serve Style—Winona Hotel—
 Open to All
 6:15 Vespers for Young People
 7:15 Song Service and Prayer
 7:35 Bible Exposition—Dr. K. M. Monroe
 7:55 Special Music
 8:00—Lecture Sermon—The Doctrine of Salvation
 —F. G. Coleman

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27*Morning

6:00-7:00 Morning Prayers—Geo. E. Pontius Leader
 8:00-9:00 Auxiliary Organizations
 1—Ministerium—Inn Chapel
 Devotions
 Final Reports; Memorials; Business
 2—Sisterhood of Mary and Martha—Westminster
 Program to be Supplied
 9:00-10:00 Final Conference Business Session
 All Unfinished Business; New Business
 10:00-11:00 Foreign Missionary Board; Christian Endeavor Society,
 F. M. S.—Treasurer's Report; Elections; Other Business
 Reports and Plans of Christian Endeavor Society
 11:00-12:00 Bible Lecture Hour
 Prayer—Delbert Whitmer
 Bible Lecture—The Christian Life—Dr. W. S. Bell

Afternoon

2:00-3:00 Foreign Missions Session
 —Dr. J. Allen Miller Presiding;
 Reports and Plans for the Year
 Address—History of Foreign Missions in the Brethren
 Church—Dr. L. S. Bauman
 Messages from the Fields by Missionaries on Furlough

Evening

7:15 Song Service and Prayer
 7:35 Bible Exposition—Dr. K. M. Monroe
 7:55 Special Music
 8:00 Illustrated Lecture—Our Founders and Builders
 —Dr. Martin Shively

SUNDAY, AUGUST 28,*Morning

6:30-7:00 Morning Prayers—Floyd Sibert, Leader
 8:00-8:45 Teacher's Meeting—Dr. J. Allen Miller, Instructor
 9:30-10:45 Sunday School Session—E. L. Miller, Superintendent
 10:45-12:00 Morning Worship
 Sermon—My Missionary Responsibility . . . . .
 —Homer A. Kent

Afternoon

2:15 Devotions—W. A. Steffler
 2:30 Address—A Vision of the Future—A. L. Lynn

Evening

6:30-7:25 C. E. Session—Miss Mabel Donaldson, Leader
 7:30-7:45 Song Service
 7:45-8:00 Devotions—G. L. Maus
 8:00-8:05 Special Music
 8:05 Closing Sermon—The Consummation of the Age
 —C. H. Ashman

Columbia. New laws as well as the depression, however, are said to account for many changes both in divorce and marriage figures. The largest single increase in marriages, 25.1 per cent, occurred in Nevada. Marriages in Idaho fell off 49.7 per cent, due to the adoption of more rigid laws.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

PERSIAN PALACE 4,000 YEARS OLD

A palace more than 4,000 years old has been uncovered at Tepe Hissar, near Damghan in northwestern Persia, it was announced June 26 at the University of Pennsylvania museum. The discovery was made by a joint expedition of the museum and the American Institute for Persian Art and Archaeology.

Dr. Erich Schmidt, field director of the expedition, reported there were found also some alabaster vessels, a copper dagger with a silver grip, and many gold, silver and agate ornaments of the period. The discovery, he stated, afforded evidence of the existence of a complete town site, of which the Palace probably was the center. About six months ago the expedition uncovered a cemetery at Tepe Hissar and found the bodies of hundreds of persons with their complete mortuary equipment. Finding of the palace at the same site. Dr. Schmidt reported, points to the existence of a town life which had hitherto been unsuspected.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

A TRIBUTE TO FOREIGN MISSIONS

Under the promotion of a Japanese newspaper a celebration and recognition service was held recently in Osaka Castle, Japan, for the foreign missionaries and welfare workers of Western Japan. At that time the past fifty years of missionary work was reviewed. For several days adjacent to the celebration this newspaper, The Osaka Mainichi, gave much front page and editorial publicity in tribute to Christian missions. These references received wide quotation through the press of Japan. Among the favorable references made are these: "One is struck by the outstanding proof of the great debt owed to the foreign missionaries, whose generous devotion has played an important part in medical relief, the care of orphans, prison reform and temperance movements." "They have risked their health, indeed their lives, in helping victims of tuberculosis and leprosy, something that even the countrymen of these unfortunates had not attempted on a large scale." Dr. Suzuki, Japanese Home Minister, said, "I sincerely hope that these foreign workers will continue to pursue their humanitarian work in order that they may further contribute toward the peace of mankind and the happiness of society."

Such recognition of the value of Christian missions from a country which might hold a prejudice arising from other angles is most encouraging. It ought to stimulate a greater confidence and a more generous missionary support in our churches at home.—F. G. C. in Congregationalist.

AMERICA THE USER OF AUTOS

Automobiles owned throughout the world at the close of 1931 were estimated by the Department of Commerce to have numbered 35,263,397, as compared with 35,805,632 at the close of 1930, or a decrease of 1.5 per cent. Passenger cars declined 2.1 per cent, while trucks and busses increased 1.4 per cent and 6 per cent respectively. The United States still leads with 25,986,353 registrations, which is 711,045 less than last year.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

DRYS PLAN STRATEGIC FIGHT AGAINST WETS

A five-point program rallying the dry forces of the nation to disregard party lines in a back-to-the-wall fight to save the Eighteenth Amendment, and avoid wasting ammunition on third-party suicide movements, was disclosed in Washington July 12 as having been submitted to the national prohibition organization for approval. It makes no mention of either President Hoover or Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, his Democratic rival in the campaign, but is regarded as not unfriendly to the President personally in that it urges prohibitionists to distinguish between the positions of candidates and of the parties they represent.

While the Anti-Saloon League has a four-point program of its own, the plan that has been submitted to the dry groups throughout the country by the central board of strategy and brought an overwhelmingly favorable response, it is said, is this:

1. To resist the submission of repeal or modification proposals to the states by Congress.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS*BROADCASTING THE KORAN

The Koran has been translated into Turkish and the first reading of it in the vernacular has occasioned much excitement among the Turkish masses. Thoughtful Moslems may not be so satisfied, for it has always been considered by Christians a desirable thing to let the masses of Mohammedan people know what the Koran really is in its inanity and obvious untruth. The service in Saint Sophia in which it was first publicly read was broadcast to all parts of Turkey.—Selected.

MARRIAGES AND DIVORCES DECREASE

The depression has had its effect upon both marriages and divorces in this country, both of which show a decline. Preliminary reports of the Bureau of Census, now complete for 39 States and the District of Columbia, indicate that there were nearly 37,000 fewer marriages in 1931 than in 1930, and 5,456 fewer divorces. The widespread nature of the slump in marriages is shown by the State surveys, increases occurring in only ten States. Divorces decreased during the year in all but nine States and the District of

2. To begin organizing dry majorities in the state Legislatures to fight ratification of any such proposal that might be submitted despite organized dry resistance.

3. If unable to prevent such submission, to fight for its reference to Legislatures rather than to state conventions elected on that issue.

4. To seek the election of dependably dry Senators and Representatives to Congress with a view to blocking submission; and to Legislatures, with a view to blocking ratification in at least thirteen states.

5. To consider the attitude of candidates rather than parties in campaigns for all offices, from President down, with a view to supporting those committed to sincere enforcement in cases where the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment is not directly involved; also to seek concerted action by dries to avoid scattering their fire in the crisis of the national prohibition amendment.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

EITHER THE BOTTOM OR—?

In a recent private conversation a high official of one of our largest news-gathering organizations made an interesting statement. "Either we have reached the bottom, or else we are due for a revolution. But I can see no signs of a revolution, while there are several indications that we have struck bottom. The stock market has been normal for some months. Not even the news about the reparations settlement could disturb it, although a year ago such tidings would have started a boom. A lot of people are badly scared, which is a good sign. They should have been frightened months back. Some large organizations are letting out many of their high-priced executives. If those men were worth what they were getting three years ago they would be worth keeping now, possibly at a reduced wage. In other words, we seem to be reaching bed rock." His only optimism was that things might cease getting worse! But that is some comfort.—The Congregationalist.

JAPAN LOSES CHINESE STUDENTS

The Sino-Japanese clash may cost Tokyo, Japan, its standing as one of the greatest Chinese educational centres in the world. Approximately 1,500 Chinese students left Tokyo's colleges since the trouble first began, with military rule in Manchuria, followed by the Shanghai occupation and practical annexation of Manchuria. It is supposed that a number of Chinese students will seek places in American universities. Japanese educators sincerely regret the situation, but are loath to blame the Chinese young people for deserting the atmosphere of militaristic aggression that the powerful military groups in Japan have created.—C. E. World.

STUDENTS DRINK LESS

Prof. James A. Woodburn, senior professor at the Indiana University (Bloomington) was recently asked to comment on drinking among college students. He said: "In my college days, drinking was much more common among respectable people, and the six or eight open saloons in the small town, with their pool-rooms and billiard tables, were a constant temptation and allurements. Now the boys have their sports and games entirely apart from drinking places, and the fraternities that permit or tolerate drinking or gambling in the houses are decidedly 'off color.'"—C. E. World.

"Forward Together with Christ in Evangelism"

(Continued from page 4)

is a necessity, and it would be the height of presumption to attempt it without him. It is possible to launch humanly devised and directed campaigns of evangelism, but all such end in failure, and any seeming success they may achieve is but superficial and transitory. Christ must be in his work and with his workers, if there is to be any real and abiding success. That is fundamental, and involves a real knowledge of and a vital and continued experience with Christ on the part of those who would succeed in evangelism. It is not without reason, therefore, that this conference set forth as the first item in their program a "deepening of the spiritual life," which means simply getting more intimately acquainted with Christ.

Following is their three-fold program, which deals with funda-mentals, and is worthy guidance for any church in planning its evangelistic program for the coming year:

(1) The deepening of the spiritual life through personal daily devotions, enrichment of public worship and church attendance.

(2) Aggressive soul winning through personal work, educational evangelism, evangelistic preaching and the holding of special night-by-night services.

(3) The conservation of evangelistic results by the care and culture of the new members and of the members who move from one community to another.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Psalms II

The songs of a people, if they be patriotic or homelike in sentiment, endure so long as the people endure who are the patriots and the homelovers of that land. But the Psalms, contrariwise, though confined to the Hebrew race, shall endure as long as the "sun and moon endure." They are the only songs which express a truly universal language, and, like the heavens, "declare the glory of God." That is the real reason why the more recent nations have no great religious psalmody—they do not know God's grace, glory, and goodness sufficiently to appreciate his manifold control in and over our common life.

There is little danger that this Holy of Holies of the Old Testament will ever become a desert spot in preference to some other scriptural oasis. Here the flowers always bloom and shed their morning, noonday, and evening fragrance everywhere; here the birds ceaselessly sing, reminding us of the angel choirs and the magnificence of their unutterable symphonies; here the colors of nature perpetually abound in queenly splendor, radiating something of the endless variety which must exist in the mind and spirit of our God; here the blasts continually are in evidence, for we are not above the snow line, dwelling in the perpetual Alps of his majesty and power; and here the zephyrs gently play recalling to us the stilly night and the vesper bell. O no, these Psalms shall never die! They plumb the depths of man and God in one grand sweep and reveal the atmosphere of heaven in one delightful song.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Authors.

- (1) David. 73.
- (2) Anonymous. 49.
- (3) Asaph. 12.
- (4) Korah or Sons of Korah. 11
- (5) Solomon. 2.
- (6) Moses. 1.
- (7) Heman. 1.
- (8) Ethan. 1.

2. When and Where Written. In Palestine. From Moses to Malachi.

3. To Whom Addressed. To Israel for Purposes of Worship.
4. Object. Collection and Preservation of Israel's Hymns.
5. Authenticity. Only Israelites and monotheists could have composed them.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK (First Books)

1. Ps. 1-41. Davidic. God, the Helper. Doxology: 41:13.
2. Ps. 42-72. Historical. God, the Wonder Worker. Doxology: 72:18, 19.
3. Ps. 73-89. Liturgical. God, the Mighty Helper. Doxology: 89:52.
4. Ps. 90-106. "Orphans." God, the Governing King. Doxology: 106:48.
5. Ps. 107-150. Praise. God, the Redeemer. Doxology: 150.

III. THE THEME OF THE BOOK

Worship is the dominant note of the Psalm Book. Worship whom? Why, worship God! In all circumstances of life, worship him. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee," (Isa. 26:3). "Rejoice in the Lord always," and "In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Herein lie the admonitions of the Scriptures to worship. That way lies peace, plenty, and power.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Praise, Prayer. Worship.
2. Key Verses. 23:1; 34:1.
3. Key Chapters. 1, 150, 23, 22, 24, 119, 2, 145, 90, 91, etc.
4. Key Ideas. Christ, God, Creation, Law, Joy, Suffering, Justice, Righteousness, Immortality.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

Christopher Smart, an English poet of no mean ability, while confined within the precincts of a mad-house, where, being deprived of pencil or pen, paid the following tribute to David by writing with the end of a key upon the boards of his cell:

SONG TO DAVID

"Sublime invention, ever young,
Of vast conception, towering tongue,
To God th' eternal theme;
Notes from your exaltations caught,
Unrivalled royalty of thought,
O'er meaner strains supreme:

He sang of God—the mighty source
Of all things—the stupendous force
On which all things depend;
From whose right arm, beneath whose eyes,
All periods, power, and enterprise
Commence, and reign, and end;

The world, the clustering spheres he made,
The glorious light, the soothing shade,
Dale, champagne, grove, and hill;
The multitudinous abyss
Where secrecy remains in bliss,
And Wisdom hides her skill.

"Tell them, I AM," Jehovah said
To Moses: while Earth heard in dread,
And, smitten to the heart,
At once above, beneath, around,
All Nature, without voice or sound,
Replied, "O Lord, Thou Art."

The Psalms make God and Nature vocal: man joins them in lusty song. Their value lies in their revelation of God and Man.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE PSALMS

1. Ps. 40:6-10 gives a picture of the coming and mission of the Messiah.
2. Ps. 41:9 and Ps. 109 have references to the betrayal of Christ. See Acts 1:20. Also Ps. 69:25.
3. Ps. 22, 23, 24 respectively depict the Good Shepherd in death, the Great Shepherd in resurrection, and the chief Shepherd in glory. The Saviour becomes the Shepherd and then the King. We see him carrying the Cross, the Crook and the Crown. In the first of these we note the prevailing idea of past Grace; in the second there is the promise of present Guidance; while in the last we behold the future Glory. Read John 10:11; Heb. 13:20; 1 Pet. 5:4.
4. Ps. 16:8-11 and Ps. 68:18 have reference to the resurrection and ascension.
5. Ps. 132:11; Ps. 118:19-23; Ps. 2; Ps. 72; Ps. 110 have a distinct bearing upon the kingship and glory of Christ.

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

1. Providence and human nature seem ever the same in David's and our day.
2. Thanksgiving and joy are products of the happy life.
3. A respect for God's Word is enjoined in the Psalms.
4. Only those who practise the presence of God really see him in nature; others see the cosmic urge.
5. No sin is so deep-dyed or blasphemous that the Psalmist does not find a greater remedy in the forgiveness which originally came from God and God alone. "Forgiveness is with thee."
6. "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations." Who shall presume to question it?

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

James 3:4,—“Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, yet are they turned about with a very small helm whithersoever the governor listeth.” This is the way Moffatt has it: “Look at the ships, too; for all their size and speed under stiff winds, they are turned by a tiny rudder wherever the mind of the steersman chooses.” These ships of ancient time called “so great” were only small coasters, keeping close to the shores of inland seas. Now our “great ships” could store away in their hold a whole armed fleet of the ancient craft, vessels, men and equipment together. However their size have changed, such vessels are still turned about with a very small helm. There stands the helmsman, at his post, a single man, scarcely more than a fly that has lighted on the immense bulk of the great vessel, having a small city of people with their belongings under him, and with one hand, gently turns his lever of wood, or determines the motion of the wheel, turning that mountain mass, first to the right and then to the left without any noticeable exertion. We have no power to handle ships at sea by their bulk. That is what James is telling us. By machinery, freight cars are lifted from their tracks and unloaded as you would dump a scuttle of coal into your stove. But some things have to be moved differently. The lesson is, that man turns about everything, masters all hardest difficulties by the use of a small power, or helm.

The soul is a magnitude more massive than any ship, and the storms it encounters are as wild as those of the great deep. So little ability have we to become what God would have us be, and do, without being guided in the sure way of God. Small helms are given us, by which we may be guided into the harbor of spiritual security. We should remember that helms do not impel ships. These are given to guide. Powers already in force must be present or every ship would swing dead-logged upon the waters. Our power in education, in the trades, in religion is not a means of setting us in motion. Many young people are deluded by being led to feel that all the power they need is in their diploma. That prized document only represents the fact that a helm is in their possession, which if used rightly, will steer them into channels of usefulness to their fellow man.

James, in his “gospel of common sense”, is telling us how to overcome sin. That we must have helms—powers to guide; that we do not manage horses by the collar, but by putting bits in their mouths. Animals can not be dealt with in their wild state; they must be tamed. We can not govern a bad passion, or grudge by choking it down, or annihilating it. We can not govern an ungodly ambition by willing it away. We can not slay bad thoughts that enter our mind. We can only steer the mind off from its grudge, its bad ambition, or its unholy thoughts. The lesson of James is, the helm power only is ours; the executive power rests with God. His winds are the impelling power. Our God can govern the soul; we must steer it into the presence of his mighty atmosphere. He has winds of LOVE, and FORGIVENESS. Does the Father not invite? “Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest.” And we can not pull rest from the skies. With all their wealth, rest can not be bought in car load lots. We must “COME.” And helm power we have will put us in the range of all power—the mighty power of God.

We all know what happens when the helm becomes tangled in ropes and weeds. That prevents it from moving freely; hence, its guiding power is lost. Nothing but disaster awaits the vessel when the helm is clogged. Crash! goes that fine ship, however staunch she may be built. Many a soul is carried farther and farther away from God because the power to guide has become entangled by some bad business, dissipation, or old grudge. The power to guide is lost. Is that not true with many a church? Worldliness, bossism, the craze to be popular, has clogged the helm of many a church until it can not be guided in the way of God. Such a church is out on the sea of time, just drifting. Its harbor may be in sight, but the old, unused ropes of worldly amusements, and the weeds of “big I and little you” have completely clogged its helm until its power to guide is lost. It may be near to a safe port, but the storms are sure to engulf it. Clean up the helm, my brother.

W. I. DUKER,
President
Elkhart, Indiana

E. L. MILLER
Vice-President
Maurertown, Virginia

NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.
MAGAZINE SECTION
M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR.
ASHLAND, OHIO

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
General Secretary
Berlin, Pennsylvania

M. P. PUTERBAUGH,
Treasurer
Ashland, Ohio

Barnardo, Friend of Destitute Children

Philanthropy is the legitimate son of conversion. The eighteenth century Shaftesbury, free-thinker, sneering and sterile; the nineteenth century Shaftesbury a militant evangelical and the most fruitful social reformer of his time. His aides, too, were all evangelicals. Oastler was a local preacher, Stephens a Methodist parson, Philip Grant a Bible Christian, as was also John Wood, the great cotton manufacturer who so largely financed factory reform and other Shaftesbury movements.

Dr. Barnardo, Shaftesbury's spiritual and practical successor, was in his early years touched with unbelief; but he was converted, and his conversion brought him into a career of service for others hardly paralleled. In sixty-four years the homes he founded for destitute boys and girls sheltered and trained 110,000 children and have assisted a half-million more with temporary shelter and otherwise. Can anyone believe that if Barnardo had continued in skepticism such a stately charity would ever have grown up under his care.

He had Jewish blood in him, his forbears having been bankers in Venice and Hamburg. One thinks of the South African Magnate Barnato with like Jewish name and so unlike a life history. His own father was a business man in Dublin, married to a Quakeress. Thomas Barnardo came under the influence of Dr. Gratten Guinness, volunteered for mission service in China, and went to East London for medical training. While studying medicine he threw himself with his intense energy into street preaching and was often beaten and abused. He taught in Ragged Schools and sold Scriptures in public houses. When the cholera swept London, he volunteered as nurse and helper. On one occasion a plot was hatched in a drink shop to beat up the flaming young evangelist. The bruiser secured to do the work, however, discovered that his prospective victim was the one who had brought him out of cholera at the risk of his own life. This discovery ultimately led to his conversion, and William Notman, ex-bruiser, became one of the best workers the Barnardo Homes ever had. Notman's two sons were later ministers greatly useful among the poor of London's East End.

Barnardo's work in Ragged Schools brought him into contact with homeless waifs, and he presently discovered that their number and their misery were far greater than was commonly supposed. He took up the matter in the press and was accused of exaggeration. Lord Shaftesbury, ever on the lookout for the downtrodden, invited him with others to a conference at his dinner table. The result was a midnight caravan of fifteen cabs from West End to East End, carrying a party intent on finding the facts. At first boxes and barrels did not seem to have their usual tenants. Finally, however, the group came upon a great tarpaulin under which seventy-three waifs were sleeping. These they pulled out, and Shaftesbury took them as his guests to Dick Fisher's restaurant and fed them to the throat. It was the largest and most pitiable band of waifs Barnardo had yet found.

Barnardo did not go to China. He rededicated the life to the waifs of British cities. But before his death he bestowed his blessing on seventeen rescued boys and girls now grown to manhood who sailed as foreign missionaries in his stead.

The drink trade is a tap root of misery, though Barnardo did not at this time realize its full bearing on his own particular problem. Indeed, he himself was not even an abstainer. But when his great work for waifs was fairly launched he began tabulating causes of waif-destruction. The fact emerged that no less than eighty-five per cent owed their social ruin and the long train of their distresses to the drinking habits of parents or other relatives. This discovery led Barnardo into Gospel pledge-signing campaigns. He secured Edinburgh Castle, the vilest gin-palace in Limehouse, remodeled it into a coffee house, and for fifteen years was (with all his other work) chief pastor, preaching often three times a week. Later he bought Dublin Castle on Mile End Road, and made it too into a similar mission center. This remarkable man, in the face of a hundred pressing duties, took his final medical examinations at the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, in 1876.

The story of the homes would be a true epic. "No destitute child ever refused admission" was their motto. They are now more than a hundred in number, with branches and open doors all over Great Britain and with distributing homes in Canada and Australia. Boys from the Barnardo homes have gone into all walks of life and honored them. They have become doctors, barristers, manufacturers, successful business men, even colonial cabinet ministers. The Hon. James Page, one of the most highly respected Australian statesmen, was a boy thief when he first fell into Barnardo's hands. In the early days objections were raised against sending the boys to Canada. It was thought that the taint of gutter life might reappear in the new land but by 1894 Barnardo's children had so proved their worth that Canadian applications for them were eight times greater than could be supplied, and a careful study of their Canadian life was so convincing as to elicit a gift of $250,000 from Lord Mount Stephen toward the expense of further emigration.

Such was the fruit of the Christian training of these unprivileged and often semi-criminal boys. It is significant that the last time Dr. Barnardo addressed a party of boys sea-bound for the New World he spoke from Acts 27:29: "They cast out four anchors and wished for the day." The anchors mentioned were,—the Bible, Prayer, a Good Conscience, and the Presence of Christ.

Like all pioneers of good things, Barnardo had to face defamation. The drink trade hated him and started slanderous stories. Bestial parents accused him of neglecting or abusing their children. Cardinal Manning, Ultramontane to the finger tips, with the Catholic press back of him, started legal actions against him for picking up and salvaging Catholic waifs. This "social churchman" Manning had done nothing for these lambs of his own flock. "I never once met," wrote Barnardo at the time, "in the lodging houses or in the slums, by day or night, a single priest or other agent of the Roman Church at work to save their own poor children." Manning had the law on his side. Barnardo lost. But "more than one judge, after giving a verdict against him on a point of law, sent a donation to the Homes," and Parliament directly passed the Custody of Children Bill which legalized Barnardo's activities in all particulars.

These activities set the pace for state action. Barnardo was called by the government to give advice regarding Poor Law Reform. All sorts of abuses in workhouse management and care of children were laid bare and their correction was undertaken along Barnardo lines. Sir John Gorst said: "We owe him much for what he has done. We owe him more for the example he has set us of how to do it." The Home Secretary, Lord Brentford, concurred: "I thank God for Dr. Barnardo and all the work he has done. He is one of the great men of Great Britain for all time." And the veteran of social science Charles Booth added: "It is beyond question the greatest charitable institution in London, and I suppose in the world."

The annual income of the Homes at Dr. Barnardo's death was a full million dollars. The Watts Naval Home prepared boys for the British navy; the Russell-Cotes Nautical School for the mercantile marine. An Australian Hospital cared for the sick and crippled. The Girls' Village is a charming place, adorned by art as well as by nature, for the great artist Sir George Frampton, a warm friend of the institution, gave to it some of his finest paintings and induced various colleagues to follow his example. The British nation has backed Dr. Barnardo, and in the days of its bitter need was well repaid, for 11,000 old boys volunteered for service during the World War.

When at sixty this unwearied friend of the friendless laid aside sword and helm, his earthly remains received a tribute such as is reserved for kings only. London lined its streets in sorrowful demonstration. The City suspended business. It was the best that earth could do. One would like to have seen the heavenly streets on the day the little doctor reached them!

The editor of Punch, after a description of Barnardo as true servant of Christ, continued in these fine lines:

By birthright pledged to misery, crime, and shame,
Jetsam of London's streets, her waifs and strays,
Whom she, the Mother, bore without a name,
And left and went her ways—

He stooped to save them, set them by his side,
Breathed conscious life into the still-born soul,
Taught truth and honor, love and loyal pride,
Courage and self-control.

Till of her manhood, here and overseas,
On whose supporting strength her state is throned,

None better serve the Motherland than these,
Her sons, the once disowned.

By their fruits ye shall know them. Compare the wards of this tireless Christian philanthropist with the Moscow waifs under the regime of atheist Communism.—The Sunday School Times.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
With
Thoburn C. Lyon

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

(Lesson for August 14)

Lesson Text: Ex. 20:12-21; Golden Text: Lev. 19:18

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

Duties to Man. Ex. 20:12-21

Our duties to our fellow men become very complex, calling for the multitudinous body of laws which make up our modern jurisprudence. However, in their essence ALL such duties are summed up in these few simple verses. If we love our parents, do not kill anyone, and do not even covet anything they may possess, we will at least have peaceful homes, there will be no more wars at home or abroad, there will be no jealous envyings or backbitings—in short, we will have many of the conditions of the millennium. Let us pray that men and nations may become more mindful of their duties to other men; and let us be sure that we fulfill our own duties to men.

TUESDAY

Obligations to God and Man. Mark 12:28-34

We need not expect men to recognize their duties to other men until they fulfill their obligations to God. This was truly the first commandment; the other is second in experience and practice as well as in the order in which it was given. These two commandments are so fundamental and so broad that Jesus said (Matt. 22:40): "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." How we long for the day when strife and jealousy between men and nations shall cease, and men shall recognize in every other man a brother in the Lord! Let us pray for that coming day and bend our every effort toward its advent.

WEDNESDAY

Moral Obligations. Rom. 13:8-14

During the World War the most solemn obligations were regarded as so many scraps of paper. Since then this same spirit has largely pervaded all the relations of men in the business world, confidence has been destroyed, and we are in the midst of a "depression" that has already resulted in unprecedented losses to corporations and individuals alike. We need to learn anew to keep our obligations, and to owe no man anything. Let us pray that the church of Christ, at least, shall keep all the laws of God through very love.

THURSDAY

Vain Worship. Matt. 15:1-9

The laws of God are to be obeyed, and not to be trifled with. The Jews had changed the commands of God to suit their own wishes, and although they professed to be scrupulously keeping God's law, their hearts were far from it. Jesus branded them as hypocrites and told them plainly their perverted "laws" were in vain. May we ourselves, the Church of Christ, and particularly our own denomination, never be guilty of perverting God's laws and drifting into vain worship, but may we keep his law in our hearts as well as with our lips.

FRIDAY

The Supreme Requirement. Matt. 19:16-22

The mere keeping of commandments, however exact their keeping, is not sufficient in itself. This young ruler claimed, probably quite truthfully, that he had kept the commandments from his youth, yet he felt that something vital was lacking. That something was the supreme requirement, and it is this: That God become real to us, and that we give ALL of ourselves in complete consecration to him. It may not mean giving all our money, although it may mean giving up much more of it than we have been giving. It certainly does involve recognition of God's ownership and our stewardship over every department of life.

Let us carefully and thoughtfully examine ourselves before him, to make sure that we have met this supreme requirement.

SATURDAY

Good Neighbors. Eph. 4:25-32

Read these verses carefully; there is more in them than may be apparent at a casual reading. Many of these things we have "kept from our youth;" but what about verse 29 and 30? Have we ever really tried to edify our neighbors, or to minister grace unto them? Is it possible that our failure in this regard has grieved the Holy Spirit? Ponder prayerfully, too, v. 32.

SUNDAY

Good Citizens. Ps. 15:1-5

How the world needs a return to such principles of citizenship as are outlined here! This was the historic Brethren position. Brethren kept their word regardless of consequences to themselves; they took no advantage of the necessity of others. Pray that as Brethren we may set an example of good citizenship worthy of emulation by all, and that we may walk worthy of him who hath called us.

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. G. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK  G. O. WHITMER, 217 E. DuSall Ave., South Bend, Ind.	GLAORYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio
--	--	---

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

"Sensitiveness vs. Selfishness." No. 14

Sensitiveness is a Christian grace. Sensitiveness is an unchristian vice. The sensitive person is a blessing to society. The sensitive person is a nuisance in any community. The sensitive spirit should be assiduously cultivated by all. The sensitive spirit is by all means to be striven against and conquered.

It all depends upon what you mean by sensitiveness. There is a true sensitiveness which implies great delicacy of feeling and perception. And there is a false sensitiveness which should be spelled "selfishness." What a pity that one name should be applied to two qualities so nearly opposite in character.

There is the "sensitive plant." How it shrinks from every rude touch. Just brush its leaves carelessly with your hand, and straightway they fold themselves close together and droop downwards, a touching picture of hurt feelings.

Society abounds in sensitive plants. They grow luxuriantly in the Church. Everywhere we find them. They are always on the lookout for sights and criticism. They think a great deal about their rights and dignities. They may be good workers, but they must be appreciated. Their feelings are very tender, and they wear them where they will be exposed to the most violent shocks. A suspicion of neglect, a word of opposition or criticism, and they are offended. They stop work at once, and will not do anything more until they have been flattered and cajoled. And even then they generally assume the air of martyrs.

But are they as careful of the feelings of others as they expect others to be of their feelings? Very rarely. As a rule, your sensitive soul is quite careless of the rights and feelings of others. When you hear one say, "I am exceedingly sensitive," you are safe to conclude that he is exceedingly selfish.

True sensitiveness, on the other hand, is that delicacy of spirit and quickness of perception that makes us very tender in our treatment of others. It does not make us more ready to take offence but it does make us more careful about giving offence. It makes us considerate of the weaknesses and prejudices and foibles of our neighbors. It restrains us from trespassing upon their rights and prerogatives.

Two men were partners in a country store, both of whom liked a joke, but one was universally popular while the other was equally unpopular. One day the latter said to the former, "Why is it that you can joke with people as much as you like, and they never seem to mind it, but if I joke with them, they always get angry?" "That is plain enough," replied the other. "I always joke with people about something that they care nothing about; but when you joke with a man, you select the sorest spot you can find, and then hit him as hard as you can right there." The first man was sensitive in the proper sense; the second was not.

Jesus Christ was the most truly sensitive of men, yet he never took offence. His own feelings were entirely consecrated to this work. He never "stood on his dignity;" he never claimed his rights; he never fretted because he was not appreciated. But how tenderly he treated the feelings and rights of others; how patient toward Samaritan prejudice; how gentle toward Galilean ignorance and stupidity; how careful at all times to treat even bigotry and superstition in such a manner that the smallest bud of faith should not be blighted.

Of such sensitiveness the world can never have enough. To quickly perceive that we are hurting another's feelings, or that we are touching an unwelcome topic; to avoid all words or actions that might make others unhappy; to have the faculty of soothing ruffled spirits and relieving the friction and jars of life—this is a great gift. It is a most Christly grace. But he who possesses it will never be heard saying, "I am extremely sensitive."

South Bend, Indiana.

American Bible Society following more than nine years of arduous labor by the translator, the Rev. W. D. Townsend, of the Central American Mission.

More than half of Guatemala's two and one-half million population are pure-blooded Indians and among them the Cakchiquel group is important and influential. The advancement of these Indian groups who speak different dialects is one of Guatemala's serious problems.

Through missionary channels there recently came the account of an interesting sequel demonstrating President Ubico's sincerity in making the statement quoted above. An Indian evangelist was holding meetings in the town of Comalapa. At the close of a service he asked if any present would like to accept the Lord as Savior. In response an Indian stood and later was received into the Christian faith. Asked how he had become interested in the Gospel he replied that President Ubico had introduced him to it. This was how it happened:

Some action of the government had disturbed his fellow townsmen and they had appointed him to go to the President and voice a protest. In an interview the President received him kindly, told him that the trouble with the Indians in Comalapa, as elsewhere, was that they were bound by customs, superstitions, and ignorance, which held them back and kept them poor. What they needed was to break loose—to make progress. Handing the Indian his Cakchiquel New Testament, the President asked him to read some of it. The President next advised him to get a copy and read it at home with his fellow townsmen saying that through that book they would learn how to make true progress.

Thus it was that he learned of the New Testament. He later obtained a copy and, as a result of reading and studying it, he decided to be received as a Christian. He proudly says that the President of his country evangelized him.—Reported by the American Bible Society.

TO THE UNKNOWN MISSIONARY

"Some sixty years ago a Christian missionary found his way into Macedonia, which was then under Turkish rule. Among the converts was a young man named Kalialoff, who became a flaming evangelist and organized a little group of converts, whom he served as a lay-preacher. Through war and persecution he faithfully served his congregation. Today the work goes on in that little Macedonian village, which is now a part of Yugoslavia, under the leadership of the son of the lay-preacher, who is an ordained minister. But that is not the whole story. In Port Colborne, Canada, is another son, who keeps a confectionery store, but who is also known throughout the community as a leading Christian layman. Another son is on a farm near Simcoe, and two daughters are in Toronto; all are fine Christian characters. The name of the original missionary has probably been forgotten, but down through the years his influence has lived on in the lives of these humble, but useful, Christians."—From the Record and Missionary Review of the United Church of Canada.—Congregationalist.

PRAYER

O Thou who art ever the same, grant us so to pass through the coming years with faithful hearts, that we may be able in all things to please thy loving eyes.—Mozarabic Sacramentary.

Send Foreign Mission Funds to
LOUIS S. BAUMAN
Financial Secretary Foreign Board
1925 East 5th St.,
Long Beach, California

MISSIONS

Send Home Missionary Funds to
R. PAUL MILLER
Home Missionary Secretary
Berne, Indiana

The Leopard and the Goat and Their Friends

By Mrs. Orville D. Jobson

(Seventh of a series of African Folk Stories collected and selected by Mrs. Orville D. Jobson, Missionary to French Equatorial Africa, and published at intervals in The Evangelist, for the special benefit of our young readers.—EDITOR.)

Once upon a time a leopard and a goat were great friends, and they lived together, and the leopard had two little cubs and the goat had two little kids, and the children played together and were very happy. But every day the kids grew fatter and fatter, and every day the cubs grew thinner and thinner, and the leopard became very jealous and began to hate the goat.

At last she thought of a wicked plan; she said to the goat: "My cousins who live across the valley are making a big feast this afternoon and I have promised them a surprise; will you go to the bark cloth makers and buy me a very beautiful cloth to wear at the feast?"

While the goat was away the leopard caught the two little kids and tied their mouths to keep them from crying out, and made them into a parcel, packed in wide banana leaves and tied up with a string, and he brought the parcel and put it down in the yard.

Now the wildcat and the guinea fowls were great friends, and they often visited the leopard and goat, and it so happened that they were passing through the garden and saw what the leopard did, but they hid behind the tree and said nothing.

When the leopard returned to the house they followed her as if they had just arrived, and the leopard greeted them and told them about the feast. Just then the goat returned, and the leopard took the bark cloth and went to dress.

Then the wild cat and the guinea fowl told the goat what they had seen in the garden, and they all three went quickly to the parcel and released the poor little kids, and they caught the leopard cubs and tied them up, and put them into a parcel, and put the parcel back where it was in the yard.

When the leopard was dressed in her new bark cloth, she came in feeling very proud and said to the goat: "Will you carry the parcel for me? It is the contribution to the feast, and a great surprise for my cousins." So the goat took up the parcel, and the wild cat and the guinea fowl said:

"We will go with you across the valley." As they went they asked each other riddles. The goat asked, "What is it that goes the same journey every day?" And the wild cat guessed, "the sun."

Then she asked: "What is it that has no feet and travels all over the country?" And the guinea fowl guessed: "Dried fish."

Then she asked a riddle: "In what country are there no women, only men?" This they discussed a long time and the guinea fowl told them: "A patch of Indian corn," for all the corncocks have long beards like old men." The wild cat didn't think this a very good riddle but the goat did.

The leopard guessed nothing, and being very cross, she said, "You all think you are very clever today." And the goat said: "We are cleverer today than we have ever been before, but we shall have to be more clever before the sun goes down."

When they reached the village across the valley the leopard said to his cousins: "I have brought you a most beautiful stew; it must be cooked just as it is, tied up in banana leaves. Do not open it until it is cooked, and you will be very surprised when you see the contents."

So they put the parcel into a big cooking pot and the three friends ran very quickly home, and the wildcat and the guinea helped the goat pack up all her things, and they took the two little kids and fled to the forest and made a new home there, for they knew now that the leopard hated them and would kill them all when she found out the trick they played on her.

Meanwhile at the leopard's feast the guests were getting hungry, and at last the stew was cooked, and they all sat down and undid the parcel, wondering what the great surprise would be, and what did they see but two poor little cooked leopard cubs.

They were very angry with the leopard and said, "You heartless creature to cook your own children."

The leopard cried: "I did not cook them, the goat has played me a trick; let us go and kill her and the kids." So all the leopards went across the valley with their cousins but the goat and her kids had gone away long before they reached the house, and they never caught them, and since that day leopards and goats have hated each other.

Afterwards the wild cat and the guinea fowl had a quarrel, and became enemies, but that is rather a long story, so I won't tell it to you; they said dreadful things to each other which are best forgotten.

THE PRESIDENT EVANGELIZED HIM

"This book marks a great forward movement in our civilization," said General Ubico, president of the republic of Guatemala, when presented with the first copy from the press of a New Testament in the Cakchiquel language. The volume, suitably inscribed, had just been printed by the

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

NEEDS OF THE BRETHREN HOME

Dear Churches:

Until this year there has been cream and eggs to sell, and they have been a good price, and we have always had two or three boarders. This year we are buying part of our butter and cream. We will have more chickens next year. But we need two more cows.

This is really a lovely home and I do not see why there are not more people here, if not to stay, to board by the month or year. We have room for six, and more if couples will come, and we will enjoy having you. The price is $25 a month for room, board, washing and ironing, and we take all who are able to church every Sunday morning. Rev. Freeman Ankrum holds services here once a month on Sunday afternoons, and everybody enjoys them. If we had four or five boarders we would need scarcely any help.

We are needing money for groceries, clothing, shoes and so forth. We would be glad to have wheat or flour, fruits—fresh or canned, prints for dresses, muslin for gowns, etc.

We do not need bedding right now. A number of Indiana churches and one from Illinois sent us money, curtains, towels, tablecloths and a number of things we needed, but the grocery question is the biggest item now.

Our garden is good and that helps. We know so many people are out of work and we do not expect a lot, but there are two women in bed, one blind and three nearly blind; they have paid their money to come here and they need care and will have the best we can give them as long as we have your support.

Trusting in God to provide the way.

I am, Yours Sincerely,

MRS. CYRUS MYER, Matron.

LOUISVILLE, OHIO

D. V. B. S. Program

The Daily Vacation Bible School conducted for two weeks at the First Brethren church ended on Friday morning. At this session each child that had a perfect attendance record was presented with a neatly printed booklet, entitled, "Gems of the Bible", a gift from the Sunday school. On Sunday evening the school presented a program, demonstrating the nature of the work accomplished during the sessions under the able leadership of the pastor, Rev. A. E. Whitted, and his corps of teachers. The school was not confined to First Brethren pupils, but was open to other schools and quite a large number availed themselves of the opportunity of joining in this fine piece of work. The program was very well received and the favorable comments were many. The teachers who assisted the Rev. Whitted in the work were the Misses Marie Miller, Ruth Hankey, Elinor Moomaw, Viola Knoll, Mrs. Floyd Miller and Mrs. Henry Karlosky.

The following program was given on the Sunday evening following the close of the school work:

Processional
Salute and Response
Call to Worship
Opening Hymn—This is My Father's World
Prayer
Prayer Hymn Motto

Song Period

Booster Song
To the Work
Man of Sorrows
Chorus Numbers—Everybody Ought to Love Jesus, and Jesus Loves Me.
Grandfather's Clock
Flag Salute
Offering
Two Numbers by Beginners
Reading—John Zumkehr
Bible School Acrostic—Primary Group
Books of the Bible—Elsie Lillie
Dramatization of The Good Samaritan—Primary Boys
Song—Wonderful Words of Life—Whole Group
Dramatization of the Ten Virgins—Primary Girls
Memory Texts—Psalm 19. Harriet Belle Peer; Rev. 22-1-14, Savilla Taylor
Bible Story Exercise with music by Junior Girls—Glenn Miller, James Ross, Fred Bratten Closing Song—Jesus Bids Us Shine—Group.
—From the Louisville Herald.

MT. OLIVET, DELAWARE

We have no startling news to report from Delaware but I assure you that we are yet on the map, although the financial panic has struck our little band hard, and then we live over one hundred and fifty miles from this field and only give them service every two weeks. Then the membership is widely scattered and some of our best people have no way to go to church. Twenty and twenty-five miles are not far when we have a good auto, but that many of our people do not have.

We had a wonderfully spiritual and uplifting Communion service, Sunday night, July 24. They sang spiritual songs during the feet washing service and about every member gave a testimony at its close. Thirty-six were there. Several families wanted to come badly but had no way.

We have baptized an excellent young man who married one of our best girls a few weeks ago. They attend all services, although they live over twenty miles away.

Being south two trips, and work getting behind on my little farm, I have been greatly rushed with work, although we have had them given regular services except one, and we had arranged for that, but Brother Detrickson could not go that Sunday.

If times were normal and they could pay a man to be on this field, there could be a good work built up here.

We have a number of members at Ocean View over twenty miles from church, but only being able to give them one service, and that in private homes every two weeks, a week night service at that, is a great drawback to this work.

We had hoped ere this to build a little church there, but the present panic makes it impossible.

Yesterday I worked hard to try to buy a tent cheap and hold them a tent meeting but in spite of the depression, the best I could do was to have offered a tent for $65, second hand, or $125 for a new tent, but either of these is more than we can raise, so at present I see no way to have a meeting there. I once used a tent 13 years and built several churches. Then later we bought another cheap one and used that for a few years. Now we need one badly but are unable to purchase it.

I ask the prayers of all of God's faithful ones that the Lord will open up a way for these good people. If I were able and had a bank account I would purchase a tent for these people and get all out of the people I could and donate the rest, but this I cannot do.

The command is to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, but today it seems that many of the poor cannot have the Gospel preached to them.

For fifty years I have tried to take a special interest in the poor but because of much sickness in my family I am unable to do much more for this class. I am praying that the Lord will raise up young men that will take impartial interest in rich and poor alike.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN
Leesburg, New Jersey.

OHIO CONFERENCE MINUTES

The Brethren churches of Ohio assembled in Annual Conference at Bryan, Ohio, June 14-17 with Moderator M. A. Stuckey in charge. Departing from the usual custom Conference convened on Tuesday afternoon instead of Tuesday evening. This change proved very highly satisfactory and the same arrangement was suggested for next year. The address of welcome left no doubt in the minds of the delegates as to the fine reception extended Conference by Bryan Brethren and friends. The following is the report of the business sessions of Conference.

Wednesday Morning

Following the report of the secretary which was approved by Conference the credential committee brought their first report of 41 lay delegates, 16 ministerial delegates present and 24 ministerial absent. This report was approved.

A motion was sustained that the moderator appoint members to fill the vacancies on the membership committee.

Nomination for the committee on committees were H. S. Rutt, Rev. L. V. King and Dr. Bame. With these nominations made a motion was sustained that nominations be closed and these men were duly elected.

A motion received the approval of Conference to extend the courtesy of the Conference to visiting Brethren from other districts.

A report from the president of the Mission Board was very encouraging. Following his report of the mission churches, Brother Baer brought us the printed report of the treasurer. It was as follows:

Ohio Mission Board Treasurer's Report for the period beginning June 12th, 1931 and ending May 31st, 1932

General Fund

Statement of Cash Receipts and Payments Balance on hand June 12th, 1931 $ 759.88 Receipts:

Ankenytown	30.00
Ashland	160.00

Bryan .....	110.00
Camden .....	6.00
Canton .....	40.00
Columbus .....	30.00
Dayton .....	428.00
Ellet .....	12.00
Fair Haven .....	48.00
Fremont .....	22.50
Glenford .....	30.00
Gratis .....	27.50
Gretna .....	67.50
Homerville .....	26.00
Louisville .....	52.50
New Lebanon .....	35.18
North Georgetown .....	15.00
Pleasant Hill .....	56.00
Rittman .....	24.00
Salem .....	50.00
Smithville-Sterling .....	75.00
West Alexandria .....	5.00
Williamstown .....	45.00
Total Receipts .....	1,395.18
Total Receipts and beginning balance .....	2,155.06
Payments:
Columbus .....	375.00
Ellet .....	367.00
Fremont .....	367.00
Mansfield .....	90.50
Rittman .....	275.00
Misc. Expense—Postage, etc. ....	8.00
Total Payments .....	1,482.50
Balance on Hand May 31, 1932 .....	672.56
Church Extension Fund
Statement of Cash Receipts and Payments:
Receipts on hand June 12th, 1931 $ 554.44
Receipts:
Interest—Ashland Bldg. & Loan Co. ....	39.53
Interest—Ellet Notes to Feb., 1931 .....	68.25
Interest—Fremont Note to Aug., 1931 .....	60.00
Columbus Church—two trips to Bryan .....	16.87
Total Receipts .....	184.65
Total Receipts and beginning balance .....	739.09
Payments:
Columbus Church Exp. ....	129.74
M. A. Stuckey—trip to Bryan .....	8.00
K. M. Monroe—trip to Bryan .....	8.87
Total Payments .....	146.61
Balance on Hand May 31, 1932 .....	592.48
Balance Sheet
ASSETS
General Fund—A
Cash:
The National Bank .....	472.56
The Ashland Bldg. & Loan Co. ....	200.00
TOTAL CASH .....	672.56
Accounts Receivable .....	769.82
Total Assets—General Fund .....	1,442.38
Church Extension Fund—B
Cash:
The Ashland Bldg. & Loan Co. ....	592.48
Notes Receivable:
Fremont Church .....	2,000.00
Ellet Church .....	2,275.00
Total Notes Receivable ..	4,275.00

Accrued Int. Receivable ..	141.00
Total Assets Church Extension Fund .....	5,008.48
Total Assets in both Funds A and B .....	6,450.86
Liabilities and Capital
Liabilities .....	None
Capital .....	6,450.86
Total Liabilities and Capital .....	6,450.86

Respectfully Submitted,
R. A. HAZEN, Treasurer.

Auditor's Statement

Ashland, Ohio, June 6, 1932.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that I have examined the books, records and statement of R. A. Hazen, Treasurer of the Ohio Mission Board of the Brethren Church, and find the same to be correct in every respect.

ANDREW MILLER.

Both of these reports were accepted. Members of the credential committee appointed by the moderator were Rev. Raymond Gingrich and Rev. Herman Hoyt.

The report of the statistician was read and approved. This report revised and completed since Conference is as follows:

Number of church houses .....	30
Parsonages .....	10
Other property .....	2

Membership

No. Male Members .....	2171
No. Female Members .....	3098
Total No. Members .....	5269
Added by letter or relation .....	40
Added by baptism .....	322
Total additions .....	362
Lost by death, letter, etc. ....	116
Net Gain for the year .....	246
Revivals held .....	10
No. churches holding prayer services ..	15
Average attendance at prayer service ..	25

Valuations

Church house, lot and fixtures ..	$407,100.00
Parsonages .....	28,100.00
Other property .....	5,300.00
Total valuation .....	440,500.00

Money Paid Out

Pastors' Salary .....	$24,245.62
Evangelistic services .....	1,363.26
Current expense .....	12,696.87
Improvements .....	642.37
District Missions .....	1,284.00
Home Missions .....	1,539.75
Foreign Missions .....	3,584.06
Superannuated Ministers .....	368.39
Brethren Home .....	263.33
College .....	130.88
Publishing Co. ....	313.47
Miscellaneous .....	3,530.80
Total paid out .....	$48,243.09
No. of deacons reported .....	90
No. of deaconesses .....	73
No. of elders in District .....	46

The committee on committees presented the following partial report which was adopted:

President Ohio Mission Board, 1935, Geo. S. Baer.

Ministerial Examining Board, 1935, J. Allen Miller.

Church Trustees

Full term, 1937, L. P. Clapper, Canton, O. Unexpired term, 1933, J. E. Stookey, Ashland, O.

District Evangelists

C. A. Stewart, A. E. Whitted, G. C. Carpenter, R. D. Barnard, Chas. Bame, Wm. H. Beachler, Prof. DeLozier.

General Conference Committee, Dr. E. E. Jacobs, W. S. Crick.

College Trustees, 1936

H. S. Rutt, D. S. Workman, N. G. Kimmel.

Church Comity Committee

Geo. S. Baer, Martin Shively, Dr. W. S. Bell.

Thursday Morning

Following the report of the secretary the credential committee reported 43 lay delegates; 20 ministerial delegates with a total of 63 present.

The mission apportionments and the budget approved by conference follows. The apportionment is per quarter:

Ankenytown S. S. ....	$ 7.50
Ashland .....	40.00
Bryan .....	27.50
Camden .....	3.00
Canton .....	20.00
Columbus .....	7.50
Danville S. S. ....	4.00
Dayton .....	92.00
Ellet .....	6.00
Fairhaven .....	16.00
Fairview S. S. ....	3.00
Fremont .....	7.50
Glenford S. S. ....	10.00
Gratis .....	15.00
Gretna .....	7.50
Homerville .....	6.50
Louisville .....	10.00
Mansfield S. S. ....	7.50
Miamisburg S. S. ....	3.00
Mt. Zion S. S. ....	3.00
New Lebanon .....	27.50
North Georgetown S. S. ....	3.75
Pleasant Hill .....	14.00
Rittman .....	7.50
Salem (Clayton) .....	13.50
Smithville-Sterling .....	25.00
West Alexandria .....	12.50
Williamstown .....	15.00

Total per quarter .....

Mission Budget

Columbus .....	$ 270.00
Ellet .....	400.00
Fremont .....	400.00
Mansfield .....	100.00
Rittman .....	300.00

Total .....

The report of the District Evangelist for organization and assignment of churches was approved and reads as follows.

The Board of District Evangelists met with Dr. Bame as chairman and Rev. Stewart as secretary. The work of the district was divided as follows:

DeLozier—Ankenytown, Dayton, Homer-ville, Smithville-Sterling.

Carpenter—Ashland, Danville, Fair Haven, Louisville.

Bame—Bryan, Columbus, Mansfield, Williamstown.

Beachler—Camden, Mount Zion, New Lebanon, Salem, West Alexandria.

Barnard—Fairview, Glenford, Miamisburg, Pleasant Hill.

Stewart—Fremont, Gratis, Gretna.

Nominations for Conference Officers resulted in the following:

Moderator, Rev. C. A. Bame; Vice Moderator, Rev. C. A. Stewart; Secretary-Treasurer, Rev. G. C. Pontius.

A motion prevailed that the moderator cast the ballots for the officers elect. This being duly done there were a few remarks made by the new officers.

Greetings were received from visiting Brethren Sands and Henderson.

Following this business session, Dr. W. S. Bell presented a message on "Some Problems of Our Publishing Interests." This message was so well received that a motion prevailed to discuss immediately some of its recommendations.

Following a discussion the following motion met the approval of Conference—"As a Conference we recommend to the Woman's Missionary Society; the Home Mission Board and the Foreign Mission Board that they consider or reconsider the merging of all publications with the Brethren Evangelist."

A motion was also sustained that the address of Brother Bell be referred to the Evangelist for publication.

Friday Morning

Following the report of the secretary a recommendation from the Program of Progress Committee was presented to conference "That we recommend to the conference the appointment of a committee to study the needs of emphasis in our Ohio churches and prepare a program suitable to follow the Semi-Centennial Program of Progress and present such program before next year's conference."

This motion following its amendment to include the election of a committee of five met the approval of conference.

The final report of the credential committee revealed the following: 20 ministerial delegates present, 23 ministerial absent; 44 lay delegates, making a total of 87 delegates. This report was accepted and the committee discharged with this thanks of the conference.

The resolution committee brought the following report accepted by conference.

RESOLUTIONS

Inasmuch as the Lord has blessed us in the spirit and has enabled us to remain true to him in a disturbed world, and has brought us to this conference; and believing that we are indebted to the Bryan church and others as well for our pleasant experience here; and inasmuch as our time here has been well spent and we have received inspiration and information as well as having enjoyed the fellowship we have had together:

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we praise God for the evidences of his presence in this conference.
2. That the officers and delegates of the conference be complimented on the spirit of unity and cooperation maintained in the conference sessions and on the apparent accord of belief and purpose of the many addresses given.
3. That since the Semi-Centennial Program of Progress has contributed to the expansion and strengthening of the churches, we should redouble our efforts to make further and greater gains in the succeeding year.
4. That in view of the present tendency to fall away from the faith, that we urge upon both the ministry and the laity that they preach and teach both by precept and example the simple Gospel truths that have been the traditional heritage of our faith.
5. That we commend the general policy of merging the publication efforts and resources of the church under one periodical.
6. That we reaffirm the position of our church as opposed to war for the settlement of international disputes, for the reason that God is over all and above all and has the sole right to engage men in mortal combat, and to him we owe our sole allegiance.
7. That we deplore the conditions of social life in this or any other country which detract from reverence for God and the sanctity of the home. We believe that commercialized amusements tend to operate against the highest realization of a life in Christ and therefore the believer should spurn them.
8. That since God expressly abominates the use of intoxicating liquor and since certain gains have been made under the Prohibition Amendment, we reaffirm our position in favor of Prohibition.

9. That in these days of industrial depression we urge upon all the obligation of Christian Stewardship, that the work Christ has commanded us to do should not suffer for lack of human willingness or for shortage of funds.

10. That we express our appreciation to the officers and all who have contributed to make this conference so profitable and inspirational.

11. That we appreciate the United Brethren Church offering its facilities for our use.

12. That we express our sincere appreciation to the Bryan congregation and their pastor for the hearty welcome they extended to us and for the wholehearted interest they had in our comfort while here.

A. E. WHITED,
HAZEL KEISER,
DONALD BAME.

A motion prevailed that conference recommend to the churches that were in arrears with their Home Mission Apportionment that they ask the Sunday school to assume these payments. A discussion revealed the fact that many Sunday schools had already assumed such obligations.

The treasurer's report was read and accepted.

The financial committee reported and allowed the following bills:

Brethren Publishing Co. ....	$24.00
Secretary .....	10.00
Postage, stationery, etc for mailing credentials and gathering statistical reports .....	2.17
	<hr/> $36.17

Conference requested the moderator to prepare his address for publication in the Evangelist.

The committee on committees brought the following report as nominees for the New Program Committee and the same received the approval of conference: Dr. E. E. Jacobs, Geo. S. Baer, R. D. Barnard, M. A. Stuckey and J. Allen Miller.

Thus ended the business sessions of the 1932 conference.

Following the suggestion of the previous conference our program was built around the Semi-Centennial Program of Progress. This program stresses Devotional Life and Bible Study; Evangelism and Missions; Denominational Ideals and Interests, and Stewardship of Life and Substance. Thus a program with such a foundation could not help but be filled with rich spiritual food for all attending. In carrying out this program various themes were used for the different sessions.

Conference opened very fittingly with R. D. Barnard, chairman of the committee, speaking on "Conference in Relation to the Semi-Centennial Program. In the absence of Dr. Beal, Rev. Barnard brought an inspiring message on "How to Grow a Greater and More Spiritual Church." This can only be done by developing a greater enthusiasm for the church's fundamental message. He brought several suggestions for Bible study. Following this address the topic of the afternoon was opened for discussion and helpful suggestions were received from many of the Brethren.

Tuesday evening under the general theme of Building, we listened to a stirring address by the moderator which shall appear in the Evangelist. Following this the vicemoderator brought a message on Spiritual Economics.

Wednesday morning with the theme of Evangelism, Brother Whitted very ably brought a message in keeping with the theme. In the afternoon with the theme of Missions, Dr. Geo. Carpenter spoke on the Challenge of Home Missions; Prof. A. L. DeLozier on "Some Present Problems of Foreign Missions and Dr. G. S. Baer on "United Support of Brethren Ideals and Interests." The evening sessions brought to us Prof. A. L. DeLozier speaking on "Christ and Education" emphasizing the need of both Christ and education. This was followed by Dr. W. S. Bell speaking in a big way on a big subject, "What's the Matter with the World."

Thursday sessions presented the theme of literature in the form of an address on "Some Problems of our Publishing Interests." In the afternoon we were privileged to have with us Rev. E. M. Riddle speaking on "Brethren Youth and Stewardship." Our National Conference Moderator, Rev. W. I. Duker, gave an interesting message in the interest of the Sunday school. In the evening Dr. Teeter's message on "A Problem in Ratio and Proportion" urged a greater interest and loyalty in Brethren Publishing interests. This was followed by a message on "The Brethren Semi-Centenary" by Dr. Bame. This message could not fail to arouse a greater love in the hearts of all for the Brethren Church and her ideals.

An added and much appreciated part of the evening program was the pageant, "Women of the Bible," presented by the W. M. S. and the Sisterhood of the Bryan church.

On Friday morning Rev. R. D. Barnard gave a summary of the Conference and the Program of Progress.

An outstanding feature of the conference was the Eleven O'clock Bible Lecture Hour. The theme was "Messianic Prophecy," dealing with it from the standpoint of Pre-Mosaic prophecy; Mosaic Prophecy and Davidic prophecy. The messages were given by Dr. K. M. Monroe. They were indeed interesting and helpful studies and conference is appreciative of the services of Dr. Monroe for these lectures.

Other interesting features were the Open Session of the W. M. S. on Thursday afternoon; the duets of Dr. Bame and Mrs. M. A. Stuckey; a solo by Mrs. Ruth Wayne of the Clayton church; the music on Thursday evening in charge of the Bryan choir with a solo by one of its members and a delightful musical reading of "The Legend of the Twilight Bell" by Mrs. Lorin Black.

Perfect harmony prevailed throughout the session; a loyalty to God and his Word was revealed in each message.

Thus, with the closing Bible lecture by Dr. Monroe, another conference closed and we look forward to another year when by the Grace of God we may again witness to his great Love. Plan then to come to Dayton in 1933.

GEORGE C. PONTIUS,
Secretary.

WAITING HERALDS

By an Unemployed Preacher

Not for myself alone I write,
But for a host of us preachers
Yet unemployed—waiting heralds.

We're in our prime, and qualified,
But, for the time, we are denied
The right of gospel ministry.

We do not bid for martyr's fame,
We relish not the sop of pity;
We ask but justice and a chance.

Our old-time call to preach still binds.
Remember that. Yet came from God
With strangely thrusting urgency.

In dreams we see the multitudes;
The good, the bad, the old, the young;
Who yet do hunger for the Word.

Things come then to us in flashes;
Texts, themes, and illustrations;
Goodly bread for hungry spirits.

Such we greatly wish to share,
And feel again the preacher's joy
In lifting mortals to the Throne.

Tidings have we, news tremendous!
And the herald's will to hurry;
And yet we go not forth, we wait.

Our hearts are free from bitterness;
We covet not a brother's work.
God's smile on him and on his church.

But profoundly we are troubled
By this hindrance economic
To the cause we love supremely.

In a day that ought to need us,
When we've matured and grown most fit,
There seems to be no place for us.

It is not well to have no task,
And it hurts to be forgotten.
The uncalled know Gethsemanies.

If we could draw cartoons grotesque,
And make the people laugh to kill,
We need not be now unemployed.

Had we the gainful gift and nerve—
Sans preacher qualms about some things—
Big business firms would bid for us.

Were ours the art for rakish roles
To make the play-goers chortle.
They'd cast us quick and pay us well.

But preaching men are we always,
Long since divorced from carnal things;
We cannot care for lesser gifts.

One thing we do, and for that task
Have sought to gain a sound technic;
But circumstance hath ruled us out.

The market price of wheat and corn
Is daily quoted on the curb;
But not the price of prophets' wares.

Is Mammon bigger than our God?
Will he ever keep the lesser,
Prized above the higher values?

Social ages need more preaching
When their people seek so madly
For the treasure that is transient.

If redemption be essential
And the gospel still dynamic,
Ways for preaching men must open.

This wistful-waiting interim
May be for us a discipline;
Let us endure with graciousness.

Perchance this waiting is a way
Of testing souls and cleansing hearts
And fitting men for better work.

Thus the older prophets waited
Both for vision and enduement.
Is our waiting for like purpose?

If so, we heralds of the cross
Scarce can wait as did the seers.
They had resources, we have none.

Whilst they knew a fruit of waiting
And found in solitude a meat,
You know those prophets had to eat.

If we could purchase things at shops,
And pay for them with sermon sheets,
We'd sure produce the manuscripts.

Brooding, praying, hoping, fearing;
New months come in, old months go out;
And still the churchless preacher waits.

Churchless preacher—waiting herald;
A tidings man who doth not run,
But waits and waits and wonders why.

Big News! Heaven's Ultimatum!
And the courier's breathless haste!
And yet compelled to stand and wait!

Courage, brothers! Father, Help us
To stoutly guard our good morale.
Lord of Harvest, Remember us.

THE ANSWER

My praying does not change the God who answers prayer—

*But honest praying changes—Me!
I pray for pardon; He is just—and there
Is Law—unchanging; can it be
He or His Law will change to grant me free*

*A pardon for my sin? Oh, no;
But, answering, He gives to me
A nature new—and cleansed and pardoned then I go.*

*I ask him for a blessing—for some boon
To me of seeming good; He answers, late or soon—*

*And He may answer "Yes" or—"No!" ...
My plea in faith can never change His mind; but so*

Completely does He answer me that I Am changed in will and wish and wonder why

*I asked the thing specific then at all—
Why I did not in trust and patience call
On Him to have HIS WAY with me—Knowing that best and highest would His purpose be!*

—D. G. Bickers.

OUR LITTLE READERS

UNFORTUNATE INTERRUPTION

Willie was asleep and Dan was lonely.
Willie is the minister's son, Dan is his dog.
It was Sabbath morning and everyone was at church but these two friends. It was warm and sunny, and they could hear the good preaching, for their house was next door to the church.

"Dan," said Willie, "it is better here than in church, for you can hear every word, and don't get pickles down your back, as you do when you have to sit up straight."

In some way, while Willie was listening he fell asleep.

Dan kissed him on the nose, but when Willie went to sleep he went to sleep to stay, and did not mind trifles. So Dan sat down with the funniest look of care on his wise, black face, and with one ear ready for outside noises.

Now the minister had for his subject
"Daniel." This was the name he always gave Dan when he was teaching him to sit up and beg, and other tricks. While the dog sat thinking, the name "Daniel" fell on his ready ear. Dan at once ran to the church through the vestry door. He stood on his hind legs with his forepaws drooping close behind the minister, who did not see him, but the congregation did. When the minister shouted "Daniel!" again the sharp barks said, "Yes, sir," as plainly as Dan could answer.

The minister started back, looked around, and saw the funny little picture; then he wondered what he should do next, but just then through the vestry came Willie. His face was rosy from sleep, and he looked a little frightened. He walked straight toward his father, and took Dan in his arms and said:

"Please 'scuse Dan, papa. I went asleep and he runned away."

Then he walked out with Dan, looking back on the smiling congregation. The preacher ended his sermon on Daniel as best he could.—Exchange.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOTICE OF MEETING

The Annual meeting for the transaction of all necessary business of the Board of Trustees of the Brethren Home will be held during General Conference. The time of meeting is 1 P. M. on Tuesday, August 23, 1932. The place is Winona Lake, Indiana, at the Westminster Hotel. Any notice of meeting giving other date or place than this is hereby revoked. Will all members please note time and place. The arrangement of the program of General Conference for reports require this Board to meet on Tuesday instead of Wednesday. Signed,

J. ALLEN MILLER,
President Board of Trustees.

TITHING EDUCATION MADE EASY

Any church may now put on a Ten Weeks' course of tithing education, right in the midst of its other activities, and at a ridiculously small cost.

The Layman Company, which has distributed many millions of pamphlets on the tithe, now announces an attractive new series, at so low a price that distribution to an entire church through ten weeks costs only two cents and a half per family.

A set of samples and full particulars will be sent free of charge upon request.

Please give your denomination, also mention the Brethren Evangelist.

THE LAYMAN COMPANY,
730 Rush Street, Chicago.

MISSION PASTOR WANTED

The Northwest District is venturing forth in faith in beginning a new work in Oregon.
Some earnest man will be needed to take over this work immediately at the conclusion of our meeting. This is a call to some consecrated, soul-loving minister who is not afraid of work, that may be sacrificial. The faithful brethren of this place will not permit such to go hungry.

Will such as may be interested in taking hold of this project, if successful, in September, please address:

Earl W. Reed, Grandview, Washington, or Harold D. Fry, Sunnyside, Washington.

The brotherhood is requested to intercede for us that souls may be won, and churches built in this great and needy Northwest.

HAROLD D. FRY.

THE HEIGHTS

ABOVE STUDEBAKER SPRINGS
Winona Lake, Indiana

Depression Rates for the Brethren
Conference. Rates on application
M. E. ROSS Manager

VOL. LIV
Number 32

August 13
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

"Ask and It Shall Be Given You"

NONE thing is certain and that is, that the resources of God are inexhaustible and his love is unfailing. There are neither times nor seasons in the Saviour's labors of intercession. He is ever at the right hand of the Father and his ears are always open to the petitions of the children of men who call upon him. Our weaknesses do not repel him, and for even temporal necessities he has sympathetic power. If these are days of trial, they are therefore days of prayer. We shall ask of him with boldness. It is reverent and Christian to say to Jesus, "Lord, thou hast commanded thy children to ask of thee, and I humbly place before thee my own appeal for aid." Faith not only trusts God, but seeks from him.

It is logical to conclude that our Lord expects his Church to ask him for help in times when the kingdom's support is decreasing. That would be a weak and fearful attitude toward the head of the Church which assumes that because of unfavorable weather, or irregular employment, or entangled financial affairs, the spread of the Gospel must be limited. The Church should pray every Sunday for what is needed in order to proclaim the Gospel near and far. Not to do so is a kind of sin. It is equivalent to an admission that the religion which Jesus has established among us is in some way enmeshed in earthly affairs. It is not. We must not ask him for less grace in behalf of the Word and Sacraments because times are hard.

Christians need not hesitate to make their needs known to their pastors and pastors are only doing their duty when they call on their congregations to "comfort each other." The fellowship of believers best demonstrates the reality of kinship through faith in Christ, when the brethren help each other. There is something alien and pagan in a believer's isolated suffering and despair. With limitations, we add a third phase of asking. The three are:

Individual,— "Ask and it shall be given you."

Church,— "Ask and it shall be given you."

Brethren,— "Ask and it shall be given you."

—The Lutheran.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

AT Beautiful Shipshewana

During the week of July 17-24 Mrs. McClain and I had the privilege of attending the School and Bible Conference which are held annually at Lake Shipshewana. It was our first experience there, and we enjoyed it greatly. It is quite remarkable, and not generally known to the brotherhood at large, that the Indiana Conference should own, with only a small debt, this fine property on one of the most beautiful little lakes in northern Indiana. The brethren and churches which have labored to make this possible deserve much credit.

I am sure that to many in the Church, like myself, the place has been little more than a name. And I feel that from time to time some pictures and a description of the place would be of interest and value in our publications. Furthermore, I see no reason why in the future some of our conferences might not be held there. With some added facilities for lodging, we might even try a National Conference in Shipshewana. The quiet privacy should be ideal.

Here is an idea: Why not, at our 1933 General Conference, plan for a day at Shipshewana? The lake is only about fifty miles from Winona Lake, and plenty of automobiles could be provided to transport all the delegates there for the day. One or two of the morning sessions might be omitted and the rest could be held at Shipshewana. This would give the people a chance to see the place. Will the Indiana brethren give us an invitation?

THE Bible School

I must not forget to say a word about the splendid school conducted at Shipshewana for the young people. Most of you would be quite amazed to see over a hundred young people of high school age, all properly registered, sitting in regular classes and taking notes on lectures dealing with various phases of the Bible. Classes run straight through the forenoon, the afternoons are given to recreation under competent directors, and the evenings to inspirational addresses. It is a grand combination of work, play and inspiration. If you have a boy or girl, send them to Shipshewana next year for a week. Expenses are remarkably low. The Dean and Faculty deserve much credit for what is being attempted.

THE Campbell Church in Michigan

Through the kindness of Brother Monroe, who supplied for me on the first Sunday of the Shipshewana Conference, I was enabled to accept an invitation from the Campbell church to preach there on July 17th. This church is the farthest north, I believe, of all our eastern churches, and is located near Lake Odessa approximately one hundred miles north of the Indiana line.

It was a pleasurable experience to meet these brethren and enjoy their gracious hospitality. It is not difficult to preach the Word where the people love it and where the services are surrounded with an atmosphere of prayer. This church is living proof that the day of the rural congregation is not finished. May the Lord bless their purpose and labor for him.

SOUL, Mind and Body

The president of a great American university recently declared that he had at last come to realize that "the education of the mind and body is not enough." Therefore, he proposed to secure a chaplain to look after and provide for the "spiritual needs" of the students.

On the face of it, this might seem an indication of a more enlightened and sensible policy in public education. But viewed from another standpoint there is something both tragic and amusing about it. In that university there are five hundred professors to train the Mind. There are fifty coaches and instructors to train the Body. And now the President decides that the souls of his five thousand students should have some attention so he hires ONE CHAPLAIN. And one may safely guess, without any direct information, that the one chaplain will be a RADICAL MODERNIST in his religious views; which would mean that the last state of the university will be worse than the first.

Here are some Biblical comparisons:

"Bodily exercise is profitable for a little; but godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come" (1 Tim. 4:8).

"For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul" (Mark 8:36)?

ONE Sign of the Present Age

One of the worst omens of the present is the callous and indifferent attitude that nations are assuming toward their obligations. Russia began the game by simply repudiating all the financial obligations, incurred by previous governments. Other nations, while castigating the Bolsheviks, are headed for the same goal, only by a more devious route. It is now becoming quite clear that the nations do not propose to pay their debts and never intended to. One cannot help wondering why these nations haggled so long before agreeing upon final amounts after the late war. The following story told by a European industrialist may not explain, but it illustrates the callous attitude.

A young man and a friend went into a tailoring establishment to order a suit. After the material was selected the young man haggled long and bitterly with the tailor over the price. After an hour of bickering the price was reduced from $120 to $50. As they left the shop, the friend said, "Why did you waste so much time arguing about the price? You know that you never intend to pay for the suit anyway." The young man replied, "Well, I didn't want the poor fellow to lose so much!"

Unfortunately, the attitude of nations is beginning to be reflected among individuals. Men deliberately incur debts when they never intend to pay. Like the nations, they make promises with tongue in cheek. The spirit of "the god of this world," who is a liar, is more and more permeating the affairs of men.

WHY Not Try This Method?

The rapid growth of the Christian Church in Korea has been one of the seven wonders of the spiritual world. Yet there is nothing strange about it. The Koreans followed the method of the early church. Instead of hiring a preacher to do all the work of soul winning, their preachers taught the Word to the people and the people went out and won the lost. In fact, it was almost impossible for a man to become a baptized member of the church until he had demonstrated his zeal by winning some one else to Christ.

The World Dominion tells of an interesting plan used by the Korean Church. It is called the "Bible Class System." These Bible classes meet in each church at least once a year for a period of a week or ten days. In the morning the Bible is studied for several hours. In the afternoon the whole church goes out to talk to the unsaved in the community. Then in the evening an evangelistic service is held at the church to which the people bring the friends they have talked to.

Would it not pay right here in our own country to try the same plan? Too often Bible study is divorced from evangelism. Wouldn't it be wonderful to see the members of a church take a week when they would do nothing else but feed upon the Word and then make themselves channels through which others might taste the Bread of Life?

"The number of persons attending college, universities and professional schools of college grade (including normal schools and teachers colleges) in 1890 was but 157,000. By 1895 this number had grown to 204,000, by 1900 to 238,000, by 1905 to 264,000, by 1910 to 356,000 and by 1915 to 403,000. Then came the war which temporarily halted this invasion of the colleges, but in 1930 the registration in higher institutions in the United States rose to 597,000. In 1924 the enormous total of 911,000 was reached; by 1926 the million mark was passed."—George S. Counts.

IN THIS NUMBER

Our Present Chaos and the Way Out
—Editor, .....	3
Why Not a United Evangelistic Program?—Editor, .....	3
Editorial Review, .....	4
Standards of Progress for the Brethren Church—A. D. Cashman, .....	5
The Moral Influence of Our Treasures—R. F. Porte, .....	6
Significant News and Views, .....	7
Miniature Studies in the Divine Library—M. A. Stuckey, .....	8
Outstanding Texts of the Bible—G. W. Rench, .....	9
Fellowship Days in the Sunday School—L. E. Dunkin, .....	10
Religious Education Week, .....	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon, .....	11
New Societies—E. M. Riddle, .....	11
What the Local Union Can Do in Citizenship—B. H. Davis, .....	11
News from the Field, .....	13, 14
The Tie that Binds, .....	16
Our Little Readers, .....	16
Announcements, .....	16

GEORGE S. BAER

Editor

R. R. TEETER

Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE

BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 2, 1928

Our Present Chaos and the Way Out

Our subject implies that there have been other chaotic periods besides the present. And it is well, for so there have. But, our present state of affairs is the worst that has ever obtained, so we think. And it is not surprising that we do, for it is the only such period with which most of us have had any personal dealings, and our knowledge of history is so slight that we are not very well equipped for judging between periods. Of course, it may be that we are really living in the worst period in many respects that the world has ever seen, for efficiency is our slogan in all lines. Not all are agreed on this point, however, and some who have been wont to nose around considerably in history have pointed out instances that compare favorably with present conditions. Here is one:

"It is a gloomy moment in history. Not for many years—not in the lifetime of most men who read this paper—has there been so much grave and deep apprehension. In our own country there is universal commercial prostration and panic, and thousands of our poorest fellow-citizens are turned out against the approaching winter without employment. In France the political cauldron seethes and bubbles with uncertainty. Russia hangs as usual like a cloud dark and silent on the horizon of Europe; while all the energies, resources and influence of the British Empire are sorely tried, and are yet to be tried more sorely, in coping with the vast and deadly Indian insurrection, and with disturbed relations in China. Of our own troubles no man can see the end. If we are only to lose money, and by painful poverty to be taught wisdom, no man need seriously to despair. Yet the very haste to be rich, which is the occasion of this widespread calamity, has also tended to destroy the moral forces with which we are to resist and subdue the calamity." Doesn't that sound like a description of present day conditions? Yet the Reformed Church Messenger copied it verbatim from Harper's Weekly of October 10, 1857. And our esteemed exchange gives us another lament equally as much up-to-date: "The world is passing through troubled times. The young people of today think of nothing but themselves. They have no reverence for parents or old age. They are impatient of all restraint. They talk as if they alone knew everything, and what passes for wisdom with us is foolishness with them. As for girls, they are forward, immodest and unwomanly in speech, behavior and dress." That is real twentieth century gloom, but it was published "A. D. 1274."

Human characteristics continue pretty much the same century after century and we find ourselves not much advanced beyond our forefathers in the spirit and expression of sin. That does not mean, however, that we are warranted in taking the present situation with complacency. We have no reason to be despairing and to go droop-shouldered and hopeless about our work, but we do have reason for being anxious and concerned about the problems we face. We have gotten ourselves into a pretty mess and there is plenty of reason to be perplexed and disturbed as to how we are going to get out.

There are those who tell us that the way out is by an economic readjustment. Prof. Rexford S. Tugwell of Columbia University says that deflation is the solution. We must cut down our living expenses and live within our income. We have been too extravagant spenders. In 1929, according to figures gathered by the Christian Herald, the American people spent over $275,000,000 for perfumery and face paint, and over $650,000,000 for jewelry, and $700,000,000 for candy; over $1,000,000,000 for theatres and movies; over $90,000,000 for chewing gum; nearly $1,000,000,000 for ice cream and soft drinks; and over $1,000,000,000 for cigarettes. And we have said nothing about the vast amount spent for automobiles, radios and other luxuries. Incomes were generally high and expenditures were still higher. People lived off the future. They do not do that so much now; they are living more economically, at least temporarily. Dr. Tugwell thinks people are learning a lesson. He says: "Each of us is deflating his consumption, learning to live within an income which is not inflated by installment credit; businesses are learning reluctantly to charge honest prices and to be content with a producer's rather than a speculator's profit. . . . A thousand processes of readjustment, all of which might come within the definition of deflation, are going on all about us. After a little it may have gone sufficiently far so that solid bottom will have been reached." But large numbers are refusing to deflate, and even if they should, there is no likelihood that they will remain so. Inflation will start all over again. Nor does economic readjustment cover the whole problem; it deals with only one phase of it. And it does not point the way out of our chaos.

There are many who believe that the way out is through government aid or manipulation of some sort. Some want the government to guarantee fair prices. Others want it to provide employment for the unemployed. Others want loans for industry. Others want doles. Some want high tariffs, some international trade agreement, and others want something else. The government has long been willing to do something if it only knew what to do. It was difficult for law-makers to agree upon what was best to be done. And now that a venture has been made, many are dissatisfied. We offer no criticism, but merely assert that the problem cannot be settled by legal action. The trouble goes deeper than that; it rests in spiritual considerations. Prof. Charles A. Beard says bluntly: "The cause of our confusion is our contemptuous dismissal of ethics." In other words, our trouble is due to unrighteous conduct. And to this Dr. Halford E. Luccock agrees, saying that our "economic and social disasters have their roots in ethical failure." A convention of church people meeting in Virginia recently declared that "Educators, statesmen, financiers, and engineers, for all their learning, technique, diplomacy and skill, seem unable either to cope with the complex situation or to point the way out, and that more and more it appears to be grounded in spiritual issues, and thus a matter for divine guidance."

That leads us to the assertion of a conviction that the way out, and the only way out, of the present chaotic condition is the way of Christ. Bishop William F. McDowell says: "I see no hope for the world or the church unless, as never before, we develop a type of character that cannot be explained except by Jesus Christ." But men have refused to let Christ have his way with them, rather have insisted on their own way. We have all done that. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way." Men of the church as well as men of the world have felt themselves sufficient, and have set themselves against the will and way of God. And he has chastened us by this depression that he might bring us to realize our need of him.

That is William T. Ellis' interpretation. He writes: "Is it not high time that we accept the rather obvious truth of a Divine Purpose in this discipline?"

Our world had grown very naughty. We had disdained the simplest and surest teachings of the experience of the ages. In audacious egotism, we had flouted God and the elemental moralities. Our intellectual pride had exceeded that of the builders of Babel. An apotheosis of man—and not of man at his best—had characterized thought and conduct.

In grim humor, God has seemed to say to us, "Now let us see what man can do about it."

Whereupon we have witnessed the humiliating and unbelievable collapse of human leadership. Our figures of pride, in business, in politics, in philosophy, have shown themselves to be but glittering drum-majors, instead of captains or generals. The revealed incompetence of our boastful and prideful "strong men" has been one of the major tragedies of the Depression.

Now we see, and suffer while seeing, that restoration is not to come by legislation or by financial measures or by new economic theories.

Today the world stands dazed and helpless in the presence of one of its major calamities.

Is it not time, therefore, that those who know somewhat of history, and of the revealed nature of Divine Providence, should boldly declare, like the hairy Herald on Jordan's bank, Repent! Repent!??

This is an hour for humanity, in new humility and contrition, to recognize the inescapable Will of God; and to turn to him for deliverance.

Only the old road, which leads by Sinai and Jerusalem and Galilee, is the way out for the world. We are being taught by chastisement that the Almighty still rules.

As England was saved from revolution by the Wesley revival, so our day may escape disaster only by getting right with God—which is the one shortest way of getting right with one another.

Why Not a United Evangelical Program?

The approaching National Conference promises to be significant because of the program that has been planned as a celebration of fifty years of denominational existence and leadership. Why not make it significant in another way? Make it the time for the beginning of a great united evangelistic program, covering a period of years, possibly five. Let it be a time long to be remembered because of the denominational enthusiasm and Gospel loyalty there engendered that sent the delegates back home to carry on a missionary activity in behalf of a full Gospel faith and obedience the like of which is not to be found save in the beginnings in 1708 and 1883. Let it be a time when the fires of evangelism will be kindled and built up to such intense heat that for a number of years nothing else will matter much but the winning and building up of souls and the extension of the church into new communities. Let it be a simple program that will claim the interest and command the cooperation of the entire brotherhood in such a way as to result in a new spirit of unity and solidarity and bring about such an enlargement of our denominational borders as shall bring glory to our Lord Jesus Christ.

We would suggest a three-fold program of evangelism:

1. Promotion of united, coordinated Bible study, including the whole Gospel message and the distinctive Brethren emphases, but stressing the Divine concern for souls, and encouraging the reading of the Bible daily in the homes.
2. Plans for intensive effort at soul winning, throughout the year, by the pulpit in special and regular meetings, by the Sunday school and other departmental groups and individuals, encouraging members to daily prayer and effort in behalf of the unconverted.
3. United effort to increase the production and reading of Christian literature, that teaches evangelism, loyalty to church activities and doctrines.

This is our suggestion. We invite others who are interested to do a similar thing. Time is short between now and Conference, but if you write and mail your suggestions immediately, they will reach us in time for publication.

---

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

Prof. McClain, making his way to Lake Shishewana, accompanied by his wife, went around by Lake Odessa, Michigan and preached for the Brethren of the Campbell church, which are without a pastor. Brother McClain was very favorably impressed with Shishewana and commends the place highly.

There will be no paper published the week after General Conference. We are calling attention to this dropping of an issue this far in advance so that churches or district conferences having announcements or programs that should be published before September 10th issue, may take advantage of the remaining issues in August.

Keep your soul spiritually nourished by faithfully reading your Bible and your church paper. You cannot successfully do without either. Of course, your Bible comes first, always, but next in importance to the welfare of the intelligent, consecrated church member is his church paper. Refuse to be without it. It is no luxury; it is a necessity.

"Brethren Day" is announced for Rocky Ridge Park, near Emmitsburg, Maryland, and the date is September 10th. Brother J. L. Bowman, pastor of the church at Linwood, Maryland, gives the program, and says that among other things people are supposed to bring well-filled baskets. It is to be a day of real Brethren fellowship and inspiration.

Dr. K. M. Monroe writes about Camp Shishewana where he, with other Ashland professors, gave instruction to the assembled young people. It was Prof. Monroe's first attendance at Shishewana and he came home enthusiastic over the project. He believes the Eastern and Western sections of the brotherhood should promote similar young people's camps. One hundred and fifteen young people were in attendance. Apparently the depression has not depressed the ardor of our youth.

The Christian Endeavorers have a message from their president this week. Brother Riddle reports the organization of two new societies, one at North Liberty, Indiana and the other at Ardmore, a portion of South Bend. Brother A. T. Wirick is the pastor of both these churches and he finds the young people of both churches loyal and active. President Riddle has been doing some speaking and instruction work in the interest of Christian Endeavor at conferences and conventions. He says plans are being made to give Endeavorers something of special interest at National Conference.

From Lanark, Illinois, comes a report, stating that the church and its several departments are moving forward with steady pace. It is of interest to note the change in the Sunday morning program, the Sunday school and preaching services exchanging hours, and new features being added. Other churches are trying this or similar methods of varying the morning worship and instruction program. Evangelist readers will be interested in having reports as to the success of such plans. This congregation recently ordained some new deacons and deaconesses. Brother C. C. Grisso, their capable pastor, has been retained for another year of service.

Dr. C. F. Yoder, superintendent of our mission work in Argentina, writes an interesting letter this week. The Bible study conference was unusually successful, the general theme being the Holy Spirit. At the Field Council, held in connection, plans for the work of the coming summer (It will be winter with us.) were laid. The work at Almaguer is progressing steadily. They now have monthly meetings for women and girls and will soon have a W. M. S. At the new work approval at Rio Tercero about forty interested people attend the weekly meetings. Brother Yett and family are returning to the United States on furlough.

GOING TO NATIONAL CONFERENCE? Its' time you were making plans. The date is August 22 to 28, and the place is Winona Lake, Indiana. You will want to take advantage of that splendid semi-centennial program and to help celebrate fifty years of Brethrenism and Progress. Such an opportunity will not come again. If you want to attend a conference that promises to re-echo much of the vital Gospel faith and obedience of the early days of the Brethren church, here is your chance. Any church can afford to make sacrifices to have a large delegation present. If there is a need of getting a new grip on the church's distinctive message, that need ought to be supplied to those who attend the forthcoming Brethren Conference.

The work of the Second church of Long Beach, California, is making good progress, thirty-four new members having been added since the first of January. Brother John Lienhard is the faithful pastor of this church. The Daily Vacation Bible School was unusually successful, having an average attendance of 140. The regular Sunday school has enjoyed an average attendance during the last six months of 448. It would seem that they would soon be compelled to push out the sides of their building to accommodate their growing numbers. They believe strongly in the power of prayer and make large use of it in their work. They have established a splendid record for tract distribution—5386 since April. It would be well if more of our churches would make larger use of the ministry of the tract.

Standards of Progress for the Brethren Church at the Close of the Church Age

By A. D. Cashman

(Moderator's Address before Southern California Conference and voted to be published in The Evangelist)

In the Second Epistle of Peter, chapter one, verse twelve, are these words: "Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth." It is not the speaker's expectation to bring something to this conference which you don't already know, but rather to put us in remembrance of certain things. Peter uses a bit stronger statement in the third chapter of the same Epistle. He says: "I now write unto you in which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance, that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before." We don't know how pure all the minds here present are, but if we can be used to stir them up so that we may be inspired to act on what we already know, this message will not be in vain. It is significant to note that Peter in chapter three desired to stir up the minds of those Christians by way of remembrance concerning conditions in the last days. In this address we will set forth some standards of progress which are particularly well worth considering, because we believe we are swiftly approaching the end of the church age.

The first standard of progress that we naturally want to bring to our remembrance is this: A POSITIVE BELIEF IN, AND AN UNCOMPROMISING STAND ON, A VERBALLY INSPIRED BIBLE. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy." I Tim. 4:1-2.

We are hearing on all sides these days the statement that the Bible contains the Word of God, and man must judge the Book. Other multitudes are saying, "Yes, the Bible is inspired just like Shakespeare or Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress is inspired." In other words, any thing which inspires is inspired. Because of such a conception of the Word, it is no wonder that these startling figures come to us through the church census headquarters in Washington. In 1927, 60,000 preachers preached three million sermons without having a single convert. In 1928 ten thousand churches with an average of one thousand members each, did not have a single addition to the church. In 1929 all the churches reported an increase of but 247,748, while in 1930 there was an increase of only 59,286.

It is evident that there is no drawing power in the wisdom and opinions of men. We are informed in the Bible that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," and it seems that the wisdom of this world is becoming foolishness with the multitudes as far as spiritual satisfaction is concerned. Many worldly-wise preachers today ought to soon awake to the truth of God's verdict that "their thoughts are vain."

The Brethren Church can go forward today with a positive proclamation of the "Thus saith the Lord" and "It is written in the word of God." We need make no apologies for "the faithful sayings" which are "worthy of all acceptance" for they appeal unto a lost and dying humanity, and are able to make them wise unto salvation. It is the pure word of God going forth that carries the promise that "it shall not return void" but "shall prosper." Let us continue to herald the powerful salvation Gospel which the Lord has entrusted to us, and we shall still experience men and women crying out as they did in the days of old, "What must we do to be saved?"

It is pathetic to trace the history of the various communions and note how far most of them have departed from the God-given principles of their founders. Let us thank God that the Brethren Church embraces and cherishes her original motto, "The Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible." Upon this we stand. God help us to keep standing there, at all cost, until he comes.

THE SECOND STANDARD upon which the Brethren Church may make progress at the close of this dispensation is A DEFINITE PROCLAMATION OF THE DEEP SPIRITUAL MEANING AND SIGNIFICANCE OF THE BELOVED DISTINCTIVE ORDINANCES WHICH WE OBSERVE. There is altogether too much timidity in letting the Christians at large, and the world in general, know what we believe and why we believe it. It will be a joy to the Moderator, and a profit to the conference, to have these ordinances dealt with by several of our pastors as they appear on this year's program.

It would seem that we as a church place greater weight on the importance of Triune Immersion than we do on the Communion service. We are very careful that no one becomes a member of our churches unless they are immersed three times, yet we will carry the names of people on our church rolls indefinitely who perhaps have never once participated in the three-fold Communion service, although they may attend the other regular services and support the work with their means. Perhaps the Lord would pour out a greater blessing upon the Brethren Church and give her greater progress if this matter were corrected, for Jesus told Peter, "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me." God alone knows our work is held back by giving part and standing to members who disobey the commandments of the Lord by refusing to observe the ordinance of feet-washing, and by refusing to eat of the bread and drink of the cup. We are sure that those members who disobey the commandments of the Lord by practicing positive sins are a detriment to the church, and the messages from our pulpits deal with this matter repeatedly. But concerning the detriment of those who sin the sin of omission, the pressure seems to be too often lifted. So our contention is this, that if Triune Immersion is essential for one to gain admittance into the Brethren Church, then the practice of the three-fold communion service, at least once a year, except for justifiable reasons, is essential for continuance in membership.

In John six, where Jesus is giving the discourse on the Bread of Life, he says "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Of course, Jesus is speaking of that initial faith, and identification with his death on the Cross for salvation, but if any person who does not believe enough in the crucifixion to symbolize it in the Eucharist, where is the proof that he believes it at all? By setting a definite standard as we suggest, a lot of material devoid of spiritual life by refusing the Communion emblems and the foot-washing service would either conform or be eliminated. Of course we must take heed lest we become Pharisaical formalists in our doctrines, but the speaker is an ardent devotee of quality in our churches even if it does mean embarrassment when it comes to reporting quantity.

A STANDARD WHICH WE SHOULD ATTAIN if we desire the Brethren Church to triumph in these last days is THE CONCENTRATING OF OUR ENERGIES AND RESOURCES UPON THE DENOMINATIONAL WORK WHICH GOD HAS GIVEN TO US. I appeal to a loyal support of all the essential departments of our denominational existence. It is true that we are geographically far removed from the main interests of our denomination, and it is especially easy in these times when money is tight to assume more or less of an independent attitude toward them. Certainly, we become short-sighted both ways if we yield to this temptation. We dare not forget that the denomination made us, gave to us what we believe and practice, and it is about the only means of perpetuating it all in the future. We have our decided opinions of a Christian man who is given a successful start in life by the sacrifice of loving Christian parents, and who then permits those same parents in their old age to be taken to the poor-house when it is by no means necessary. And yet, many of our members will argue with no conscience pricks whatever, that we have all that we can handle at home, so we cannot send money to Ashland College, to the Brethren Publishing Company, to the Brethren Home, the Superannuated ministers, to Missions, etc. God has given to us the Brethren work, and he has made us able to support it if we want to.

Another danger is in spreading ourselves over too much territory with respect to worthy interests outside of our denomination. As the coming of the Lord draws nigh, outside demands will become more and more numerous and even more appealing, for many of God's servants are becoming increasingly zealous in perpetuating what they characterize as their faith work while others are starting new projects on the same basis. These appeals should find a response in our hearts, especially in our pocket-books, only when we have done our respectful share in supporting the vital interests of the church which brought us into spiritual life and light. Some people act in their Christian giving as if they were in the habit of spending their income to supply physical sustenance and protection to their great aunts and third cousins while their own immediate family goes uncared for. If this practice is unnatural in one case, it should be discouraged in another.

There are certain phases of ministry which we should support as a denomination because they are vital to the times in which we live. For example, the evangelization of the Jews, a matter which the conference instructed the Executive Committee to work on the past year. While nothing constructive has been done, it is none the less important. Either a plausible plan should be worked out by the district in this great work, or else the individual churches be instructed to place extraordinary emphasis on the necessity of not only carrying the Gospel of salvation to the Jews, but also with it the vital practices that we believe should accompany the salvation message. This is not done by supporting the Jewish program of other groups.

Since we are speedily approaching the time when the branches of the wild olive tree will no longer be spared by God through unbelief, and are living in the day when the blindness of Israel is beginning to be removed and their hearts softened in preparation for their grafting back into their own olive tree, we should take advantage of the situation and add as many to the Body of Christ as we possibly can. A few converted, zealous Jews will mean as much in these days as a few converted, zealous Gentiles did in Paul's day. If this is an opportunity for the Brethren Church to make progress, let us give it some serious consideration.

The next standard of progress for the Brethren Church in these last days is a GENUINE RECOGNITION OF AND FORTIFICATION AGAINST THE SATANIC FORCES AT WORK IN CHRISTENDOM; in our individual churches and in our individual lives. It is natural to think that if one accepts the whole Bible, it would be unnecessary to touch on this joint. However, it is one thing to believe in a whole Bible, and quite another to be aware of its contents.

Of course, it is generally known among us that when we affiliated ourselves with the Body of Christ, we were called into conflict: a conflict "not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." But to act on the knowledge of this is another thing, too. Many a man has bravely enlisted in the nation's armies but has turned coward before the enemy, in spite of the knowledge of much assurance of victory through adequate preparation and abundant reinforcements. Such is the case of many recruits in the Christian army. When a civilian joins the army of his country, he is expected to lose his identity in the common cause, surrendering his will to the national will. He is not his own, neither is he expected to count his life dear to himself. Such is the Scriptural position the sinner takes when he becomes a Christian. He changes from the place where he was "bound by sin" and "was the servant of sin" to the place where, "being made free from sin" he becomes "the servant of righteousness;" from the place where his members were "servants of uncleanness and iniquity," to the place where "his members are servants unto holiness." In plain words, he remains no longer subject to the "god of this world," Satan, but by the renewing of the mind, he pledges himself to become the servant of God. He lives no longer independent of God, but dependent on him who giveth "the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord."

(Continued on page 12)

The Moral Influence of Our Treasures

By Robert F. Porte

(Continued from last week)

The value of our treasure depends upon its permanence. We discover the truth of permanence when friends and loved ones are taken from us. What material possession can take the place of the fellowship of one we love? The world is empty when the presence of one we love passes away. Yet love lingers with us. Tennyson gives us a suggestion in, "In Memoriam"—

'Tis strange that those we lean on most,
Those in whose laps our limbs are nursed
Sink into silence, soonest lost:
Those we love first are taken first.
God gives us love, something to love he lends us;
And, when love has grown to ripeness,
That on which it throve, falls off,
And love is left alone.
This is the curse of time."

In memory's halls our friends walk and talk with us. If men were compelled to live just as they do live in this world what an awful place this world would be. Man with memory and with the capacity to receive a spiritual heritage should live for the perishing material world alone—what folly. Can you not see something of the terror and torture of Hell, Dear Reader, in the fact that man chooses to give up his high calling and live for the perishing things of the world. God could not permit sinning Adam to return to the Garden of Eden, lest he eat of the tree of life and live forever. Adam needed a new birth and so does his descendants. The unchanging God could not be consistent with himself and ignore the depraved desires of a sinner who continues in the way of sin until he is consumed by sin and hopes that somehow all will be well. Does a sinner desire Heaven? Is the sense of remorse a sign of true repentance? No, Judas had remorse but he never repented. The time to be concerned for the salvation of our friends and neighbors is now. It is a vain hope that one who continues in sin and loves the things of the world would even consider a spiritual treasure. It is the privilege of man to choose the permanent and the abiding. Why do people not choose the way of Christ, you ask? They yield to the pleasure of the moment and despise the cost of sacrifice to obtain the greater and more permanent blessing. It is the sacrifice contained in the way of Christ that makes it permanent and abiding. Remove the sacrifice and Christ's way would become the world's way. The permanent costs great sacrifice. It means the discarding of the temporal and perishing things for the things which abide. The way to the possession of man's greatest treasures is through Christ to God. Some power greater than man must complete that human longing that beyond the grave we shall again be joined to those we loved and lost awhile.

The treasures of God are found in God's Word. Over against the uncertainty we find in the world and the false the Word of God is the Truth. "Thy Word is Truth" It is the rock of assurance and certainty because it is God's Word and having God as its author it becomes the expression of the permanency of God himself.

"What glory gilds the sacred page,
Majestic like the sun,
It gives a light to every age,
It gives, but borrows none."

The Word of God has been the source of thought of the world's greatest people. In the world's greatest literature, its song, the Word of God has given the note of permanency and satisfaction. In the Word of God there comes a light that reaches down through the centuries. It has been the light to man's pathway and the assurance of his step.

The Word of God is God's instrument to quicken the conscience of man and awakens him to the sense of his lost condition. It is like a clarion call in the night of sin warning man of his danger. In the Word of God the love of God is revealed. A love that reaches man in his sin and rebellion. "Love so amazing so divine demands my life, my love my all"—What riches there is in the fact that "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son"—What price would we place on the knowledge of the love of God which passes all understanding. There is no price to which we could compare the riches of grace revealed to us in the Word of God. Indeed, we would say with George Matheson:

"I lay in dust earth's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red,
Life that shall endless be"—

Truly we would forsake all, that in Christ we might find the peace which passeth all understanding. Truly we might say with the disciples in answer to the Master's question, "Will ye also go away?" Back came the answer, "Lord, to whom shall we go, thou hast the words of eternal life"—It is this type of insight into the indispensable importance of Jesus that makes for true discipleship.

ship. "Thou, O Christ, art all I want, more than life to me"—In God's Word is revealed that some day we shall be at home with God. This is the promise of a certain and sure ending of life with its earthly uncertainty. St. Paul declared, "that to depart and be with Jesus is far better"—

In Luke 12:55 Jesus gives the important direction for this achievement of the abiding treasure. "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning"—The possession of an abiding treasure is for the alert and the watchful. Christian character is the result of artful building. It is building with selected materials for an eternal living. It is the part of wisdom, that he who builds thus builds with care and forethought. The building is too important to be carelessly done. There is no question but that the man who is building for eternity, whose treasure is the true abiding treasure will build with only the best material and on the surest foundation. His foundation will not be the sand, and the material will not be that which may answer for the temporal. He will seek the eternal foundation and the material which will endure in eternity.

South Bend, Indiana.

---

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

---

UNUSUAL SESSION CLOSES IN UNUSUAL WAY

The United States Senate did an unusual thing when it adjourned July 16. Never before had it adjourned "sine die," without first having consent of the House. It is said that legally it cannot be done. The usual procedure is for the Senate resolution setting the adjournment hour to be sent to the House for approval. In addition to this slip both branches forgot the customary formality of sending a committee to tell the President congress was ready to go home, and inquire if there was anything else he wished. And then there was the unusual happening that neither Vice President Curtis was in the Senate chair nor Speaker Garner in the House chair when the two bodies adjourned. But both branches of the national legislature have gone home—and the country is glad.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

CHILD MARRIAGES IN AMERICA

Declaring that fourteen States in this country are trailing India in the matter of child marriage legislation, Dr. Walter A. Maier, professor at Concordia Theological Seminary, St. Louis recently branded child marriage an "atavistic flareback to the Middle Ages." He said: "There are more than 667,000 wives, largely white and native-born, in our country who were child brides, less than sixteen years old, when they were married. He points out that in fourteen States legal marriage at the minimum of twelve for girls and fourteen for boys is permitted. Which is another argument for uniform marriage and divorce laws in this country.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION

Not many years ago people from other countries came to the United States in vast numbers, reaching a million a year. We read recently that deportations exceeded receptions in a recent month, to say nothing of great numbers who left us voluntarily. After the World War, wise men looked for a great influx from all lands to our land, but Congress was wise enough to stop it. There has been a tremendous effort to open the gates, but we believe public opinion is in favor of tightening restrictions rather than loosening them. In those other days, immigrants came too rapidly, and the grade, morally and intellectually, was low. We are glad the tide has turned. It will be a long time before we need to admit multitudes from every nation under heaven. For our good and for theirs we must resist pressure and keep them out. Grant that many would make good citizens, still the majority will tear down the structure our fathers builded. Our house is full and we must refuse more guests, and should encourage many to leave.—The Presbyterian.

ILLITERACY DECREASING

The number of illiterates in the United States on April 1, 1930, according to the Census Bureau, was 4,283,753 or 4.3 per cent of the 98,723,753 persons who were ten years old or over of the population. The decrease in illiteracy has been steady in the last forty years, dropping from 13.3 per cent in 1890 to 10.7 in 1900, 7.7 in 1910, 6 in 1920 and 4.3 in 1930. The Census Bureau defines as illiterate any person ten years of age or over who is unable to read and write in any language. Only 420,538 of those returned as illiterate in 1930 were under 21 years of age, while 3,863,215 were 21 years old or over. Males numbered 2,198,293 and females 2,085,460. Illiteracy percentages for all age periods were lower for native whites of foreign or mixed parentage than for native whites of native parentage. The decrease in illiteracy in this country, as noted in these figures, is very gratifying. But how are we to reconcile it with the tremendous increase in crime during the same period? Certainly this proves that education alone is not sufficient for the redemption and uplift of the race.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

GRAFTING MUST HAVE BEEN GOOD

A former Indianapolis police chief was sentenced recently to serve six years in federal prison and was fined $10,000 on his plea of guilty of a charge of evading income tax payments. He admitted a gross income of $91,000 from 1927 to 1930, on which he paid no income tax. During two of these years he served as chief of police at a salary of less than $5,000 a year. Grafting must have been very good. And yet we wonder at the tremendous cost of municipal administration and the mounting crime rate! Boodle for officers means tribute from contractors and criminals.—The Presbyterian Advance.

THEY CAN'T DO IT

The Presidential candidates and their sponsors will be making many promises of what they will do to bring good times and create a just distribution of wealth. We may expect some most encouraging assurances of what a golden age is ahead of us.

But the discerning students know that most of this is pure buncombe. Absolutely all these politicians can do, whether they be Republican, Democratic, Socialist or Prohibition, is to ameliorate conditions.

Take the single item of taxes. Put a heavy tax upon the men of great wealth and one of two things results: The tax is either passed on to the public through increased prices or this wealth goes out of industry and into tax-free securities.

The essential fact is that you can't cure selfishness by laws, and selfishness is at the bottom of all human distress. Neither Hoover nor Roosevelt has the cure for the trouble, because the trouble is sin. It may be a matter of embarrassment that the platforms omitted reference to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, but the genuine and fundamental embarrassment is that neither platform has a word to say about plain old human cussedness.

There is only one Candidate who says anything about that in his platform. And his campaign has been on for quite some time.—Christian Standard.

JAPAN JOURNAL PAYS TRIBUTE TO CHRISTIAN MISSIONARIES

It is frequently said that the influence of the Christian minority in Japan, and it is a minority to a very decided degree, is of far greater proportion than their ratio, to the total population of the Empire. The Osaka Mainichi, one of the two most widely circulated dailies of Japan, evidently recognizes the power of Christianity.

Under the promotion of a Japanese newspaper a celebration and recognition service was held recently in Osaka Castle, Japan, for the foreign missionaries and welfare workers of western Japan. At that time the past fifty years of missionary work was reviewed. For several days adjacent to the celebration this newspaper, The Osaka Mainichi, gave much front page and editorial publicity in tribute to Christian missions. These references received wide quotation through the press of Japan. Among the favorable references made are these: "One is struck by the outstanding proof of the great debt owed to the foreign missionaries, whose generous devotion has played an important part in medical relief, the care of orphans, prison reform and temperance movements." "They have risked their health, indeed their lives, in helping victims of tuberculosis and leprosy, something that even the countrymen of these unfortunates had not attempted on a large scale." Dr. Suzuki,

Japanese Home Minister, said, "I sincerely hope that these foreign workers will continue to pursue their humanitarian work in order that they may further contribute toward the peace of mankind and the happiness of society."

Such recognition of the value of Christian missions from a country which might hold a prejudice arising from other angles is most encouraging. It ought to stimulate a greater confidence and a more generous missionary support in our churches at home.—F. C. B.—The Lutheran.

ANCIENT CITY OF MIZPAH UNCOVERED

Dr. William F. Bade, whose discoveries in archaeology, in recent years, have brought fame and glory to himself and to the Pacific School of Religion, with which he is associated, has added to his distinction by further successful exploration in the ancient city of Mizpah. This place of Biblical importance has been unearthed after being undisturbed for twenty-five hundred years, and among the most remarkable incidents in the exploration was the finding of the private seal of an officer in King Zedekiah's army at the time when Jerusalem was taken by Nebuchadnezzar. A seal belonging to Jaazaniah, who is mentioned in the Old Testament, was also found in a tomb near the west necropolis of Telen-Nasheb.—The Congregationalist.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Proverbs I

Mark Twain, who knew something about navigation upon the greatest river in America, used to say that the Mississippi had a habit of changing its course over night. Together with Abraham Lincoln he discovered that a pilot on each trip must be alert and know where to steer his flatboat. But the river of human conduct has never changed; its shortlines remain the same, the rocks above and below the surface are known; the eddies whirl constantly and are always dangerous. Wisdom has always been wisdom and folly remain folly. And it is not necessary to become a fool in order to understand folly or a pagan philosopher in order to appreciate wisdom.

The book of Proverbs will stand forever as the source and fount of all wisdom. Some have called the writing a miscellany of Hebrew wisdom; in part that is true, but in a greater sense it is false, for the proverbs are human wisdom and divine wisdom reaching from eternity to eternity. In fact, the wise sayings or parables of the religious fathers of Israel, are the sign posts of heaven along the highway of life; they are the language of the angels for the saints of the church; they are heaven's antidote for much of earth's poison; they are divine precepts guiding human conduct into its land of Canaan, where plenty of fools continue to dwell; they are designed by the Heavenly Artificer for the walk of the earthly artisans. In all simplicity, to quote Arnot, they are "laws from heaven for life on earth."

What Some Scholars Say

Dean Stanley felt that Solomon was "not only the Augustine of his age but its Aristotle." Well might he have included the great teacher Socrates, and Plato, and all of the sages of history for that matter. Augustine and Aristotle, one a churchman and the other a pagan philosopher, were wise. But Augustine was the wiser of the two in that he found what a philosopher like Aristotle never could find in all his searching, namely, God revealed objectively in the universe and also in the human heart. Solomon began with the universe and then sought God. Augustine, following Solomon, believed that mind preceded matter and not that matter antedated mind. Wisdom, according to Solomon, existed before the hills, valleys, clouds, or sunshine.

Bridges says "that while other Scriptures show us the glory of our high calling this instructs us minutely how to walk in it. Angus avers, "It is for practical ethics what the psalms are for devotion." Coleridge calls it "the best statesman's manual." Oetinger finds that "the proverbs exhibit Jesus with unusual clearness," while Luther regarded the sayings as "a book of good works."

Excellent Literary Style Preserved

The book of Proverbs is classed as poetry in the enumeration of the books of the Old Testament canon. Upon examination that fact is discovered to be true. The poetry is of proverbial nature and is characterized by its "shortness, sense, and salt." Strophes and antistrophes abound. An excellent example follows:

"Hear, O my son, and receive my saying;
And the years of thy life shall be many.
I have taught thee in the way of wisdom;
I have led thee in paths of uprightness.
When thou goest, thy steps shall not be straitened;
And if thou runnest, thou shalt not stumble.

Take fast hold of instruction;
Let her not go;
Keep her;

For she is thy life.
Enter not into the path of the wicked,
And walk not in the way of evil men.

Avoid it,
Pass not by it;
Turn from it
And pass on."

—Prov. 4:10-15.

It is interesting to note that the poetical language of the book of Job reveals the death of the self-life. In Psalms the idea of worship and the resurrection life appear. In Proverbs heaven's wisdom adorns the scroll of life. In Ecclesiastes we shall see the futility of the soul that trusts in the world's power for satisfaction. In the Song of Songs we shall find the soul's complete satisfaction in the Beloved. All this, mark you, in the language of poetry! There is no objection to that, however.

Sampling the Proverbs

The Proverbs contain sound, sane, and sober advice for all men in all walks of life. A few samples will be delineated below.

1. For the man who has less brains than a bug:
"Go to the ant thou sluggard;
Consider her ways and be wise."
2. For the whore-monger:
"But whoso committeth adultery with a woman lacketh understanding: he that doeth it destroyeth his own soul."
3. For the hard speakers of the twentieth century:
"A soft answer turneth away wrath;
But grievous words stir up anger."
4. For bachelors and divorced men:
"It is better to dwell in a corner of the housetop, than with a brawling woman in a wide house."
5. For boastful, vain, self-educated individuals:
"Whoso boasteth himself of a false gift is like clouds and wind without rain."
6. For those who wonder what the Lord hates:
"These six things doth the Lord hate:
Yea, seven are an abomination to him:
A proud look, a lying tongue,
And hands that shed innocent blood,
A heart that deviseth wicked imaginations,
Feet that be swift in running to mischief,
A false witness that speaketh lies.
And he that soweth discord among brethren."
7. For those who love beauty and mystery in life:
"There be three things which are too wonderful for me,
Yea, four which I know not:
The way of an eagle in the air;
The way of a serpent upon a rock;
The way of a ship in the midst of the sea;
And the way of a man with a maid."
8. For countless women, of modesty and virtue:
Who can find a virtuous woman?
For her price is far above rubies."

* * * * *

"She openeth her mouth with wisdom:
And in her tongue is the law of kindness."

9. For all of us:

"He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool."

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Matt. 28:20.—"Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world. Amen." Moffatt gives this reading: "And teach them to obey all the commands I have laid on you. And I will be with you all the time, to the very end of the world."

To the tried and weary soul, whose pathway seems to be nothing but sharp, rough stones, "THE PROMISE OF JESUS' Presence" seems almost too good to be true. With their Master again, the Mount of Olives seemed like a new world to the disciples. The New Testament assures us they were jubilant. But one surprise after another only leads to one greater: for behold, they see him ascending! Then, again, hear their discouraging plea: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" But Pentecost has come, and with a more complete fuller understanding of the Lord's great plan, they hear him say, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world." Clothed in this new power, they never faltered again.

He had taught them to trust him, as recorded in Matt. 18:20: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." But the INVISIBLE THINGS IN LIFE had scarcely been noticed, as we see it manifested all around us every day. In Paul's sermon on Mars Hill he says, "That they should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us." The same writer declared to the Corinthians, "Yea, though he have known Christ after the flesh, yet how, henceforth know we him no more" (2 Cor. 5:16). Then the great apostle Peter says of him, "Whom, having not seen, ye love: on whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing ye rejoice greatly, with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (1 Pet. 1:8). All of which is but to say THAT THE PRESENCE OF JESUS, though invisible, is the most POWERFUL TRUTH ever revealed to man. If, in the ordinances of God's house, you do not find spirituality in this great fact, then to many simple hearts there can be nothing spiritual experienced.

Let it be noted that the promise of Jesus' presence is given only to men on duty. "Where two or three are gathered together IN MY NAME", is the condition laid down. Mr. Worldly-Wise Christian, before you argue that you can take Jesus with you into the theater, the talkie, or the dance hall, don't be too sure. Jesus has not promised that he will follow us with his gracious presence anywhere. No, not a minute. "Where they are gathered together IN MY NAME", is his decree. When the purpose of a meeting is clearly contrary to the plan and purpose of Jesus, he will not be found lending sanction to such a gathering by his presence. A few years ago, a well known bishop proposed to conduct religious service at the opening of a new saloon. The incongruity of it shocked many people, and the great newspapers frowned on such a revolting transaction. The cloak of religion thrown around some bathing beaches will be conducive to a spiritual uplift because the assembly has not very likely been "in my name." When Saul was anointed King of Israel by the prophet Samuel, and he went forth to do God's will, he went among the prophets. The Book says, "And the Spirit of God came upon him." Then he prophesied with others. But later on, when he grew selfish and jealous of David, the Book says the Spirit of the Lord departed from him and an evil spirit troubled him.

The teaching of the invisible presence is no strange thing in Bible history. The king of Syria sent an army to capture the prophet Elisha. The army came in the night and camped about the place where Elisha was staying. In the early morning the servant of the prophet went out and saw the hosts surrounding them. How he was frightened. He ran back to tell what he had seen. Elisha could see farther than that youth at Dohtan, and he said, "Fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Then in answer to the prayer of this old saint of God, the Book says, "The Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw, and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha" (2 Kings 6:13-18). And the writer of Hebrews says of the angels, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Invisible helpers, they; quite as real as that of Jesus.

W. I. DUKER, President Elkhart, Indiana	NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N. MAGAZINE SECTION M. A. STUCKEY, EDITOR, ASHLAND, OHIO	N. V. LEATHERMAN, General Secretary Bortin, Pennsylvania
E. L. MILLER Vice-President Meurertown, Virginia		M. P. PUTERBAUGH, Treasurer Ashland, Ohio

Fellowship Days in Sunday School

A plan that has helped bring about true Christian unity in one church and school

By Leslie E. Dunkin

The monthly observance of Fellowship Days by our Sunday school, church, and all other departments of the church, has helped to increase the Christian fellowship, decrease the troublesome misunderstandings, increase the interest and faithfulness of the members, and raise our church work in the estimation of the people of the community. A simple basket dinner is enjoyed together at these times, followed by a brief inspirational fellowship meeting in the afternoon. In the evening we urge our members to fellowship with a neighboring church.

The following is a suggestive sketch of our year's schedule:

January brings Resolution Day. The oldest members—oldest in respect of their length of service and attendance with our church—have charge of this event. In the morning service and in the seating arrangement for eating the noon meal, due recognition is given to the "old-timers". The afternoon meeting consists of each person stating briefly one new resolution—something definite, not merely general statements—which that person will endeavor to carry out in his or her church work during the new year.

February brings Hero Day. The boys and young men have charge of this event. Some Biblical hero is made the subject of the message for the morning church service. The walls of the room, for the noon meal are decorated with neat pictures of heroes—framed, mounted, or cut out of a paper or magazine. The afternoon meeting consists of as many as possible telling who their hero is and why.

March brings Heroine Day. The girls and young ladies have charge of this event. Some Biblical heroine is made the subject of the message for the morning church service. The walls of the room for the noon meal are decorated with good pictures of famous women—framed, mounted, or cut out of a magazine. In the afternoon many tell of their heroines.

April brings Rainy Day. The increased responsibility on rainy days forms the heart of the message for the morning church service. Soup is a general dish for all—in addition to what is brought in the baskets. The general topic for the afternoon service is helpful experiences from faithfulness on rainy days. Umbrellas and other rainy day equipment are featured in the decorations for the event.

May brings Family Day. since Mother's Day comes during this month. Families sit together for the morning church service and for the noon meal. Public recognition is given to the largest, tallest, shortest, heaviest, lightest, and oldest families. This is done in a friendly way to avoid any hard feelings or jealousies. Memories of and tributes to mother, the queen of the family, are presented informally in the afternoon service.

June brings Flower Day. Floral decorations are important for this event. With the weather permitting, the noon gathering and the afternoon service are held where the flowers are. Plans for this day are started early in the spring and the previous fall, to make the church grounds a place of beauty. Then, too, definite plans are started with suitable ceremonies in the afternoon, to plant or set out additional flowers, shrubbery or trees. A flower is presented to each person present as a souvenir of the event.

July brings World's Day. A world thought rather than merely a national thought is emphasized at the morning church service. The subject of missions is in order all day. Each table outside for the noon meal represents a prominent nation. A rope is tied around the gathering, marked "Christian World Brotherhood." At the afternoon service a prominent speaker is obtained to speak on some world Christian subject.

August brings Vacation Day. The thought of "recreation" is presented in the morning church service. The noon meal is held in a nearby woods or near a creek. This is not a regular Sunday picnic. If held inside, vacation decorations are used. Reverence and the spirit of worship are maintained by discussing informally from personal experiences, how different people have gained a closer experience with God from some vacation event. Nature is revealed as God's handiwork.

September brings Church Day. The new church and Sunday school officers and the leaders of the various other departments of the church are featured during this event. An endeavor is made to get the various departments to realize that their various plans and activities are for the centralized purpose of helping the church. Financial budgets for the new church year are taken care of. The afternoon service is called a "What-About-Next-Year?" service with representatives from the various departments speaking briefly on the plans for the next year.

October brings Rally Day. While this originates in the Sunday school, yet it is considered a Rally Day for every department of the entire school. Everybody is ready to push hard for the fall, winter, and spring work. The Sunday school has charge of the noon and afternoon gatherings. "How the Sunday School Has Helped Me and How I am Going to Help the Sunday School" is the general subject of informal discussion.

November brings Harvest Home Day. Fruits, grains, and vegetables are featured in the plans and decorations for this event. If there are needy families in the community, each family brings a contribution of food to the church, to be distributed at the close of the afternoon service. A typical Thanksgiving service is held in the afternoon, in spirit as nearly like what the Pilgrim Fathers held as is possible.

December brings Gift Day. Instead of being an exchange of gifts with each other, that usually brings jealousies and hard feelings, each person and each organization is encouraged to present a definite gift to God—something that can be used for him and his work. The Lord Jesus is held up as God's Gift of love to mankind. The gifts to God are gifts of gratitude for his great Gift.—Sunday School Times.

Fulton, Indiana.

Religious Education Week

September 25-October 2, 1932

Churches and whole communities, including great cities like Philadelphia and Cleveland, found high values in their observance of Religious Education Week last year. The date adopted by the International Council of Religious Education for this year is September 25 to October 2. Any other week in the early autumn may be selected if desired.

The observance includes a variety of activities suggested for the church, the home, and the religious forces of the whole community acting cooperatively. In the church, Rally Day, Promotion Day, a home visitation, a parents' evening, a church school open house, a leadership training evening, a service of installation and consecration for teachers and officers, an every-member rally, an "upper room" service, and a play or pageant are among the suggestions. For the home observance such items as a home dedication, a plan-the-budget evening, and cultural or recreational features are suggested. Among the community observances are such items as a religious census, a public school evening, a religious educational mass meeting, a youth conference, and a religious education exhibit.

The International Council has designated as the special emphasis this year the word "Increase" with the thought of increase in working capacity and spiritual life in the church school as being equally important with increase in attendance. The religious census is suggested as a basis for a great community movement to reach the untaxed.

Full explanation of the many suggestions for the observance are contained in the Religious Education Week Bulletin, 1931 edition, re-issued for use this year. The plans for the "Increase" emphasis are carried in a Sunday School Increase Goal Chart and a bulletin on How to Increase Sunday School Attendance. The bulletins may be secured at ten cents each, and the Goal Chart without cost from your denominational board of Christian education, your state council of religious education, or from the International Council of Religious Education, 203 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.—Harry C. Monro, Director of Field Administration and Adult Work.

O Lord, give us more charity, self-denial, more likeness to thee! Teach us to sacrifice our comforts to others, and our likings for the sake of doing good! Make us kindly in thought, gentle in word, generous in deed! Teach us that it is better to give than to receive; better to forget ourselves than to put ourselves forward; better to minister than to be ministered unto! And unto thee, the God of love, be glory and praise forever! Amen—Henry Alford.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

at the
Family Altar
With
Thoburn C. Lyon

THE TENT OF MEETING

(Lesson for August 21)

Lesson Text: Ex. 33:7-16; Golden Text: Ex. 33:11

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

The Tent of Meeting. Ex. 33:7-16

Generally speaking, the writer of these notes has a profound preference for the King James version, but if at all possible the Revised Version should be used for this passage; it is so much clearer. The Tabernacle proper was not yet built, and it has even been suggested that this "Tent" was Moses' own tent, which he gave up and set aside, in order that he and the children of Israel might have a place where they could commune with God, without interruption. It was outside the camp, away from the ordinary camp life and its bustle. How suggestive of the part communion with God should have in our own lives! We cannot always be going to church, or other gatherings, but we should have some place set apart where we might commune with him, even if we have to give up something of our own.

TUESDAY

God Among His People. Ex. 40:34-38

We rush too lightly, even flippantly, into the presence of a God of such great glory. So great was the brightness of his presence that at first Moses could not even enter the Tabernacle. Is it not worth much to hold communion with such a God? Let us reverently seek his presence. It is his delight to tabernacle with us and to guide us as definitely along life's way as he led the Israelites in their journeys.

WEDNESDAY

Acceptable Worship. Isa. 1:10-17

The people of Sodom and Gomorrah worshipped in vain, because of their abominable lives, but God found the worship of Moses and the children of Israel acceptable. They had built the Tabernacle and all its furnishings in exact accordance with his commands, and when their work was finished, God himself came down to crown the whole with his glorious presence. Today, if we keep his commands as faithfully we know he will also accept our worship and will guide and comfort us with his blessed presence forever.

THURSDAY

Motives to Worship. Ps. 99:1-9

Look well, through this passage, for the motives to worship which it contains. We mention only a few: his greatness; his strength; his righteous judgment and justice; he heareth prayer; he holds communion with his people; he forgives. Note especially the last phrase of the Psalm: "The Lord our God is holy." Read 1 Pet. 1:15 before our prayer today.

FRIDAY

God's House. Acts 7:44-50

God himself ordained the Tent of Meeting in the wilderness, and he later ordained the temple built by Solomon. Our houses of worship today are dedicated to him, and we believe they are acceptable in his sight. However, we need to remember that he is not confined to these holy places and temples made with hands, but dwells also in the larger temple he hath made himself (vs. 49, 50), and in the temple of the human heart. Let us be sure that we always keep God's house clean and holy unto him.

SATURDAY

The True Tabernacle. Heb. 8:1-13

Moses built the Tabernacle in the Wilderness after the pattern of heavenly things; now a greater than Moses is building us a "tent of meeting," in accordance with a better covenant, established upon better promises, and when it is completed he will come again and receive us unto himself, that we may be forever with him. When that which is perfect is come (1 Cor. 13:10), that which is in part shall no longer be needed. We appreciate the tent of meeting which we now have, but how we long for that which is perfect, the true tabernacle, with "such an high priest!"

SUNDAY

The Prayer Life. Ps. 5:1-7

There is no more beautiful picture, perhaps, than that of Moses interceding for the oft-sinners Israelites. Are we living up to our privilege in such matters? Moses won the continued presence of God for a great host from whom God had threatened to withdraw. What blessings might we not win for others if we would but PRAY? But intercession is not ALL of prayer; note the spirit of worship in this Psalm. David sensed his own deep need of God, and he prayed early in the morning. May we, like David, remember the multitude of his mercies, and "look up."

E. M. RIDDLE, President Warsaw, Indiana F. C. VANATOR, Associate Peru, Indiana	CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT WORK  C. D. WHITMER, 217 E. DuBall Ave., South Bend, Ind.	GLADYS M. SPICE, General Secretary and Treasurer 2301 13th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio
--	--	--

New Societies

Recent information from two churches gives the opportunity to report the organization of two new societies. At North Liberty, Indiana, is one fully organized and doing some very splendid work. This group of more than 25 members earned money to send some of their number to the Shipshewana Training camp. They made a fine showing in the camp. Their president is Clifford Hively and the Secretary is Cecile Fryar both of North Liberty, Indiana.

Another new society is located at Ardmore church near South Bend. Rev. A. T. Wirick is the pastor of both these churches. This pastor is receiving fine support from his young folks. They too were well represented at Shipshewana and many of them were enrolled in the Christian Endeavor course. Miss Mary Kellogg, R. R. No. 2 at South Bend is the President. The Secretary is Harry Price, R. R. No. 3, South Bend, Indiana. We mention these officers, that those of our Christian Endeavor officers who desire their addresses may easily have them. New societies, please report at once.

Conferences

Your President has had the opportunity to share in two conferences this summer. To speak at the Ohio conference on Young People's work was a real joy and privilege. Also it was the privilege of the writer to conduct two conferences, one on Stewardship and the other on Peace and to give one address on Tithing, in the Indiana Christian Endeavor convention at Bedford in June. Two weeks ago I taught the Christian Endeavor Course in our Young People's conference at Shipshewana Lake.

Problems

Let us state once more that you are urged to write some of our officers, if a problem arises in your Christian Endeavor work. Every member of our Brethren Board will be pleased to help you. Use them, they will appreciate hearing from you.

National Conference

Our Young People have been doing well at the National conferences of late years. We are expecting to see many of you again. This year, instead of a banquet, it's an outdoor affair. We'll be seein' you.

E. M. RIDDLE, President.

What the Local Union Can Do in Citizenship

By Bert H. Davis, Citizenship Superintendent of the New York State Christian Endeavor Union

Organize.

Appoint a citizenship superintendent. If this is not feasible under the union organization plan, give definitely the responsibility for citizenship work to another union department, or to a union officer, say a vice-president. In any case promptly notify the State citizenship superintendent of the name and address of the one responsible for citizenship work in your union.

The union citizenship superintendent and other union officers should consult as to the emphasis to be given citizenship work. The union citizenship superintendent should consult individually with other superintendents (Missionary, for instance, and recreation) whose service on many occasions has contacts with citizenship; for example, in relief to the poor through a city mission, or in building good citizenship among children in a congested district by providing recreational facilities and leadership.

Help Citizenship in the Societies

Provide a means for conference by all citizenship workers and the union citizenship superintendent at stated intervals, perhaps once every two months.

Offer study classes in citizenship and world-wide peace, in which members of societies in your community may enroll.

Provide a traveling library on citizenship subjects.

Suggest citizenship service such as individual societies may undertake. Show how several societies in a single city or village may unite to (a) urge voting; (b) welcome new citizens to their new duties; (c) study the character-building and character-destroying influences in their own community; (d) assist in specific community work that is both civic and religious in effects.

Recommend to the societies that they make education in citizenship a preparation for service in citizenship. Recommend that such type of service attempted be preceded by adequate study of its principles and methods.

Help societies to secure speakers or conference leaders or study class teachers on citizenship subjects.

A Community Citizenship Program

The union carries on educational and service projects in citizenship that could be handled best by an interdenominational city-wide or country-wide group. Do not "break into" work successfully done by your societies.

The union cooperates with other citizenship agencies in the community. Often a union recruits workers for Americanization, social service, Boy Scout work, and other general types of citizenship service.

Secure capable adult counsel in citizenship work. Be slow to give approval to candidates and parties.

Time your program according to the events and needs of the season.

Be familiar with all details of the seven-point Crusade citizenship program.—C. E. World.

we can do nothing" and that "with him all things are possible."

We read recently of a great and successful orthodox pastor who could boast of a mid-week prayer meeting with an average attendance of one thousand people. Yet he was so burdened because of the growing spiritual coldness of his membership that he began going to the church each morning for prayer about it between the hours of four and six o'clock. Several of the members finding it out joined him. An announcement was made at the Sunday services and before the end of that week 600 members were out to this early morning prayer meeting, getting right with God once more, and a great revival broke out. A thousand people in a prayer meeting does not necessarily mean spiritual victory. Those thousand people must be yielded to the Holy Ghost, and filled with the Holy Ghost and power.

It is repeatedly stated that the Christian church must go forward on her knees. There is no real forward movement in the church apart from this. We dare not set such a fast pace in our church program that we have neither time nor disposition to sit at the feet of the Master. Let us remember the words of Jesus to Martha who complained about her sister Mary who sat at the Master's feet learning from him. He said, "Mary hath chosen that good part." There are too many Marthas today who are so burdened with the complex machinery of the church that they cannot even sing with sincerity and meaning the first verse of "Have Thine Own Way, Lord", for so little time is allotted for the "waiting" and "yielding" of the individual as clay in the Potter's hand. "Take time to be holy, speak oft with thy Lord" has become merely a memorial of the remote past among many church members.

Jesus said, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." It is the will of Satan that there be no such abiding on the part of Christ's followers. Saint John writes that we receive what we ask for if we keep Christ's commandments and do the things which are pleasing in his sight. It is Satan's glory to keep us breaking the commandments and doing displeasing things, so that we cannot get things from God. We read in the Word, "Have faith in God", and "Without faith it is impossible to please God." It is Satan's plot to get us to have no faith at all except in our own cleverness and abilities. While Satan is gloriously succeeding in spreading false doctrines in the world; doctrines which tend to humanize Jesus and deify man, he is none the less busy in sound churches getting men and women to lean on the arm of flesh.

The Brethren Church cannot triumph until her individual members will, by the grace of God, break with this great common enemy of our Lord, and enter into a full allegiance with the Triune God-head. We need to "reckon ourselves dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God." May we keep our eyes upon that bleeding, dying form on the center Cross and observe anew the price paid for our deliverance from the power of Satan. We dare not lay our armour down and retreat now but remain in the ranks of righteousness at all costs, for we are in a winning battle. The promise of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to us is, "Lo I am with you alway." He has also given

Standards of Progress for the Brethren Church

(Continued from page 6)

Orders come to the Christian soldier from two headquarters, and much prayer and study needs to be exercised by him in order to detect which comes from whence. As the age draws more and more to a close, we may expect the program of the enemy to be so near like that of our great and eternal Captain that if possible, the very elect would be deceived.

We are thinking now of the great pressure which is being brought to bear on orthodox churches by great federations of religious bodies in the matter of civic righteousness, social reforms, world betterment, world peace, etc. They have a program which most certainly appeals to the flesh, for it is true that we want the best possible conditions under which to live and our prayers should be unceasing for these conditions. But if we are to progress as a denomination, we must maintain our pilgrim character, and reckon on our being aliens here in a foreign land; i. e., "in the world but not of the world." Our orders from the divine headquarters are very plain. Listen: "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier." 2 Tim. 2:3-4.

Paul's declaration was, "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." He set the pace for all who were to follow after. If Christian preachers had stuck to that text, there would not be the need of so many reforms today. If every clergyman even now would get back to that theme, civilization would be indefinitely spared the "severity of God" which must come in sure and certain judgment otherwise. But Satan has diverted the program of the church and has engaged Christendom in a hopeless task of changing the leopards' spots and the Ethiopian's skin. Whatever other religious bodies do, God forbid that the Brethren Church shall enter into an alliance with him who transforms himself into an angel of light, and seek by earthly means to perfect a corrupt and dying world-system when God is calling us to place our affections on those things which are above, where Christ is seated at the right hand of the Father. It is our duty to encourage sinners to a better world and not to make this a better world to house sinners. It is a fruitless ministry to try to permanently improve the corrupt social conditions here below, but it is possible to call corrupt sinners out of such conditions into a new life in Christ Jesus, and that is our task.

It should be known that the religious federated bodies are headed up for the most part by men who deny the main truths which form the very heart of the Gospel message. We are thinking particularly of such men as Bishop Frances McConnell who is now the president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America and who writes in his book, "The Christ-like God" after this fashion. In fact, these are his exact words: "Is not the tendency to deify Jesus more heathen than Christian? Are we not more truly Christian when we cut loose from a heathen propensity and take Jesus simply for the character he was and the ideal that he is?" Brethren in the Lord, dare we link hands with men like that, who are making the Son of Man and the apostles to be liars and deceivers? Surely this would be disobedience to the command of the Spirit which bids us who are soldiers of the Cross "not to become unequally yoked with unbelievers, and to come out and be separate, touching not the unclean things."

IN CONNECTION WITH THE THOUGHT CONCERNING THE INDIVIDUAL CHURCH being fortified against the Satanic forces at work, we are thinking chiefly of the influence they exert upon Christians who are deceived into believing that a spiritual work may be done in the energy of the flesh. Men may construct the most perfect steam engine with the most up-to-date equipment, but it will be of little value if there is no fire placed under the boiler. The Pacific Electric Company may construct the most elaborate electric cars, but unless the trolley comes into contact with the power house, they are practically without value. The devil does not care how beautiful and modern our churches are, nor how smoothly the machinery runs if he can keep us from getting in touch with heaven. So it is little wonder that he seeks to keep us so busy scheming, doing things and going places that we fail to meet heaven's conditions for spiritual advancement. THE BRETHREN CHURCH MAY PROSPER only by submitting and consecrating every part of the church equipment and machinery to the full control of the Holy Spirit. "It is God which worketh" in the church, as well as in the individual, "both to will and to do of his good pleasure." We need to be assured once more, that "without him us the assurance that "our labor is not in vain in the Lord."

No church can progress in these closing days of the church age by eliminating the Church's organizations and diverting all of its member's time to Bible study and prayer. There is much need of servers, but they must have a change of heart concerning the motive of serving as Martha of Bethany did. When serving is done for the glory of Christ, it is to be encouraged. We have placed no condemnation on good machinery. We have rather emphasized that it shall be presented as an instrument of righteousness unto God, letting him put the power into it and allowing him to be the Engineer to guide and control it.

Someone has well said that the church is afflicted with fatty degeneration of the heart. This is often true of the most fundamental churches. The members are more than well fed spiritually and there is so little exercise in spiritual service that this disease sets in. Sad but true, the more they are fed and the longer they sit, the harder it is to stir them out to do something. They would rather have it develop into dropsy than shaking palsy. They believe in the literal meaning of one of the phrases of 1 Cor. 15:18 which says, "Be ye steadfast, unmovable" but are very oblivious to the next one which speaks of "always abounding in the work of the Lord."

The Brethren Church will triumph when her members are aroused to the importance of being "ambassadors for Christ," ready at all times "to give a reason for the hope that is within them" and being witnesses of the sweetest story ever told. Each one of us, looking into both the life and death of our Lord may readily see his passion for lost humanity, and the Scriptures mean for us to "have the mind of Christ" in this matter as well as others. There is no question but that the most effective ministry in these last days is identical with that of the beginning of the Christian Church, and that is personal soul-winning. The success in great campaigns in these times can be traced to this phase of evangelism almost entirely, whereas in the 18th and 19th century, according to reports, this was not necessarily true.

Now if it is impossible to enlist the old membership of the church in such a program, it must be done through a nucleus of new converts who have not yet been overtaken with the ravages of spiritual indigestion. By all means there must be an exercised laity who know the joys of personally won sinners. Each person saved should be saved for something as well as from and to something.

IN CONCLUSION, let us set forth, briefly, the standards of Progress which we have outlined for our beloved denomination in these times when we are "lifting up our eyes" in anticipation of "the coming of the Lord from heaven."

I. A positive belief in, and an uncompromising stand on, A VERBALLY INSPIRED BIBLE.

II. A definite proclamation of the deep spiritual meaning and significance of our beloved distinctive ordinances which we observe, especially emphasizing the need of every member being present regularly when these ordinances are observed.

III. The concentrating of our energies and resources upon the denominational work which God has given to us, and then putting our next best effort upon the evangelism of Jews, or incorporate this phase of Christian ministry in our own denomination.

IV. A genuine recognition of, and fortification against the Satanic forces at work in Christendom, in our individual churches and in our individual lives, guarding against the unscriptural programs of ungodly federations, and discourage depending upon human efforts apart from a definite surrender of members and machinery to the Lord.

V. A lay-membership with a passion for souls manifested in a willingness to witness personally to the unsaved and bringing them into the church services.

These five standards, we recommend to the delegates of this the twenty-second annual conference of the Brethren Churches of Southern California for your consideration.

Los Angeles, California.

cation Bible schools and for my visits as superintendent to all missions. These visits include usually a week of revival meetings. Miss Nielsen also visits the churches in the interests of the work for women and girls. This coming summer we also hope to have Brother Luis Farre with us for a tour of the churches. He is teaching in the Union Bible Institute in Azul during the year. It will be remembered that he is the prominent monk who escaped from the monastery in Rio Cuarto and came to us. He seems to be very highly appreciated in Azul.

The work here in Almafuerite is steadily growing and we have added monthly meetings for women and girls which are well attended and we hope to organize a W. M. S. during the year.

The Field Council also approved the work in Rio Tercero where we have about forty interested people regularly in our weekly meetings there.

With the return of Brother Yett and family to the homeland and the going of Brother Sickel to Rosario the remaining workers have much to do to care for the work already begun and keep extending the work on all sides as opportunity affords.

Just now we are in midwinter, for July corresponds to January, but the weather is more like summer than winter. In spite of the crisis the people spend much of their time in diversions, football, the movies and talkies and dances and circuses and fiestas or entertainments of all kinds. Truly it is now as in the days of Noah. The deepening darkness warns us that we must hasten to fulfill our mission ere it be too late.

C. Y. YODER.

Almafuerite, Argentina, July 7, 1932.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH, NORTH LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

A number of weeks have passed since the work here was represented in the Brethren Evangelist.

The Lord has been good to us. We have cause for encouragement here. The readers of the Evangelist will rejoice with us, knowing that since January 1st the Lord has added 34 new members to our assembly, most of these were by baptism and conversion.

Daily Vacation Bible School opened June 20th and closed July 8th. The school was a success. It enjoyed an average attendance of 140. Its main object was to teach the word of God. On the closing day the school rendered an unusually fine program reviewing what was accomplished during the three weeks. The school was in charge of Miss Hazel Kirby and Mrs. Ernest Lacy. These young women are to be commended for their efficient work in conducting the school.

The Sunday school is holding up remarkably well. During the summer months, have dropped but very little. Our Sunday school is in charge of Mr. George Momme, Superintendent, and Mr. O. Lawson and Oliver Colburn are assistants. At the present our school has four organized departments and only lack of room prevents the addition of two other badly needed departments. During the past six months our school enjoyed an average attendance of 448 per Sunday.

We are continuing our prayer meeting program throughout the summer months. On Tuesday and Friday at 10:00 A. M., on Wednesday night at 7:30 and Saturday at 7:30 P. M. for the men. In addition, we seek to have a day of prayer once a month.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

ARGENTINA

We have just closed one of the best Bible study conferences for our workers that we have ever held. The program was prepared by brother Juan Iztueta, and the meeting was held in Rio Cuarto.

All the pastors were present except Adolfo Zeche who had the gripe at the time. At each session there was a period of devotions, then a review of some helpful book read, two addresses on the general theme of the conference, and an address on some selected theme or a review of the other addresses.

The general theme this year was the Holy Spirit. Some of the divisions were: The Names and Nature of the Spirit, The Holy Spirit in the World, The Holy Spirit in the Church, The Holy Spirit in the Work of Missions, The Holy Spirit and the Ministry, Doctrines of the Holy Spirit, The Dispensation of the Holy Spirit, The Holy Spirit and Inspiration, The Ascension of the Holy Spirit with and from his Work.

The addresses were carefully prepared and there was a devout spirit manifest throughout the conference which made it not only instructive to a high degree but also inspirational. If the addresses were published together in a book it would be profitable for anyone to read.

The Field Council also held a meeting in connection with the Bible Study conference and it was decided to have Brother Iztueta go with the Bible Coach and tent this year, with Brethren Siccardi and Federico Sotola, Jr., as helpers. The party will probably follow one of the railway lines from Rio Cuarto to Rosario. The church at Laboulaye will be cared for by Domingo Corrado, a lay worker, in the absence of the pastor. The summer season is also the time for the Va-

God still hears and answers prayer for which we praise him.

Mrs. S. Kirby is carrying out, with the help of adults and children a thorough and systematic tract distribution work, in the church and neighborhood. Since April 5386 tracts have been distributed including from house to house. We seek to cover our entire territory at least once a month.

Financially, while pressed, still God is blessing. For the past number of months we have been able to pay $50.00 on the principal of our building indebtedness and about all our bills are paid. During the Conference year we paid $429.00 for foreign missions and $194.00 for home missions.

There was a very good attendance at our last communion and it was a very impressive service. The deacons are active and doing much relief work.

Our prayer is that the name of Jesus shall continue to be glorified and that sinners will be saved and that we may not be ashamed of his coming.

MRS. S. KIRBY,
Church Correspondent.

LANARK, ILLINOIS

While at present news is scarce, the church and its departments move along with steady pace. The Sunday school has not suffered from summer slump, but is showing even more life and interest, due to having changed the program and mingled a few new things in to break monotony. We have switched our worship service and church school periods with evident interest. Evening worship service is held in union with other churches of the city.

One of the most outstanding things in our church progress lately, was the calling and ordination of three deacons and deaconesses. In fact, four were called, one deacon and wife chose to defer ordination for reasons best known to themselves until some future date.

Our Young People's society is progressing nicely, and is being held during summer at the church where the union preaching service is held. This has developed much interest, because of special programs.

Lastly, but not least, we're glad to tell you we have called our pastor for another year; and we are looking forward and hoping for a good year. Pray for us that we may so yield our wills to God that nothing during these troublous days may deter our divine progress, but that, being so yielded, the clouds might lift and go behind us. Even though we by his leading might need to go through some deep waters. We shall be delivered.

We are praying that by the presence of the Lord's spirit, in which the brotherhood will soon convene at Winona Lake, Indiana, that the churches will receive new power by which they shall be enabled to move forward with greater influence in combating sin; and praying too that righteousness may exalt the church to her rightful place in the world, and that the world might thus be exalted, and God glorified. We await his granting.

H. A. GOSSARD,
Church Correspondent.

CAMP SHIPSHEWANA

One of the first responsibilities of a denomination is the training of its young people. Church, Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, Sisterhood, and other organizations in our brotherhood, are of great value, but there is room for a Young People's Summer Camp. A teen-age camp which centers about Bible instruction rather than recreational activity.

The Indiana Conference has such a camp at Lake Shipshewana, located about forty miles north of Winona Lake. There, for twelve years young people from our Indiana churches and,—thanks to the fact they have extended camp privileges to the Brotherhood,—from Ohio and other States, have been gathering for a week of study and play in the month of July.

Faculty and students enjoy themselves alike in class and play. The entire camp is honeycombed with a fine spirit of fellowship and goodwill, which reminds one of Longfellow's cheerful lines:

"How beautiful is youth!
How bright it gleams
With its illusions, aspirations, dreams!
Book of Beginnings,
Story without end,
Each maid a heroine,
And each man a friend!"

Most every hour of the day was chuck full from six thirty in the morning until ten in the evening. (At times there was apparent camp activity before reveille and after taps—eh? Shipshewanians!) Six classes a day, a couple of hours of directed recreation, three or four meals (H. N. extra) tribe work, vespers, and Bible Conference make a rather full day.

This year the writer attended Shipshewana for the first time, and was greatly impressed as to its value for our Church. College, and Seminary. We believe scores of young people came to know their Lord and Bible better, made valuable Christian friendships, and caught visions of their possibilities in worship and service. One hundred and fifteen young people left the camp this year with the desire to return next year and, if possible, bring a friend or two.

May we suggest there may be a place for such a camp in the Eastern and Western sections of our brotherhood. Their value to our youth would be difficult to estimate. Plan now for next summer!

K. M. MONROE.

PHILIP THE LAYMAN

By Charles R. Erdman, in Church League Bulletin

"Philip the evangelist" was not an apostle. He was not ordained to preach. Yet he testified publicly for Christ with such power that multitudes were converted and a whole city was filled with joy. Thus some of the most noted evangelists have been laymen and many who have not been prepared for the ministry may today find rich opportunities to bear public witness for Christ.

The most instructive incident in the life of Philip was, however, his achievement in converting the Ethiopian eunuch. This episode is a classic example of success in a field of service which is open to every layman—namely, that of personal witness for Christ to individuals.

The incident suggests among others the following lessons: (1) Opportunities for such work are found in most unexpected places. Philip was in a desert but there he met the African prince whom he led into the way of life. (2) Opportunities are fleeting. Philip "ran" and joined himself to the chariot. (3) One must win confidence and interest at the start, so the first words of Philip were sympathetic and arresting and made possible further conference. (4)

The way is usually prepared for the messenger. If it is the work of the Lord he will go before his servant. Philip found the eunuch reading the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. No better opportunity for his message could possibly have been given. (5) One must center the conversation upon Christ. Philip "began at the same Scripture and preached unto him Jesus." (6) The aim must be to lead one to an open confession of Christ as Lord and Master. The Ethiopian was brought to the point where he himself said, "What doth hinder me to be baptized?" (7) Such testimony and the consequent decision issued in gladness, "He went on his way rejoicing."

The last scene in the life of Philip indicates that evangelism finds its first and most important sphere in the Christian home. When Philip is seen entertaining missionaries and when his four daughters are mentioned as witnesses for Christ, then for the first time he is given the title which is assigned to no other character in the Scripture—namely, "the evangelist."

OUR SOUTHERN Presbyterian Friends have much the same problems that we have, as you will see by reading what they have to say about

Church Papers and Publicity

Exploding Wrong Ideas

The greatest crime of the age was committed because those who were guilty of it did not realize the terrible deed they were recording against themselves in the crucifixion of the Christ. It may have been that some of the leaders did not act unknowingly, but the major portion of the mob moved toward Calvary because the leaders were en route there.

This seems a far cry from the subject of the support of Church papers but when we realize how many Church papers have been made to suffer because of lack of appreciation of their services, we can see another example of thoughtlessness. Now, a Church paper is a business as well as inspirational institution. Men work each day for their daily bread, instead of sitting down and merely praying for it. Church members should support their papers instead of simply expressing an occasional prayer for them. Send your subscriptions in and then your prayers will be more forceful for that which you are interested in.

Church papers are expensive. They have to have an operating force. They have to be equipped with the latest mechanical devices of the printing world in order that they may be up to date and have a selling power. Naturally if there is a cost that cost must be paid. How are the Church papers to be maintained? There are two ways, subscriptions and advertising.

Subscriptions should be boosted in your Church organizations. They are at the most but a few dollars and the papers you get in return from the expenditure are worth more than you give for them in a material as well as spiritual way. It would cost thousands of dollars for individuals to collect the news they receive in Church papers and yet some people do not take enough interest in the papers to send in their money for them. Lest the writer misunderstood, let it be said here that this is not a press agent article for the Church papers but merely a recital of facts that should be made plain in every Presbyterian Church in Dixie. It is an outrage for the Church papers to have to be hampered with small circulations when they could be boosted if persons would only realize that money is necessary to their operation.

Now, why increase the Church papers' circulation? The amount of money that a newspaper or religious paper obtains per inch for its advertising is dependent upon its circulation. In other words, a paper with five thousand circulation cannot ask anything like the same price for its advertising that a paper with fifty thousand can. What is the result? The paper of the five thousand circulation is printed at anything like the same cost of that with a larger figure, it faces failure.

This brings us to the explosion of a wrong idea. The idea is that the Church paper can exist on prayer alone. Money is needed just as it is in the operation of an individual business. Get behind your Church papers before they have to suspend or cut down their size, which step reduces their importance also.

There is another idea that prevails about the Church papers which is a wrong one. It is that they are dull and uninteresting. This idea comes from carelessly glancing at an issue and tossing it aside. You may have overlooked all of its features in your haste. It must be borne in mind that the religious character of the publication makes a difference in its make up necessary.

Some church members have the idea that the Church papers are not interested in the happenings within the confines of their church. They fail to realize the opposite is true. Their news notes are welcomed if they are sent promptly and written in an interesting manner. There should be no delay in the sending in of items, as they are wanted for prompt publication. The printing of a program as prepared in one church might prove of much help to another church which has been puzzled as to how to handle a similar condition.

The Church papers are what the support of the church members make them. They are as interesting as their backers believe they are and in accordance with what measure they are given the aid of the church they will prosper.

As it tells the story of Jesus it proves a bulwark of the faith, inspiring the young and old, explodes wrong ideas, a Church paper is worth-while. The impress of the religious press depends upon the amount of energy expended by Church members to make its part in the onward movement of the Church a prominent one. Each Church member has an obligation toward the Church papers. Is it being met?—The Presbyterian of the South.

Suffolk, Virginia.

BEFORE PROHIBITION

There were 1,754 breweries and distilleries supplying 2,094,729,078 gallons of liquor.

There was an annual average consumption of 19.95 gallons of liquor for every man, woman and child to the tiniest baby in the United States.

Drinking in the same proportion would make the consumption today 2,400,000,000 gallons. If every automobile in the United States were to transport 100 gallons of this liquor, there would still be 100,000,000 gallons untransported. Allowing eight feet between cars, this would mean 136,363 miles of cars, or over forty-five strings of automobiles stretching across the United States.

There were 177,790 licensed saloons, most of them selling after hours, to minors and to drunken persons.

In Chicago seventy per cent of the saloons were under the control of the brewers, who had no concern other than increasing their production of beer.

A news story in the Chicago Tribune, June 1, 1914, said: "A three months survey shows that 14,000 women and girls frequented, every twenty-four hours, the back rooms of the saloons on Madison and North Clark Streets and Cottage Grove Avenue." There were over 7,000 saloons in Chicago at that time.

The saloon was the gathering place for youth. From the Chicago Tribune, January 2, 1911, we quote: "One of the first places (saloons) visited after 1:00 o'clock was George Silver's place, at 126 Randolph Street. There were 400 young men and girls in the place, and nearly every one was drunk."—American Issue.

BOO, ALSO, BOOHOO

By J. H. Larimore

The roosters in the barnyard go "Cock-a-doodle-do!"

The cattle in the pasture voice a well contented moo;

The pigeons in the dove-cote are wont to bill and coo,

But the gangsters at Chicago scared folks stiff by yelling "BOO!"

Now back home in the winter, you can hear the wind go "Woo-oo,"

As it whistles in the fireplace and goes swirling up the flue;

At the moon the dog is barking, and you hear the kitten mew,

But up there in Chicago, you could hear the rumsoaks "BOO!"

The old owl in the treetop ev'ry night goes "Whit-to-Whoo;"

Now, you'll admit there's little else for Mr. Owl to do;

But up there in Chicago, 'twas in June of '32,

The delegates were frightened when the riffraff hollered "BOO!"

They were sitting in convention, seeking how to find the clue

That should banish depression and prosperity would woo;

Orators of note were speaking on the best course to pursue,

When the bums and scums and rummies in the gallery yelled "BOO!"

Just to think the Grand Old Party should around the gills turn blue,

Just to think that to its senses it should have bade adieu,

When beer-debauched tough rioters, a rough and mangy crew,

In hoots of base derision, craned their necks and shouted "BOO!"

Some day I hope good candidates a right course will pursue,

So that temperance and virtue, faith and courage will ensue;

And conventions won't be scared to death, nor turn an ashen hue

When the folks up in Chicago answer arguments with "BOO!"

WHAT PROHIBITION ACCOMPLISHED

All statements in this article prepared by Mr. Priehart, of the Research Department, can be substantiated beyond controversy by the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 100 Maryland Ave. N. E., Washington, D. C.

Consumption one-third of License Days

Prohibition has sent the liquor consumption curve, steadily rising for sixty years, downward like the tail of a spent rocket. In 1850, we drank 4.08 gallons per capita; in 1917, 20.20. Prohibition brought the downward trend. On no other authority than Prohibition Director A. W. W. Woodcock, in testimony before the House appropriations committee, January 31, 1932, is the fact:

"The government measured the amount of hops, corn, sugar, rye, barley, etc., raised and imported, subtracted the amounts used in known legal enterprises and reported that the amount of raw material left would make less than a third of the former liquor consumption."

Eliminated Liquor Advertising

National prohibition has eliminated the liquor advertising which appealed to the crudest and lowest emotions to create new victims of the drinking habit.

Made the Saloon An Outlaw

It has crystalized public sentiment solidly on the point, "That the saloon shall never return." Even the wets now join on this proposition.

Made Drunkenness News

Prohibition has made drunkenness news. Drinking once too common for mention in the pre-Volstead days, now merits front-page space.

Alcoholism Deaths Reduced 40 Per Cent

Deaths from alcoholism have been reduced 40 per cent under prohibition, 1910-16 average, 5.2 per 100,000; since prohibition 3.1 (U. S. Census.)

Cirrhosis of Liver Reduced 45 Per Cent.

Cirrhosis of the liver death rate, an alcoholic disease, has decreased 45 per cent. 1010-16, 13.2 per 100,000; since 1920, 7.8 (U. S. Census.)

Cut Off Supply of New Recruits

A generation of youth is now growing up, most of whom know not the taste of liquor. Even in a city like New York, with poorly enforced prohibition, the rate of first offenders for drunkenness, an index to youthful drinking, decreased from 14.5 to 10.00 population in 1917, to 4.4 in 1929. (City Magistrates' Court.)

Conserved Savings

Millions of dollars formerly spent on drinks are now stored away for a rainy day:

Savings deposits have increased three times since 1918.

Membership in building and loan associations has increased from four to eleven millions since 1919.

The assets of these associations of the middle-class home owners have increased three and one-half times.

Life insurance has increased in volume 145 per cent since prohibition.

Boosted Milk, Ice Cream Consumption

Nourishing foods and harmless drinks have displaced the trade in poisonous alcohol. What are they?

Milk. Increase in consumption of 212.5 pounds annually for every man, woman and child in the United States since prohibition.

Ice Cream. With the coming of prohibition, the number of employees increased 95 per cent. The production of the industry increased in value 281 per cent.

Soft Drinks. The soft drink industry employed 114 per cent more wage earners and produced a 307 per cent increase in value of products with the coming of prohibition. Shifted Source of Revenue and Increased It

Government revenue, once stingily surrendered by greedy brewers, is now derived from legitimate sources.

The government received only an annual average of $221,000,000 in normal times before prohibition from a $2,333,000,000 liquor business. The liquor interests surrendered to the government only one dollar in every ten taken from the laboring man's pay envelope.

Now in 1920, the states alone received $713,761,000 more revenue for gasoline and automobile taxes than they did in 1919. The burden of taxation has been placed on those better able to bear the load.

Raised Standard of Living

Prohibition has helped America raise her entire standard of living. (And this continues in spite of a temporary depression.)

Making allowance for shrinkage of the dollar, the value of manufactured products in the United States has increased 50 per cent.

The index of the wages of the average American wage-earner has increased 43 per cent from 1918 to 1929.

College and university attendance has increased 76 per cent under prohibition. (U. S. Bureau of Education.)

The per capita expenditure for public education has practically doubled in eight prohibition years.

Economist Roger Babson has well said the nullification of prohibition at this time would prove a most serious difficulty in the way of recovery from a period of unemployment and business depression.

Workmen now own stock in the companies for which they work. The number of stockholders in large corporations has increased 243 per cent since prohibition.

Reduced Drink-Caused Poverty

Prohibition has raised the level of the lower classes in America by reducing drink-caused poverty. The Salvation Army should know. Evangeline Booth says:

"A record is kept of the causes of poverty where Christmas baskets are given. Before prohibition, the cause in three out of four families was drunkenness of one or both parents; less than ten years after prohibition took effect, in a study of 1,000 families, drunkenness was the cause in only one out of ten."

Goodbye "Blue Monday"

Employers have not been without benefits from prohibition. Evangeline Booth is the authority that: "In a great corporation employing 101,000 workers, there were only 30 discharged in 1927 for intoxication; whereas in 1915, there were 202 employees out of 8,755 dismissed for drinking."

"Blue Monday" has disappeared. Figures of Monday absenteeism, recorded by a large manufacturer of powder in Delaware, show a remarkable decline from 6.17 per cent in 1913 to 2.35 per cent in 1929. (U. S. Bureau of Prohibition.)

A Boon to Automobile Industry

Prohibition has brought about a moderation of automobile and post-war crime which would have created terrible conditions in a country with 28 million automobiles were liquor not an outlaw. Henry Ford has stated that should liquor return to America he would be compelled to go out of business. —The American Issue.

OUR LITTLE READERS

"AWARDED THIRD PRIZE"

Sylvia Main stopped in front of the painting that bore a card with the words, "Awarded third prize." Her eyes were bitter. Third prize to a thing like that! It ought to be forbidden to paint such things!"

Jane Meadows turned from a painting of a lovely summer hillside and looked at the prize picture. It was a sordid city street with dreary crowds streaming between the hideous tenements. It was startling real. "It is terrible and wonderful," she said slowly, "I don't wonder they gave it a prize. You couldn't forget it."

"That's just why it ought to be forbidden!" Sylvia cried fiercely.

"But it's true," Jane protested. "The artist saw clear into life. He makes you feel that the awfulness isn't really in the narrow streets and terrible tenements but in sodden souls without a vision."

Sylvia looked at her companion in amazement. "You of all people, who are always telling me that I've no right to be a pessimist!"

Jane glanced round the gallery; no one else was in sight. "Tell me your definition of a pessimist," she said.

"One who sees clearly that sin and sorrow and ugliness are in the world," Sylvia did not have to stop to think.

Jane had been turning the pages of her catalogue. She looked up, smiling. "I suppose that's all right as far as it goes," she admitted.

"As far as it goes! How much farther could it go, I'd like to know!"

"It could acknowledge that after all the pessimist has only one point of view, and that therefore his conclusion is only a partial truth. For instance, in a gallery with a picture of the sea that makes you draw a long breath and fairly smell the salt; with a picture of dancing children, oh, with pictures and pictures of beauty and all as true as that of the city street—Sylvia Main insists upon seeing only the street. It is Sylvia that is the pessimist, not the artist. See that splendid old head? That is by the same man!"

"But—" Sylvia protested, but Jane interrupted her.

"Don't you see that you're not looking at life honestly, dear? I am going to give you a challenge. I challenge you to write down a few words about all the lives that you know personally. Put down your Aunt Kate's neurasthenia, but put down also your Uncle Dan's unquenchable courage. Put down your mother's death, but put down also her perfect love. Put down your father's loneliness, but put down the devotion between the two of you. Have you been fair to pass by all those glorious things, Sylvia?"

Sylvia was silent for a long time. Then she said slowly, "Maybe not."—The Companion.

of friends. They expect to reside in Johnstown, Pennsylvania. J. L. BOWMAN.

MYTON-BRATTEN—On Sunday afternoon, June 19, at the Brethren church in Louisville, Ohio, Miss Blanche M. Bratten was joined in marriage to Mr. Thomas M. Myton. Both Mr. Myton and his bride are splendid Christians. Mrs. Myton has been the efficient pianist at the Brethren church for a number of years. Her place in the church will be hard to fill. The ring ceremony was used. They will reside in Columbus. The ceremony was performed by the bride's pastor, the undersigned. A. E. WHITTED.

SHAMBLIN-SEEFONG—On Tuesday, June 21, at the bride's home in Louisville, Miss Dora Seefong was joined in marriage to Mr. Greer Shambelin. The bride has been a teacher in the Louisville High School for the past several years and also a worker in the Brethren church of which she is a member. The ring ceremony was used. They are residing for the present in a summer home some few miles east of Louisville. The ceremony was performed by the bride's pastor, the undersigned. A. E. WHITTED.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

BRETHREN DAY AT ROCKY RIDGE PARK

Brethren feeling the need of the enthusiasm and inspiration that comes from mingling with those of like precious faith will hold Brethren Day at Rocky Ridge Park on September 10th. Rocky Ridge Park is near Emmitsburg, Maryland and is reached from all points by good roads. Brethren from everywhere are invited to bring their friends and enjoy the day with us. There is ample shelter in case of rain. Every one coming is supposed to bring three things with him: A well filled basket, a hearty Brethren handshake, and smiles enough to go all around. No objectionable features commonly found in public parks. Rocky Ridge has been called an ideal place to have an outing. At this writing it looks as though the affair would be very largely attended. There will be a short programme in the afternoon. The programme is as follows:

Music. Floyd Hartman, director.
Devotional Services. Rev. C. H. Wakeman, Cumberland.
Music.
Address of Welcome. Rev. William Benshoff, Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.
Response by representatives from the churches.
Solo. Rev. E. J. Rohart, Winchester, Virginia.
Reading. Mrs. Preston Myers, Linwood, Maryland.
Fifty Years of Brethren History. Rev. Frank Coleman, Hagerstown, and Rev. E. L. Miller, Maurertown, Virginia.
Music. Hagerstown church.
Pageant. S. M. M. of St. James, Maryland.
Vesper Service. Rev. W. S. Baker, St. James, Maryland.
For any further information write to J. L. BOWMAN, Linwood, Maryland.

THE GARFIELD

Open for the Brethren Conference at Reduced Rates

MRS. C. VAN NUYS, Manager,
Winona Lake

THE TIE THAT BINDS

THOMAS COY—Miss Alverta P. Coy and Mr. H. Fred Thomas, both of Johnstown, were married in the Linwood Brethren parsonage on July 10th, at 9 o'clock by the pastor of the Linwood church. The couple were unattended. The ring ceremony was used. After the morning services in the Linwood church the newlyweds started for Atlantic City where they expect to spend their honeymoon. These splendid young people have the best wishes of a large circle

THE HEIGHTS

ABOVE STUDEBAKER SPRINGS
Winona Lake, Indiana

Depression Rates for the Brethren Conference. Rates on application
M. E. ROSS Manager

VOL. LIV
Number 33

August 20
1932

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

LABOR DAY

Song For Christian Laborers

By Thomas Curtis Clark, in the New Outlook

Dear Master of our days and years,
How filled with toil Thy life!
Meek Carpenter of Nazareth,
Rebuke our fret and strife.

Renew in us a loving mind,
Reconsecrate our work:
Oh, make our tasks a sacred call,
May we not waste nor shirk.

Take from our hearts the greed of gold,
Lend us thy calm content:
May all our days, from morn to night,
In gratitude be spent.

Renew our zeal for righteousness,
Give us new dreams of faith:
Before the dawn of kindly peace
Let pass war's ancient wraith.

Dear Carpenter of Nazareth,
Lead on, through toilsome days,
Until a world of grateful hearts
Shall speak Thy perfect praise.

HONOR BE TO ALL GOOD WORK AND WORTHY WORKMEN

OUR SUNDAY MORNING CONFERENCE OFFERING

Send an offering for Missions with your delegates to General Conference

Revival Necessary for Recovery

A spiritual revival is a necessary condition of a genuine economic recovery, Roger Babson, president of the Babson Statistical Organization, told the representatives of a score of denominations assembled at East Northfield, Massachusetts in a conference on evangelism. Mr. Babson declared that "the need of the hour" is "more self-control, more unselfishness, more faith, and more courage," and described these as "spiritual qualities which cannot be secured from bankers or stores, but only from vital religion."

Mr. Babson further held that, if ministers are disappointed because church attendance is not larger, they should scrutinize their own preaching, cease discussing abstract problems and give concrete help to people who are face to face with pressing needs.

Preachers, Stay on the Job

Mr. Babson's address was in part as follows:

"For churches to close this summer is like hospitals closing during an epidemic. I say this because an epidemic of fear, such as is raging today, is as dangerous as an epidemic of 'flu' such as raged in 1918. The need of the hour is not more money, more real estate, or more stocks and bonds, but more self-control, more unselfishness, more faith, and more courage.

"Self-control, unselfishness, faith and courage are spiritual qualities which cannot be secured from bankers or stores, but only from vital religion. In behalf of the discouraged business men, the unemployed wage-workers and the millions of others in trouble today, I beg of ministers to minister to the wants of these people at this critical hour. An economic recovery is only awaiting a spiritual revival.

"Preachers wonder why they do not have better church attendance. Is it not because they are failing to give a message which will truly help the bewildered people of the present day? Business men, wage-workers and mothers are today primarily interested in how to pray and how to trust in God, and what to do that they may exist. Under ordinary circumstances it is all right to preach about abstract theological or sociological problems, but today men and women want personal and immediate help in solving pressing needs and in making momentous decisions. It is the ability to make decisions correctly which people really want, rather than any material thing, and this wisdom is a spiritual quality, which only religion can give.

The Man Who Doesn't Support

"For a man to expect spiritual help in his time of trouble and yet not be willing to give an hour or two a week in attending and aiding the churches, upon which he is absolutely dependent, is to me beyond comprehension. Such a man does not deserve help and cannot logically expect it. To get anything in this world we must make some sacrifice, and the first sacrifice people must make in order to get spiritual help is to give their time and support to the churches. At various times in past history different forms of sacrifice have been required. Once it was goats and bullocks, later it was one-tenth of one's income today it may be giving up a game of golf or turning off the radio on a Sunday morning.

Reasons for Small Attendance

"A minister who sees his congregation dwindling may be quite sure it is due to one or more of these four reasons: (1) to sermons which are uninteresting, unintelligent and non-helpful to the average man and woman (2) to the fact that those who attend his church prove no more honest and kind than those who do not attend (3) to a lack of spiritual influence in the home and school and the bad example as to 'church going' set by certain influential people in the community; (4) to the feeling that the Church does not render a service important enough to call for support. By a carefully planned campaign to correct these four handicaps over a period of five years, Church attendance and Church benevolence could be easily doubled."

Revival of Interest in Worship

At the same meeting Bishop Wilbur P. Thirkield of New York, outlined the main points in what he characterized as "a revival of interest in worship in Protestantism." Bishop Thirkield said: "The loss of

WHY I READ MY CHURCH PAPER?

I read my Church paper for the same reason that a stockholder of a bank reads the report of its Board of Directors, that a merchant reads his trade paper, that a mechanic reads his trade union journal, that a doctor reads his medical magazine: that I may know and understand the latest developments of my trade and profession—that of being a Christian.

I cannot be a real Christian and a worth while member of my church unless I know its purposes, its aims, its plans, its needs, and how it proposes through the cooperation of its members to join hands with God in bringing them about. My Church paper, the text-book of my particular denomination, tells me how.—Rev. Clark J. Cross, Prize Winning Paper, Church Management Contest.

the spirit of reverence has been the greatest weakness in thousands of modern churches. If the choice must be between superstition and irreverence, give me superstition, for superstition may pave the way to faith, while irreverence brings hardness and shallowness of soul and drives out God."

While stressing the value of liturgies and symbols, Bishop Thirkield also pointed out the very different kind of contribution made by the Quakers in their use of silence in worship. He said: "I make a plea for the power of holy silence. One difficulty in worship today is that the preacher is so eternally talking aloud that no space is left for the people to hear God speak. The Psalmist who cried, 'Be still and know,' had a true insight into human need."

Bishop Thirkield was severely critical of the tendency in some churches to substitute entertainment for worship. "When the people are fed on entertainment," he said, "they come to want something more and more exciting. God save us from pulpit thrillers and sensation-mongers. My plea is for a worship which satisfies the mystic's eager quest for God, the moralist's ethical ideals and a passion for helping and saving men."

Summons to Aggressive Evangelism

Dr. Charles L. Goodell, executive secretary of the Commission on Evangelism, in interpreting the significance of the conference, declared that "the depression and discouragement prevailing throughout the country at the present time are a summons to all the churches to a year of aggressive evangelism. The statistics of gains in church membership for the past year have been gratifying, showing that more than 430,000 new members were added to the American churches of all denominations during twelve months. This increase is nearly five times as large as that of the preceding year."—Excerpts from Report in Pacific Christian Advocate.

Home Education

"The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel

PAPA'S AND MAMA'S

By Hilda Richmond

Many young mothers, and fathers, too, can scarcely believe that as early as crib days babies and little children learn many lessons that last them a long time. Fond, happy mothers ask the question, "Whose baby are you?" and then they laugh with delight when the infant lisps out, "I see all Mama's and part Papa's." The baby is rapturously kissed and petted for the brave little attempt to talk and express affection, and somehow a baby cannot help feeling that Mother is closer and better and dearer to him than the other parent. The beaming young father, mindful of what his wife went through to bring them this treasure and mindful of her daily and hourly sacrifices, feels that this way of putting it is all right—but is it? Does it not put the father in the second place in the home?

If anything should be settled in the mind of the young mother of the first baby it is that the father should have his just dues

(Continued on page 15)

IN THIS NUMBER

Favor Launching of a Program—Editor,	3
Editorial Review,	4
Labor and the Christian Spirit—E. Jacobs,	5
The Glory of the Cross—L. G. Locke,	6
Behind the "Wet" Curtain—W. T. Ellis,	7
Significant News and Views,	8
Miniature Studies in the Bible—M. A. Stuckey,	9
Alcohol From the Standpoint of Modern Scientific Medicine—A. D. Bevan,	10
Washington Summer Bible School—H. A. Kent,	10
Studying the Sunday School Lesson—T. C. Lyon,	11
Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits—C. D. Whitmer,	11
A C. E. Service for Promoting the Quiet Hour—H. J. Hinkamp,	12
God So Loved—D. T. Hume,	12
This Man Receiveth Sinners—Dora Greenwell,	12
News from the Field,	13, 14
Our Little Readers,	16
Announcements,	16

GEORGE S. BAER
Editor

R. R. TEETER
Business Manager

Send all moneys to the
Business Manager

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Official Organ of the Brethren Church

Entered as second class
matter at Ashland, Ohio

$2.00 a year in advance

Acceptance, special rate, section
1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Favor the Launching of a Program

Last week we raised the question as to the advisability of launching a united program of evangelism at our approaching National Conference, and offered a suggestion for such a program. We believed the time was opportune for such an effort and we presented a suggestion merely as a means of starting thought on the subject. We invited Evangelist readers to write their opinions regarding the launching of a program and to give us their suggestions for publication. The idea found favor with at least some of our leaders, as we have learned, and we believe we would hear from many more if the time were longer. Inasmuch as the other available space was taken up when these replies were received, we are giving place in our editorial columns. The moderator of our National Conference writes with strong approval of the suggestion and expresses the belief that the time is at hand for a revival in doctrine and evangelism.

W. I. DUKER SAYS:

"Surely there could be no time quite so auspicious as the present for Brethren to swing into a revival movement—a revival of doctrine and a revival of evangelism. Our country is ripe for evangelism at the present time. People are tiring of the leadership of men. They are losing faith in men's attempts to lead us out of our troubles. Now is the time for men to turn to the leadership of God. We, at present, have no national program. A national program will tend to unite us and give us a more definite, universal field of activity. Surely in our planning we could do no better than to give our people an opportunity to go forward in this manner. It seems evident that in the world about us there is a definite tendency to revert to former lusts and sins. Now will be a splendid time for the church to go forward. This will tend to increase the division between the world and the church, and God knows we need that division greatly these days. I would be most happy to cooperate in some program of the kind suggested by our Editor in his recent editorial."

* * * *

Among the men whose counsel is valued in considering problems relating to church growth are those who are giving their lives to evangelism. Such a man is the secretary of the Home Mission Board of our church. We find him heartily in favor of a program of the kind suggested, and we are privileged to say that

R. PAUL MILLER WRITES:

My reaction to this suggestion of yours is one hundred per cent favorable.

"As to suggesting a plan of my own I would not do so. Yours covers the field as capably as any that I or any other could suggest. The whole matter lies in getting enthusiasm and cooperation to bring this matter about. Wherever I have gone in my work, whether in conferences or in other places I have been hammering on this same point that you are now suggesting and promoting.

A genuine revival of evangelism involving real Bible study, involving expositional preaching and much Bible teaching along with an intensive seeking of lost men for Christ is the greatest need, not only of the Brethren church, but of all professing Christian churches that I know today.

"A revival of true and genuine public and personal evangelism that is continuous in its operation is the only thing that will prevent the Brethren church from slipping into the apostasy which is gripping the general professing Christian church today. In spite of all we may say to the contrary we cannot prevent such an end if we do not positively push the work of the gospel among the unsaved right here in America. Too many people have stopped seeking souls in America and are preaching and working for lost souls only in foreign lands. Something is wrong with a Christian, the church, or the pastor who gives and preaches only for the salvation of the heathen in Africa and has no concern for his next door neighbor who is on his road to Hell.

Such a revival of evangelism is the only thing that will rekindle, and that will preserve the church in the present crisis. It is the only thing that will make the church of Christ grow so as to maintain her educational and foreign fields. It is the only thing that will cause the church to be separated from the world and be ready for Christ's return.

"Every Brethren church should have some other mission point under its wing. About the worst thing that is hanging about the neck of the average Christian church is its attitude of confining its home work and ministry within itself. The great command of Jesus Christ was to evangelize lost men. The church today is suffering tragically because she has ceased largely to be evangelistic and has begun to concentrate and develop herself."

* * * *

The pastor's viewpoint is most important in the building of a program or the launching of a challenge that will call out the latent resources, and result in making the church more aggressive and successful in extending the Gospel message and building up the church. We are therefore glad for a word from the pastor of the church at Bryan, Ohio and have permission to quote the following from the letter of

C. A. STEWART:

"I have felt for a long time that something should be done to widen the borders of our church. It seems to me that we are standing still. But I will confess that I am at a loss to know how to go about it. I am heartily in favor of any kind of a program that will promote the cause of Christ and extend the borders of the Brethren church. The suggestions in the Evangelist are good but it don't seem to me that it (the program) accomplishes all we would like to see. Personally I have always tried to carry out some of these suggestions. The reason for failure to do all that was hoped may rest upon me.

"But we have been for years depending on the mission boards and they could not do the work for lack of funds. Now I think we should use some means of getting into new communities. Just how I do not know. I will favor a program that will in any way, encourage loyalty to the church, deepen the spiritual life of the members and reach lost souls. I think we should stress evangelism and Bible study, and will give my support to any program that will have these for its aim."

* * *

We have had other church leaders to tell us personally that the idea of a program of evangelism appealed to them and that they would favor Conference taking action to promote something of that sort. Time will not permit further responses for publication after these statements are read, but it is barely possible that other suggestions may be on their way to us in response to last week's editorial. If so, they will be published in next issue. However all who have allowed their attention to be called to this matter will be giving it some thought and will be the better prepared to express their mind during Conference, if there should develop any extensive desire to launch a program. And those who cannot go to Conference, can pray that the Spirit of God shall move upon the hearts of the delegates so deeply as to cause them to be ready to undertake with faith and courage and sacrificial purpose whatever may seem to be the will of the Lord for the more rapid advancement of our Zion.

---

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

We are running Dr. Jacob's Labor Day article as our feature this week because next week we will be featuring the Conference Moderator's Address.

We learn that Dr. William H. Beachler, the talented pastor of the church at Gratis, Ohio, is engaged in chautauqua work for a time in Iowa. He expects, however, to be at National Conference.

All-aboard for General Conference, August 22 to 28. If you want to learn about your church's history and doctrine, this is the time to hear it, when we will be celebrating fifty years of separate denominational existence.

Brother Homer A. Kent, pastor of the church at Washington, D. C., reports a successful Vacation Bible School, and we are glad to be able to publish along with it a picture of the school. The enrollment was ninety-five and the average attendance seventy-two and a half. The school was characterized by special emphasis on Bible study. "Everything that was done had some relationship to the study of the Word," writes Brother Kent.

Our correspondent from the church at Beaver City, Nebraska, says that the members of that congregation have been compelled by reason of the financial depression to retrench to the point of doing without a pastor for the coming year. They speak highly of the services of Brother Raymond Blood and make it clear that this situation has come about in spite of his good work. We are sorry for this backward step, but hope they may be able to resume pastoral leadership before the year is out.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, makes his final White Gift offering report, and the total amount is $2,186.13. Like all other offerings, it has fallen below the mark of last year. The answer is obvious—"Depression." The Association is doing a splendid work and ought to be given our very best support. We hope financial conditions will have been somewhat improved so that our schools can do better by the Association by the time another Christmas offering time is upon us.

Brother W. V. Findley of Roanoke, Virginia, writes: "Some weeks ago Dr. Bell had a suggestion in the Evangelist about consolidating Brethren publications and asked for opinions about it. The vast majority of our readers might be either in favor of or against the move, but if no one took the trouble to express their ideas, the ones in charge would not know how we felt about the proposed change. Considering the size of our church and the general economic condition, I think it would be the part of wisdom to consolidate."

Prof. Alva J. McClain, who expressed his regret over the phone to the editor that the many other duties devolving upon him made it impossible for him to occupy his page this week, will be at Winona Lake before this paper is off the press and will be appearing daily on the program of the Bible Conference at that place. He appears at 8:30 in the morning, which is the Bible Exposition hour. Dr. J. C. Massie will appear daily at 7 in the morning, after which there is a recess until 8:30. Brethren people on the Winona grounds will be glad to avail themselves of the privilege of hearing Brother McClain each day.

Brother W. S. Crick, pastor of the church at Fremont, Ohio, reports twelve additions to the membership as a result of the church's own efforts through the regular services. Six came by letter and six by baptism, three others having been baptized that were not fellowshiped in that congregation. The church school is growing and the financial obligations are being met in a satisfactory way, partly by the help of a bequest made by a departed sister of that church. We shall be glad to learn of the results of the Bible Conference being conducted by Brother Charles W. Mayes.

On the 14th of August the Warsaw, Indiana, Brethren church under the pastoral leadership of Brother E. M. Riddle, celebrated the fortieth anniversary of the establishing of that congregation. The pastor preached a sermon at the morning service on the theme: "Old Land Marks." A number of Brethren ministers were present to share in the celebration. At the afternoon informal service greetings and short talks from visiting ministers and former pastors made an interesting program. The Editor congratulates the Warsaw church on the completion of forty years of splendid service and the contribution it has made to the brotherhood.

President E. E. Jacobs reports that the total enrollment for the final term of the Summer School was 223. Among other items of interest is the announcement of Prof. R. R. Haun's having received his doctor's degree from the University of Chicago. The Evangelist congratulates Dr. Haun on this achievement and bespeaks the brotherhood's appreciation of his increasing usefulness and the perfecting of his intellectual equipment over a period of years. It may be of interest to know that Dr. Haun is not only a well-trained scientist, but also an active Christian, being an ordained deacon in the Ashland Brethren church.

We call attention to Brother R. Paul Miller's request that churches or departmental organizations send mission offerings along with their delegates to General Conference. It is the custom to lift a mission offering on Sunday morning at Conference and those who remain at home might as well have a share in the joy of giving as for the delegates to have a monopoly on it. Brother Claud Studebaker of Pittsburgh says his Christian Endeavor society has started the ball to rolling. If others will keep it going and add to it as it goes, we might well hope to have an offering when all giving is done that will be worthy of our church and will redound to the glory of God.

Our capable correspondent from the La Verne, California, church favors us with a report of the accessions of that church during the past three and a half years, during which time Brother A. L. Lynn has been pastor. They have added by baptism and by letter 151, lost by death and letter 34 and register a net gain of 117. That is a splendid record, and the more so when it is understood that these have been added mostly through the regular services. Religious instruction and prayer bulk large in the life of this church and they are bearing fruit in souls won. Brother Lynn has been unanimously called to remain their pastor for another year.

The editor is in receipt of a post card written by Dr. J. L. Gillin from Kiev, Russia. He is spending several months studying penal and correctional methods in countries of Europe, and expects to be back sometime in October. He is not traveling all his distances by slow European train methods, but is going by airplane. He writes: "I flew from Berlin to Leningrad. Have had a very interesting trip for the past three weeks. Leave tomorrow for Warsaw and Berlin. Russia is being industrialized rapidly. No unemployment here. Building is going on everywhere—factories and workers' homes. Day before yesterday I visited the largest water power dam in the world at Dnieperstroï (in Ukraine on the Dnieper river). Had four days on a steamer down the Volga." Germany and Italy are next on his program of study.

Labor and the Christian Spirit

By Prof. Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

Modern large-scale production involves three, and incidentally four, factors, viz., capital, management, labor, and also a buying public. With any one of these four elements lacking, large-scale production is absolutely impossible. Right now, it seems as if one, perhaps two, factors are lacking, i. e., a buying public and perhaps, in degree capital. Formerly this fourth factor, the buying public, or society at large, was left out of consideration but today we know that this factor is a very important one and can not be pushed aside. The interests of society can not be ignored, a thing which has all too long been taking place.

But perhaps the most human interest gathers around the matter of labor. Capital generally receives but scant consideration in the minds of some, although it is absolutely necessary, and so far as the entrepreneur is concerned, we many times secretly rejoice when he fails, saying, "Well, that is the risk of business." The facts are that the spirit of genuine Christianity is generally lacking in this whole welter of sweat, toil, profits, and mounting fortunes. But with it all, society has an interest.

First, society has an interest in the way labor is treated for much social welfare and comfort depends on the prosperity of labor. There is the matter of poor relief which is closely correlated with wages and unemployment. To be added to this, is the matter of health, for the poor have less opportunity to be physically well. Doctors' bills and dental fees are often prohibitive to those who need the attention of these professions most. This in turn affects sound physical vigor and thus touches our national life in army recruits, normal and healthy reproduction, and a stable and wholesome family life, school attendance, and an opportunity to receive an education. All of which, in their turn, come back to the taxpayer who finally foots all bills. It thus becomes some of my business, as a citizen of this republic, how labor is treated and paid.

Perhaps more important are the spiritual values, for morals and culture are involved in the case. There is small use in urging a dirty, sick, hungry, and destitute man to be happy, contented, industrious, and docile, for in such a condition many times all morale and character are gone. The very simple matter of being able to read and write, certainly the modicum of human culture, implies enough financial resources as to enable the individual to take advantage of certain opportunities. And inasmuch as by far the greater part of our employed population is engaged in manual labor, it becomes a matter of great moment that they have opportunity to enlarge their spiritual and intellectual possessions. Society pays and pays dearly when one class is inordinately submerged.

It would seem then, as if capital, labor, and society were engaged in a cooperative enterprise in production. Capital there must be; it can only be made useful by labor, and a buying public makes possible adequate return for both. If this is true, that all three are mutually interested, what relations ought to exist among them? One of mutual goodwill, cooperation, and trust, of course.

So then, the whole matter is reduced to one of social relationships and in all such relationships, Christian principles ought to be regnant. The spirit of the "second mile," mutual forbearance, adequate security and financial returns, honesty in all relationships, loving one's neighbor as oneself, getting the other man's viewpoint, — all these and more are demanded in a truly honorable situation.

It is sometimes said that the New Testament is inadequate for the present day situation as regards labor, but an honest appraisal must reveal the fact that while it might lack details, yet in principles and dynamic it is exceedingly abundant. How one can read the words of Jesus alone and not be struck with their unique application to present-day conditions, I can not understand. It is still true that we fight and scramble for bread which perishes, while just beyond our fingertips are values as large as God and as eternal. How utterly miserable are those whose God is mammon!

So, as Labor Day approaches, we ought again rightly to evaluate the dignity of toil, which to the great harm of the world, has ever been regarded with disdain. Clean clothes and white hands have always been looked upon as a badge of leisure, hence of refinement. This attitude in the words of another, brings on "invidious comparisons", to the great detriment of those who honestly toil. There are some aristocracies to which men are born and the only gateway to them is by birth, but there is one which we all can enter. And that is the aristocracy of honest labor, whose badge—soiled hands and clothes—is earth's most noble insignia.

Ashland, Ohio.

WORK

Rev. A. C. D. Noe

*Work, work; well, what of it?
Just so long as its honest I love it;
And the work may be ditching or blasting out coal,
Or shoveling ballast-rock down in a hole;
Whatever it is, it is good for my soul,
If I stand like a man as I do it.*

*Work, work; well, what of it?
If you know it is good and can prove it?
Be it building a temple or finding a star,
Or prying the portals of Glory ajar,
Or making a brighter spot right where you are,
If you stand like a man and go to it.*

*Work, work; well, what of it?
Ah, there's rapture superb up above it;
For the flowers are sweeter when you plant
the seed;
The reward is much greater when you do the deed,
And the cheering sounds louder when you're in the lead,
If you plunge like a man and go through it.*

*Work, work; well, what of it?
Do you wonder now why I love it?
Why, I wouldn't want heaven on couches of ease,
Or be blown there by winds from the tops of the trees,
But had rather reach port over tempest-
tossed seas,
And stand like a man if I do it.*

The Glory of the Cross

By Louis Glenn Locke

(Address given at Young People's Session of the recent Southeastern District Conference held at Roanoke, Virginia, and voted by Conference to be offered to the Evangelist for publication.)

It is indeed a pleasure, and an honor as well, to have been placed on a program with such an illustrious group of young people. For this honor I am duly grateful. Although I feel that after the fine things that have already been said it is somewhat useless to attempt to go on further with the program, yet because of the exalted and sublime nature of the subject, too much can never be said about it.

As a foundation, basis and outline for my brief remarks this afternoon, I have decided to take the hymn, beloved by all Christians everywhere, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory."

"In the cross of Christ I Glory, Towering o'er the wrecks of time; All the light of sacred story Gathers round its head sublime." As we meditate upon this the first stanza of the beautiful hymn, many memories as well as ideas are apt to come into minds. There is a world of truth stored up in this one brief stanza. In fact, it might be taken as a short history of the world since the time of Christ. The cross and its meaning as the symbol of Christ's atonement for the sins of men, its significance as God's great sacrifice for the world of sinners,—that cross has surely all reason to be glorious and to be glorified as well. The cross should be the most sacred symbol in all of our religion. It should also occupy no other than first place in the messages delivered to Brethren people by their ministers. Unfortunately, and certainly sadly, the cross and its unequalled message is often slighted and neglected by ministers and laymen as well. The cross in all of its matchless beauty is often relegated to the more fanatical sects, while we Brethren people whose early founders gloried in preaching the Cross, now occupy our time in discussing very debatable subjects of a professionally theological character, in lecturing on the present economic situation and its solution, social maladjustments, such as crime, poverty, and the like, which might well be left to some other organization to deal with. We have unnumbered economists in this country to deal with the depression, plenty of philosophers to lecture on philosophy, scientists for science, and sociologists and welfare organizations to deal with social disorders. But who will hold up the cross when once our Christian people and ministers have failed to preach it? The answer is obvious; a generation will arise, and I am not sure but that it has already arisen, which will not appreciate the cross upon which our Blessed Savior died. Far too often we make our religious meetings mere debating societies to wrangle over and to dig into theological interpretations of dim prophecies. Often we try to find significance in things which were never intended to have any spiritual significance. For example, whether the pitch on the ark is a figure of sin or not, and many similar departures from the real solid old Gospel. These are trying times for the church, many churches falling away in membership, and having to reduce their programs to a low minimum, but I wonder if a great deal of the cause for this unhappy situation does not lie in our neglecting the things that our ancestors preached in the days long gone by, when the good old gospel was not too good to be preached even in city churches. Many pastors complain of their inability to hold the young people nowadays, but many young persons are convinced of the fact that if the Atonement on the cross, the sermon on the mount, the principles of the golden rule, the going the second mile, and the other revolutionary but yet practical teachings of Christ,—if these things were to be preached in our churches as they once were, there would be a great and powerful revival in the church, including the more aged as well as the young. I once heard Dr. Hutton of London, editor of the British Weekly, say that whenever a minister makes a remark that you know down in your heart is true, a remark which cannot be questioned, a remark that is and always has been and always will be true, then and only then is he preaching. Whenever he says anything which you are not sure of, he is lecturing. Now brethren, what we need in our church today is more preaching and less lecturing. And I am sure that one thing upon which we are all agreed and upon which we all lay our foundation is the greatest story ever told, God's only begotten Son dying on the cross for the sins of Humanity. Let us tell this story with renewed fervor and frequency.

The cross has a marvelous and uncomparable history. It has, as the hymn says, Towered over the wrecks of time. Rome, that time tried illustration, persecuted the followers of the cross but in time Rome bowed to the cross. Christianity has overcome Mohammedanism, perhaps its greatest organized opponent. In fact, it is easily recognized that all nations or individuals which set themselves in opposition to the Christian religion and to its center, the cross, have fallen. Similarly, the one great branch of the Christian Church which has perhaps made more of the cross than any other is able to show a remarkable loyalty and faithfulness on the part of its constituency.

The glorious cross is the very heart and center of our religion. "All the light of sacred story gathers round its head sublime." All of the Bible and its revelations up to the time and life of Christ we may now quite clearly understand as the steps leading to the great and ultimate goal of the cross and its atoning power. And after the crucifixion its fame did not dwindle, but from thence forward until now it has grown greater and greater. Immediately upon the foundation of the first Christian Church the cross assumed the position of prime importance. The apostle Paul said of his own ministry, "I am determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." What greater endorsement could anything have than these words from perhaps the greatest preacher the Church has yet produced? The preaching of the Cross was vital in Paul's day and it has not changed even until today.

Then we come to the second verse: "When the woes of life o'ertake me, Hopes deceive, and fears annoy, Never shall thy cross forsake me Lo; it glows with peace and joy." Certainly this stanza bears a comforting and consoling message. We are able to appreciate such a statement today perhaps just a little more fully than ever before. Depressions, financial disorders with all of their attendant evils may come and go but we as Christians have our hopes grounded upon something firmer than the sands of financial security. Often we have had high expectations of certain things, things which looked like they were sure to turn out in the desired manner, only to end as dismal failures. How much change a week or even a day brings forth. Because of the development of a so-called higher civilization and a mechanized world we are more uncertain than ever before. But we as Christians have much to be thankful for in the fact that we have followed the Christ who died for us and who, it seems to me must have been speaking to men in very uncertain times and conditions when he said, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy-laden and I will give you rest." We have this assurance always, Never shall the cross forsake me, Lo it glows with peace and joy.

And then the last stanza: "Bane and blessing, pain and pleasure, By the cross are sanctified; Peace is there, that knows no measure, Joys that through all time abide." All life, sorrow as well as pleasure is sanctified by the cross. Our existence takes on new significance and meaning. For without the death on the cross and the subsequent resurrection we would be without hope. We would be no better than animals. The cross has great transforming power because by it we are assured that our sins are atoned and that we have life everlasting. It is the most powerful force in the world. The Emperor Constantine, the first Emperor to adopt Christianity as the state religion of the Roman Empire, once had a vision. He saw a fiery cross in the sky with the following words inscribed beneath it, "In hoc signo, vinces." Being translated, "In this sign you shall conquer." If our lives are to count the most for Christ and if our church organization is to conquer we must like Constantine of old catch a vision of the cross, for by it we shall surely conquer. Let us all revive the preaching of the Cross, it shall be the battle standard which will lead our church out of the stagnant condition into which it has fallen into new and more difficult conquests for the master.

"Beneath the cross of Jesus I fain would take my stand,
The shadow of a mighty Rock within a weary land,
A home within the wilderness, A rest upon the way,
From the burning of the noon-tide heat, and the burden of the day.

Upon that cross of Jesus Mine eye at times can see
The very dying form of One who suffered there for me;
And from my smitten heart with tears, Two wonders I confess—
The wonders of his glorious love, and my own worthlessness.

I take, O Cross, thy shadow for my abiding place;
I ask no other sunshine than the Sunshine of his face;
Content to let the world go by, To know no gain nor loss,
My sinful self my only shame, My glory all the cross.

Behind the "Wet" Curtain

By William T. Ellis

Like a swiftly withdrawn curtain, the recent "wet" decisions of the two major American political parties have revealed a condition which is a first concern of the churches—a condition which heretofore they have been reluctant to face.

That condition is the alarming nation-wide slump in Christian idealism. All of the many arguments for and against Prohibition aside, it is fundamentally true that it is primarily the Christian motive which conceives of a world wherein no one shall be hurt by the evils of strong drink. It is the New Testament teaching of altruism which makes mankind seek a sober and safe society, even at the price of relinquishing personal rights and liberties. If a man has not the Bible's concern for the welfare of the weaker brother, he will not try to protect that man from his own weakness, or from hurtful forces outside of himself.

After a century of heroic and unselfish activity in the field of temperance, the churches effected Prohibition in the United States. Then the struggle for the great ideals ceased, except on the political end. The aggressive stimulation of the great social, brotherly and Christian conception of a sober world subsided.

Insidiously, during the twelve intervening years, a vast inertia has crept over Christian people. The late political conventions have suddenly made plain how powerful the contrary conception of life, as individualistic and self-indulgent, has become.

Many folk, of timid or evasive mind, will dodge this grave portent. Some will even contend that one party is really "dry" and the other "wet." The facts are clearly against such a view. Both party platforms are "wet"—one clearly and uncompromisingly so the other timorously and tentatively so. It is as if the Democrats had boldly plunged head first into the water, by a high dive from a rock while the Republicans went in, shiveringly, step by step, from a sloping beach, hoping, at one and the same time, that their friends on the shore would not notice that they were going all the way in and that their friends in the water would welcome them to the depths.

There is no sense in Christian voters fooling themselves on this point: both national parties are "wet." They offer the issue of Prohibition repeal to the Country and the decision on that issue must be made. The only field left to Christian voters for effective political activity is in congressional and legislative elections. There they should bestir themselves.

All political potency will be futile, however, unless the churches can arouse the nation from the spiritual apathy into which it has sunk. Thus far, even the unparalleled Depression has not availed to create a general spiritual awakening. Individual religious concern there is a-plenty; but nothing resembling a great resurgence of questing for vital Christian ideals is apparent.

This condition is critical, from every viewpoint. It should drive pastors and people to their knees. It should shape the character of present-day preaching. It should be the burden of all religious conferences. Only a real revival of spiritual religion, of Christian ideals, of sincere turning to God, can save the churches and society in this determinative hour.

HIS BIT OF WORK

"O John, John," exclaimed the father, shaking his head sadly, "what slithering work you do!"

"It's all right, father," replied the boy. "I get it past the boss and get my pay too!"

"There's more in the work, my boy, than in the pay," said the father.

"The pay's the main, thing," retorted John.

"No, John, it is not the main thing either. Let me tell you something that I heard today.

"In the stone works a young man was suddenly set to do a piece of carving. The man on the job had been taken ill, and the task had to be finished on time. The young man did not know what the stone was for, but he went at the work in his accustomed painstaking way. He chiselled out a stem here, a leaf there and flowers above. The master workman approved the job, and the stone left the works. Some months passed.

"Today the young was walking through the great and beautiful building that the city has just completed and opened. He came to the most prominent pillar, a handsome column crowned with a piece of lily work. 'Why,' he exclaimed, 'there's my bit of work!' And, taking off his cap, he gazed at it and said reverently: 'Thank God, I did that job well!'

"I happened to overhear the remark, and I spoke to him. Then he told me the story of that bit of work. When I heard the young man's remark and saw the light in his eye, John, I knew then, if I had never known before, that work is a holy thing! Right wages and just treatment for workmen are proper adjuncts, but above and beyond them your bit of work is holy to you.

"The Bible speaks of the 'workman that needeth not to be ashamed.' That young man toiling in the dirt and din of the stone works fashioned his bit with his soul in his job and found at last his work crowning a glorious pillar! That is true of all good work; sooner or later the finished work will be crowned. Then who can measure the joy of the workman? And if that bit of work happens to be the crowning piece of a well-hewn character, calling forth the praise of the Great Master, 'Well done, good and faithful servant!' the joy of the workman will not be measured by time or by anything that belongs to the world of time!"—Youth's Companion.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

"LORD'S ACRE MOVEMENT" GROWING

It is reported that seventy churches representing seven denominations in western North Carolina are cooperating this year in the "Lord's Acre Movement," which originated several years ago with the Baptists of Georgia; it is being promoted by the Farmers' federation. The churches cooperating in this plan ask members to set apart farmlands or farm products to be sold, the proceeds to go to the work of the church.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

JANE ADDAMS DISAGREES WITH ROCKEFELLER

Jane Addams, one of the world's leading authorities on social conditions, and for many years the directing head of Hull House, Chicago, where she has had unsurpassed opportunities of observation, has expressed her disagreement with John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in the liquor question in the following language:

"Mr. Rockefeller has expressed his honest opinion, but I must disagree with his premise that there has been more drinking and crime since adoption of prohibition. There may be more drinking in certain classes, but my observation has been that among the working classes conditions most certainly are a great deal better than they were in the days of the saloon, the distilleries, and the whiskey rings."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

THE WORST RACKET

Chicago, regarded by many as the racketeer capital, reports one of the worst rackets and the meanest type of racketeer which has come to notice. Gathering names from the obituary columns, these ghouls visit widows, affect surprise at hearing of the death of the husband, and after expressing their sympathy, present a fake order of the deceased for a Bible. The report is that the bereaved usually pay an exorbitant price. It is a great pity that people do not know and practice the principles of the Bible in a way to make such exploitation of its popularity impossible.—The Presbyterian Advance.

THE WISECRACKER AGE

New York City's debonair little fashion plate maintained under the title of mayor, otherwise James J. Walker, is just now undergoing the not altogether happy experience of having his right to be called "honorable" called in question. A committee has been investigating his conduct in office, and it is quite remarkable what thoroughly disinterested friends will do in the way of pouring into one's lap hundreds and thousands of dollars and how all records to support the great tales of impeccable honesty and unselfish generosity will disappear! Mr. Walker comes to the stand and is glorified by the hordes of Tammany because he can turn off all the questions of the conscientious investigator with a "wisecrack."

A few days later his brother is called to the same stand, and confronted with the fact that he was shown to have received, time after time, from certain doctors appointed by the mayor, just half of their fees, this brother of the mayor can only stammer that this is 'only a coincidence and no dishonesty is involved. Then Mayor Walker, commenting upon it, says that every one knows his brother is but a helpless innocent lamb unable to think of brilliant answers to the investigator. Dr. Walker is not able to "wisecrack" out of the situation. To Mayor Jimmy it is not so bad to indulge in duplicity as it is to be unable to cover it up with "wisecracks."

The Mayor is the symbol of an age. We have all been more prone to admire brilliance than character. We like movies and books of clever rascals. No matter how bad a man or woman may be we forgive them if they can contribute a new "wisecrack" to the language or a new trick to living. We've been wanting excitement and we have been inclined to canonize the devil himself. At least he has not seemed such a bad sort, you know.

Is that age passing? Are we tired of the wisecracks? Are we through condoning the crook if he's clever? Are we about ready to condemn the dishonest banker and the gambler on Wall Street even though he did succeed? Perhaps. If so, the depression may teach us something after all.—Christian Standard.

RELIGION IN RUSSIA

The efforts of militant atheism in Russia to drive out religion and destroy all belief in God are given wide publicity. But it is interesting to note that atheistic propaganda is making little headway. The Moody Monthly quotes Rev. John Johnson as saying that "95 per cent of the Russians are still deeply religious—still believe in God and confess Jesus Christ." It adds: "We have learned through Pastor C. G. Hjelm, a Swedish missionary in Russia, that on New Year's Day a revival broke out in a congress of atheists while they, with open Bibles, were searching for arguments against God and Christianity. 'My hand is trembling while I write this,' he says, 'it grips me so.' Also a Russian paper, The Atheist, bewails the fact that a revival broke out at a power station where the whole crew and staff were converted. At Omsk the revival proceeded with such power that 3,000 converts were baptized."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

A HYKSOS PORTRAIT

For the first time, archaeologists feel assured that they have unearthed a portrait of one of the Hyksos, the "Shepherd Kings" who engineered one of the strangest interludes in Egyptian history, about 1700 B. C. Invading Egypt in a whirlwind attack, riding on horses and armed with bows, the Shepherd Kings overthrew the Egyptian kings and ruled the country for centuries. The portrait statuette was unearthed in the ruins of Tell el-Ajjul, in southern Palestine, a site identified as the famous Gaza of Bible history. The site is being excavated by the British School of Archaeology in Egypt, under the direction of Sir Flinders Petrie. The statuette is pronounced unlike the Hittites, Amorites, Semites, or indeed any other race known from its day. It is the first of its kind to be found, and is therefore believed to be a likeness of one of the mysterious Hyksos. It was unearthed from a level of Gaza's ruins occupied by the Hyksos.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

FAKE TOBACCO ADVERTISING

The Journal of the National Educational Association has this description of the falsity practised by certain tobacco interests in their advertising campaigns:

"But now comes a cold-blooded, fact-finding government agency, the Federal Trade Commission. The commission brings the tobacco men to the mourner's bench, and gets from them an abjectly humiliating confession of falsehood, deceit, and cheeky imposture. The newspapers put the story far back in the second section, if they printed it at all. Editorially they had little to say. Didn't they print the fake advertising? The cigaret corporation that was on the carpet admitted that it lied when it said that smoking its cigarets would keep a woman from getting overweight. It admitted that it printed testimonials from people who do not use cigarets at all. It admitted that it printed testimonials from people who not only did not write them but never saw them. I admitted that it paid for testimonials from a group of actresses to the effect that the use of these cigarets kept them slender and fit for their work, though the actresses were not cigaret smokers at all."

Too bad that some of these sweet young things who sit in our restaurants and ride about the city in automobiles with smoking cigarets in their mouths haven't realized the deception in cigaret advertising. They and their breath would be much sweeter, and their future lives happier.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Proverbs II

Although it is hard to find logical and consistent order in the proverbial wisdom of the Hebrews, Dr. Thirtle, a worthy student of the book under treatment, has discovered something which greatly interests the writer. He points out the fact that the three divisions of the work each beginning with "The Proverbs of Solomon" (1:1; 10:1; 25:1) have in them pronouns in the second and third persons. When you witness pronouns in the second person you have proverbs for Solomon, i. e., proverbs taught him by his teachers, whereas when you have pronouns in the third person, you have proverbs by Solomon, the product of his own teaching. The Scripture says he "set in order" the collection he had made.

Dr. Philip Schaff, whose abilities as a church historian have rarely been equaled, and whose rich volumes the writer of these articles uses in his courses in Church History in the Ashland Theological Seminary, has this interesting comment on the Proverbs:

"They are far superior to any other collection of the kind, such as the sayings of the Seven Wise Men of Greece, the Aurea Carmina attributed to Pythagoras, or the collection of the Arabic proverbs. They bear the stamp of divine inspiration. They abound in polished and sparkling gems. They contain the practical wisdom of Israel, and have furnished the richest contributions to the dictionary of proverbs among Christian nations. They trace wisdom to its true source, the fear of Jehovah. Nothing can be finer than the description of Wisdom in the eighth chapter, where she is personified as the eternal companion and delight of God, and commended beyond all earthly treasures."

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Authors. Solomon. Agur and Lemuel.
2. When and Where Written. In and around the tenth century B. C. The geographical background is Palestine.
3. To Whom Written. To Israel for her instruction in life.
4. Purpose. To provide instruction and preserve wisdom.
5. Authenticity. Nobody doubts the origin of the wisdom literature of the Hebrews as being anything else but a God-given and Jewish product. No other people knew the fear of Jehovah as it is set forth by Solomon and others.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. Wisdom Proposed. 1:1-7.
2. Wisdom Described. 1:8-9.
3. Wisdom Stated. 10-24.
4. Wisdom Pictured. 25-29.
5. Wisdom Exemplified. 30-31.

III. THE THEME OF THE BOOK

"To know wisdom and instruction;
To perceive the words of understanding;
To receive the instruction of wisdom,
Justice, and judgment, and equity;
To give subtlety to the simple
To the young man knowledge and discretion.
A wise man will hear, and will increase learning;
And a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels;
To understand a proverb, and the interpretation;
The words of the wise, and their dark sayings.
The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge:
But fools despise wisdom and instruction."—Prov. 1:2-7.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Wisdom. Knowledge.
2. Key Verses. 9:10; 22:1; 27:1; 28:1; 31:10.
3. Key Chapters. 8, 30, 31.
4. Key Topics. Righteousness and Wickedness; True and False Paths; Wise and Foolish Men; Truth and Error; Poverty and Riches, etc.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The Proverbs are extremely valuable. They stand as a sort of "Chamber of Commerce" for the nations and men. All phases of life are revealed or uncovered, treated or exalted by their teachings. The moral world is explored from Dan to Beersheba, and its Dr. Jekylls and Mr. Hydes are included. Nature and conscience are combed so thoroughly as to leave no irregularities untouched. Piety is praised and fools are condemned. The cynic and the scorner are compared and contrasted with the wise and the prudent, the latter always being vindicated before the bar of God, Reason and Justice. No one can measure the boundless influence of these Proverbs in the lives of men. Men cannot improve upon them in any way, so they at best are bound to follow their rich instruction.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

"Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended?
Who hath gathered the winds in his fists?
Who hath bound the waters in a garment?
Who hath established all the ends of the earth?
What is his name, and what is his son's name,
If thou canst tell?"—Prov. 30:4.

Here are the footsteps of the Creator, but where is the Great Creator himself? Hidden among the baggage and trappings of the centuries? Nay, a thousand times, Nay! He is declared in every wind and cloud, in every lily and bird, in every beast and man; and finally in his Son, Christ Jesus our Lord. "What is his Name?" Ask a Jew that and he will reply "Jehovah." Ask him his Son's name and he will be silent. But not forever. Some day the Jew will call the rejected Messiah King and Lord, Jerusalem's King and Jerusalem's Lord. Read I John 5:20 also.

VII. THE TEACHINGS OF THE BOOK

1. Negative.

- (1) Against Security Debts.
"A man void of understanding striketh hands, and becometh surety in the presence of his friend" (17:18).
- (2) Against Wine.
"Wine is a mocker, strong drink is a brawler" (20:1).
"At the last it biteth like a serpent,
And stingeth like an adder" (23:32).
- (3) Against Strife.
"It is an honor for a man to keep aloof from strife;
But every fool will be quarreling" (20:3).
- (4) Against Indolence.
"As the door turneth upon its hinges,
So doth the sluggard upon his bed" (26:14).

2. Positive.

- (5) Friendship.
"A friend loveth at all times;
And is born as a brother for adversity" (17:17).
- (6) Liberality.
"He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord;
And that which he hath given will he pay him again" (19:17).
- (7) A Good Name.
"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches
And loving favor rather than silver and gold" (22:1).
- (8) Opportune Speech.
"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver" (25:11).
- (9) Education of Youth.
"Train up a child in the way he should go;
And when he is old, he will not depart from it" (22:6).

AN AGED MUSICIAN

